The Trial of TITUS OATES D. D. * at the King's-Bench, for Perjury, May 8. 1685. Paſchæ 1 Jac. II.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of one of the Cauſes between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Oates for Perjury; the ſame began between eight and nine in the Morning, and proceeded in the manner following.

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence, then the Defendant was called, who appeared in Perſon, being brought up by Rule from the King's-Bench Priſon, where he was in cuſtody, and was adviſed to look to his Challenge to the Jury that were impannel'd to try the Cauſe.

Oates. My Lord, I am to manage my own Defence, and have a great many Papers and things which I have brought in order to it; I pray I may have ſome Conveniency for the managing my own Trial.

Sir George Jefferies. L. C. J. Ay, ay, let him ſit down there within the Bar, and let him have Conveniency for his Papers.

Clerk of Cr. Cryer, ſwear Sir William Dodſon.

Oates. My Lord, I except againſt Sir William Dodſon.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. What is the Cauſe of Exception, Mr. Oates?

L. C. J. Why do you challenge him?

Oates. My Lord, I humbly conceive in theſe Caſes of Criminal Matters, the Defendant has liberty of excepting againſt any of the Jurors, without ſhewing Cauſe, provided there be a full Jury beſides.

L. C. J. No, no, that is not ſo, you are miſtaken in that, Mr. Oates.

Oates, My Lord, I am adviſed ſo, I do not underſtand the Law myſelf.

L. C. J. But we will tell you then, it cannot be allow'd; if Mr. Attorney will conſent to wave him, well and good.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, I know no reaſon for it, I cannot conſent to any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Then, if you will not have him ſworn, you muſt ſhew your Cauſe preſently.

Oates. My Lord, I cannot aſſign any Cauſe.

L. C. J. Then he muſt be ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Swear him.

Cryer. Sir William Dodſon take the Book: You ſhall well and truly try this Iſſue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Oates, and a true Verdict give according to the Evidence; ſo help you God.

Cl. of Cr. Swear Sir Edmund Wiſeman. [Which was done.

Richard Aley Eſq; [Who was ſworn.

Benjamin Scutt.

Oates. My Lord, I challenge him.

* Burn. Hiſt. of his own Times, Vol. I. p. 637.

L. C. J. For what Cauſe?

Oates. My Lord, he was one of the Grand Jury that found the Bill.

L. C. J. Was he ſo? that is an Exception indeed; what ſay you, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I believe he was upon one of the Indictments, but I think it was not this.

L. C. J. But if he were in either of them, he cannot be ſo impartial.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will not ſtand upon it, we'll wave him.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Fowlis.

Oates. Pray let me ſee that Gentleman. [Who was ſhown to him.

Are you not a Goldſmith in Fleetſtreet, between the two Temples?

Fowlis. Yes, I am.

Oates. Very well, Sir, I do not except againſt you, only I deſir'd to know whether it were you or not.

Cl of Cr. Swear him. [Which was done.

Thomas Blackmore,
Peter Pickering,
Robert Beddingfield, } Sworn.
Thomas Rawlinſon,
Roger Reeves,

Edward Kempe, Sworn.

Oates. My Lord, I challenge him.

L. C. J. You ſpeak too late, he is ſworn already.

Oates. My Lord, they are ſo quick, I could not ſpeak, but he was one of the Grand Jury too.

L. C. J. We cannot help it now.

Mr. At. Gen. I did not know that he was ſo; but to ſhew that we mean nothing but fair, we are content to wave him.

L. C. J. You do very well, Mr. Attorney General; let him be withdrawn.

Cl. of Cr. Mr. Kempe, you may take your eaſe; ſwear Ambroſe Iſted. [Which was done.

Henry Collier,
Richard Howard, } Sworn,

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, count theſe.

Cryer. One, &c. Sir William Dodſon.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Howard.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, hearken to the Record, and ſtand together, and hear the Evidence.

The Names of the Twelve ſworn, were theſe.

Sir William Dodſon,
Sir Edmund Wiſeman,
Richard Aley,
Thomas Fowlis,
Thomas Blackmore,
Peter Pickering,
} Jur'
Robert Beddingfield,
Thomas Rawlinſon,
Roger Reeves,
Ambroſe Iſted,
Henry Collier, and Richard Howard.

Oates. Before the Counſel opens the Cauſe, I deſire to move one thing to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. What is it you would have?

Oates. My Lord, I have three Witneſſes that are very material ones to my Defence, who are now Priſoners in the King's-Bench, for whom I moved yeſterday, that I might have a Rule of Court to bring them up to-day, but it was objected, that they were in Execution, and ſo not to be brought; I humbly move your Lordſhip now, that I may have a Habeas Corpus for them, to bring them immediately hither.

L. C. J. We cannot do it.

Oates. Pray, good my Lord, they are very material Witneſſes for me, and I moved yeſterday for them.

L. C. J. You did ſo, but we told your Counſel then, and ſo we tell you now, we cannot do it by Law, it will be an Eſcape.

Oates. My Lord, I ſhall want their Teſtimony.

L. C. J. Truly we cannot help it, the Law will not allow it, and you muſt be ſatisfied.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you that are ſworn of this Jury, hearken to the Record: By virtue of an Inquiſition taken at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Word of Faringdon without, London, upon Wedneſday the 10th of December, in the 36th of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. before Sir James Smith, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir George Jefferies Knight and Baronet, Lord Chief Juſtice of this Honourable Court; Sir Thomas Jones Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Court of Common Pleas; William Montague, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Sir James Edwards Knight; Sir John Moore Knight, Aldermen of the ſaid City; Sir Thomas Jenner Knight, one of his Majeſty's Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the ſame City, and others, their Companions, Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, by the Oaths of twelve Jurors, honeſt and lawful Men of the City of London aforeſaid, who then and there being ſworn and charged to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the City aforeſaid, upon their Oaths preſent, That at the Seſſion of our Sovereign Lord the King, holden for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's-Hall, in St. John's-ſtreet, in the County aforeſaid, on Monday, to wit, 16 December, in the Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the thirtieth, before Sir Reginald Foſter, Baronet; Sir Philip Matthews, Baronet; Sir William Bowls Kt. Sir Charles Pitfield, Knight; Thomas Robinſon, Humphrey Wyrley, Thomas Hariot, and William Hempſon, Eſquires, Juſtices of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to enquire by the Oath of Honeſt and Lawful Men of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and by other ways, manners, means, by which they might better know, as well within Liberties as without, by whom the Truth of the Matter may be better known and enquired, of whatſoever Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Waſhings and falſe Makings of the Money of this Kingdom of England, and of other Kingdoms and Dominions whatſoever; and of whatſoever Murders, Felonies, Manſlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, and other Articles and Offences in the Letters-Patents of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to them, or any four or more of them therefore directed, ſpecified; as alſo the Acceſſaries of the ſame within the County aforeſaid, as well within Liberties as without, by whomſoever, howſoever had, made, done or committed; and the ſaid Treaſons, and other the Premiſſes, to hear and determine, according to the Law and Cuſtom of this Kingdom of England, being aſſigned by the Oath of Ralph Wain, John Vaughan, Richard Foſter, Thomas Paget, Robert Newington, Henry Tompkins, Robert Hays, John Greenwood, Peter Stimpſon, Joſias Croſly, Richard Richman, Auguſtine Bear, John King, Nathaniel Brett, Francis Fiſher, and Samuel Lynn, Honeſt and Lawful Men of the County aforeſaid, ſworn, and charged to enquire for our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the Body of the County aforeſaid, upon their Oaths: It was preſented, That Thomas White, otherwiſe wiſe Whitebread, late of the Pariſh of St Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk; William Ireland, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Fenwick, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; Thomas Pickering, of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Grove, of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Gent. as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, Serene, and moſt Excellent Prince, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme and Natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil: The Cordial Love, and True and Natural Obedience, which faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King towards him, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly withdrawing, and contriving, and with all their Might intending the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by Law eſtabliſh'd, to ſubvert; and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure, and the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him, the ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw, put out, and extinguiſh; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the thirtieth, at the Pariſh of St Giles in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, and traiterouſly did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend, Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up and procure; and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King to procure and cauſe; and our ſaid late Lord the King, from the Regal State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England, utterly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſinherit; and him our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Government of the ſaid Kingdom, and the ſincere Religion of God, rightly by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom eſtabliſhed, at their Will and Pleaſure to change and alter, and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, throughout all its Parts well inſtituted and ordained, wholly to ſubvert and deſtroy, and War againſt our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to levy: And thoſe their moſt wicked Treaſons, and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect, they the aforeſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, with other falſe Traitors to the Jurors not known, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, the thirtieth, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly did aſſemble themſelves, unite and meet together, and then and there falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, did conſult and agree our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſh'd, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church, to change and alter; and the ſooner to fulfil and perfect their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes, they, the ſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſame 24th Day of April, in the ſaid 30th Year of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilely, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly among themſelves, did conclude and agree, that they the aforeſaid Thomas Pickering, John Grove, him the ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King ſhould kill and murder: And that they the ſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, a certain Number of Maſſes between them, then and there agreed for the Health of the Soul of him the ſaid Thomas Pickering, therefore ſhould ſay, celebrate and perform, and therefore ſhould pay unto the ſaid John Grove a certain Sum of Money, between them then and there agreed. And the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oath aforeſaid, did further preſent, that the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, upon the Agreement aforeſaid, then and there falſely, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did take upon them, and did promiſe to the ſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors of our late ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, then and there, falſely, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, did promiſe that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove would kill and murder our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King; and they, the ſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, afterwards, to wit, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, did ſeverally every one of them give their Faith each to the other, and upon the Sacrament then and there traitorouſly did ſwear and promiſe, to conceal, and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Conſultations, and Purpoſes ſo between them had, him, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, traitorouſly to kill and murder, and the Romiſh Religion in this Kingdom of England to be uſed, to introduce, and the true Reformed Religion in this Kingdom of England rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to alter and change; and that the aforeſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, in Execution of their traitorous Agreement aforeſaid, afterwards, to wit, the ſame four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times after, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, Muſkets, Piſtols, Swords, Daggers, and other offenſive and cruel Weapons, him, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, to kill and murder, murder, falſely, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, and traitorouſly did prepare, and obtain for themſelves, and them had and kept; and that they the aforeſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove afterwards, to wit, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, and divers Days and Times afterwards, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and in other Places within the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly did lie in wait, and endeavour our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to murder, and that the ſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſame four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did prepare, perſuade, excite, abet, comfort and counſel four other Perſons, Men to the Jurors unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, him our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King traitorouſly to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided; and thereupon it was ſo far proceeded, that afterwards, to wit, at the Court of Goal-Delivery of our Sovereign Lord the King, of Newgate, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London aforeſaid, the ſeventeenth Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, before the Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being preſent, held by Adjournment for the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, before whom the Indictment aforeſaid was then depending, came the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, aud John Grove under the Cuſtody of Sir Richard How, Knt. Sir John Chapman, Knt. Sheriffs of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, into whoſe Cuſtody, for the Cauſe aforeſaid before that were committed, being there brought to the Bar in their proper Perſons, and immediately being ſeverally ſpoken unto concerning the Premiſſes above charged upon them, how they would acquit themſelves thereof; the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove did ſay that they were not thereof guilty, and for the ſame, for good and bad, they ſeverally put themſelves upon the Country, and by a certain Jury of the Country on that behalf, in due manner impannel'd, ſworn and charged, then and there, in the ſame Court before the Juſtices of Goal-delivery aforeſaid were tryed, and that upon that Trial between our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, at London aforeſaid, to wit, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, the Defendant Titus Oates, by the Name of Titus Oates, late of the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre aforeſaid, in the Ward aforeſaid, Clerk, was a Witneſs produced on the behalf of our late Sovereign Lord the King upon the Trial aforeſaid, and before the aforeſaid Juſtices of Goal-Delivery in the Court aforeſaid, then and there held, upon the Holy Evangeliſts of God, to ſpeak and teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth of, and in the Premiſſes between our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, put in Iſſue, was duely ſworn; and that he, the aforeſaid Titus Oates, then and there, in the Court of Goal-delivery aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, by his own proper Act and Conſent, of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and to the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid, then and there ſworn, and impanel'd to try the Iſſue aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, did give in Evidence, that there was a traitorous Conſult of Jeſuits that were aſſembled at a certain Tavern, called the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, (in the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, meaning) upon the four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of our Lord 1678. At which Conſult, Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, (the aforeſaid Thomas White alias Whitebread, John Fenwick, and William Ireland, meaning) and he the ſaid Titus Oates, were preſent; and that the Jeſuits aforeſaid did ſeparate themſelves into ſeveral leſſer Companies, and that the Jeſuits aforeſaid came to a Reſolution to murder the ſaid our late Lord the King, and that he the ſaid Titus Oates, did carry the Reſolution aforeſaid from Chamber to Chamber, and did ſee that Reſolution ſigned by them (the aforeſaid Jeſuits meaning): whereas in truth and in deed, the aforeſaid Titus Oates was not preſent at any Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern aforeſaid in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, upon the 24th of April, in the Year of our Lord 1678, nor did carry any Reſolution to murder our ſaid late Lord the King, from Chamber to Chamber by any Perſons to be ſigned. And ſo he, the aforeſaid Titus Oates, on the 17th Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court aforeſaid, upon the Trial aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, ſo as aforeſaid had, by his own proper Act and Conſent, and of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in like caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment he has been arraign'd, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himſelf upon the Country, and his Majeſty's Attorney-General likewiſe; which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether the Defendant be guilty of this Perjury and Offence whereof he is now indicted, or whether not guilty: If you find him guilty, you are to ſay ſo; if you find him not guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Oates. Hold, Sir, I beg one Favour of your Lordſhip, to give me leave to have that part of the Record, wherein I am ſaid to have ſworn ſuch and ſuch things, read diſtinctly in Latin.

L. C. J. Let it be read in Latin.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, make an O-yes.

Cryer. O-yes! If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inqueſt now taken, concerning the Perjury and Offence, whereof the Defendant Titus Oates ſtands indicted; let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now he ſtands upon his Diſcharge.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Oates. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip and the Court would be of Counſel for me in one thing, which I take to be a Fault and Error in my Indictment.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Oates, whatever you have to ſay of that nature, you muſt not ſpeak to it now, you will have your time as to that hereafter, in caſe you be convicted.

Oates. My Lord, I have but one ſmall Exception to open to you.

L. C. J. We are now upon the Fact only.

Oates. My Lord, I beg you would give me leave only to tell you of a Miſtake in the Indictment, which I hope, when I have opened, will ſatisfy your Lordſhip, that it ought not to be put upon me or the Court to try this Cauſe; or to be ſure, if there ſhould be a Conviction, I hope I may move an Arreſt of the Judgment.

L. C. J. So I tell you you may, but not now.

Oates. Good my Lord, hear me but a few Words; the Indictment charges me to have given ſuch and ſuch Evidence, that there was ſuch a Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 1678. That the Jeſuits did afterwards divide themſelves into ſeveral leſſer Companies, that they came there to a Reſolution to murder the late King, and that I ſwore that I carried that Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw the Reſolution ſigned by them, ſo the Word is, Signat'; now the Perjury aſſigned is, that I was not preſent at that Conſult, nor did carry the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned, and there the Word is Signand'; now I conceive if Signat' be the Word, that is uſed in ſetting forth the Oath that I made, the Aſſignment of the Perjury ought to follow that Form, and the Word there ought to be Signat' too; being Signand', I take that to be an Error.

L. C. J. Look, that is not proper at this time, as I told you at firſt; but withal I do not think there is any great Matter in what you ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Either I do not underſtand Mr. Oates what he means by the Objection, or he will find himſelf much miſtaken in it.

L. C. J. Well, well, we have nothing to do with that now; go on with the Cauſe.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment againſt Titus Oates for Perjury, which Indictment ſets forth, that Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, the 16th of December, in the thirtieth Year of the late King, at the Old-Bailey, were indicted of High-Treaſon for conſpiring the Death of the King, and that Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, were tryed the 17th of December in that Year, and upon that Indictment Titus Oates was produced as a Witneſs on the behalf of the King againſt the ſaid Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, being ſworn to give Evidence to the Jury that were impannelled and ſworn to try that Cauſe; he did ſwear and give in Evidence that there was a treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, (meaning the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex) the 24th of April 1678, at which conſult, Whitebread, Fenwick, and Ireland, and the ſaid Titus Oates were preſent, and that they ſeparated themſelves into ſeveral leſſer Clubs, and came to a Reſolution to murder the King, and that he, the ſaid Titus Oates, carried the ſaid Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, to be ſigned by them, meaning the Jeſuits; whereas in truth and in fact, he, the ſaid Titus Oates, was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult, the four and twentieth of April 1678, nor carried any ſuch Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned; and he, the ſaid Titus Oates, the 17th Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Old-Bailey aforeſaid, upon the Trial aforeſaid, on the Indictment aboveſaid, between the King, and the ſaid Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, ſo as aforeſaid had, by his own proper Act and Conſent of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily and corruptly in manner and form aforeſaid, did commit wilful and corrupt Perjury; and this is laid to be to the Diſhonour of God, in Contempt of the Law, to the evil Example of others in the like caſe offending againſt the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity. To this he has pleaded Not Guilty, and that is the Iſſue that you are to try; if we prove him Guilty, we queſtion not but you will find him ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, I am of Counſel in this Cauſe for the King, and our Caſe ſtands thus: The Defendant ſtands indicted for corrupt and wilful Perjury, for what he ſwore at the Trial of Ireland, and that which he ſwore was this, in order to convict the Priſoners then at the Bar of the High-Treaſon they were accuſed of: Oates did ſwear, that upon the 24th of April, 1678, there was a Conſult of Jeſuits held at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, where Ireland and ſeveral other Jeſuits were preſent, and their Buſineſs was to conſult how they might murder and deſtroy the King, and ſubvert the Government, and there they came to a Reſolution that Pickering and Grove ſhould kill the King; and he was preſent at the Debate, and he carried the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, where they had ſeparated themſelves in leſſer Numbers, and there he ſaw the Reſolution ſigned: and this is the Matter that he ſwore, upon which this Indictment is founded. And, Gentlemen, we do charge that this was a falſe Oath, and in a Point expreſsly to the Matter then in Controverſy before that Court, for we ſhall prove he was beyond Sea at that time, and on that day; and in order to his Conviction we ſhall make out by clear Evidence to you as full and plain as ever was given, that from Chriſtmas before, which was in December 1677, till Midſummer after, which was the latter end of June 1678, Oates, that ſwears this Conſult in April, was at St. Omers, and in all that time was not abſent from the College there above 24 Hours, and that but once only, which was in January when he played Truant, and went to Watton, which is about two Miles from St. Omers, but otherwiſe he was all along in the College. And, my Lord, that we may give ſuch a ſatisfactory Evidence as may make it undeniably plain to the Jury, I deſire your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, would pleaſe to obſerve ſome particular Periods of Time, that I ſhall open for the better clearing our Evidence methodically; and the firſt Period of Time is from Mr. Hilſley's leaving St. Omers; now he left St. Omers the 14th of April Old Stile, which is the 24th of April New Stile, and then when he came away, he left Oates there at St. Omers. Mr. Hilſley when he came into England, in Kent in his Journey to London, meets one Mr. Burnaby; this was I ſay in Mr. Hilſley's Return into England from St. Omers, which he left ten Days before the time aſſigned by Oates for this Conſult, at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand. And the next Period is, Mr. Burnaby was going to St. Omers, and there he arrives in Time the 21ſt of April Old Stile, and there he finds Mr. Oates, who ſwore he was then in London: and by the Evidence you will hear that Mr. Oates, according to his uſual Cuſtom, and according to that Virtue he is endowed with, very boldly inſinuates himſelf into this Gentleman's Company, as he uſes to do with all new Comers; and you will hear from Mr. Burnaby himſelf, and many others, that from the time of his coming to St. Omers, which was the 21ſt of April, he convers'd with Mr. Oates ſeveral Days, every Day till after the 24th of April Old Stile at St. Omers. Then, my Lord, another Period of Time that I would deſire you to obſerve, is, from Mr. Pool's coming from St. Omers, which was in Time the 25th of April Old Stile, the very Day after the Day that this Conſult was ſworn to be on; and when he came from St. Omers, you will hear from many Witneſſes that he left Oates there, and there he ſtayed. For, my Lord, we ſhall, beſides theſe particular times of theſe Gentlemens coming over who left him there, prove the very Day when he left St. Omers, and that was the end of Midſummer-day following, which was the 23d of June; then was the time when Oates firſt came from St. Omers to England, and we ſhall prove he took his leave of them then. My Lord, we have many other Circumſtances that will unanſwerably ſtrengthen this Evidence, and ſhew that our Witneſſes teſtify nothing but the Truth; one particularly is this: This Gentleman being a Novice of the Houſe, was Reader in the Sodality, as they call it, we ſhall prove that; for every Sunday and Holiday throughout all April and May, he did officiate in that place, and did read to the Society according as the Cuſtom there is; and we ſhall prove another particular thing, that upon this 24th of April he was in the College, by a particular Circumſtance, and that by ſeveral Witneſſes: ſo that, Gentlemen, not to detain you with any long Opening of the Matter, if we prove this that I have opened, as we ſhall with a Cloud of Witneſſes, it will make an end of the Queſtion. We ſhall firſt call our Witneſſes to prove that he ſwore at that Trial, that ſuch a Conſult was, and he was at it, and then if we prove that he was at another Place beyond the Sea, at ſuch Diſtance that it is impoſſible for him to be here; I do not doubt but the Court and the Jury will conclude, he hath willfully and corruptly forſwore himſelf; the ſad Effects of which we are all Witneſſes of; it was to take away the Lives of his Fellow-Subjects wrongfully; and it will appear to the World, he has been one of the greateſt Impoſtors that ever did appear upon the Stage, either in this Kingdom, or in any other Nation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will now go on with our Evidence, and prove all the Parts of the Indictment, and firſt produce the Record of the Trial of Ireland, and then by Witneſſes, viva voce, that were preſent at that Trial, we ſhall prove what he ſwore, and then prove that Oath of his to be falſe. Swear Mr. Swift. [Which was done. Mr. Finch.

Where is the Record of Ireland's Trial?

Mr. Swift. Here it is, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. Is that a true Copy, Sir?

Mr. Swift. Yes, I examin'd this from the Record, it is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Read it.

Mr. At. Gen. If Dr. Oates does deſire the whole may be read, let it be ſo; otherwiſe a Word of it may ſerve, it being only an Inducement.

Oates. Yes, I deſire it may be all read.

L. C. J. It muſt be read, if he will have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, I ſubmit it, I did only offer it to ſave the time of the Court.

Oates. I would ſave the time of the Court too all that I can; but I think it may be material for me to have the whole read.

L. C. J. In God's Name let it be read, we will not hinder you in any thing that may be for your Defence.

Cl. of Cr. Memorandum quod——

Mr. At. Gen. Now this long Record in Latin is read, I would fain know whether it be to any great purpoſe, but only to ſpend Time?

L. C. J. Nay, I think it has not been very edifying to a great many; do you think, Mr. Oates, that the Jury, who are Judges of this Fact, do underſtand it?

Oates. I cannot tell, may be they may, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you underſtand it yourſelf, Mr. Oates?

Oates. That's not any Queſtion here; but to oblige the Court and the Jury, I deſire it may be read in Engliſh too.

L. C. J. No, the Court underſtands it well enough, and they can tell the Jury what it is; it is only the Copy of a Record, to prove that Ireland was tried for High-Treaſon at the Old-Bailey, the 17th of December 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, to ſwear what Oates did at that Trial ſwear: Pray ſwear Mr. Foſter. [Which was done.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Foſter, will you acquaint the Court and the Jury, whether Dr. Oates was produced as a Witneſs at Ireland's Trial, and what he did there depoſe about a Conſult in April 78.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I was ſo unhappy as to be one of that Jury, by whom Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pickering, and Mr. Grove were try'd.

Jury-men. My Lord, we deſire that Mr. Foſter would lift up his Voice, for we cannot hear him.

Mr. Foſter. Truly, My Lord, I have been very ſick of late, and am not now very well, and therefore cannot ſpeak louder than I do,

L. C. J. Go nearer the Jury, and ſpeak as loud as you can.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I ſay, I did ſee Mr. Oates produced as an Evidence at the Seſſions in the Old-Bailey, where I was ſo unhappy as to be a Jury-man, when Mr. Pickering, Mr. Ireland, Mr. Grove, and Mr. Whitebread were try'd.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Foſter. It was in December 78.

Mr. At. Gen. And what did Oates then ſwear?

Mr. Foſter. I did ſee Mr. Oates ſworn as an Evidence there, in behalf of the King, againſt the Priſoners; and he did then ſwear, that there was a Meeting of ſeveral Jeſuits at the White-horſe Tavern in the Strand, upon the 24th of April 78, and that Mr. Whitebread, Mr. Ireland, and Mr. Fenwick were preſent at the Meeting, and there they did conſult the Death of the King, and the altering of the Religion; and ſome went away, and others came: at laſt they reduced themſelves into ſeveral ſmaller Companies or Clubs, and they came to a Reſolution, that Pickering and Grove ſhould go on to aſſaſſinate the King, for which the one was to have 1500 Pound, and the other 30,000 Maſſes, and that this Reſolution was drawn up by one Mico (if I am not miſtaken in his Name) I have it in my Notes I then took of the Evidence; and he ſwore further, that he himſelf went with this Reſolution to ſeveral of their Chambers; he went to Whitebread's Chamber, and ſaw Whitebread ſign it; he went to Fenwick's Chamber, and ſaw Fenwick ſign it; and went to Ireland's Chamber, and ſaw Ireland ſign it; and this was upon the 24th of April 78. My Lord, I am poſitive in this, for I had the good-hap to take the Notes at the Trial for my own help, being a Jury-man, and I never look'd upon thoſe Notes afterwards, till the printed Trial came out, and then I compared my Notes with the Print, and found them to agree, and I have kept them ever ſince by me, and this is all under my own Hand as I have teſtified.

Oates. My Lord, may I ask this Gentleman a Queſtion?

L. C. J. Ay, if the King's Counſel have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have done with him.

Mr. Foſter Pray, my Lord, give me leave to ſit down, for I am not able to ſtand.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire you to aſk that Gentleman, whether in the Oath that I took, I call'd it a Conſult, or I call'd it a Traitorous Conſult.

Mr. Foſter. Truly I think you call'd it both, if I am not miſtaken; but if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will look upon my Notes.

L. C. J. You may look upon your Notes to refreſh your Memory, if you will.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Truly I think if it were a Conſult to murder the King, it muſt be a traitorous one without doubt.

Oates. Sir, that is not to the purpoſe, my Queſtion is, what I ſwore it was.

L. C. J. He tells you, he believes you did ſwear both ways.

Mr. Foſter. At that Conſult he ſaid ſuch a Reſolution was taken, and I think he called it a Traitorous Conſult.

Oates. If you pleaſe, I'll tell your Lordſhip the Reaſon, why I asked that Queſtion.

L. C. J. No, you may ſave yourſelf the trouble of that, you beſt know the reaſon of your own Queſtions; he has given you a ſatisfactory Anſwer.

Oates. Then if your Lordſhip pleaſe, aſk him this Queſtion, Whether I ſwore that all theſe three Jeſuits were preſent at one time, or how many of them?

L. C. J. You hear the Queſtion, what ſay you to it?

Mr. Foſter. Sir, you ſwore that Ireland, Fenwick, and Whitebread were at that Conſult, but whether they were all three of them there at one time, I cannot tell, or which of them were together; but this you did ſwear, that they were there, and came to ſuch a Reſolution, and you carried it to all their Chambers, and did ſee them ſign it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He gives you a plain Account, of what you did ſwear, I think, Mr. Oates.

Oates. Very well, my Lord, I would aſk him a third Queſtion, if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name aſk him as many Queſtions as you will.

Oates. Whether did I ſwear that it was reſolved to kill the King at the White-Horſe Tavern, or whether that Reſolution was made after they ſeparated themſelves into leſſer Clubs?

L. C. J. Mr. Foſter, this is his Queſtion, Whether you did apprehend by what he ſwore, that he affirmed, the Reſolution to kill the Kng was made at the White-Horſe Tavern, or afterwards when they were divided?

Mr. Foſter. They came to a Reſolution, you ſaid, at the White-Horſe Tavern, and the Reſolution was there drawn up by one Mico, I think, and it was carried by you, for every one to ſign it from Chamber to Chamber; for I remember you were aſked the Queſtion, whether you ſaw them ſign it, and you anſwered that you did carry it, and ſaw them ſign it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He ſpeaks very plain, Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. He anſwers your Queſtion very fully.

Oates. Ay, my Lord, ſo he does, I am glad of it?

L. C. J. Have you any more Queſtions to aſk him.

Oates. I would aſk him another Queſtion; whether I did ſwear, that I did carry this Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned, or that I carried it from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw them ſign it

Mr. Foſter. You did ſwear that you carried the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw them ſign it.

Oates. But did you remember it ſo particularly, as to ſay, which you ſwore, whether I did carry it to be ſigned, or carried it, and ſaw them ſign it?

Mr. Foſter. You ſaid, you carried it to be ſigned, and you ſaw it ſigned.

L. C. J. He tells you for Satisfaction in that Point, that he does remember you did ſwear it both ways.

Oates. He does ſay ſo indeed, but whether it was ſo or no, is a doubt.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. That will be a Queſtion by and by, it may be; if he be in the wrong, I ſuppoſe you can rectify him.

Oates. We are now, my Lord, upon my Oath, and therefore it concerns me to enquire whether I ſwore as is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You ſay right, it does ſo.

Oates. And I the rather aſk theſe Queſtions, my Lord, becauſe it is ſix Years ago ſince that Trial.

L. C. J. I hope you have not forgot what you ſwore, have you?

Oates. My Lord, I think it is fair for me to aſk the Witneſſes what they remember after ſo long a time.

L. C. J. 'Tis very fair, no body ſays any thing to the contrary.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I hope I may aſk this Gentleman how he comes to remember all this after ſo long a time?

L. C. J. He has told you already, but tell it him again, Mr. Foſter.

Mr. Foſter. Truly it is ſo long ago, that had I not taken all theſe Notes at the Trial, I had not been able to have given ſo good an Account.

L. C. J. 'Tis a very good reaſon.

Oates. 'Tis ſo, my Lord, I have ſubpœna'd others of the Jury, and they will, I ſuppoſe, give you as good an Account.

L. C. J. Have you done with him then?

Oates. I have one Queſton more to aſk Mr. Foſter, and that is, whether I ſwore they met all in one Room, at the White-Horſe Tavern, or in more than one?

Mr. Foſter. You ſwore they were in ſeveral Rooms.

Oates. Then I would aſk him this Queſton, my Lord, whether he were then ſatisfied that Ireland was guilty of the High-Treaſon he was then indicted of?

L. C. J. The meaning of the Queſtion is, I ſuppoſe, whether you did believe Mr. Oates at that time.

Mr. Foſter. Yes, my Lord, I had no reaſon to the contrary.

L. C. J. But I would aſk you a Queſton then, Mr. Foſter. Do you believe him now? Do you think, Mr. Oates, he would have found him guilty, if he had not believed the Evidence againſt him?

Oates. We know how Juries have gone a-late.

L. C. J. Ay, very ſtrangely indeed, Mr. Oates, and I hope ſo as we ſhall never ſee them go again.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I have lived ſo long in the City of London without any Blemiſh, that I hope it will not be thought I would give corruptly a Verdict againſt my Conſcience.

Oates. My Lord, I ſpeak of later Times than Ireland's Trial.

L. C. J. He is an honeſt Man, I know him.

Oates. Good my Lord, be pleaſed to hear me.

L. C. J. Nay, you ſhall hear me, as well as I ſhall hear you, I'll aſſure you that, Mr. Oates, in plain Engliſh: aſk as many Queſtions of the Witneſſes as you will, that are proper to be aſked; but I'll have no Deſcants, nor Reflections: I know him, and he is very well known in the City of London, he is a Man of very conſiderable Quality, and very good Repute.

Oates. I beſeech your Lordſhip to forgive me, if I miſtake in my Queſtions, I do aſſure you I deſign no Reflections on Mr. Foſter.

L. C. J. Aſk what Queſtions you will, but do not reflect.

Oates. I deſire to aſk Mr. Foſter one Queſtion more, and that is, that he would be pleaſed to tell the reaſon why at the beginning of his Evidence he ſaid, it was his unhappineſs to be a Juryman at that time?

Mr. Foſter. Really, Sir, I think it is not a happineſs for any Man to be of a Jury, where the Life of a Man is in queſtion. I aſſure you for myſelf, I never accounted it ſo, and if I could have avoided it, I ſhould have been very glad to have been excuſed.

Oates. I have done with Mr. Foſter.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, thus we prove what Mr. Oates ſwore at the Trial, which Mr. Oates himſelf will not deny; for the Fact, Mr. Oates has printed in his Narrative, as we have now proved it.

Oates. I intend to produce ſome others of the Jury-men by and by.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we ſhall call our Witneſſes to prove, that what he then ſwore was falſe.

Mr. At. Gen. We call no more to the Point, what he did ſwear; but go on to diſprove what he did then ſwear.

Oates. My Lord, I would put this Queſtion to the Court, whether this be a Proof ſufficient for this Point?

L. C. J. I leave that to the Jury, it is a Point of Fact that they are to try.

Oates. I beſeech your Lordſhip, that the Court would be pleaſed to give me an Anſwer.

L. C. J. If you aſk impertinent Queſtions, the Court is not obliged to anſwer them. Go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Martin Hilſley Eſq; and Henry Thornton Eſq; Swear Mr. Hilſley. [Which was done.

Come, Mr. Hilſley, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury what time you came from St. Omers, in the Year 78.

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I came from St. Omers the 24*th* of April New Stile, where I left the Priſoner, Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. From whence did you come, ſay you?

Mr. Hilſley. From St. Omers the 24*th* of April, New Stile.

L. C. J. What Year?

Hilſley. In the Year 78, that is, the fourteenth of April here; and the three and twentieth of April New Stile, I ſaw the Priſoner at St. Omers, and went to School with him, and on the four and twentieth I came from St. Omers, and went to Calais, and from thence into England; but he was never in my Company all the while I was coming for England, though he ſwore he came over with me.

L. C. J. The three and twentieth of April you ſay you ſaw him?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, I was with him, that was the Day before I came from St. Omers.

L. C. J. You left him there the Day before you came away, you ſay?

Mr. Hilſley. I did not ſee him that Morning that I came away, but here are others that did.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he a Scholar there?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, my Lord, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him very well?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he come over into England with you?

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I came from St. Omers to Calais, and never ſaw him; from Calais to Dover;

I never ſaw him from Dover to London, I never ſaw him all the way; and I am confident, he was not in the ſame Ship I came over in, for I ſhould have ſeen him if he had.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he for ſome time before that conſtantly at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilſley. We went perpetually to School together.

L. C. J. What time did you take ſhipping after you went from St. Omers.

Mr. Hilſley. The very next Day; the Day I went from St. Omers was on the Sunday morning: On Monday I took ſhipping from Calais to Dover, and I arrived in England at Ten of the Clock the ſame Night.

Oates. When does he ſay he arrived in England?

L. C. J. He ſays, he went from St. Omers on the Sunday, he came that Night to Calais, and the next day went on board from Calais, and came that Night to Dover, that was Monday Night.

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, I came that Night to Dover, and I lay there that Monday Night, the next Day was the 26th of April New Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. Where came you then, from thence?

Mr. Hilſley. I came as far as Bockton-ſtreet, and there I lay four or five Days, and then I came to Sittingbourn, and by long Sea from thence to London.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you meet Mr. Burnaby?

Mr. Hilſley. I met him hard by there, at a Relation's of mine.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what Day you met him?

Mr. Hilſley. I think it was a Day or two before I came away from thence to London.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. Oates, about your coming into England?

Mr. Hilſley. Nothing at all, Sir Francis, that I remember.

L. C. J. What time did you come to London?

Mr. Hilſley. I came within a few Days to London, I ſtaid four or five Days there by the way; and I ſaw Mr. Burnaby within four Days, I think, after I came into England. It was about Monday ſevennight after I came from St. Omers, that I came to London.

Mr. At. Gen. That was May New Stile.

Mr. Hilſley. That is their Stile. It was ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In our Stile it was the 21ſt of April.

Mr. Hanſeys. Pray did you give an account to any body, after you came to London, that you left Oates at St. Omers when you came away.

Mr. Hilſley. What ſay you, Mr. Hanſeys? I did not well underſtand your Queſtion.

L. C. J. Then mind me, Sir: It was aſked of you, whether you had any Diſcourſe with any body, after you came hither, that you had left Mr. Oates behind you at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilſley I did tell ſome Perſons I left an Engliſh Parſon there, at the ſame time I came away.

L. C. J. Did you not name him, who it was?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, I named him by the Name he went by there, and that was Sampſon Lucy.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did you tell it?

Mr. Hilſley. To one Mr. Osbourn,

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he go by that Name of Sampſon Lucy in the College?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, he did ſometimes, he had three or four Names, he was called ſometimes Titus Ambroſius.

Oates. Now, my Lord, I deſire I may aſk that Gentleman a Queſtion or two.

L. C. J. Ay, if they have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. We have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then aſk him what you will.

Oates. I deſire, my Lord, that you would be pleaſed to aſk that Gentleman what Religion he is of; for it is a fair Queſtion, and an equitable one, and that which very nearly concerns me? and I deſire to know where he lives.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Hilſley. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Hilſley. I live in London, I am of the Inner-Temple.

L. C. J. He ſays that he is a Roman Catholick, and lives in London.

Oates. Pray be pleaſed, my Lord, to aſk him when he went to St. Omers firſt, and how long he ſtayed there?

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I was there about ſix Years, I preſume it was about the Year 1672, when I went there firſt.

Oates. Pray aſk him what he did there, what was his Buſineſs?

Mr. At. Gen. That is not a pertinent Queſtion at all, with ſubmiſſion, my Lord.

Oates. I beſeech you, Mr. Attorney, give me leave to aſk my own Queſtions.

L. C. J. Ay, but you muſt aſk fair and pertinent Queſtions.

Oates. My Lord, I would know what was his Employment there at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilſley. I know not my ſelf of any particular Employment I had, any more than any of the reſt that were there.

L. C. J But, Mr. Oates, you muſt not aſk any ſuch Queſtions; what know I, but by aſking him the Queſtion, you may make him obnoxious to ſome Penalty, you muſt not aſk him any Queſtions to enſnare him

Oates. My Lord, it tends very much to my Defence to have that Queſtion truly anſwered.

L. C. J. But if it tends to your Defence never ſo much, you muſt not ſubject him to a Penalty by your Queſtions.

Oates. The nature of my Defence requires an Anſwer to that Queſtion.

L. C. J. But ſhall you make a Man liable to Puniſhment, by enſnaring Queſtions? If a Man ſhould aſk you what Religion you are of,———

Oates. My Lord, I will tell you by and by my Reaſon, and I hope a good one, why I aſk it.

L. C. J. I do not believe you can have any Reaſon, but to be ſure we muſt not ſuffer any ſuch entangling Queſtions to be aſked.

Oates. Pray aſk him, my Lord, when I came to St. Omers.

L. C. J. When did Oates come to St. Omers?

Mr. Hilſley. As well as I remember, he came to St. Omers either the latter end of November, or the beginning of December, in the Year 1677, I think it was that Year.

Oates. I deſire you would aſk him, whether they were not Prieſts and Jeſuits that govern'd that Houſe?

L. C. J. What a Queſtion is that! I tell you 'tis not fit to be aſked.

Oates. I demand an anſwer to it, upon the Oath he has taken.

L. C. J. And I tell you, upon the Oath you have taken, you are not bound to anſwer any ſuch Queſtion.

Oates. Good my Lord, let my Queſtions be anſwered.

L. C. J. No, Sir, they ſhall not: How now, do not think to put Irregularities upon us, if you will behave your ſelf as you ought to do, and keep to that which is proper, well and good.

Oates. If your Lordſhip pleaſes, I think this very proper for me.

L. C. J. What, to aſk ſuch improper Queſtions as theſe are?

Oates. Truly, my Lord, I think they are fit Queſtions to be aſked.

L. C. J. But we are all of another Opinion.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether they are not ſet on by their Superiours to do this?

L. C. J. That is not a fair Queſtion neither.

Oates. Give me leave to make my Defence, my Lord, I beſeech you.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name; but I pray you then make it in a regular and becoming way; for I know of no Privilege you have more than other People, to uſe Witneſſes as you do.

Oates. My Lord, I look upon my ſelf as hardly uſed in the Caſe.

L. C. J. I care not what you look upon your ſelf to be, if you will aſk Queſtions, aſk none but fair Queſtions, and while you keep within Bounds you ſhall be heard as well as any of the King's Subjects; but if you will break out into Queſtions that are impertinent, extravagant, or enſnaring, we muſt correct you, and keep you within proper Limits.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I aſk whether he was not a Witneſs at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, and at Langhorn's Trial?

L. C. J. Ay, that is a proper Queſtion, what ſay you to't, Sir?

Mr. Hilſley. I was ſo, Sir.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Credit he received at thoſe Trials?

L. C. J. What a Queſtion is that to aſk any Man!

Oates. My Lord, I think it is a fair Queſtion.

L. C. J. No, indeed, it is not a fair one at all.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know what induces him to come here as a Witneſs now, ſince it appears that now he comes to give an Evidence that he gave ſix Years ago, and was not believed?

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I am ſubpœna'd.

L. C. J. He has given you an Anſwer to the Queſtion, though I think it was an idle Queſtion, and not at all to the Purpoſe.

Oates. It may be, he may have ſome particular reaſon to induce him to it now.

L. C. J. Well, he tells you he came becauſe he was ſubpœna'd, and that is ſufficient: He is not compellable to be a Witneſs, unleſs he be ſubpœna'd; but if a Man will come without a Subpœna, and give Evidence in a Cauſe, that is no Objection to his Teſtimony.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, whether he is to have any Reward for ſwearing in this Cauſe?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir, are you to have any Reward for your Evidence?

Mr. Hilſley. None at all as I know of, my Lord, I aſſure you.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He is not paid for his Evidence, Mr Oates.

Oates. If he be or be not, I cannot tell, nor do I know who ever was paid for it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Queſtions to aſk him?

Oates. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what was the Occaſion of his coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Hilſley. I had finiſhed my Studies.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk him, if he never heard of any Conſult of the Jeſuits here in England, in the Month of April 78, and from whom he did hear of it?

Mr. Hilſley. I did hear of it among the reſt of the Students of the College.

L. C. J. What did you hear of?

Mr. Hilſley. I did hear of a Conſult of the Fathers in April 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, there was, but not ſuch an one as Mr. Oates ſpeaks of, nor was he at it.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. For what was that Conſult, I pray you?

Mr. Hilſley. It was nothing but a Triennial Congregation about the Affairs of the Society.

L. C. J. What were they to do there?

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I was informed among them there, that it was only what they uſed to have once in three Years for ordinary Affairs.

Oates. My Lord, he pretends to tell when I came thither, I deſire to know of him from what time it was he ſaw me there, and how often?

Mr. Hilſley. Generally every Day, as near as I can remember, I think, Mr. Oates; you and I, Mr. Oates, went to School in the ſame Place.

Oates. Pray, how many Days was I abſent from thence in that Time you were there?

Mr. Hilſley. You were there generally as often as I; I do not know whether ever you miſs'd a Day or no.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, will you aſk the Gentleman one Queſtion more, whether he can particularly tell that he did ſee me every Day at St. Omers? For 'tis not enough for him to ſwear that he ſaw me there; but he ought to give an Account how he comes to know it by ſome particular Circumſtances.

L. C. J. He has given you ſeveral Circumſtances of his Knowledge; for he ſays he was there all the while from your coming, till the 23d of April New Stile, that he came for England; he ſays he was a Scholar in the ſame Form and Claſs with you, and becauſe he does not remember himſelf to have been abſent, he does not remember you to be abſent neither.

Mr. At. Gen. And he ſwears particularly to the very Time he came over, which was April the 14th Old Stile.

Oates. Well, I have no more Queſtions to aſk this Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Then call another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cryer, call Mr. John Dorrel.

[Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Attorney, you did open things at the firſt for Method's ſake by Periods of Time; the firſt was Hilſley's coming over, the next was the meeting with Burnaby, now pray obſerve that Method, and call that Burnaby next.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall call him by and by; but we have not done with this Buſineſs about Hilſley, we have ſome Witneſſes that will give an Evidence to ſtrengthen and back his Teſtimony. Come, Mr. Dorrel, what have you to ſay to this Matter?

Mr. Dorrel. My Lord, in April 1678, I came from Bruſſels to England, where preſently after I came, I was with one Mr. Osbourn and my Mother; and there was a Diſcourſe between my Mother and him about Religion.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Where was that?

Mr. Dorrel. It was here in England.

Mr. At. Gen. Now tell the time when that was.

Mr. Dorrel. As near as I can gueſs, it was the 15th or 16th of April Old Stile, in the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, Sir, go on with your Story.

Mr. Dorrel. My Mother was laughing at his Religion, and telling him ſome ridiculous Stories, and he replied, there are a great many that are ſo ignorant, that are bred up in the Religion of the Church of England, that they are forced to be ſent to the Colleges abroad to be taught, even ſome of the Clergy of that Church, and particulariz'd in one Sampſon Lucy alias Oates, that was a Scholar at that time at St. Omers, as he was aſſured by a Gentleman that was newly come from thence. My Mother is now ſick, or elſe ſhe would have been here, and would have teſtified the ſame I now do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Gentleman is a Proteſtant, Mr. Oates.

Oates. What is your Name, Sir, I pray?

Mr. Dorrel. My Name is John Dorrel, Sir.

Oates. Were you never at St. Omers a Student there?

Mr. Dorrel. I was there, but before your time, Doctor; I had not the Happineſs to be there, while you were there.

Oates. I pray, Sir, what Religion are you of?

Mr. Dorrel. I am a Papiſt now.

Oates. I deſire, my Lord, the Court would be pleas'd to take notice of it, he owns he was recocil'd to the Church of Rome.

Mr. Dorrel. Mr. Oates, to ſatisfy you, I went over when I was a Child of 12 or 13 Years old, and ſo was bred in that Perſuaſion.

L. C. J. Well, well, we all obſerve what he ſays.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Osbourn.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we call this Perſon only to this Matter. Pray, Sir, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what Diſcourſe you had with Mr. Hilſley about Oates, and pray, Sir, tell the time when it was.

Mr. Osbourn. My Lord, I went out of Town the 30th of April, the Year before the pretended Plot was diſcover'd by Mr. Oates, and I met with Mr. Hilſley two or three Days before, and enquiring of him about the affairs of St. Omers, he told me of a Miniſter of the Church of England that was come thither to be a Student there, who went under the Name of Sampſon Lucy, but his right Name was Oates; I aſk'd him what he pretended to; did he intend to be of that Order? He told me, he did believe that he would not be admitted for his irregular and childiſh Behaviour, and that he had left him in the College; and this I afterwards in Diſcourſe told to Madam Dorrel, who is a Proteſtant; and to my Mother, who is ſince dead.

Mr. At. Gen. Will Mr. Oates aſk this Gentleman any Queſtions?

Oates. I only aſk him what Religion he is of?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Osbourn. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we come to call Mr. Burnaby. Pray ſwear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Burnaby, pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, of the time when you came from St. Omers to England, and when you met with Mr. Hilſley?

Mr. Burnaby. I met with Hilſley on the 18th of April Old Stile, in the Year 78; then I purſued my Journey the following Day to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Burnaby. Between Sittenbourn and Canterbury, and afterwards I purſued my Journey from Canterbury to Dover, from thence to Calais, and from thence to St. Omers. I arrived at St. Omers the 21ſt of April Old Stile, which was the 1ſt of May New Stile; upon the 2d of May Mr. Oates was in my Company, I was walking in the Garden, and he came into my Company.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Burnaby. The 2d of May New Stile, and the third of May again I went into the Garden, and there he was with me again; and the 5th of May I ſaw him again.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Burnaby. In the Rhetorick Form.

L. C. J. But where, in what Place?

Mr. Burnaby. At St. Omers.

L. C. J. You ſpeak of your own Knowledge, you are ſure you ſaw him there at thoſe times?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, in the Rhetorick School, and in the Garden.

Mr. At. Gen. What more do you know of him?

Mr. Burnaby. I ſaw him again the 8th of May New Stile, that is the 28th of April Old Stile? I mean by New Stile, that Stile which was uſed in the Place where I was then.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was he there before he went away?

Mr. Burnaby. I know he was there from the 2d of May, the Day after I came thither, to the 20th of June, and then I went away, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him daily all that time?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, from Day to Day he was not out of the Houſe.

L. C. J. Were you a Scholar there with him?

Mr. Burnaby Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What Year was that?

Mr. Burnaby. In the Year 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Oates may aſk him what Queſtions he will.

Oates. My Lord, he ſays he went away, I deſire to know whither he did go.

Mr. Burnaby. I went away the 20th of June from St. Omers, it is no matter whither I went.

Oates. I deſire he may give an account what Religion he is of.

Mr. Burnaby. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he be not of that Order.

L. C. J. That I will not aſk him, I'll aſſure you.

Oates. Truly, my Lord, I think it is a very hard matter for me to have Jeſuits admitted as Witneſſes in ſuch a Cauſe againſt me.

L. C. J. I have told you already, you are not to aſk any Queſtions of any Witneſſes that may ſubject them to any Penalty, or make them accuſe themſelves of any Crime.

Oates. My Lord, I humbly deſire he would give an account, whether he were not admitted into the Society.

L. C. J. I tell you, he is not to be aſk'd that Queſtion.

Oates. He has own'd it before.

L. C. J. Do you take your Advantage of it, if you can prove it.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I deſire to aſk him, whether or no he did appear as a Witneſs at the Trial of the five Jeſuits.

Mr. Burnaby. No, my Lord, I did not.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him whether he was not ſummon'd to appear then.

Mr. Burnaby. No, I was not.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Reward he is to have for coming, and giving this Evidence.

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward for being a Witneſs in this Cauſe?

Mr. Burnaby. None, my Lord, that I know of.

L. C. J. That was a proper Queſtion to be aſk'd, and you have a fair Anſwer to it.

Oates. Pray, Mr. Burnaby, by what Name did you go at St. Omers.

Mr. Burnaby. By the Name of Blunt.

Mr. At. Gen. And what Name did he go by there?

Mr. Burnaby. Who, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr Oates.

Mr. Burnaby. By the Name of Sampſon Lucy.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire you to aſk him whether he did know of any Conſult that was to be held here in London, in April 78, and by whom he knew it?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir, did you know of any Conſult?

Mr. Burnaby. No, I neither heard of it, nor knew any thing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we ſhall go on to another period of Time, and that is concerning Pool. Swear Mr. Pool. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you knew Mr. Burnaby at St. Omers.

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the time when he came to St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. No, I do not remember it.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you come over from St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. The 25th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Pool. Old Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. In what Year?

Mr. Pool. In the Year 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Oates at St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did know that Gentleman there?

Mr. At. Gen. Was he at St. Omers that time you was there?

Mr. Pool. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you leave him there when you came away?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did leave him there when I came away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell the Court ſome particular thing why you remember it, and upon what account you came away.

Mr. Pool. Upon the Occaſion of my Brother's Death I came over, and I can tell ſeveral Particulars of my Journey; I came away upon the Thurſday, and I came to London upon the Sunday following.

Mr. At. Gen. You are ſure you left Mr. Oates there then?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I am ſure I did leave Mr. Oates there when I came away, and I came away thence the fifth of May New Stile, the twenty-fifth of April Old Stile.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray how long did you know Mr. Oates there?

Mr. Pool. I knew him there from Chriſtmas before that.

L. C. J. You were of the College, were you not?

Mr Pool. Yes, I was a Student there.

L. C. J. You are ſure he was there all the while.

Mr. Pool. I do not remember he was a Day abſent, and if he had gone away, particular Notice would have been taken of it.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there two or three Days before you came away?

Mr. Pool. I ſaw him that Morning I came away.

L. C. J. And what time before?

Mr. Pool. I ſaw him two or three Days before that.

L. C. J. Can you name any particular Days?

Mr. Pool. I ſaw him the firſt of May, and the ſecond of May, and the fifth of May, which was the 25th of April Old Stile, and then I came away.

L. C. J. Are you ſure you left him there then?

Mr. Pool. I am ſure I left him there, I can ſwear it without any difficulty at all.

L. C. J. What do you aſk him, Mr. Oates?

Oates. I deſire to know what Religion he is of.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Pool. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. I deſire your Lordſhip would aſk him, whether he was a Witneſs at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, or at Langhorn's Trial.

Mr. Pool. No, I was never an Evidence before in my Life.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, whether he was not admitted into the Sodality of the Virgin Mary.

L. C. J. No, indeed, I ſhall aſk him no ſuch Queſtion.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, let him anſwer it.

L. C. J. Prove what you can when it come to your Turn, but aſk him no entangling Queſtions.

Oates. He has made himſelf liable to a Penalty by being in that Seminary.

L. C. J. I hope a Man may be at St. Omers, and yet not be puniſh'd for it, Mr. Oates.

Oates. It is my Defence to diſable the Witneſſes againſt me.

L. C. J. But they muſt not be aſk'd what may make them accuſe themſelves.

Oates. My Lord, it is hard that the Witneſſes ſhall not be made to anſwer my Queſtions.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, be quiet, we have told you often enough already, you muſt not think to govern us, it muſt not be allow'd.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire he may be aſk'd then, what Reward he has to come, and ſwear in this Cauſe.

Mr. Pool. My Lord, I do not know that I am ſo much as to have my Charges borne.

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward?

Mr. Pool. No, my Lord, that I know of.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, I deſire he may be aſk'd, what was the occaſion of Mr. Hilſley's coming away from St. Omers.

Mr. Pool. Indeed I did not examine into the occaſion at all, for I was never a Man that meddled or made on any ſide, but lived quietly in the College, and minded my Studies.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip to aſk him whether he did know of any Conſult of the Jeſuits in April 78, and from whom he knew it.

Mr. Pool. I know not of any particular Conſult, I heard ſomething in general of a Triennial Congregation, but I cannot ſpeak any thing of my own Knowledge.

Oates.

Oates. My Lord, I desire to know of him, if he can tell when I came to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Do you know when Oates came to St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. About Christmas, as near as I can remember, it was the latter end of November.

Oates. How much before or after Christmas was it?

Mr. Pool. I cannot tell exactly.

Oates. What Year was it in?

Mr. Pool. In the Year 77.

Oates. I desire to know of him, my Lord, whether he saw me every Day at St. Omers at Dinner.

Mr. Pool. I cannot say that ever I knew he was absent any one Day, never three Days I think I may affirm, but only when he was in the Infirmary.

Mr. At. Gen. That's the Place where they go when they are sick.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him by what Name he went, when he was there in the College.

Mr. Pool. By the Name of Killingbeck.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By what Name did he go, I pray you?

Mr. Pool. By the Name of Sampson Lucy.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Henry Thornton.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Thornton, pray where were you in the Year 78?

Mr. Thornton. At St. Omers, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Oates there, do you know him?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come thither?

Mr. Thornton. He came there about Christmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Thornton. He staid there till St. John Baptist's Eve in June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Midsummer you mean.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, the Eve of St. John Baptist.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Thornton. New Stile.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him there all the while?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I did see him every Day, I believe, in the Refectory at Dinner-time, and at Night in the Dormitory, where all the Collegians have their Beds: I lay over-against him every Night, I saw him particularly upon the Day of Hilsley's Departure, which was the 24th of April New Stile, and I saw him the 1st of May New Stile, upon the coming of Mr. Burnaby to the College; and particularly again I remember him there the 2d of May, when my School-fellows exhibited an Action, or Play.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Oates there then?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I saw him present at it, and I know it by this particular Circumstance, there was a Scuffle between him and another about a Place to see the Play.

Mr. Jones. Did you see him the 23d of April Old Stile, that is, the 3d of May New Stile, which was the Day after your Play, that you remember?

Mr. Thornton. I do not remember that I did see him that Day, by any particular Circumstance, tho' I believe I did.

Mr. Jones. Do you remember when Mr. Pool came away from St. Omers.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I do.

Mr. Jones. When was that?

Mr. Thornton. The 5th of May New Stile.

Mr. Jones. Was Oates at St. Omers at that time?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, he was there then, I am sure.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not he Reader there in the College?

Mr. Thornton. He was Reader in the Sodality, and to my knowledge, he did not miss once from the 24th of April New Stile, to the 24th of May New Stile, from being there, and reading in the Sodality.

L. C. J. What did he use to read?

Mr. Thornton. Some spiritual Book, or piece of Divinity, or the like, as it was usual to have read every Sunday and Holiday.

L. C. J. And that is one reason why you conclude he was there all that while, because every Sunday and Holiday he was to read, and did read.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask this Gentleman what Religion he is of.

Mr. Thornton. A Roman Catholick.

Oates. Where does he live?

L. C. J. Where do you live, Mr. Thornton?

Mr. Thornton. I am a Northumberland Man, that's my Country.

Oates. My Lord, I desire to know of him, when he did come from St. Omers.

Mr. Thornton. I came from St. Omers, my Lord, about two Years after that Oates went away from thence.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask him, who it was that was Rector or Govenor of that House or College.

Mr. Thornton. It was one Mr. Richard Ashby.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask him what School he was in there.

Mr. Thornton. I was in Syntax, my Lord.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I would ask him another Question, and that is this, Whether he was not a Witness in behalf of the five Jesuits and Mr. Langhorn?

Mr. Thornton. No, I was not, my Lord.

Oates. My Lord, I desire to know if he can tell the occasion of Mr. Hilsley's coming away from St. Omers.

Mr. Thornton. It never concern'd me at all, and I never enquired into it.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I would ask him this Question, Why he is so precise as to his Remembrance of what was done in April and May, when he does not give any account of any other time, nor did the other Witnesses.

L. C. J. Yes, but they do; they give you a particular account from the time of your coming thither, which was about Christmas, some say the latter end of November or the beginning of December, they are not positive to any particular time, but thereabouts, and so from that time all along till June.

Oates. I beg your Lordship's pardon, I did not hear that he said any such thing.

L. C. J. If you will, I'll ask him that Question again for your Satisfaction.

Oates. If you please, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then mind what is said; Do you remember that Oates was there in March before, and in February before?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I particularly remember in March before, he did read a ridiculous Book in the Sodality, and he was remarkable in the House by twenty ridiculous Passages.

Oates. I do acknowledge I did in March read a pleasant Book, call'd, The Contempt of the Clergy.

L. C. J. By whose order did he read that Book in the Sodality?

Mr.

Mr. Thornton. I do not know whether it was by his own Election that he was Reader there, or by the Command of the Prefect of the Studies, that has the Care of the Students, and appoints them their Buſineſs.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to aſk him how long he was reſident at St. Omers.

Mr. Thornton. I was there ſeven Years.

L. C. J. You ſaid he was there in June, till Midſummer Eve.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, he was ſo.

Oates. I own that I was there in June, but that was after I return'd from England.

L. C. J. When do you ſay he left the College firſt?

Mr. Thornton. He never left the College from the time of his coming thither firſt till Midſummer Eve, only one time that he was at Watton, and that was but a Day or two at moſt, which is not a League out of Town.

L. C. J. Do you remember him there about Chriſtmas time?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, very well.

L. C. J. When was it he went to Watton?

Mr. Thornton. About the latter end of January, as I do remember, and in February above Shrovetide, I remember him particularly to be there.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Oates, you ſee he ſpeaks to other times beſides April and May, and he brings, upon my Word, very notable Circumſtances.

Oates. He ſays he went to School with me there, I think, my Lord?

Mr. Thornton. No, I ſay he was in the ſame College.

L. C. J. But not in the ſame Claſſis, for it ſeems you were in the Rhetorick Form, and he in the Syntax.

Mr. Thornton. My Lord, he went there by reaſon of his Age, and upon no other account; he might have gone elſewhere with us who were of a lower Form for any great ſtore of Learning he had.

L. C. J. You hear him, I ſuppoſe, Mr. Oates, he gives no great Commendation of your Scholarſhip.

Oates. That is nothing to this Queſtion; but pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk him, whether he did not hear of a Conſult of the Jeſuits held here in England in April 78?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir? Did you hear of any ſuch Conſult?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, I did hear of a Triennial Congregation, ſuch as uſed to be held by them, but that did not belong to me to enquire into it.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know of whom he did hear it?

L. C. J. How do you know there was ſuch a Conſult, who told you of it?

Mr. Thornton. I heard of it in the Houſe, and I had read that it was the Cuſtom of that Society of People, to have ſuch a Meeting once in three Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray for what purpoſe did they ſo meet?

Mr. Thornton. As I have been told, it was to ſend a Procurator to Rome, and for their managing their other Affairs, which concern'd their Society.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have the Jeſuits uſually ſuch a Conſult once in three Years, Sir?

Mr. Thornton. I was never preſent at any ſuch Congregation, I was not capable of it.

L. C. J. But was it uſed to be ſaid ſo?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, I have heard it ſaid ſo, and read of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates. will you aſk him any more Queſtons?

Oates. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well then, go on, Mr. Attorney, and call another Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. William Conway.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Conway, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account where you were in the Year 1677, and in the Year 1678?

Mr. Conway, I was then at St. Omers, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Oates there at any time?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, at what time was he there, as you remember?

Mr. Conway. He came in December before Chriſtmas, 1677, and did not go away till June 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time in June did he go away?

Mr. Conway. About the twentieth of June, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you there all that Year?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I was there a Scholar in the College.

Mr. Jones. Was he all the time you ſpeak of in the College?

Mr. Conway. He lay out one Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was that?

Mr. Conway. In January, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could he be out of the College any time and not be miſs'd?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lord, he could not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you miſs him at any time?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there in April 1678?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any particular Paſſages that can make you remember it?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell my Lord and the Jury how you can remember it.

Mr. Conway. I remember Mr. Hilſley's Departure, which was the 24th of April New Stile, and ſoon after Mr. Burnaby came, but I do not know the time exactly; I was deſirous to know of Mr. Burnaby whether he met Mr. Hilſley upon the way, and he told me he did meet him, and the next Day I ſaw Mr. Oates and Mr. Burnaby walking together very familiarly, and I took particular notice of it at that time, Mr. Burnaby being but newly come, ſo that I took him to have known Mr. Burnaby before, or elſe I concluded him to be a little impudent by his intruding into his Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember him in March before?

Mr. Conway. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Particulars do you remember of his being there then?

Mr. Conway. I remember him to be there on the Thurſday in Mid-Lent, the Scholars in the College had a peculiar Recreation, which they call, Sawing of the Witch, and Mr. Oates was among them, and I was one of them that broke a Pan about his Head for Recreation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the 1ſt of May, that there was in your College a Play acted?

Mr.

Mr. Conway. As for the Play, I remember what Part Eſquire Pool acted in it, but I remember not any Particulars that can make me ſo ſure as to ſwear that Oates was there?

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember any ſcuffling for a Place there?

Mr. Conway. I do not remember it of my own Knowledge, I heard of it afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay that you ſaw Mr. Burnaby and him walking together the next Day after he came?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I did ſo, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Oates uſe to read in the Sodality?

Mr. Conway. My Lord, there was another choſen according to the Cuſtom to read, but Mr. Oates took the Book, and did read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he read conſtantly?

Mr. Conway. I did never miſs him any Sunday or Holiday all the time.

L. C. J. From what time to what time did he read?

Mr. Conway. From a little after Eaſter till he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it uſually taken notice of in the College when any Perſon who is a Student goes away from the College?

Mr. Conway. There is nothing more diſcours'd of among the Scholars than that, when it happens any one goes out of the College.

L. C. J. And pray when did he go away?

Mr. Conway. In June, about the twentieth, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you obſerve him at Dinner there conſtantly?

Mr. Conway. Yes, he ſat by himſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came that to paſs?

Mr. Conway. He ſat at a little Table in the Hall by himſelf, for he pretended, being a Man in Years he could not diet as the reſt of the young Students did, and therefore obtain'd leave to ſit alone at a little Table by himſelf, and he ſat next to the Table of the Fathers, to which all the Students were to make their Reverence before they ſat down.

L. C. J. He was a very remarkable Man by his ſitting by himſelf; did he ſit there always?

Mr. Conway. He changed his Table once, and I took notice that he ſat on the other ſide of the Refectory.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was that I pray, can you remember?

Mr. Conway. That was a little after Eaſter.

Mr. At. Gen. Will Mr. Oates aſk him any Queſtions?

Oates. Pray, my Lord, will you aſk this Gentleman what Religion he is of.

Mr. Conway. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. Pray, aſk him where he lives.

L. C. J. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Conway. Where now at preſent, my Lord?

L. C. J. Where do you uſually live?

Mr. Conway. I am a Flintſhire Man, my Lord.

Oates. Pray aſk him what name he did go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Conway. By the Name of William Parry.

Oates. Pray aſk him by what Name he gave his Evidence in at the five Jeſuits Trial.

L. C. J. Were you a Witneſs at the Trial of the five Jeſuits?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. By what Name did you give your Evidence there?

Mr. Conway. By the Name of Parry.

Oates. Then I deſire the Court to take notice he repreſented himſelf by a feign'd Name in a Court of Record.

Mr. Conway. I went by both Names, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, make what Advantage you can of it by and by.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, if ever he heard of any Conſult of the Jeſuits held here in England in April 1678.

Mr. Conway. Yes, I did.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him who inform'd him of that Conſult.

Mr. Conway. I heard it among the reſt of the Scholars, and ſeeing ſome of the Fathers go over to it, I was told ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it an uſual thing for them to have ſuch Meetings?

Mr. Conway. They have a Congregation ordinarily once in three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does it go by the Name of a Conſult, or what Name has it?

Mr. Conway. Some call it a Congregation, and ſome a Conſult.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is the end of ſuch Meeting, as you have heard?

Mr. Conway. They ſay it was to chuſe a Procurator to ſend to Rome, and give an account of the Province.

Oates. My Lord, I would aſk him another Queſtion, whether he is to have any Reward for giving this Evidence here.

Mr. Conway. No, not that I know of, but what I expect from Almighty God.

Oates. Pray aſk him how long he liv'd at St. Omers.

Mr. Conway. Five Years.

Oates. My Lord, I have done with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Mr. Haggerſtone, and ſwear him. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Haggerſtone, pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, were you at St. Omers in the Year 1678, with Mr. Oates?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, I was, my Lord, I had the Honour to be of the ſame Bench with the Doctor of Salamanca.

L. C. J. You mean you were of the ſame Claſs with him.

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, my Lord of the ſame Claſs.

L. C. J. In what Year was it?

Mr. Haggerſtone. In the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. In what Form were you?

Mr. Haggerſtone. In the ſame Bench with Dr. Oates, in the Rhetorick Form.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Oates in April 1678.

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What time?

Mr. Haggerſtone. He ſpoke unto me on the 25th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile do you mean?

Mr. Haggerſtone. New Stile, Sir; to avoid Confuſion, I ſpeak of the Stile of the Place where I was; he aſk'd me concerning our School-fellow Mr. Hilſley, who was then gone from the College, whether I had heard any thing from him ſince he went away, and he ſpoke of an Indiſpoſition he had, for which he preſcrib'd him a Medicine of Poppy, and he thought it would do his Buſineſs effectually.

L. C. J. Who ſaid ſo?

Mr.

Mr. Haggerſtone. The Doctor of Salamanca; he was call'd Sampſon Lucy in the College: and likewiſe he forbid him to chew Tobacco, which he uſed to do very much; he was call'd Titus Ambroſius, he had twenty Names.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all April, Sir?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, he was, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him in March before?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, he was there all March before.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there in February?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, as near as I can remember, he was abſent but one Day, and then he went to Watton in February, or elſe in January.

L. C. J. Do you remember when he came thither firſt?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, my Lord, he came in December near Chriſtmas, as I remember.

L. C. J. Was it about that time, upon your Oath?

Mr. Haggerſtone. I ſpeak it upon my Oath, it was.

L. C. J. When did he go away?

Mr. Haggerſtone. About the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Was he abſent any time between December and June?

Mr. Haggerſtone. I do not remember that he was abſent, ſave only in January or February, and that was not for above a Night, when he went to Watton.

L. C. J. Might not he be abſent, and you not mind it, or know it?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Sure if he had been abſent, we could not but have known it.

L. C. J. How ſo, pray you?

Mr. Haggerſtone. If any goes away, 'tis ſo publick, that it cannot be without notice being taken of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember by any particular Token he was there in April or May?

Mr. Haggerſtone. He ſpoke to me on the 29th of April New Stile, and told me, that there was a craving Engliſhman had been there to beg an Alms, and there was a Collection made for him among the Scholars, but he ſaid he would give him nothing, for he told me he had been cheated by ſuch an one of ſome Pieces of Eight in Spain; this I remember was the 28th or 29th of April New Stile. I ſaw him there the 1ſt of May; upon the 2d of May there was an Action of the Scholars, and he was preſent at it; the 5th of May I was at School with him, when Mr. Pool went away for England, and I heard him about that time preach a pleaſant Sermon, for he would undertake ſometimes to preach, and he ſaid in it, That the late King Charles II. halted betwixt two Opinions, and a Stream of Popery went between his Legs.

L. C. J. Was this in May?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, juſt after Mr. Pool went away for England, and he had ſome pretty Reflections in his Sermon about Toby's Dog wagging his Tail.

L. C. J. Well, do you aſk this Witneſs any Queſtion, Mr. Oates?

Oates. Pray be pleaſed to aſk him, my Lord, what Religion he is of?

Mr. Haggerſtone. I am a Papiſt, my Lord, I am not aſham'd of it.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk where he lives?

Mr. Haggerſtone. At London.

Oates. Pray aſk him what Countryman he is?

Mr. Haggerſtone. I am a Northumberland-man; my Father is Sir Thomas Haggerſtone, a Man better known than your Father, Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, do not be in a Paſſion, Man.

Oates. Pray aſk him how long I was with him at St. Omers.

Mr. Haggerſtone. For half a Year at leaſt.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know how long he ſtaid there himſelf?

Mr. Haggerſtone. I ſtudied my whole Courſe of Humanity there.

L. C. J. How long were you there in all?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Seven Years.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, whether he knows of any Conſult held, or to be held, here in England in April 1678?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, my Lord, I ſaw two of the Fathers go from St. Omers to the Congregation, and was there at their Return; but all that time I frequented Dr. Oates's Company, and he remained in the College.

Oates. Pray, who were theſe two Fathers?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Mr. Williams and Mr. Marſh; and when they return'd, Oates aſked me about it, whether they had been to the Conſult, and I told him there was ſuch a thing, but he never knew it till afterwards; but this I am ſure of, he was never miſſing all the while, I ſat on the ſame Bench with him.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Name he went by at St. Omers.

Mr. Haggerſtone. I went by the Name of Harry Howard, my Mother was a Howard, Doctor.

Oates. Pray aſk him, whether he came into England when he went away from thence?

Mr. Haggerſtone. No, I went and ſtudied my Philoſophy at Doway.

Oates. I deſire to aſk him one Queſtion more.

Mr. Haggerſtone. Twenty, If you pleaſe, Doctor.

Oates. I deſire to know of him the occaſion of Mr. Hilſley's coming away?

Mr. Haggerſtone. I do know it, but truly I cannot tell whether it be fit for me to ſpeak of it? it was upon ſome unhandſome account, but I muſt not blemiſh any Gentleman, I think.

Oates. My Lord, I will aſk him one Queſtion more, whether ever he was admitted into the Society?

L. C. J. I will not aſk him that Queſtion; how often have I told you no ſuch Queſtions are to be aſk'd? Muſt I make him liable to Penalty? No, aſk Queſtions that are fair, and you ſhall have a fair Anſwer.

Oates. My Lord, I have done then with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Robert Beeſton.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77 and 78?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Oates there then? Do you know him?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, I know him very well, I did ſee him there.

Mr. At. Gen. What Months did you ſee him there?

Mr. Beeſton. He came there in December, the beginning as I remember, and he ſtaid there to June the latter end.

Mr. At. Gen. What year was that in?

Mr. Beeſton. He came in 77, and went away in 78.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve him to be there in April and May 78?

Mr. Beeſton. The latter end of April, and the beginning of May, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell the Court particularly how you remember it.

Mr. Beeſton. My Lord, I ſaw him the firſt of May at St. Omers, where he played at Nine-pins, and I laid a Wager upon the ſame ſide that he did, and loſt my Money as well as he.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other time?

Mr. Beeſton. I ſaw him the 2d of May, by the ſame token that I met him in the College that Day, when our School exhibited an Action in the Hall, and I met him after Supper; now in this Action I had both acted and ſung, and they came and congratulated me for my ſinging. Mr. Oates ſaid, if I had paid for learning to ſing, I had been baſely cheated: and then in the Morning I was choſen Reader in the Sodality, the 25th of April, or thereabouts, for a Fortnight, and Mr. Oates by his own Submiſſion was admitted to read, only with this Condition, that if ever he were wanting, I was to read again: but this I ſay, I never ſupplied the Place; therefore I am ſure he did continue there all the while, and if he had been out, I muſt have been called upon to read.

L. C. J. Were you in the College all the time he was there?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Did you miſs him at any time?

Mr. Beeſton. No, I never miſs'd him.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he was not away all that time?

Mr. Beeſton. I am ſure, as much as a Man can be certain of one that is of the ſame Family with himſelf; nay, I am as ſure of it, as that I was there my ſelf.

L. C. J. Can you ſpeak any thing particularly of his reading?

Mr. Beeſton. My Lord, I was to have read, if he was abſent; but I was never called upon to read, and therefore I may well conclude he was there all the while.

L. C. J. He gives a material Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Oates ſuch a remarkable Man that he muſt be miſs'd?

Mr. Beeſton. He was very particular, both for Age, and that he had a particular Table to eat at.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember any thing elſe?

Mr. Beeſton. I remember too, that when Mr. Burnaby came firſt, he was often with him; the 2d, 3d, and 4th of May, I ſaw him there with Mr. Burnaby, and I took particular notice of the Friendſhip between them, which I thought ſtrange between Perſons that I ſuppoſed never ſaw one another before.

L. C. J. Have you any Queſtions to aſk this Man, Mr. Oates?

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to aſk this Gentleman what Religion he is of?

Mr. Beeſton. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk him, when he went to St. Omers, and when he came away from thence, and how long he was reſident there?

Mr. Beeſton. I know not exactly what Year it was I came, but I ſtaid the greateſt Part of ſeven Years there.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, what Jeſuits went from St. Omers to the Conſult of April 78?

Mr. Beeſton. There was ſome that paſs'd by, I did not take much notice of them.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, who it was informed him of that Conſult?

Mr. Beeſton. I do not know who particularly, I only heard of ſuch a Rumour.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it an extraordinary thing?

Mr. Beeſton. No, it was but an ordinary thing as they uſed to have once in three Years.

Oates. You ſay you ſaw me every Day there?

L. C. J. He ſays he believes he might, becauſe you were Reader in his ſtead; and if you had been abſent, he muſt have been called upon to read, which he was not, he ſays.

Oates. Very well, my Lord, I deſire you would aſk him, whether he does not remember ſuch a thing as an Eight-days Exerciſe, wherein thoſe that perform the Exerciſe, are ſeparated from all Company during that time.

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord, I do remember that he was once in that Eight-days Exerciſe, and during the Eight Days I ſaw him walk in the Garden ſeveral times.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, if he were an Evidence at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, or Langhorn, and whether he gave this Evidence long ago?

Mr. Beeſton. No, I did not, I was not there.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Reward he is to have?

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward for your Teſtimony, Mr Beeſton?

Mr. Beeſton No, my Lord.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, how he comes to be pick'd out among the reſt of the Students there, to come here, and be an Evidence in this Cauſe?

Mr. Beeſton. My Lord, I was ſubpœna'd by his Majeſty, if I knew any thing of this Matter, that I ſhould come here and teſtify my Knowledge.

Oates. Pray, by what Name did he go at St. Omers?

Mr. Beeſton. By the name of Beeſton, as I do now.

Oates. And is that his own Name?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Clement Smith.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77 and 78?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Oates there at that time?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I was in the ſame Claſs with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when came he thither, and how long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Smith. He came a little before Chriſtmas, and ſtaid till June.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he not abſent at any time all that while?

Mr. Smith. No, he was not, except one Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Watton's Buſineſs, his going thither in January?

Mr. Smith. He told me of it, and that he deſign'd to aſk the Rector leave to go.

L. C. J. Was he abſent any other time till June?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, for I will tell you, I every Day dined with him, eat a Collation with him in the afternoon, and breakfaſted and ſupp'd in the ſame Refectory, during all that time, except when he or I was in the Infirmary.

L. C. J. When ever he was abſent, he was in the Infirmary, was he?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did not he miſs his Breakfaſt any time all that while?

Mr. Smith. If he did, we uſed to enquire after him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when were you in the Infirmary?

Mr. Smith. The 21ſt of April New Stile, I fell ſick, and I remain'd ſick till May the 7th, and was in the Infirmary, and then he viſited me almoſt daily, or every other Day in the Infirmary; and on the 2d of May I ſaw him and one Mr. Burnaby together, and on the Day Mr. Pool departed, which I take to be the 5th of May, Mr. Oates came to me as ſoon as he was gone out of the Houſe, and told me of it; and he did the ſame too that Day that Mr. Hilſley went away, which was the 24th of April New Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not he in the Infirmary himſelf?

Mr. Smith. Yes, during this time he came into the Infirmary, and was ſick there.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Smith. A Day or two after Mr. Hilſley went away, and continued there two or three Days, and I remember it particularly by this Circumſtance, that he propoſed a Queſtion to the Phyſician about himſelf in Latin, and ſpoke a Soleciſm, which was this, he ſaid, Si placet Dominatio veſtra.

Oates Who did ſay ſo?

L. C. J. You did, he ſays, ſpeak that falſe Latin to the Doctor.

Oates. That's falſe Latin indeed!

L. C. J. We know that, but it ſeems it was your Latin.

Mr. At. Gen. When came he away from St. Omers?

Mr. Smith. About the 20th of June; ſomething after the 20th of June, as I remember.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he was not out of the College ſo long as to make a Journey to London, and back again?

Mr. Smith. No, I am ſure he could not without being miſs'd; and going to School with him, and eating Dinner and Supper with him conſtantly always at the ſame place, I muſt needs know if he had gone.

Oates. When went I away from St. Omers, does he ſay?

Mr. Smith. After the 20th of June 78.

L. C. J. He is your old Acquaintance and Schoolfellow, Mr. Oates; you viſited him when he was ſick.

Oates. What Religion is this Gentleman of, my Lord, I would know?

Mr. Smith. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. I deſire your Lordſhip to aſk him how long he liv'd at St. Omers?

Mr. Smith. Above ſix Years.

Oates. Pray aſk him, when he came away?

Mr. Smith. A little after Dr. Oates came away.

Oates. Did he come directly for England?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

Oates. Whither did he go then?

Mr. Smith. I went about a little——

Oates. Where, my Lord?

Mr. Smith. I went about to take ſome Turns in the Low-Countries; I went to Watton, and up and down.

Oates. He is a Jeſuit, my Lord, and that the World knows, and muſt know.

L. C. J. I know nothing of it, I do aſſure you.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk him, whether he did not hear of a Conſult of Jeſuits in April 78, and what Jeſuits went from St. Omers to it?

Mr. Smith. I heard it as a Rumour in the College, that there was to be a Congregation at that time, but I know not where particularly it was to be kept; but I know that then there paſs'd by St. Omers two Fathers, Mr. Marſh, and Mr. Williams.

Oates. What were they?

Mr. Smith. Jeſuits.

L. C. J. He told you they were Fathers.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, was it an extraordinary, or an ordinary Meeting that?

Mr. Smith. They uſed to ſay in the College, that it was an ordinary thing to have ſuch a Congregation every three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, ſwear Mr. Edward Price.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Price, will you give my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury an account, whether you were at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78.

Mr. Price. I was there both theſe Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Oates there?

Mr. Price. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come, and when did he go away?

Mr. Price. He came there about December 77, and he continued there till June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he abſent from St. Omers at any time all that while?

Mr. Price. Never, that I know of, but one Night at Watton, when he came back the following Day, and that was in January.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember particularly that he was there in April and May 78?

Mr. Price. I remember Mr. Hilſley, according to the foreign Stile, left St. Omers upon the 24th of April 78. I was told the following Day that Mr. Oates went into the Infirmary, which was Monday the 25th, and ſtaid there a Day or two, and upon Wedneſday the 27th I ſaw him going to Maſs; then upon the Sunday following, which was the 1ſt of May New Stile, came Mr. Burnaby to St. Omers, and I ſaw him in Oates's Company that Day, and I ſaw him on Monday again the 2d of May in his Company; I ſaw him the 3d of May at the Table, which I particularly remember, becauſe it was the Feaſt of the Invention of the Holy Croſs: the 4th of May I have no Circumſtance to remember him by; but the 5th of May I ſaw him take his leave of Mr. Pool, and I likewiſe ſaw him the 10th or 11th of May at another of our Actions, wherein Mr. Watſon had a Quarrel with him, and beat him. I ſhould have miſs'd him above any other Man, becauſe he was ſo noted a Man.

Mr. At. Gen. What was he noted for? For any thing elſe but his diſtinct Place in the Refectory?

Mr. Price. Yes, he was very abſurd, and always quarrelling with the Students there.

L. C. J. Do you remember him read in the Sodality?

Mr. Price. I was not of that Bench that he was of.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know what this Gentleman's Religion is?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Price. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to know, I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates.

Oates. My Lord, I desire to ask him, when he went first to St. Omers, and when he came away?

Mr. Price. I was six Years at St. Omers; I was there a twelve-month before Mr Oates came thither, and came from thence about three Years ago.

Oates. Did you come directly to England when you came away?

Mr. Price. My Lord, I went to Liege to study Philosophy, and I live now with my Father at home.

Oates. My Lord, I desire to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Consult to be held in April 78?

Mr. Price. I did hear there was a Congregation which was their usual Triennial Meeting, and particularly I remember about that time there came Mr. Williams, and Mr. Marsh, and it was reported that they were going to the Congregation.

Oates. I desire to ask him, if he was not a Witness at the Trial of the five Jesuits, or at the Trial of Langhorn?

Mr. Price. No, I was not.

Oates. Pray, what Name did he go by at St. Omers.

Mr. Price. By my own Name, which is Edward Price.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear the next, that is, Mr. James Doddington.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know that Gentleman Mr. Oates there?

Mr. Doddington. I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did he come to St. Omers, and how long did he stay there?

Mr. Doddington. He came about Christmas, and staid about the latter end of June.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you remember he staid there so long, what Circumstances have you to make you remember it?

Mr. Doddington. In general his Conversation and Canting Stories after Dinner and Supper, and Times of Recreation, made him so remarkable, that no body could miss him all the time he was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you observe him to be in the Hall, or at the Exercises?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I saw him several times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the time Mr. Hilsley went away?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, it was a little after Easter, and I do remember that two or three Days after I went into the Infirmary, and saw Mr. Oates there, and had Discourses with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Burnaby's coming to St. Omers, and when was it?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, the 1st of May Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers, and the next Day I saw Oates with him, and for ten or twelve Days successively they were in one another's Company; and then of a sudden the Correspondence broke off, but I know not upon what account.

L. C. J. Was he a Reader there, as you remember?

Mr. Doddington. I do remember he did read in the Sodality.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Doddington. I remember he read at Shrovetide.

Oates. Did you hear me read there?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, that I did, Sir.

Oates. Were you of the Sodality?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember the time he came away from St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. It was about Midsummer, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you out of the College your self at any time when he was there?

Mr. Doddington. No, I was not.

L. C. J. Come, I will ask you a plain Question; Was he so long at any time out of the College as to come to London and stay here two or three Days, and come back again?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, he was so remarkable by his Stories and ridiculous Actions, and falling out with every one of the College, that if he had been absent, we must needs have missed him.

L. C. J. Did you miss him at any time?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I never miss'd him but one Day.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Doddington. They said he was gone to Watton.

L. C. J. What time was that?

Mr. Doddington. In January, about six Weeks after he came first.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Doddington. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. And a Scholar of St. Omers.

L. C. J. Make your Remarks by and by.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. By the Name of Hollis, my Lord.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him how long he was resident there?

Mr. Doddington. Near upon five Years.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him the occasion of his coming over at first?

Mr. Doddington. I had Business in England, and I had a mind to see my Friends.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did not pretend at the five Jesuits Trial, that he came over upon the King's Proclamation, to call home those that were in the Seminaries?

L. C. J. Were you at the Trial of the five Jesuits?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I was; but if I came over upon the King's Proclamation, what hurt is there in that?

L. C. J. None at all, as I know of.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did return again to St. Omers, or no?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I pass'd by St. Omers once, but I never staid a Day in the College since.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, whether he ever heard of a Consult of the Jesuits in April 78?

Mr. Doddington. I did hear of a Congregation.

Oates. Call it a Consult or a Congregation, it is all one.

L. C. J. He says he did hear of it.

Oates. Ask him by whom he did hear of it?

Mr. Doddington. I saw the Provincial when he came back from England.

Oates. Who was that Provincial, what was his Name?

Mr. Doddington. Mr. Whitebread.

Oates. Was not Mr. Whitebread resident some time at St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, a while he was.

Oates. Pray, was not that Houſe under his Government?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I can give no account of that, but it is generally under the Government of the Rector of St. Omers.

Mr. Hanſeys. Pray, Sir, give me leave to aſk you one Queſtion: Mr. Oates ſpeaks of Mr. Whitebread; pray, how did Mr. Whitebread uſe Oates, when he came back from England?

Mr. Doddington. I heard ſay, he did check him very ſeverely for his many Miſcarriages.

L. C. J. He heard it, he ſays, but he does not know it of his own Knowledge; that is no Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. William Gerrard. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers, Mr. Gerrard, in the Years 77 and 78?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I was.

M. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Oates there?

Mr. Gerrard. Where is he, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. There he is in that Corner, do you know him?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. When came he to St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. He came to St. Omers in the Year of our Lord 77, and he went away in June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all the time?

Mr. Gerrard. I never remember to have miſs'd him, but only once when he went to Watton for a Night.

Mr. At. Gen. By what Tokens do you remember him at any time there in April or May?

Mr. Gerrard. The 2d of May we had a Play, and he was there then, and I remember the 26th of May he was confirmed, and ſo was I, it being St. Auguſtin's Day, and in the Refectory he had a Table by himſelf, and I uſed always at Meal-times to paſs by that Table and make a Bow to the Fathers above before I ſat down at Table; and I do not remember that ever he was abſent, and if he had, I ſhould ſurely have miſs'd him.

L. C. J. When was St. Auguſtin's Day, that you ſay you and he were confirm'd?

Mr. Gerrard. It was the 26th of May.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember him in April there?

Mr. Gerrard. I cannot tell any particular Circumſtance in April, but I do not remember to have miſs'd him at all in April.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you ſaw him there the 2d of May, you ſay?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I did ſo, and the 26th of May.

Oates. The 26th of May Old Stile I was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, but he ſays the 26th of May New Stile.

Oates. I was not there then, my Lord.

L. C. J. He ſwears you were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, between the 2d and 27th of May New Stile was he abſent from St. Omers at any time?

Mr. Gerrard. I never remember to have miſs'd him at all in that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Pool's and Mr. Hilſley's going away?

Mr. Gerrard. I do remember Mr. Hilſley's and Mr. Pool's going away, but I cannot ſpeak particularly and exactly what time that was.

L. C. J. Is it uſual to have Scholars go away without being miſs'd?

Mr. Gerrard. No, my Lord, and he had a particular Place by himſelf.

Oates. Pray, aſk him, my Lord, how he came to know that I went away in June?

Mr. Gerrard. We miſs'd him in his Place then, and 'twas diſcours'd of all over the Town, that when the Provincial came he was to be diſmiſs'd.

Oates. I deſire to know what Religion this Gentleman is of?

Mr. Gerrard. My Lord, I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. By the Name of William Clovel.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, when he went to St. Omers, and how long he was reſident there?

Mr. Gerrard. I came there about two Years before he came, and was there about two Years after he went away.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, whether he came directly for England when he left St Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. No, my Lord, I was four Years in Low-Germany and France, and came into England the laſt Year.

Oates. Pray, Sir, were you a Witneſs at the five Jeſuits Trial, or at Langhorn's Trial?

Mr. Gerrard. No, I was not; I came but laſt Year to England, I tell you.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk this Gentleman, whether he did not know or hear of a Conſult of Jeſuits, that was to be in April 78, and from whom he heard it?

Mr. Gerrard. My Lord, I know it is the Cuſtom of the Fathers of that Order to have a Congregation once in three Years, about the Affairs of their Society, but then no Perſon is admitted to be one of that Congregation, but them that have been eighteen Years Jeſuits; and he not having been ſo much as a Novice, I know not how, if he had been here, he could have been preſent at it.

L. C. J. He ſays, that there uſed to be a triennial Congregation for the Buſineſs of the Society, but you could not be preſent at it, becauſe you had not been eighteen Years a Jeſuit.

Mr. Gerrard. Ann. decimo octavo currente, is the Word of the Rule.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him this Queſtion, How he knows that to be the Rule?

Mr. Gerrard. You or any Man may read them in their Books.

L. C. J. It ſeems he has read them, and he ſays you muſt paſs through eighteen Years before you be admitted of the Congregation; and he believes you were not there, for you were not capable of ſo much as a Noviceſhip.

Oates. I deſire your Lordſhip to aſk him, whether or no he heard me read in the Sodality?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I did.

Oates. Were you of the Sodality?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I was.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, what Oaths are there taken before they be admitted into the Sodality?

L. C. J. No, by no means, I will not do it.

Oates. Why, my Lord, may not I aſk it, to ſhew what kind of Men theſe are?

L. C. J. No, indeed, it is but the ſame Queſtion again, that I told you before is not to be aſked, for it may make him liable to a Penalty; if you come to be a Witneſs, no man ſhould aſk you a Queſtion that might make you obnoxious to a Penalty, no more muſt you aſk them any ſuch Queſtions.

Oates.

Oates. I have done with him, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is my Lord Gerrard of Bromley?

Lord Gerrard. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, do you remember Mr. Oates at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78?

Lord Gerrard. He was diſguiſed in another Habit, and another colour'd Perriwig, the Hair was blacker than that he has on now; but I remember his Face very well, and know him again by the Tone of his Voice, which was very remarkable; but I never remember that he was abſent from St. Omers after he came thither. I remember his coming exactly, which was about Chriſtmas; nor did I ever hear that he was abſent till June 78, New Stile, when he went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember, my Lord, when Mr. Burnaby came?

Lord Gerrard. I do remember Mr. Burnaby's coming, but what time it was, I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. Is my Lord Gerrard ſworn?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think ſo.

Lord Gerrard. No, my Lord, I am not ſworn.

L. C. J. You muſt be ſworn, my Lord. [Which was done.

Now if you be pleaſed to aſk my Lord any Queſtions, do.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire to know of my Lord Gerrard of Bromley, whether he knew Mr. Oates at St. Omers.

Lord Gerrard. My Lord, I remember he came in 77, as I take it, it was the beginning of December; and never heard he was abſent or miſs'd till June 78. I remember particularly upon the 25th of March, there was a new Lector to be Reader of the Sodality; and Mr. Oates deſiring it, he was appointed to read. I was there my ſelf, and I never miſſed him; I heard him read, that I do remember, ſeveral Sundays and Holidays and never knew him abſent any one: however for five or ſix Weeks he was conſtant at Reading; and I can the better remember it, becauſe he had a particular Cant in his Tone, which all Men may know, who ever converſed with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Oates pleaſe to aſk my Lord Gerrard any Queſtions, he may.

Lord Gerrard. Pray, my Lord, let me ſpeak a Word or two more.

L. C. J. Ay, my Lord, pray go on.

Lord Gerrard. I remember I heard Mr. Oates was at the Confirmation, which was upon St. Auſtin's Day; there was a Confirmation by a Catholick Biſhop, about the 26th of May New Stile, I remember I heard Mr. Oates was there, and the Biſhop did particularly note him as a Perſon of elder Years than the reſt of the Students.

L. C. J. Do you know this, my Lord, of your own Knowledge?

Lord Gerrard. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Becauſe you ſay, you heard it.

Lord Gerrard. My Lord, further I remember this, when the News of the Plot, being diſcovered by Oates, came to St. Omers, where he went by the Name of Sampſon Lucy, and ſometimes Titus Ambroſius, it was wondered by all the Scholars that knew him there, how he came to be ſo impudent to pretend he was at ſuch a Conſult the 24th of April 78, when all the College ſaw him every Day in April and May at St. Omers, as much as a Man can be ſeen in a Family, and was never known to be abſent ſo much as one Day; beſides, my Lord, 'tis a thing as generally noted as a thing can be, that no Scholar goes away from, or comes to the College of St. Omers, but it is particularly known to the whole Houſe; it is the common News and Diſcourſe as much as any new Occurrences are here about the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Oates be pleaſed to aſk him any Queſtions, he may.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire this noble Lord may be aſked a Queſtion or two; I do not remember his Lordſhip there.

Lord Gerrard. I do very well remember the Man by particular Remarks.

Oates. Yes, my Lord, you have occaſion to remember me, and ſo have your whole Party. Pray, my Lord, let my Lord Gerrard be aſked what Name his Lordſhip went by at St. Omers.

Lord Gerrard. Mr. Oates, I am not difficult in telling the Name I went by there. It was Clovel.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what Religion his Lordſhip is of?

Lord Gerrard. Neither am I aſhamed to own my Religion, Mr. Oates; I am a Catholick.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, if you pleaſe, becauſe this noble Lord pretends he heard me read, I deſire to know of him whether he was of the Sodality?

Lord Gerrard. I remember you particularly by your Voice, and that is one thing that particularly brings you to my Remembrance now.

Oates. Pray aſk this Noble Lord, if he was a Witneſs at the Juſuits Trial?

Lord Gerrard. No, I was never a Witneſs in my Life before; by the Oath that I have taken.

L. C. J. 'Tis very well, my Lord.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk this Nobleman, whether he did not know of a Conſult in April 78, and from whom he knew it?

Lord Gerrard. No, I know of none, nor heard of and but by Rumour, after that you pretended to diſcover ſuch a thing.

Oates. Did his Lordſhip ſee me every Day, does he ſay?

Lord Gerrard. I cannot ſay every Day, but I ſaw him at the Refectory generally, and I remember it particularly, becauſe he ſat at a Table by himſelf; I believe he could not be abſent without being miſs'd becauſe we knew every Perſon that came in and went out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Samuel Morgan. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Morgan were you at St. Omers in 77, and 78?

Mr. Morgan. I was, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve Mr. Oates to be there at that time?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an account when he came, and when he went away.

Mr. Morgan. He came 14 or 15 Days before Chriſtmas, as I remember, and went away in June.

Mr. At. Gen. What Chriſtmas do you mean, Mr. Morgan?

Mr. Morgan. Chriſtmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. And when did he go away?

Mr. Morgan. In June 78, he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he abſent any time during that ſpace?

Mr. Morgan. My Lord, I know not that he was ever abſent above one Night in all that time.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was that one Night?

Mr. Morgan. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell what Month it was very exactly.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither was he gone that Night?

Mr. Morgan. He went to Watton, three Miles off from St. Omers.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember the time when Mr. Hilſley came away, and when Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I do, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Oates there when Hilſley went away?

Mr. Morgan. He was there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Mr. Burnaby came?

Mr. Morgan. He was there when Mr. Burnaby came thither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Mr. Pool came away?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, my Lord, he was ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will aſk you this ſhort Queſtion, do you believe in your Conſcience that he was abſent any particular time all that while?

Mr. Morgan. No, my Lord, I have no reaſon to believe ſo.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Religion he is of.

Mr. Morgan. I am of the Church of England.

Oates. When were you reconciled to the Church of England?

Mr. Morgan. Five years ſince.

Oates. I deſire to know of him what induced him to be reconciled to the Church of England.

L. C. J. This is not a pertinent Queſtion, nor fit to be aſked. Is he to give an account of his Faith here?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It ſeems Mr. Oates is angry when the Witneſſes are Papiſts, and when they are Proteſtants too.

Oates. When was it that I came to St. Omers, do you ſay?

Mr. Morgan. You came thither in December 77.

L. C. J. So he told you before; why do you repeat things over and over again?

Oates. When was it I went away from thence, ſay you?

Mr. Morgan. In June 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the 24th of April Old Stile that Year?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, my Lord, I do remember it very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember him to be at St. Omers that Day?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I do, by this Circumſtance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, pray tell my Lord and the Jury that Circumſtance, how you come to remember it.

Mr. Morgan. We had the Trial of Ireland brought over to us ſoon after it was printed, and there we found mentioned, that Mr. Oates had depos'd, that the 24th of April 78, there was a Conſult of the Jeſuits, and they met at the White Horſe Tavern, where they reſolv'd to kill the King, and he carried that Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and he did nominate the Day; and having it then freſh in my Memory, tho' he ſwore that he was the 24th of April Old Stile in London at that Conſult, yet I found him to be at St. Omers by a very particular Circumſtance. My Lord, I was playing at Ball that Day, and ſtruck it over into a Court, into which I could not get over myſelf, but I ſaw Mr. Oates then walking in the Court, and I came and borrow'd his Key, and ſo went in, and there paſs'd between us Words of Friendſhip.

L. C. J. When was this, do you ſay?

Mr. Morgan. The 24th of April 78, Old Stile.

Oates. I deſire to let his Orders be ſeen.

L. C. J. No, he ſhall not be put to ſhew any ſuch thing.

Oates. He is a Miniſter of the Church of England, my Lord.

L. C. J. Sir, we tell you we will not do it; what ado is here with your impertinent Queſtions, have not I told you, you ſhall not enſnare the Witneſſes?

Oates. He was going to pull out his Orders himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Oates may ſee them if he will, he is a Beneficed Miniſter of the Church of England.

L. C. J. Does he mean thoſe Orders?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he does, and here they are.

L. C. J. Let him ſee them. [Which was done.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know of this Gentleman, what Name he went by at St. Omers.

Mr. Morgan. By the Name of Morgan.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Arundel. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give an account in ſhort, whether you were at St. Omers in 77 and 78, and the Time when Oates came thither, and when he went away?

Mr. Arundel. I was there when Dr. Oates came, and when he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Arundel. Sir, I cannot be poſitive to the time exactly, but I think it was about January 77, that he came there, and he went away about June 78. I cannot be poſitive to the time exactly.

L. C. J. He does not particularly remember the time, but he thinks it was about January 77, he came thither.

Mr. Arundel. I beg your Lordſhip's pardon, he came there about December.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember any particular Circumſtances, that you ſaw him there any particular time?

Mr. Arundel. Upon St. Auguſtin's Day I ſaw him confirm'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day is that?

Mr. Arundel. The 26th of May according to the foreign Account.

L. C. J. Did you know him there then?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I ſay I ſaw him confirm'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Hilſley's going away?

Mr. Arundel. I do not remember the time particularly, but I do remember Mr. Oates was actually there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers.

M. Arundel. No, I do not remember the time, but he was there then too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Pool went away?

Mr. Arundel. No, I cannot tell what Day it was, but he was there at the time of his going away, upon my Oath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any other particular time?

Mr. Arundel. The 11th of May New Stile, there was an Action exhibited in the College.

L. C. J. Was Oates there then?

Mr. Arundel. To the beſt of my remembrance he was.

L. C. J. He does not affirm any Particular, but only ſpeaks in general.

Oates.

Oates. Are you a Proteſtant too, Sir?

Mr. Arundel. No, Doctor, I am not.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what Religion he is of?

Mr. Arundel. I am a Papiſt, my Lord.

Oates. Pray aſk him by what Name he went at St. Omers.

Mr. Arundel. I believe you know that as well as I, Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. You muſt anſwer his Queſtion.

Mr. Arundel. I went by the Name of Spencer, my Lord.

Oates. I do remember him, my Lord, to have been there.

Mr. Arundel. Sir, your humble Servant.

Oates. It is almoſt ſeven Years ago, my Lord, and I may not ſo well remember them as they do me; but I deſire to know when he went to St. Omers firſt, and how long he was there.

Mr. Arundel. I was there ſeven Years.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him whether he was of the Sodality.

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Was he Reader of the Sodality?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, in my time he was Reader.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I deſire to aſk him whether he ever heard of a Conſult of the Jeſuits, that was to be held in England, in April 78; and from whom he heard it.

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I did hear in the College of a Congregation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that an extraordinary one, or of courſe?

Mr. Arundel. It was only of courſe, as they told us; once in three Years they have one.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to aſk this Gentleman what Studies he follow'd at St. Omers.

L. C. J. He was of the Sodality, he ſays.

Mr. Arundel. My Lord, I ſtudied to the end of Rhetorick.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know whether when he came from St. Omers, he did come directly for England.

Mr. Arundel. No, I went from thence to Paris, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Chriſtopher Turbervile.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Turbervile, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury whether you were with Mr. Oates at St. Omers, and when?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, my Lord; he went by the Name of Sampſon Lucy there, and there I ſaw him, and there I was with him all the time; I was there before him, and I remain'd there after he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did he come to St. Omers, I pray you?

Mr. Turbervile. Before Chriſtmas.

L. C. J. In what Year?

Mr. Turbervile. In the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was it he went away?

Mr. Turbervile. In June 78.

L C. J. Were you there all that while at St. Omers?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. And to the beſt of your apprehenſion, you think he was there all that while.

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, I do ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you ſpeak of any particular Days you can remember?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, I do remember him upon the fourth, fifth, and ſixth of May, for two or three Days together; for, my Lord, I do remember this Circumſtance, Mr. Pool about that time went away, and that very Day Mr. Pool went from the College, I chang'd my Lodging, and went into his Lodging, and that Day I ſaw Dr. Oates in the Chamber, and by the Chamber-Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he continue in the College from the time he came about Chriſtmas, to the time he went away in June?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, he did, all the while, excep it were one Night in January, when he went to Watton.

L. C. J. What time in June did he go away?

Mr. Turbervile. I am not poſitive, but I am morally ſure he went away the 23d of June, as near as I can remember.

Oates. I was there in June, that is very well known.

L. C. J. What do you remember of his reading in the College?

Mr. Turbervile. I do remember he was Reader there on Sundays and Holidays for a great while; I cannot ſwear upon what Sunday he began, but he left off the Sunday before he went away.

L. C. J. As near as you can remember, when did begin to read?

Mr. Turbervile. It was the beginning of April, or latter end of March, I cannot juſtly ſwear which it was.

Mr. Molloy. Did he read on Holidays as well as Sundays?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, he did.

Oates. I muſt aſk this Gentleman one Queſtion, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, and that is this, what Name he went by at St. Omers.

Mr. Turbervile. I went there by the Name of Farmer.

Oates. Pray you, my Lord, aſk him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Turbervile. It is a hard Queſtion to anſwer that.

Oates. Nay, my Lord, I deſire to know what is his Religion.

Mr. Turbervile. I am, my Lord, a Roman Catholick.

Oates. Aſk him when he went to St. Omers firſt, and how long he ſtaid there.

Mr. Turbervile. I was there ſeven Years very near.

Oates. I deſire to know whether he did come away directly to England, when he came from St. Omers.

Mr. Turbervile. No, my Lord, I went into Italy.

Oates. Pray you, my Lord, I deſire to know whether he did go to Rome.

L. C. J. What if he did, what then? that is not at all to the purpoſe, he went into Italy.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to aſk him this Queſtion further; was he a Witneſs on the behalf of the five Jeſuits, or of Langhorn at their Trials?

Mr. Turbervile. No, my Lord, I was not.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to aſk him then what Reward he has been promis'd, or is to have for giving this Evidence.

Mr. Turbervile. None at all, my Lord.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him whether or no he heard of any Conſult of the Jeſuits in April 78, and from whom.

Mr. Turbervile. There was a Congregation, as I heard, but I do not remember that any of the Fathers went from the College to it; ſeveral came by

by there, and lodg'd there as they went, and as they came back.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him how he came here to be a Witneſs in this Cauſe.

Mr. Turbervile. I was ſubpœna'd.

Oates. Who ſerv'd the Subpœna upon him?

Mr. Turbervile. The Managers; it was ſent to me by the King's Counſel, I ſuppoſe; a Man brought it to me.

L. C. J. 'Tis no matter who brought it you, you were ſubpœna'd, that's enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Anthony Turbervile.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers in 77 and 78?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve the Defendant Mr. Oates there at that time?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Yes, I obſerv'd him all the while he was there.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come to St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. In the Year 77, about Chriſtmas.

Mr. At. Gen. When went he away?

Mr. A. Turbervile. A Gentleman who was formerly ſworn (Mr. Thornton) and I were at Breakfaſt with him the ſelf-ſame time when he went away.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. A. Turbervile. I ſuppoſe about the latter end of June 78?

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve him to be there in April or May 78?

Mr. A. Turbervile. He was not abſent above one Night in January that I can remember, from his firſt coming thither, for it was impoſſible he ſhould be abſent and not miſs'd, he ſitting at a diſtinct Table by himſelf, and his Converſation being ſo remarkable for a great many ridiculous Actions, and a great many pretty Jeſts that he uſed; ſo that he was like a ſilly Perſon, as I may call him, that uſed to make ſport, and no body could be miſs'd ſo ſoon as he: And I ſaw a little Boy in the College beat him up and down with a Fox's Tail. Indeed, my Lord, all his Actions were very remarkable: I ſaw him very much abuſive to Perſons that liv'd with him in the College; and Mr. Oates could not be a Perſon of this Note, but all the World muſt take notice of him, and all that knew him muſt miſs him, if he were away.

L. C. J. You hear him, Mr. Oates; he gives you a particular Character; he ſays you were a very notorious Perſon in many Inſtances.

Mr. A. Turbervile. My Lord, I was a Perſon then the youngeſt in the whole Company, and Mr. Oates being very abuſive to me, I did what became me to right myſelf upon him.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to aſk this Gentleman what the Name was he went by at St. Omers.

Mr. A. Turbervile. By my Grandmother's Name, which was Farmer.

L. C. J. Do you remember the time when Mr. Hilſley went away from St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. He went away upon a Sunday. Mr. Oates remain'd afterwards there: I am poſitive I ſaw him ſeveral days after.

L. C. J. Do you remember when Mr. Burnaby came thither?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Yes, my Lord, and Mr. Oates was there then.

L. C. J. Will you aſk him any Queſtions? if you are not ready, I will aſk him ſome for you. Come, what Religion are you of?

Mr. A. Turbervile. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, and how long were you at St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Six Years and upward, my Lord.

L. C. J. When you came away from thence, did you come directly for England?

Mr. A. Turbervile. I took a Circumference round.

Oates. My Lord, I do find my Defence is under a very great Prejudice.

L. C. J. Why ſo? becauſe we won't let you aſk impertinent Queſtions, or ſuch as may render the Witneſſes obnoxious to a Penalty.

Oates. No, my Lord, it is not fit they ſhould, for there is a Turn to be ſerv'd.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that? Ay, and a good Turn too, if theſe Witneſſes ſwear true: 'Tis to bring Truth to light, and perjur'd Villains to condign Puniſhment.

Oates. Good, my Lord, be pleas'd to hear me.

L. C. J. If you behave not yourſelf with that Reſpect to the Court as you ought, pray get you gone. Do you think you ſhall give ſuch Language as this in a Court of Juſtice?

Oates. My Lord, I did not deſign——

L. C. J. If you behave yourſelf as you ſhould, you ſhall have all due Regard; but if you fly out into ſuch abuſive Extravagancies, we'll calm you as you ought to be calm'd.

Oates. I would vindicate myſelf, I meant it not of the Court.

L. C. J. So you had need. Don't think we ſit here to let you aſperſe the Juſtice of the Court and of the Nation, as if the Judges ſat here to ſerve a Turn.

Oates. I ſay theſe Men do come to ſerve a Turn; but I laid no Aſperſion upon the Court, nor meant it of them.

L. C. J. Behave yourſelf as you ought, and you ſhall be heard with all the Fairneſs can be deſir'd.

Oates. I did perceive your Lordſhip and the Court made yourſelves pleaſant with my Queſtions.

L. C. J. I did not make myſelf pleaſant with your Queſtions, but when you aſk impertinent ones you muſt be corrected: You ſee we do the ſame thing with them; I find fault with nothing but what is not to the purpoſe.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire it may be obſerv'd, that theſe Men that come now, are the ſame Witneſſes that appeared at the Old Bailey, and were not believ'd there

L. C. J. Obſerve what you will by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. No, they are other Men, but they bear the ſame Teſtimony indeed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Clavering.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Sir, I'll aſk you a ſhort Queſtion; were you at St. Omers with Mr. Oates, and when?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, I was: I came the 10th of December 77, to St. Omers; he told me he came thither that Day too, and I liv'd there all the time that he was there, which was till towards the middle of Summer: I do not remember that he ever was abſent, but once at Watton.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Burnaby's coming thither?

Mr. Clavering. Mr. Oates was there when Mr. Burnaby came there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Peel came away?

Mr.

Mr. Clavering. He was there when Mr. Pool went away, and likewiſe I remember his being there at the time of the Congregation.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Circumſtance how you know he was there then.

Mr. Clavering. There came a Gentleman there that deſir'd a Charity of the Students, and I was the Perſon that made the Collection for him in the Houſe; and I remember he did aſk if there was any one that was a Student there that had been in Spain: We told him there was one, and deſcrib'd him; upon which he knew the Gentleman in Spain. Upon that I told Mr. Oates, that there was one there that knew him, but he deny'd to come and ſpeak with him. Now I remember that it was the time of the Congregation, for ſome made Enquiry why he got ſo little Money at Watton, and it was ſaid it was becauſe the Fathers were gone to the Congregation in England. And he aſk'd me particularly, what was done at the Congregation in England?

L. C. J. Did Oates aſk that Queſtion?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. Whom did he aſk it of?

Mr. Clavering. Of me.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Clavering. I think it was about the time of the Congregation.

L. C. J. How came he enquire after it?

Mr. Clavering. I was talking with him, and ſaid he to me, Know you nothing what the Buſineſs is that they are to do at the Congregation? Said I, Mr. Lucy, I know not what they do; I think not much: For I hear at thoſe Meetings many times they ſtay an hour or two, and have done when they have choſen their Procurator.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you believe he was there all the time?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, let me aſk him a Queſtion or two.

L. C. J. Ay, what you will.

Oates. What Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. Clavering. I am a Catholick.

Oates. A Roman Catholick you mean, I ſuppoſe?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, I always underſtood it ſo, Mr. Oates.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know how he came not to be produc'd at the Jeſuits Trial, to give this Evidence he gives now?

Mr. Clavering. I can give a very good Reaſon perhaps: I was then, my Lord in Germany.

L. C. J. That's Reaſon good enough of all conſcience.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That was a new Queſtion, and you have a ſatisfactory Anſwer, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. John Copley.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers in 77 and 78?

Mr. Copley. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Oates there then?

Mr. Copley. I ſaw him all the time he was there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he come thither?

Mr. Copley. He came a little before Chriſtmas, to the beſt of my Remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When went he away?

Mr. Copley. In 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Month in 78?

Mr. Copley. In June 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he abſent any part of that time?

Mr. Copley. I was there, and he was there too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he abſent any part of the time from Chriſtmas to June.

Mr. Copley. Nay, I am ſure he was there all the time, except that Night that he was abſent at Watton, and that was in January.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Copley. Does your Lordſhip aſk me that Queſtion?

L. C. J. Yes, I do aſk you; Mr. Oates would know it.

Mr. Copley. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Cook. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Oates at St. Omers, and when?

Mr. Cook. He came there a little before Chriſtmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to know him there?

Mr. Cook. I liv'd in the Houſe then.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all April and May?

Mr. Cook. Yes, he was till the latter end of June.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee him every day?

Mr. Cook. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you tell any particular time?

Mr. Cook. I am poſitive he was there the 30th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Cook. New Stile.

L. C. J. How do you know he was there then?

Mr. Cook. It is a remarkable time; there is a Proceſſion that they keep there on that Day from the Sodality to the Church, and I ſaw him go among the reſt at the latter end among the Rhetoricians.

L. C. J. What ſay you, was he there on that Day Mr. Hilſley went away?

Mr. Cook. I do not remember that.

L. C. J. Do you remember Burnaby?

Mr. Cook. I was there when Mr. Burnaby went away.

L. C. J. But when he came, was Oates there?

Mr. Cook. I cannot ſpeak particularly to that.

Mr. At. Gen. What was your Place in the College?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he is a Lay-man, be ſure.

Mr. Cook. I was a Servant in the Houſe.

Oates. In what Place do you ſerve?

Mr. Cook. I was a Taylor.

Oates. I do not remember him.

Mr. Cook. But I remember you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Jo. Wright, Eſq;

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Oates at St. Omers?

Mr. Wright. Yes, I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it?

Mr. Wright. The Winter before the notice of the Plot was.

Mr. At. Gen. What Year was it in?

Mr. Wright. In the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month in that Year did he come thither?

Mr. Wright. I cannot tell, it was Winter-time.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he go away?

Mr. Wright. He went away in Summer, I cannot tell juſt the time.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he abſent at any time, from his coming in Winter, to his going away in Summer?

Mr. Wright. The Scholars ſaid he was once at a Place called Watton.

L. C. J. Come, this ſays nothing to the purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it then, Mr. Oates?

Oates. Has Mr. Attorney done?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, we have done for the preſent.

L. C. J. Then are you to make your Defence.

Oates. My Lord, here is an Indictment brought againſt me for Perjury; and this Indictment ſets forth, That I ſhould upon the 17th of December appear at the Old Bailey, and there ſwear, That there was a Treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits met at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, and that this Treaſonable Conſult did divide itſelf into leſſer Companies and Meetings, and that I carried about a certain Reſolution, which the Jeſuits came to, concerning killing the King, from Chamber to Chamber to be ſign'd. My Lord, I have a great Exception to make to this Indictment, and that is, my Lord, as to the Form. For, by your Lordſhip's Favour, I think the Perjury is not well aſſign'd, and according as I am adviſed, I offer this to your Lorſhip's Conſideration. It ſays in the Aſſignment of the Perjury, Ubi revera & in facto prædictus Titus Oates non præſens fuit ad aliquam Conſultationem Jeſuitarum apud le White-Horſe Tavern prædict' in le Strand in Com' Midd' prædict' ſuper viceſimum quartum diem April' anno Dom' Milliceſimo.

L. C. J. How, Milliceſimo!

Oates. My Lord it is Law-Latin, I ſuppoſe it may ſerve in a Court?

L. C. J. No, it is true Latin there.

Oates. I cannot tell how to read it better.

L. C. J. I do believe that.

Oates. It is written in ſuch a Hand, I cannot read it; but the Subſtance of it is, it ſays here, That I did not carry any Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber ſignand'. Now the Evidence charged upon me to be given, is, that I did not ſee it ſignat': So that the Aſſignment of the Perjury does not purſue the Oath as it is ſet forth; for if it be ſignat' in the Evidence that was given, it ought to be ſignat' in the Perjury that is aſſigned; and I humbly crave the Opinion of your Lordſhip and the Court upon this Point.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Oates, that you offer'd before, and I gave this Anſwer, which I muſt now repeat, That now we are upon the Fact, and this Exception will be ſav'd to you for its proper time, if you be convicted. It is not proper now; but ſuppoſe there were that thing which you ſay is an Objection, yet you muſt know, that there are two Perjuries that are aſſign'd; the one is upon the firſt part of your Oath, which was, that you were preſent at a Conſult of the Jeſuits the 24th of April 78, at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, Ubi revera you were not there. Now, do you admit in the firſt place, that you were forſworn in that particular?

Oates. No, my Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. If the Jury find that you were forſworn in that firſt Point, that you were not there, it will be eaſily believed you ſwore falſe in the other Point, that you did not carry the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber.

Oates. But, my Lord, it is not well aſſign'd, I think.

L. C. J That will be ſav'd to you after the Verdict, I tell you, if there be occaſion for it.

Oates. My Lord, I ſuppoſe the Proof ought to be according to the Record, and the Record makes the Perjury differ from the Oath.

L. C. J. I tell you, that is to the Form, and that will be ſav'd to you after the Verdict one way or the other.

Oates. Then will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to conſider there was a Record brought in, which is almoſt the ſame with that I am to offer to be read on my behalf, and which is the firſt Proof that I have to offer of the Conſult that was held in London in April 78. And I deſire Mr. Percivile may be called, I forget his Chriſtian Name, and Mr. Vaughan who is my Sollicitor: But pray, my Lord, let me firſt have the Opinion of the Court, whether they did prove the Words that I am ſaid to ſwear, as they are laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Yes, very fully, we think ſo; but the Jury are to try that, that is a Point of Fact: but if you will, you ſhall have our Thoughts about it; We think they are fully proved.

Cryer. Here is Mr. Percivile.

Oates. Pray ſwear him. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you aſk him?

Oates. Mr. Percivile, you examin'd the Conviction of Mr. Ireland, pray put it in: Is it a true Copy?

Percivile. Yes, it is.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire that the Conviction and Attainder of Mr. Ireland may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. It has been read already.

Oates. My Lord I will not take up the Court's time any more than is neceſſary for my Defence.

L. C. J. Nay, do as you will, as long as you offer things pertinent and decent, the Court will hear you with all Patience, and you may take what time is neceſſary for you.

Oates. I thank your Lordſhip: I deſign'd nothing at all of Reflection upon the Court, but a Reflection on the Witneſſes that came in againſt me.

Cl. of Cr. This is a Copy of the ſame Record that was before read.

Oates. Well, if that be allowed for Evidence for me, I am contented to ſpare the time of the Court, not to read it again; but, my Lord, I offer this, and deſire to have Counſel aſſign'd me to argue this Point in Law; that is, whether or no the Convictions and Attainders of Ireland, Whitebread, and the reſt of them, of a Treaſonable Conſult of the 24th of April 78, where it was reſolved to murder the late King, ought not to be taken as a ſufficient Legal Proof of the Fact, ſo long as thoſe Attainders remain of force? And whether the Averment of that being falſe, is to be received againſt thoſe Records?

L. C. J. There is no difficulty in that at all in the World, Mr. Oates.

Oates. My Lord, I do not know the Law, and therefore I pray I may have Counſel aſſign'd to argue that Point.

L. C. J. There is no queſtion in it. God forbid, if a Verdict be obtain'd by Perjury, that that Verdict ſhould protect the perjur'd Party from being proſecuted for his falſe Oath. There were no Juſtice in that; nor is it an Averment againſt a Record, for this is not a Writ of Error in Fact that will reverſe it, but the Record remains a good Record and unimpeached ſtill: But tho' it be a good Record, yet it is lawful to ſay this Verdict was obtain'd upon the Teſtimony of ſuch an one, that forſwore himſelf in that Teſtimony, and for that particular Perjury he may ſurely be proſecuted.

Oates. Is not that Attainder an uncontroulable Evidence of the Fact, till it be revers'd?

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Yes, it is againſt the Party attainted; but if that Attainder was founded upon a Verdict that was obtain'd by Perjury, God forbid but he ſhould be told ſo that did perjure himſelf.

Oates. Well, my Lord, if your Lordſhip rules that for Law, then I will go on; and I muſt now obſerve to the Jury in the opening the Evidence two things. Firſt, That the Indictment upon which Ireland was tried, was found the 16th of December 78, and on the 17th of December, the next Day Ireland was tried at the Old-Bailey; and then I find this Indictment brought againſt me for Perjury, is found at the Old-Bailey ſix Years after the Fact, by ſpecial Commiſſion. Now, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's and the Jury's Conſideration, why the Preſentment and the finding of this Bill for Perjury has been ſo long delay'd, ſince it appears by the Evidence, that the Witneſſes that have been produc'd to prove the Perjury, were either at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, or might have been produced then; and tho' they are not all the ſame Perſons, yet they all bear the ſame Teſtimony that was then offered, but were not credited; and I hope when my Evidence is heard, they will have the ſame Reputation with this Jury that they had with thoſe others. My Lord, I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip and this Court, That in this Indictment for which Mr. Ireland was convicted, Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick did undergo part of the Trial, and did hear the whole body of the Evidence that the Witneſſes teſtified againſt them; but there being but one Witneſs againſt them two at that time, which was my ſelf, (Mr. Bedloe being then upon an Intrigue, as your Lordſhip may remember) my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, who was then the Mouth of the Court, did diſcharge the Jury of Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick, and remanded them to Priſon, which Mr. Whitebread ſix Months after did remark to the Court, and urg'd it as a Plea for himſelf to be diſcharged; but that being over-ruled by the Court, he was tried. Now, he had ſix Months time to provide himſelf with new freſh Evidence to aſperſe me, and to endeavour to falſify that Teſtimony I gave in againſt Whitebread and Fenwick, when Ireland was tried, and ſo he knew what it was. I muſt further obſerve to you, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, That my Caſe is very hard, that ſince the Subſtance of my Teſtimony was with Credit receiv'd, and the Jury upon convicting them were acquainted, "That "they had found, an unexceptionable Verdict; "That all the Objections againſt the Evidence "were then fully anſwer'd; That there was no-"thing that the Priſoners had been wanting in to "object, which could be objected; and that the "thing was as clear as the Sun:" And yet after ſix Years time, I muſt come to be called to an account for Perjury in my Teſtimony of that part of the Popiſh Plot, with which the King and Kingdom, four ſucceſſive Parliaments, all the Judges of the Land, and three Juries, were ſo well ſatisfied. I ſhall therefore offer to your Lordſhip and the Jury's Conſideration the unanimous Votes of three Houſes of Commons; I ſhall offer the Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords, that is the higheſt Judicature in the Kingdom; I ſhall prove what I have open'd by the Teſtimony of ſeveral Noblemen that are here, who will teſtify this for me. My Lord, I ſhall prove, that ſeveral Attempts have been made to baffle this Teſtimony, as that of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who took my Depoſitions, the Contrivance of Paine, Farewell, and Thompſon, made in the Year 81 or 82, I forget which; I ſhall then produce Evidence that I was actually here in Town at the time in queſtion; and then upon the whole I ſhall ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury. But to prepare your Lordſhip and the Jury the better for my Evidence, I would again urge the ſtrangeneſs of this Proſecution, and the Hardſhip that is put upon me, to be tried for Perjury in an Evidence given ſix Years ago, and formerly very induſtriouſly, tho' not ſucceſsfully, endeavoured to be falſified by ſixteen St. Omers Youths, that were produced and examined before all the Judges in the Kingdom, and that not only once at Whitebread's Trial, but a ſecond time at Langhorn's Trial; in neither of which would the Jury believe them, becauſe of their Religion and Education, and the Perſons under whom they were educated, who were Men of known Artifice. Then, my Lord, I would argue thus: If at that time my Evidence were true, it muſt be true ſtill, for Truth is always the ſame; and if it were then true, and I can prove it to be true, 'twill be thought a hard thing without all doubt, that this ſhould be put upon me. Then, my Lord, I would fain know from my Proſecutors, why this Indictment of Perjury has been deferred ſo long? Why theſe Witneſſes that come now to teſtify this matter, and could then have been brought, did not come before, to juſtify at the Trials of theſe Perſons what they now ſay, which might have ſav'd their Lives, if true, and had it been credited. Then I ſhall offer to your Lordſhip what I deſire you and the Jury would pleaſe to obſerve, That tho' the King's Counſel are now againſt me, yet they are alſo againſt themſelves, for they were of Counſel for the King in thoſe Caſes; particularly Mr. Sollicitor at Langhorn's Trial, Sir Robert Sawyer at Sir George Wakeman's Trial; they were of Counſel before for the Truth of my Teſtimony; they are now againſt it, I only mention that, and paſs it over. But this is not the firſt Attempt that has been made to diſcredit the Teſtimony of the Popiſh Plot, as I told you before. Now, can it be ſuppoſed that the Love and Deſire of Publick Juſtice can be the Cauſe of this Attempt to falſify my Evidence after ſo many Trials, in which it has been credited and confirmed? Can any thing, my Lord, more plainly tend to deſtroy and ſubvert the Methods of Juſtice, to frighten all Witneſſes from henceforth from ever appearing to diſcover any Conſpiracies? And does it not tend to expoſe and vilify the known Underſtanding and Juſtice of the late King of Ever-bleſſed Memory, to arraign the Wiſdom of his Privy-Council, his great and noble Peers, his Loyal Commons in three ſucceſſive Parliaments, his twelve Judges, and all thoſe ſeveral Juries that were upon thoſe Trials? Had not thoſe Juries Senſe? Had they not Honeſty? Had they no Conſciences? And the Judges before whom thoſe Conſpirators were tried, were they Men of no Juſtice, nor Honour, nor Integrity, nor Conſcience, nor Underſtanding? Shall thoſe Juries be ſaid to have drawn the innocent Blood of theſe Men upon their own Heads and the Nation? As, if I were perjur'd, it muſt be innocent Blood that was ſhed upon it.

L. C. J. No, no, that goes a great deal too far, Mr. Oates: The Jury have no ſhare, nor the Judges neither, in that Blood which was ſhed by your Oath.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. No, that is your own moſt certainly, and not theirs.

Oates. But this, I ſay, makes it moſt plain: The Evidence was then true, and I hope I ſhall make it as evidently plain, 'tis as true now; and I do not queſtion, but upon the Evidence I ſhall now give, both poſitive and collateral, the Jury will believe me, and acquit me of this foul Accuſation. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to conſider, that when the Jury brought in Ireland guilty of the High-Treaſon, of which he was accuſed, and convicted him, Pickering, and Grove; ſays my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs (that then was) to them: Gentlemen, you have done like very good Subjects, and very good Chriſtians, that is, like very good Proteſtants; and now much good may do them with their thirty thouſand Maſſes; as I ſhall prove he did ſay. Then I inſiſt, in the ſecond place, that Whitebread's Conviction does re-inforce the Conviction of Ireland, becauſe of the Attempt by the St. Omers Witneſſes to have overthrown my Evidence: But ſince I am attack'd again in the ſame kind, by the violence of the Popiſh intereſt, and by the Malice of my Popiſh Adverſaries, I am contented to ſtand the Teſt with all my heart And then, to conclude all, I ſhall ſhew the Court, that 'tis in vain for the Popiſh Party to expect and think to wipe their Mouths, with Solomon's Whore, and ſay, they have done no Wickedneſs. No, I queſtion not but thouſands of Proteſtants in this Kingdom are fully ſatisfied and convinced of the Truth of the Popiſh Plot, all and every Part of it. Now, my Lord, if you pleaſe to give me leave to proceed on in my Evidence, I ſhall beg that theſe Records of Conviction may be read, which are my firſt Proof of the Conſult; and I ſhall then bring Witneſſes, vivâ voce, and ſhall make it appear, that what I did ſwear at thoſe Trials was true.

L. C. J. Not to interrupt you in your Defence, or the Method you will take for it, I would put you upon that which is proper for you to apply yourſelf to, becauſe the Queſtion now is not, whether there was a Conſult or Congregation of the Jeſuits here upon the 24th of April 78? but the Queſtion that toucheth you is, whether you were preſent at any ſuch Conſult here in London the 24th of April 78? Theſe Gentlemen, ſome of them, do ſay, there was a Conſult, and others that they heard of it, and believe there was ſuch a one, becauſe it was uſual to have a Triennial Congregation for ſome particular Purpoſes: But the Queſtion is, whether you have ſufficient Proof to prove yourſelf to be here on the 24th of April 78, at which time it is agreed on all hands there was a Conſult?

Oates. But will your Lordſhip be pleas'd to take notice of the drift of the Evidence, how they are conſiſtent one with another? Theſe Gentlemen that have now been ſworn to prove that I was not at this Conſult do attempt to prove that I was at St. Omers: Now to anſwer this, I ſhall not go about to prove that I was not then at St. Omers, but that I was actually then, and about that time, here in London; and then all that Proof that Mr. Attorney-General has brought, muſt be laid aſide.

L. C. J. You ſay well; prove that.

Oates. Now, my Lord, to introduce and prepare the Jury for this, it will be neceſſary, I humbly conceive, to read the Records of the Conviction of Whitebread and Ireland.

L. C. J. Well, go your own way; we are not to direct you: I only tell you where the Queſtion lies.

Oates. Sir Samuel Aſtrey, pray be pleas'd to read them in Engliſh, that the Jury may underſtand them. Firſt read Ireland's Record.

[Which was done.

Oates. Now read Whitebread's Record: Read but the Attainder, I will not trouble the Court with the whole Record.

Cl. of Cr. "Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Harcourt alias Harriſon, John Fenwick, "John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, were found "guilty of High-Treaſon, and attainted, and Exe- "cution awarded againſt them upon that At- "tainder."

Oates. Does not the Record ſay, the Jurors ſay upon their Oaths they are guilty.

L. C. J. Yes, I'll warrant you.

Cl. of the Cr. It is dicunt ſuper ſacramentum ſuum.

Oates. Very well. Theſe, my Lord, I do produce as my firſt Evidence, to prove that there was a traiterous Conſult, held upon the 24th of April 78, at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, it having been believed and affirmed by two Verdicts. Now give me leave to offer but this to the Court, that at the Trial of Mr. Ireland I gave ſo full and ample a Teſtimony againſt Whitebread and Fenwick, accompanied with all the Circumſtances of Time and Place, that my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid, The Evidence might be ſufficient to have ſatisfied a private Conſcience, tho' it was not a legal Proof then to convict him, there being but one Witneſs againſt them: And for this I call Mr. Robert Blayney.

Oates. Pray ſwear Mr. Blayney.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you aſk Mr. Blayney?

Oates. Mr. Blayney, have you your Notes of Ireland's Trial here?

Mr. Blayney. Yes, Sir, I have.

Oates. Pray will you look into what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid when he diſcharg'd the Jury of Whitebread and Fenwick.

Mr. Blayney. Whereabouts is it, Sir, in the printed Trial?

Oates. It is Page 55.

Mr. Blayney. I have found the Place, what is it you would aſk me about it?

Oates. Whether my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs did not uſe theſe Words to the Jury? I do acknowlege that Mr. Oates has given a very full and ample Teſtimony, accompanied with all the Circumſtances of Time and Place, againſt them all; that may go far with you, all things conſider'd, to believe there is a Plot: Yet I do not think they have proved it againſt Whitebread and Fenwick by two Witneſſes; tho' the Teſtimony be ſo full as to ſatisfy a private Conſcience, yet we muſt go according to Law too. It will be convenient from what is already proved, to have them ſtay till more Proof come in; 'tis a great Evidence that is againſt them, but it not being ſufficient in point of Law, we diſcharge you of them. It is not a legal Proof to convict them by, whatſoever it may be to ſatisfy your Conſciences.

Mr. Blayney. I have look'd upon my Notes, and I cannot find exactly thoſe Words.

L. C. J. He ſays he cannot find that Paſſage as it is there.

Mr. Blayney. There is ſomething to that purpoſe, my Lord.

Oates. Pray, Sir, will you look into your Notes in the very ſame Place, what my Lord Chief Baron ſaid: You muſt (ſpeaking to the Jailor) underſtand they are no way acquitted: The Evidence is ſo full againſt them by Mr. Oates's Teſtimony, that there is no Reaſon to acquit them; it is as flat as by one Witneſs can be.

Mr. Blayney. There is ſuch a Paſſage, I find, in my Notes.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. He ſays there is ſuch a Paſſage.

Oates. Then I deſire Mr. Blayney would look into his Notes, what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid in his ſumming up the Evidence againſt Ireland. He mentions the Evidence of Sir Dennis Aſhburnham, who was produced to diſcredit me, and then he adds, When the Matter is ſo accompanied with ſo many other Circumſtances which are material things, and cannot be evaded or deny'd, it is almoſt impoſſible for any Man either to make ſuch a Story, or not to believe it when it is told.——It is Ireland's Trial, Page 72.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, I do find ſuch a Paſſage in my Notes.

L. C. J. He ſays there is ſuch a Paſſage in his Notes.

Oates. Then I would aſk Mr. Blayney another Queſtion at the bringing in the Verdict of the Jury againſt Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs (that then was) had this Expreſſion: You have done, Gentlemen, like very good Subjects, and very good Chriſtians, that is to ſay, like very good Proteſtants; and now much good may their 30,000 Maſſes do them.

Mr. Blayney. Yes, my Lord, there is in my Notes ſuch an Expreſſion of my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs.

Oates. Pray you, Mr. Blayney, have you Whitebread's Trial? The Trial of the five Jeſuits, I mean.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord when I receiv'd a Subpœna from Mr. Oates to be here this Day, and to bring my Notes of Ireland, Whitebread, and Langhorn's Trials, I did (as I did before upon another occaſion) make a Search for all my Notes, but could not find any but thoſe of the Trial of Ireland and Langhorn, and thoſe I have brought here, but have not Whitebread's.

L. C. J. He ſays he has not the Notes of Whitebread's Trial; he cannot find them.

Oates. Then I muſt deſire, my Lord, that the Printed Trials may be read.

L. C. J. No, they are no Evidence: If you can prove what was ſaid at any of them, you may by Witneſſes, but not by the Printed Books.

Oates. Then will your Lordſhip be pleas'd to give me leave to mention what was ſaid by your Lordſhip at that time, when you were Recorder of London, about your Satisfaction with the Evidence.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my heart; and whatever I ſaid, I will own, if I can remember it.

Oates. Will your Lordſhip be pleas'd to be ſworn then?

L. C. J. No, there will be no need for that; I will acknowledge any thing I ſaid then.

Oates. Then, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I will read thoſe Paſſages out of the Books.

L. C. J. Ay, do ſo.

Oates. Says Mr. Recorder of London, (in particular to that Part of the Priſoners Defence, at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, and the full Scope given them of making Objections to the Evidence) when he gave Judgment of Death upon theſe five Jeſuits and Langhorn (for I now ſpeak of your Lordſhip in the third Perſon,) Your ſeveral Crimes have been proved againſt you; you have been fully heard, and ſtand convicted of thoſe Crimes you have been indicted for.

L. C. J. I believe I might ſay ſomething to the ſame purpoſe as you have read now.

Oates. I thank your Lordſhip for that Acknowledgment.

L. C. J. Ay, I'll own any thing I did ſay.

Oates. My Lord, I have one Paſſage more to urge, and that was, my Lord, after the Jeſuits had been convicted, when the Jury brought in their Verdict, and found Whitebread, Fenwick, Harcourt, Gaven, and Turner guilty, your Lordſhip, applying yourſelf to the Jury, ſaid thus to them: Gentleman, you of the Jury, there has been a long Evidence given againſt the Priſoners at the Bar; they were all indicted, arraigned, and tried for High-Treaſon, depending upon ſeveral Circumſtances: They can none of them ſay the Court refus'd to hear any thing they could ſay for themſelves; but upon a long Evidence, and a patient Hearing of the Defence they made, they are found guilty; and for any thing appears to us, it is a juſt Verdict you have given.

L. C. J. I believe I might ſay ſomething to that purpoſe too at that time; and no doubt the Jury did (as the Caſe then ſtood) find an unexceptionable Verdict.

Oates. There is another place, my Lord, that I would inſtance in, for your Lordſhip's Opinion of the Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, and that is this: Now, my Lord, I bring your Lordſhip as you were of Counſel for the King at Mr. Colledge's Trial at Oxford, the 17th of Auguſt 81. There you, my now Lord Chief Juſtice, directing yourſelf to the Jury, had this Expreſſion; We come not here to trip up the heels of the Popiſh Plot, by ſaying that any of them who ſuffer'd for it did die contrary to Law; for if Mr. Dugdale was not a Perſon fit to be believ'd, or if the reſt of the Judges who try'd Gaven were out in the Law, then that Man died wrongfully; for he had as much right to be try'd according to Law, as any other Perſon whatſoever. This was your Lordſhip's Opinion of the Matter then, and your Lordſhip, as Counſel for the King, did there deliver the Law as well as Fact to the Jury. If then they went againſt Law, that would go to trip up the heels of the Popiſh Plot——

Mr. Juſt. Withins. We are got into an endleſs Wood of Sayings of People, I know not where and when; and when all is done, it is to no purpoſe.

Oates. My Lord, it is a Part, and a great Part, of my Defence, to ſhew what credit has been given to the Evidence of the Popiſh Plot.

L. C. J. Ay, but what Counſel ſays at the Bar, or what Judges ſay in the Court of their Opinion, is no Evidence of a Fact, of which the Jury are Judges only.

Oates. My Lord every Judge is upon his Oath, and delivers his Judgment according to his Oath.

L. C. J. Not as to the Fact, but only in Points of Law, ſo as to tell the Jury what the Law is, if the Fact be ſo and ſo.

Oates. My Lord, it goes a great way with the Jury to have the Judge's Opinion.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, deceive not yourſelf; all this you have inſiſted on hitherto, has not been to the purpoſe, nor is any ſort of Evidence in this Caſe; and therefore do not run away with an Opinion of this as Evidence; a Judge's Opinion is of value in Points of Law that ariſe upon Facts found by Juries, but are no Evidence of the Fact: for Judges only do preſume the Fact to be true, as it is found by the Jury; and therefore ſay they, out of that Fact ſo found, the Point of Law ariſing is thus or thus. Then in caſe, after a Jury has given a Verdict of the Fact, a Judge's Opinion of the Fact (which may be perhaps contrary to the Verdict) ſhould be an Evidence as to that Fact, that would be to overthrow and nullify the Jury's Verdict: No, that is not the Judge's Province. Surely you would would not have a Judge's private Opinion, that twelve Men have found a Verdict againſt the Fact, to be an Evidence as to that Fact: No; but admit the Fact to be ſo or ſo, then the Perſon convicted of the Fact ought to ſuffer ſo or ſo. And by the ſame reaſon as this, a Jury of honeſt Gentlemen here, when I tell them here is a plain Fact either to convict you, or to acquit you upon this Indictment, are not bound to go by what I ſay in point of Fact, but they are to go according to their own Oaths, and according to the Evidence and Teſtimony of the Witneſſes: It is not my Opinion that is to weigh at all with them, whether you are guilty of this Perjury, or are innocent, but the Evidence that is given here in Court. Therefore what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid at any of thoſe Trials, or what I ſaid, or any other Perſon, that either was of Counſel, or a Judge on the Bench, ſaid as our Opinions, is but our Opinions on the Fact as it occurr'd to our preſent Apprehenſions, but is no Evidence nor binding to this Jury. I muſt tell you, there is no doubt, but that thoſe Juries did every one of them believe the Evidence you gave, or they would not have convicted the Priſoners. Do you think they would have found a Verdict againſt their own Belief, and being upon their Oaths to make true Deliverance between the King and the Priſoners, have perjured themſelves to hang others? if they had ſo done, they had committed wilful Murder, and the worſt of Murders too, being under Colour of the Proceſs of Law; but yet all this is no Evidence. I do not diſcommend you for inſinuating theſe things, as introductive and preparative to what Evidence you have to offer; but it is no Evidence one way or other. Alack-a-day! how many times have we Cauſes here in Weſtminſter-Hall, wherein we have Verdict againſt Verdict? and yet no Imputation to either of the Juries, which might give different Verdicts upon different Grounds. There was a notable Caſe lately of my Lady Ives at this Bar; We all thought upon the firſt Trial, that ſhe had as good a Title to the Land as could be; all the Judges and the Counſel went away (I believe) ſatisfied with the Jury's Verdict for her: But when the Cauſe came to be heard again, we found all the Witneſſes to prove her Title, were guilty of notorious Perjury, and the ſame Perſons which did believe before that ſhe was in the right, and the Jury had done well; when they heard the ſecond Trial, did believe ſhe was in the wrong, and accordingly the ſecond Jury found it ſo; and we believe that laſt Verdict to be good, without any Reflection on the Credit of the firſt Jury, becauſe the Evidence was as ſtrong on her ſide then, as it was afterwards againſt her. In theſe Caſes we give our Opinions always according to the preſent Teſtimony that is before us.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I offer this to your Conſideration, that thoſe Men that were thus charged by me with High-Treaſon, were Prieſts and Jeſuits moſt of them, and particularly Mr. Ireland, in whoſe Trial I am ſaid to have committed this Perjury; and you ſhall find him to have been by others proved a Prieſt and a Jeſuit, and actually engaged in a Deſign againſt the Life of the King. If I then do prove that Ireland was engaged in a Deſign againſt the late King's Life, and was a Prieſt and a Jeſuit, I deſire to know, whether this be not a Collateral Evidence to render me of Credit ſufficient, and ſupport my Teſtimony?

L. C. J. By no means upon this Indictment. It's true it may give ſome Credit to your Teſtimony, but it is not of it ſelf ſufficient: Nay, I'll go a great way further than that; I will ſuppoſe that there was a Conſult of the Jeſuits upon the 24th of April 78, at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, where thoſe you ſay were preſent; were all preſent; Ireland, and Whitebread, and Pickering, Grove and Fenwick, were all there, and that they did there come to a Reſolution to deſtroy the late King: Suppoſe all this to be true, and yet you all this time are not innocent of the Fact imputed to you, becauſe you ſwore directly, That you were there at that Conſult too, which you were not, if theſe Men ſwear true, for then you were at St. Omers at that time; and therefore give us ſome ſort of Teſtimony to ſatisfy us that you were here, and then you will ſet all right again. If the Jeſuits and Prieſts did plot, that is nothing to make your Evidence true, if you ſwore that which you did not know of your own Knowledge.

Oates. Shall it be allow'd then, that Ireland was a Jeſuit and a Papiſt?

L. C. J. If it ſhould, that will be to very little purpoſe for your Turn.

Oates. There is the Evidence of a Record for it, my Lord; but if that be not ſufficient, I can call Witneſſes to prove it. Pray, call Mr. Miles Prance.

[Which was done, but he did not appear.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. He was ſubpœna'd, my Lord, to come hither.

L. C. J. I can't help it, if he will not come; but I'll tell you, for method's ſake, not to preſcribe to you, but to tell you what I think may be more for your advantage than any of theſe Inferences that you are making. If you did call two or three Witneſſes to prove that you were in Town the 22d, 23d, or 24th of April, it would be the beſt Defence you can make, and would give the beſt Anſwer to all that is objected againſt you.

Oates. I will do that, my Lord, then, and follow your Directions.

L. C. J. Do ſo, that's the beſt way.

Oates. Cryer, call Cecilia Mayo.

Cryer. Here ſhe is.

Oates. Swear her. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, what do you aſk this Witneſs?

Oates. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, give my Lord and the Jury an account, whether you did ſee me in London the latter part of April, or the beginning of May 78? For that is the Queſtion now before the Court.

L. C. J. Ay, what ſay you? When did you ſee him in 78?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, I ſaw him the latter end of April: He came to Sir Richard Barker's Houſe, where I did then live, and afterwards he came again thither within a few days. By this Circumſtance I remember it; Sir Richard Barker, my Maſter, was ſick all the Month of April, and in the Country, only he came now and then home for a little while, and went again: Now Mr. Oates came there when he was abſent, and a young Man that lived in the Houſe came to me, and told me, there was one Mr. Oates in the ſtrangeſt Diſguiſe that ever was. Says he, I think he is turn'd Quaker. No, ſaid I, he is no Quaker, for they wear no Perriwigs, and I rebuked the young Man for ſaying ſo. As for Mr. Oates, I never ſaw his Face before that time, that I know of.

L. C. J. How do you know that to be Mr. Oates then?

Mrs. Mayo. The Family knew him, and they told me it was he: That is the Gentleman there.

I ſpeak

I ſpeak now nothing but that which I teſtified ſeven Years ago, and it is all Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, no doubt of it, thou ſweareſt nothing but the Truth.

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, he came three or four days afterwards again to the Houſe, and then the Young-man, came to me, and told me, that Parſon Oates was turn'd Jeſuit; and thereupon I ſaid to him, Good Lord! Why doſt thou concern thy ſelf with him? Can'ſt not let him alone? I look'd upon him, and ſaw him at that time: And when he came that time, he went to Sir Richard's Lady's Siſter, who is now in Wales, and coming to her, ſaid ſhe, Mr. Oates, I hear you are turn'd Jeſuit, and we can have no Society with you now: At laſt, he ſtaid to Dinner with them, and ſtaid moſt of the Day there. Then he comes the latter end of May; Whitſuntide was in May that Year, and I know he came before Whitſuntide by this Token; I ſpeak of the ſecond time of his coming: Our Cuſtom in the Houſe was to waſh and ſcour before the time, and I was ſending for a Woman to come and help to waſh and ſcour, and then he was walking in the Garden; and the Young-man came and told me Oates was there: He came into the Pantry to me, Look, ſaid he, he is come again, and he is turn'd Jeſuit by his Diſguiſe. Why, Benjamin, ſaid I, what haſt thou to do with the Man? Can'ſt not let him alone?

L. C. J. What was the Name of that Young-man you ſpeak of?

Mrs. Mayo. Truly, my Lord, he is dead, or he would have teſtified the ſame thing.

L. C. J. But what was his Name?

Mrs. Mayo. Benjamin; I can't tell his other Name.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mrs. Mayo. Said I to him, Why doſt thou ſcorn this Man? Prithee get out of the Room, I am not able to hear it: So he walk'd the ſpace of an Hour in the Garden.

L. C. J. Is Sir Richard Barker living?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord, he is, but he is not well.

L. C. J. Was he at home when Oates was there?

Mrs. Mayo. No, my Lord, I think not.

L. C. J. Who din'd with him, do you ſay, when he din'd there?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lady's Siſter.

L. C. J. What is her Name?

Mrs. Mayo. Madam Thurrel.

L. C. J. And who elſe?

Mrs. Mayo. And her Sons.

L. C. J. Where are they?

Mrs. Mayo. They are both dead.

L. C. J. And who elſe was there?

Mrs. Mayo. One Dr. Cocket.

L. C. J. Where is he?

Mrs. Mayo. He is in Wales too, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis a great Misfortune to have ſo many dead, or ſo far remote.

Oates. My Lord, ſix years time makes a great Alteration in a Family.

L. C. J. Was there any body elſe there?

Mrs. Mayo. There were two of the Daughters, and they could all come and teſtify the ſame thing.

L. C. J. Where are they, and what is become of them? Why are they not here?

Mrs. Mayo. They are living in Lincolnſhire, my Lord, I think.

L. C. J. What elſe have you more to ſay?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, let me aſk you a Queſtion: What coloured Clothes had he on when you ſaw him firſt?

Mrs. Mayo. He had a whitiſh Hat, and coloured Clothes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. In the Morning.

L. C. J. Did he go publickly?

Mrs Mayo. Yes, he went publickly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he come often to the Houſe?

Mrs. Mayo. He was there frequently, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then it ſeems he was ſo diſguis'd that he could walk publickly in the Streets of London at Noon-Day, and was frequently in the Family?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now tell me who was in the Family?

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Mayo,———

L. C. J. Pray, give me leave to aſk her the Queſtion: Who was there at that time?

Mrs. Mayo. Sir Richard Barker's Lady's Siſter, Madam Thurrel, and his two Daughters, and two of his Kinſmen, and two of the Servants, one is here a Witneſs now.

L. C. J. Who is that, that is a Witneſs now?

Mrs. Mayo. One that belongs to Sir Richard Barker, and the other is now dead, and thoſe two Kinſmen are dead.

L. C. J. What is become of the two Daughters, ſay you?

Mrs. Mayo. They are in Lincolnſhire, as I take it, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you hear from them?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, it is half a Year ago almoſt ſince Mr. Oates had notice of this Trial.

L. C. J. Where is Sir Richard Barker himſelf?

Mrs. Mayo. I was with Sir Richard Barker, and he purpoſed to have come hither; but being a crazy Man, and antient, it ſeems he could not, and deſired to be excuſed, for he had a bad Night, and was not well; but he deſired that the Court ſhould know, if he were well, he would be there

Mr. At. Gen. Were you ſworn at a former Trial about this Matter, Mrs. Mayo?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what you ſwore then?

Mrs. Mayo. The ſame I do now.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I aſk you this Queſtion, How long before Whitſuntide was it that you ſaw Mr. Oates at Sir Richard Barker's?

Mrs, Mayo. A pretty while before, twice.

Oates. Mrs. Mayo, I'll put you a fair Queſtion, Whether or no it might not be a Fortnight before Whitſuntide, you think?

Mrs. Mayo. The laſt time I ſaw you was a Week before Whitſuntide.

L. C. J. How can you tell it was but a Week?

Mrs. Mayo. 'Twas but a Week, becauſe at that time I had ſent the Boy for the Woman to ſcour and waſh there.

L. C. J. Was that the laſt time you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes; I ſaw him ſeveral times before, and it was all before Whitſuntide.

L. C. J. How long before that, was the firſt time that you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. He would be away for three or four Days, and come again.

L. C. J. But how long before the laſt time, was the firſt time you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. He came ſtill to and again.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. When was the time that you ſaw him next before the Week before Whitſuntide, which, as you ſay, was the laſt time you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. I am not able to ſay that.

L. C. J. Did you believe it was within the compaſs of a Week before?

Mrs. Mayo. To the beſt of my remembrance it was.

L. C. J. When was the firſt time you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. 'Twas in the beginning of May.

L. C. J. You ſaid at firſt it was at the latter end of April.

Mrs. Mayo. Pray, my Lord, let me a little think; I am unwilling to be miſtaken, I would ſay nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. No, I would not have thee; but for God's ſake, let us have the Truth, that is that we look for.

Mrs. Mayo. I ſay, the Coach-man ſaw him there as well as I, and he can tell you better than I.

L. C. J. But I aſk you this Queſtion poſitively, Was it in May or April?

Mrs. Mayo. To the beſt of my remembrance it was the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Was it within a Week of May.

Mrs. Mayo. I believe it was, I cannot tell exactly to a Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it ſo or not?

Mrs. Mayo. I cannot be poſitive to a Day; it is now ſix Years time ſince I was firſt examined about it.

Mr At. Gen. But you can remember what you ſwore then, can't you?

Mrs. Mayo. I declare it, I ſpeak not a Syllable, but I will aver to be true, before the great God.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you ſwear it was within the firſt ſeven Days of May?

L. C. J. You ſee, Mr. Sollicitor, ſhe ſays ſhe cannot.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you ſay at that Trial, that you did never ſee his Face till a Week before Whitſuntide, or a little after?

Mrs. Mayo. I did ſwear the ſame that I do now, to the beſt of my remembrance, and that is the Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. But did not you ſwear ſo?

Mrs. Mayo. I never ſaw him before that firſt time he came to Sir Richard Barker's, and after the laſt time that he came, I ſaw him not till after the Plot was diſcovered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was that after he had been at your Maſter's Houſe?

Mrs. Mayo. It was a good while, I cannot tell how long.

L. C. J. Was it within a Month, or two Months?

Mrs. Mayo. It was more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where was Sir Richard Barker at that time?

Mrs. Mayo. He was at Putney.

L. C. J. Then he did not ſee him?

Mrs. Mayo. Not then he did not.

L. C. J. Did he afterwards?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, he did ſee him afterwards.

L. C. J. How long afterwards was it?

Mrs. Mayo. I can't tell how long afterwards it was, my Lord.

L. C. J. About what time was it?

Mrs. Mayo. After the Plot was diſcovered he was up and down in the Family.

L. C. J. You never knew Mr. Oates before that time he came in a Diſguiſe, and you did not know him then, but as they told you it was he?

Mrs. Mayo. No, I did not, but as they told me then; and this is the Man, I'll ſwear it.

Oates. Call John Butler.

Cryer. Here is John Butler.

Oates. Swear him. [Which was done.

My Lord if you pleaſe I will propoſe my Queſtions to your Lordſhip; and my firſt Queſtion is this, I pray your Lordſhip would aſk him, whether he gave in any Evidence at the five Jeſuits Trial, or Langhorn's Trial, about my being in Town in April or May 78?

L. C. J. Did you give any Evidence at the five Jeſuits Trial?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Did you give any Evidence at Langhorn's Trial?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, I was a Witneſs there.

Oates. My Lord, it is ſo long ago, that ignorant People that come innocently without deſign, may not be ſo ready in their remembrance, as thoſe that conn'd their Leſſon for ſo long time together.

L. C. J. Well, well; what do you aſk him next, whether he will ſtand by that Evidence he gave then?

Butler. That is all I have to ſay, my Lord: I did teſtify the Truth then, and will abide by it.

L. C. J. But he muſt give the ſame over again here, or it will ſignify nothing.

Oates. My Lord, it is now ſix Years ſince, and this Queſtion was not thought to be ſtirr'd ſo long after: Therefore I beg ſo much Favour, that the Evidence he did give at Mr. Langhorn's Trial may be read to him.

L. C. J. O! by no means.

Oates. My Lord, it is ſuch a diſtance of time—

L. C. J. Look ye, if he has any Notes himſelf, he may look on them to refreſh him.

Oates. My Lord, he comes raw hither, without any Inſtruction at all.

L. C. J. So ſhould every Witneſs: God forbid we ſhould countenance the inſtructing of Witneſſes what they ſhould ſwear.

Oates. I beg your pardon, my Lord, I did hope this Favour might be granted: I will then aſk him ſome Queſtions.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, do, refreſh his Memory by Queſtions as much as you can. Come, I'll aſk him ſome Queſtions for you: Do you remember you ſaw Mr. Oates at any time in the Year 78?

Butler. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, as near as I can remember I ſaw him in May before the Plot was diſcovered.

L. C. J. That was the Year 78.

Butler. I am ſure I did ſee him about that time.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee him?

Butler. I was a Servant to Sir Richard Barker, and Mr. Oates I had been acquainted with before he went to Sea; he uſed to come to my Maſter's Houſe frequently, and divers times he din'd at the Table, and I waited upon my Maſter there.

L. C. J. When was it that he din'd there at the Table?

Butler. A Year before that time in May that I ſpoke of before: It was before he went to Sea.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him again?

Butler. After he came from Sea, I ſaw him at my Maſter's Houſe.

L. C. J. When was it that he went to Sea?

Butler. It was a Year or two before the May that I ſaw him diſguis'd coming to my Maſter's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, what Diſguiſe did he come in?

Butler.

Butler. His Hair was cut off, close cropt to his Ears, and an old white Hat over his Head, and a short grey Coat over like a Horse-man's Coat.

L. C. J. How came you to take such notice of him at that time, as to be able to swear when this was?

Butler. I was call'd presently after for a Witness.

L. C. J. How long after this was it, that you were call'd to be a Witness?

Butler. It was when the Trials were at the Old-Bailey.

L. C. J. Was this the first time you had recollected these Circumstances?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, that was the first time.

L. C. J. Then how came you a Year and an half's time afterwards to remember the precise Month of May, when you did not know you should be call'd to question about it, and yet you cannot remember the time particularly when Oates went to Sea, but take the compass of a Year or two?

Butler. I guess it was a Year before, I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. When you can but guess at the time of such a remarkable Passage, within the Compass of a Year or two, how can you pitch upon the very Month for such a thing as this is, a Year and a half's time after?

Oates. No, my Lord, it was not so long as a Year and a half.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, have patience,

Oates. My Lord, the Records shew, that Ireland's Trial was the 17th of December 78, and the five Jesuits Trial was the 15th of June 79.

L. C. J. Then it is a full twelve-month's time and more from the May that he says he saw you at Sir Richard Barker's to Whitebread's Trial, in which he was examin'd the first time. Now that which I desire of him, is, to give me a reason why he remembers it was in the May was twelve-month before?

Butler. My Lord, the Lady whom I did serve, died in February before, that Year.

L. C. J. But give me some reason of your Remembrance so long after.

Butler. My Lord, I do as well as I can.

L. C. J. Well, what is it?

Butler. My Lady was buried in February, and he comes into the Yard where I was cleaning my Coach, in May following that February, which was May before the Discovery of the Plot. He ask'd me what Alteration was in the Family? I told him my Lady was dead, and the Escutcheon was over the Door for her. He ask'd for Dr. Tongue when he came first in the House.

L. C. J. Why should he ask for Dr. Tongue?

Butler. My Lord, Dr. Tongue lodged there? and he did ask for him: I come to justify the Truth; upon my Salvation what I say is true.

L. C. J. Well, when he ask'd whether Dr. Tongue was within, what said you?

Butler. I told him, no; but he went into the Room where Dr. Tongue us'd to lie, but found him not there: so he went out again. That was the same time Mrs. Mayo saw him.

L. C. J. But, Friend, prithee mind what I ask thee, because thou must give me satisfaction how thou com'st to remember this, so as to be able to swear it; for his going to ask for Tongue, or the Escutcheon being over the Door, neither of those can be a Reason for you to remember that this was in May, for the Escutcheon may be up in June, or in July, or in August, or in any other Month after the time you speak of: But how came you to take notice of this Business that it was in May?

Butler. Sir Richard Barker, my Master, was then sick at Putney, which was in May, tho' I cannot speak to a Day or a Week particularly.

L. C. J. Then prithee let me ask thee this Question, how long had your Master been sick before that?

Butler. He had never been well since my Lady died.

L. C. J. When was it that your Lady died?

Butler. In February before.

L. C. J. How long after that did your Master, Sir Richard Barker, continue sick?

Butler. Half a Year, I believe.

L. C. J. Why then, suppose your Master fell sick immediately after your Lady died, and he continued sick half a Year after, yet all this while Oates might come during his Sickness even in the Month of June or July, when 'tis acknowledg'd he was in Town, and not be here in February, which is testified by a great many Witnesses.

Butler. My Lord, I tell your Lordship the Truth, it was in May.

L. C. J. But how dost thou come to take notice it was in the Month of May, so as to be able to swear it?

Butler. My Lord, I tell your Lordship my Lady was dead, and the Escutcheon was over the Door.

L. C. J. So it might be, tho' he came in June or July, I tell ye.

Butler. My Master was sick at Putney at that time.

L. C. J. How long did he lie sick at Putney?

Butler. He was sick there a Fortnight, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then prithee when did thy Master go to Putney?

Butler. I cannot tell to a Day.

L. C. J. In what Month was it that he went?

Butler. It was the latter end of April, my Lord, as I remember.

L. C. J. How long continued he sick at Putney?

Butler. The matter of a Fortnight.

L. C. J. Was not your Master sick, when your Lady died, at Putney?

Butler. No, he was not there then.

L. C. J. When did he go to Putney, say ye?

Butler. He went not thither till the latter end of April, my Lord.

L. C. J. And did he continue at Putney but a Fortnight?

Butler. Not at a time, but he continued going and coming a quarter of a Year.

L. C. J. But this was the first time of his going, was it?

Butler. Yes, as I do remember.

Oates. My Lord, he is my Witness, and I desire I may examine him.

L. C. J. Hold there, Mr. Oates; he is mine too. All the Witnesses are mine to satisfy me in the Truth of the Fact.

Oates. And to satisfy the Jury too, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, and to satisfy the Jury too, but I must and will sift out the Truth, for both our Satisfactions.

Oates. My Lord, it is now, come the next Month, six Years ago since the Evidence of this Matter was first given by these Witnesses.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Oates, I'll come a little rounder to you, and I'll put you into a certain way of clearing this Business. I'll tell you what you shall do; you had a Lodging in Town, as well as Diet, and as well as you did eat at Dr. Barker's ſometimes, ſo you eat and lay ſometimes elſewhere. You were here in Town a great while together, if your own Aſſertions be true; for you were from April till June in Town: Now come and give us account by ſome Witneſſes, if you can, where did you lodge at that time, and where did you diet? For it ſeems you had but one Meal at Sir Richard Barker's.

Oates. Is that the Queſtion, Sir, here in hand?

L. C. J. Ay indeed is it, and the main one too.

Oates. I beg your Lordſhip's pardon if I miſtake, but I think that is not now in queſtion; for theſe St. Omers Men do ſwear, That I was all April and May at St. Omers: Then if I do prove that in April and May I was not at St. Omers, but here in London, it is Argument good enough againſt them that their Evidence is falſe. And indeed, can your Lordſhip or the Jury expect, that I being then engag'd among and for the Papiſts, and afterwards an Evidence againſt them to diſcover their Treaſons, can bring any of them to teſtify for me now? No, they will as certainly forſwear themſelves, as theſe young Fellows have all done.

L. C. J. Let me aſk you a ſhorter Queſtion: Did you always lie in a Papiſt Houſe all the two Months you ſay you were here?

Oates. My Lord, I lay at ſeveral Houſes.

L. C. J. Tell me the Names of thoſe Houſes, or any of them.

Oates. It is not to the Point in queſtion here, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes it is very much; but I perceive it is a Secret, and let any body judge why.

Oates. My Lord, they that have by the Principles of their Religion, Liberty to affirm or deny any thing, and can have Diſpenſations for the Violations of Oaths and Sacraments, certainly are not to be admitted as Witneſſes in ſuch a Caſe as this.

L. C. J. Talk not to me of Diſpenſations, and I know not what; I ſpeak from a plain demonſtrative Proof: Can it be believed that you ſhould be here in England ſo long, and as they ſay, publickly, and no Perſon living ſee you that we can hear of, but an old Woman that never ſaw you, nor knew you before, and a Coachman that tells a wild Story without Reaſon? If you will not tell me where you lay, can you tell me where you did eat all that time?

Oates. I can tell where I did lie that time.

L. C. J. Do ſo then. Let us hear it, that will be your beſt Defence.

Oates. Is that the Point, my Lord, in queſtion?

L. C. J. Ay, upon my Word is it the main Point in this Caſe.

Oates. If it ſhould go upon that foot, my Lord, it is impoſſible for me now to prove it; for 'tis well known, I lay ſometimes with Mr. Whitebread, and ſometimes with Mr. Mico, neither of which can I have to teſtify for me; and beſides, I muſt inſiſt upon it, theſe things were in queſtion at Whitebread's Trial, nor do I belive that Mr. Whitebread, if aſk'd at his Death, would have juſtified, and ſtood by it, that I was not here then.

L. C. J. Well, this I muſt certainly ſay, I cannot help it, but it will ſtick with me till better anſwered. I can never be ſatisfied, that if you were here ſo long, there ſhould no better Evidence be produced to prove you here.

Oates. My Lord, nor can I help your Diſſatisfaction, but I am to ſatisfy all that hear me this Day, that is a very hard Caſe that is put upon me; I have taken the moſt effectual Courſe that I could, to provide for Evidence to make my Defence; and I think, by your Lordſhip's good Leave, thoſe that I have produc'd do prove me here in Town in April and May 78. And if your Lordſhip has done with this Witneſs, I'll call another.

L. C. J. Well, go on as you will. I tell you what ſticks with me,

Oates. Pray call Mr. Philip Page.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, a little; I would aſk theſe Witneſſes a few Queſtions before they go away. You Butler, let me aſk you, pray, the firſt time you ſaw Mr. Oates at the time you ſpeak of, was it in April or May?

L. C. J. He ſwore it was the beginning of May.

Butler. To the beſt of my knowledge it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you tell firſt, that there was Mr. Oates. at that time?

Butler. I told it Mrs. Mayo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Conſider, Friend, what you ſay now, you are upon your Oath, and conſider what you ſaid at the former Trial, when you were upon your Oath too.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, I deſire my Witneſſes may be examined without Threatnings.

L. C. J. It is not a Threatning, it is an Admonition not to go beyond the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Be ſure you be in the right in what you ſay, and now I aſk you upon your Oath, when was the firſt time you ſaw Mr. Oates when he came in that Diſguiſe you ſpeak of?

Butler. I told you it was in May, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How far in May, conſider well what you ſay.

Butler. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think it was within a Week, or the firſt ten Days of May?

Butler. I cannot tell that, as well as I remember, it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you ſaw him firſt in May, who elſe, as you remember, was by?

Butler. Mrs. Mayo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And no body elſe?

Butler. Yes, one Benjamin Turbet, who is ſince dead.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But conſider your Oath, Friend, once more, and recollect yourſelf; Do you ſwear poſitively Mrs. Mayo was by, and did ſee him at the ſame time?

Butler. I ſaw her look out of the Window into the Yard, and I believe ſhe did ſee him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well then, let us examine her Evidence and your's together, and ſee how they agree.

Oates. My Lord, theſe are not Queſtions tending to ſatisfy the Jury at all, as to the Point in queſtion.

L. C. J. Are they not? methinks they are, whatſoever you think.

Oates. After ſix Years time, to aſk ſuch poor ignorant People ſuch trifling Queſtions!

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, be contented, and let the King's Counſel examine the Witneſſes.

Oates. My Lord, he ſays I was here in May, that's enough.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, I know what he ſays.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you ſhall hear Mr. Oates, how your Witneſſes agree.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Go on, Mr. Sollicitor, and do you ſit ſtill and be quiet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I would aſk him this Queſtion more; the firſt time you ſaw Oates come to Sir Richard Barker's, what Habit, pray you, was he in?

Butler. He was in a Diſguiſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, what Diſguiſe?

Butler. He had a white Hat flapping over his Ears; his Hair cut ſhort, cloſe to his Ears, and a grey ſhort Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he never a Perriwig on?

Butler. No, his Hair was cut ſhort to his Ears.

Mr. Hanſes. Was he in ſuch a Diſguiſe, that a Man might not ordinarily know him, that had known him before?

Butler. Truly, my Lord, I did not know him when he firſt came in, 'till he ſpoke to me, and aſked me, how do you, John? and then I recollected who he was, that it was Mr. Oates.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he always in the ſame Habit, when he came thither?

Butler. The next time he came he had a Cinnamon-coloured Suit, and a long black Perriwig that was curl'd down thus far, and a black Hat, with a green Ribbon and green Cuff-ſtrings about his Wriſts.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee Oates dine there?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. When was that?

Butler. After my Maſter came home from Putney.

L. C. J. Who was there beſides?

Butler. One Sir William Thurrel and Madam Thurrel.

L. C. J. How often did he dine there?

Butler. Several times.

L. C. J. Who elſe was there?

Butler. My Maſter and his Daughter.

L. C. J. And who elſe?

Butler. Mrs. Mayo.

L. C. J. What is become of your Maſter's Daughter?

Butler. I beg your pardon for that, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is ſhe, Man?

Butler. She is at home, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. What doſt thou beg my pardon for then?

Butler. My Lord, I call to mind ſhe did not dine with them.

L. C. J. Did ſhe dine at any time with him there?

Butler. Yes, I remember ſeveral times; but not then.

L. C. J. When did you ſee your Maſter's Daughter laſt?

Butler. I have not ſeen her this Quarter of a Year.

L. C. J. Where is ſhe now?

Butler. At home at Putney, my Lord, I believe.

L. C. J. And ſhe was ſeveral times there when he din'd there?

Butler. Yes, ſhe was at home.

L. C. J. Did Mrs. Mayo ſee him at Dinner there?

Butler. Yes, I believe ſhe did.

L. C. J. How often did he dine there about this time you ſpeak of?

Butler. Several times.

L. C. J. Do you think ſeven times?

Butler. I do think he might have din'd there ſeven times.

L. C. J. Did he more than ſeven times, do you think?

Butler. I cannot number how many times it was.

L. C. J. Now come in Mrs. Mayo again.

Mrs. Mayo. Here I am, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mrs. Mayo, give me leave to aſk you a Queſtion or two.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord, what you pleaſe.

L. C. J. You ſay (if I do not miſ-remember; if I do, I beg your pardon, and you'll correct me) a Week in May was the firſt time you ſaw Mr. Oates, and that was at Sir Richard Barker's.

Mrs. Mayo. I think it might be about the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Had he been in the Houſe before?

Mrs. Mayo. Not at that time that I know of, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Who told you?

Mrs. Mayo. That Coachman there, John Butler, and one Benjamin who liv'd in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Then you did not ſee him the firſt time he came; what ſay you, Butler?

Butler. She did ſee him out of the Window in the Yard.

L. C. J. Well, let that paſs then: come I'll aſk you another Queſtion upon your Oath, How often have you ſeen him dine there?

Mrs. Mayo. I ſaw him dine at that time that I ſpoke of.

L. C. J. Did not he dine there above once?

Mrs. Mayo. No, he did not.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Butler?

Butler. He did dine there ſeveral times with them.

L. C. J. Then one of you two muſt be miſtaken, I am ſure.

Oates. My Lord, if your Lordſhip would pleaſe to give me leave to ſpeak, I would ſet it right.

L. C. J. Good Sir, let them ſet themſelves right if they can, we need none of your Inſtructions.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire——

L. C. J. Why, how now; pray, Sir, be at quiet. Mrs. Mayo, pray what Habit had Oates when you ſaw him firſt?

Mrs. Mayo. He was in a grey Hat and a grey Coat.

L. C. J. Was his Hair ſhort or long?

Mrs. Mayo, He had on a kind of a ſhort Wigg.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was a Wigg?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, a kind of a brown Perriwig.

L. C. J. And he ſays his Hair was cut ſhort to his Ears.

Oates, Theſe things are very lean ſtuff to perjure a Witneſs upon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When he came the ſecond time, what Clothes had he on?

Mrs. Mayo. Afterwards he came in black Clothes and a long Perriwig.

Mr. Hanſes. What coloured Perriwig was that, a black or a white one?

Mrs. Mayo. Not a black, but a brown.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay it was long.

Mrs. Mayo. Longer than his other, yet not very long neither.

L. C. J. Here are I know not how many Contradictions in theſe Witneſſes Teſtimonies.

Oates. Truly, my Lord, I do not find in the Examination of the St. Omers Witneſſes, you were ſo ſtrict, or bore half ſo hard upon them, as you do upon my Witneſſes; what does it ſignify, my Lord, whether the Wigg were long or ſhort, black or brown?

L. C. J. We have no other way to detect Perjuries, but by theſe Circumſtances; and 'tis the Duty of a Judge to enquire into all Particulars; as in a Controverſy about Words, were they ſpoken in Latin or in Engliſh, and ſo to all Places and Poſtures of ſitting, riding, or the like; as you know the Perjury of the Elders in the Caſe of Suſanna, was by their different Teſtimony in particular Circumſtances diſcovered.

Oates. My Lord, I will aſk her but one ſhort Queſtion; by the Oath you have taken, Mrs. Mayo, to ſpeak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as you expect the face of God with Comfort in another World; did you ſee me at Sir Richard Barker's at any time in May 78; the May before the Plot was diſcovered, for that is the main Queſtion.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, I did, and I ſpeak nothing here, but what I ſpeak as in the Preſence of the Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee, Woman, doſt thou think we aſk thee any thing that we think thou doſt not ſpeak in the Preſence of the Lord? We are all of us in the Preſence of the Lord always.

Mrs. Mayo. And ſhall anſwer before him for all that we have done and ſaid, all of us, the proudeſt and the greateſt here.

L. C. J. But I would not have ſo much to anſwer for, as thou haſt in this Buſineſs, for all the World.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, we have done with her now, ſhe may go away.

L. C. J. Where does ſhe live now?

Cryer. Mrs. Mayo, where do you live now?

Mrs. Mayo. In Leaden-hall-ſtreet, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you ſee Sir Richard Barker's Daughter?

Mrs. Mayo. About a Fortnight ago.

L. C. J. Where?

Mrs. Mayo. In Barbican, in London.

L. C. J. Do you live with Sir Richard Barker now?

Mrs. Mayo. I do not live with him now.

L. C. J. Did his Daughter uſe to be at the Table at Dinner?

Mrs. Mayo. She was often in the Country, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did ſhe eat at his Table at that time when Oates was there?

Mrs. Mayo. I am not able to ſay whether ſhe did or not; ſhe uſed to be in Wales at Sir Thomas Middleton's ſometimes, and with Madam Thurrel her Aunt, who was her Mother's Siſter, and her two Daughters.

L. C. J. In Wales, doſt thou ſay, where?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, in your own Country, at one Dr. Cocket's; I know your Lordſhip, tho' your Lordſhip does not know me.

L. C. J. I am very glad of it, good Woman; but prithee did ever Sir Richard Barker dine with Mr. Oates?

Mrs. Mayo. I cannot ſay he did, he went to and fro.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witneſſes?

Oates. Cryer, call Philip Page.

Cryer. Here he is, Sir.

Oates. Pray ſwear him. (Which was done.) Pray be pleas'd to give my Lord and the Jury the beſt account you can of my being in Town. But, Mr. Page, the Queſtion that I firſt aſk you, is whether I was here in April or May, and in what Year it was that you did ſee me at your Maſter's Houſe?

L. C. J. When did you ſee Mr. Oates at your Maſter's Houſe? You mean Sir Richard Barker to be his Maſter, I ſuppoſe.

Oates. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you ſay to it?

Page. Truly, I cannot be poſitive to the Year, but to the beſt of my Remembrance it was 78.

Oates. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury ſome Circumſtances in that Year that did happen to you, that makes you believe it was 78.

Page. Sir, I'll give you the beſt Satisfaction I can to the beſt of my knowledge; he came to Sir Richard Barker's one Evening, and there he enquired for Dr. Tongue: He was in a Diſguiſe, in a light-colour'd Coat, ſomething like to Frize, but it was not Frize; the Term that they give it, I cannot ſo readily tell. He had his Hair cut ſhort, almoſt to his Ears, and he had a broad-brimm'd Hat on, and a ſmall Stick in his Hand, walking melancholy about the Hall: I happening to be the firſt body he met with, as I ſuppoſe, he aſk'd me if Dr. Tongue was within. I told him no, I had not ſeen him of a conſiderable time. He then aſk'd me where Sir Richard Barker was? I told him he was ill now at Putney. Says he, when will he be here? I told him, I could not tell.

L. C. J. Did he ſee any body there but you?

Page. That I cannot tell, my Lord; not that I know of.

L. C. J. What time of the Year was it?

Mr. At. Gen. And what Month?

Page. What Year and what Month it was, I am not able to ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. What became of him after that?

Page. He went out of our Gates then, Sir; he was walking up and down melancholy, and not finding any one, as I ſuppoſe, to anſwer him, he continu'd walking in the Patients Hall, where they uſed to wait on Sir Richard Barker, that came to diſcourſe with him about Phyſick; and upon my Anſwer to his Queſtion, he went away.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him any other time near to that time?

Page. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you uſe to wait at Table?

Page. No, I did not.

L. C. J. What Service were you then engaged in at Sir Richard Barker's?

Page. I made up the Phyſick, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you not acquaint the Coachman, nor Mrs. Mayo, nor Sir Richard Barker with it?

Page. I think Sir Richard Barker was in Town ſoon after, and I did acquaint him with it.

Oates. But can't you tell what time this is, Sir?

Page. I can ſay no other than I have ſaid; I believe it was in 78.

L. C. J. Was this in June, July, or May, or when?

Page. I cannot ſay punctually what Month it was, my Lord; but to the beſt of my Knowledge and Remembrance, it was in the Beginning of May.

Oates. Had not your Maſter a Patient at Iſlington at that time, that was ſick of a Fever?

Page. Yes, he had.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Why, would Mr. Oates have given the Patient Phyſick?

Page. No, my Lord, but 'twas about that time that the Patient was under my Maſter's Cure.

Oates

Oates. Indeed the St. Omers Men do ſwear thorough-ſtitch, but my honeſt Witneſſes are cautious, it being ſo long ago; and he that is a Miniſter of the Church of England (as they ſay) ſpeaks to a very Day, upon a much ſlighter Circumſtance. Pray call Mr. William Walker.

Cryer. Here he is.

Oates. Swear him. (Which was done.) Be pleas'd, Walker, to give my Lord to underſtand, when 'twas you ſaw me here in London in Diſguiſe, and when it was you ſwore ſix Years agone at the Old-Bailey, that you ſaw me here in London: Sir, the time in Controverſy is this: I came here to diſcover a Plot of the Papiſts againſt the King's Life and the Religion, and I ſwore———

L. C. J. You muſt not aſk Queſtions in that manner. It is propereſt for you to propoſe your Queſtions to the Court, and they will aſk the Witneſſes.

Oates. Then I will not aſk him, but propoſe it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Ay, propoſe what Queſtions you pleaſe, and if they are fair, I'll aſk them.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I would aſk Mr. Walker this Queſtion; when 'twas he met me with a Diſguiſe, in what Year and what Month?

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I have been interrogated in former Times upon this Point, ſix or ſeven Years ago; and I do confeſs I did ſee the Man, and met him between St. Martin's-Lane and Leiceſter-fields; and truly, my Lord, I think I may ſay it was my Unhappineſs to meet with him; for I have had a great deal of Trouble by it ſince, Subpœna upon Subpœna, Trouble after Trouble, that I am even weary of it; for I am an old Man. But I do ſay I did meet him at that end of the Town, between St. Martin's-Lane and Leiceſter-fields in a ſtrange Diſguiſe; he was juſt like a Vagrant, a very Raſcal, and that's true, I believe, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him before?

Mr. Walker. Yes, or I had not known him then.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I'll tell you; my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, when I was at the Old-Bailey, aſk'd me if I knew what time I ſaw him thus; ſaid I, my Lord, 'tis almoſt a Year and an Half ſince I ſaw him; and I being an old Man, little thought it worth the while to lay up the particular time in my Memory: but I'll caſt about in my Thoughts to make the beſt Conjecture I can; for now I will not be upon my Oath, it being but Conjecture.

L. C. J. But now you are upon your Oath, remember that, Man.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I am ſpeaking what I ſaid to the Court at that time.

L. C. J. Pray do not tell us an old tedious Story of the Queſtions and Anſwers in the Old-Bailey, but mind what is ſaid to you here; my Queſtion is now, what time you ſaw Oates diſguiſed between St. Martin's-Lane and Leiceſter-fields, as you ſay you did.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I cannot preſcribe the time; but I'll gueſs as near as I can with the beſt probability, and that is, upon this Circumſtance; when I went forward into Leiceſter-fields, in the Court before the Houſe, I ſaw the Elm-Trees budded forth as big as an Hazle-Nut; ſo that I did conjecture by that Token, it might be between Lady-Day and the latter end of April; that was the time as near as I could gueſs.

L. C. J. In what Year was it?

Mr. Walker. I cannot very well tell what Year it was.

L. C. J. Was it in 77 or 78?

Mr. Walker. Truly, my Lord, I never thought it worth ſo much taking notice of, to fix the particular time in my Memory.

Oates, Whether was it that Year the Plot was diſcover'd, or the Michaelmas following?

Mr. Walker. I cannot tell when the Plot was diſcover'd, or whether it be found out yet or no.

Oates. But was it the Year before you were examin'd?

Mr. Walker. To anſwer you, Mr. Oates, when it was exactly, I cannot ſay; truly I would give you the beſt Satisfaction I could, and do you as much Right as I would do myſelf. I think if that time when I was examin'd were in 77 or 78, it was near a Year and a Quarter before I did ſee you.

L. C. J. Well, what can you make of this?

Oates. 'Tis not to be ſuppoſed he is a very willing Witneſs; but yet he ſays, 'twas a Year and a Quarter before the Trial in which he was examin'd, which muſt be in April 78.

L. C. J. I would know this Queſtion of you: Were you preſent at the Old Bailey, when the five Jeſuits were tried?

Mr. Walker. I was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. Were you at any Trial but one?

Mr. Walker. I was not examin'd at any time but one.

L. C. J. Have you any more Queſtions to aſk him?

Mr. Walker. My Lord Chief Juſtice that then was, did aſk me, If I knew any of the Priſoners at the Bar; and I look'd upon all of them, and I ſaid I knew not either of them.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him whether he was not produc'd, when the St. Omers Men were produc'd, and gave his Evidence as to my being in Town at that time.

L. C. J. He hears the Queſtion, let him anſwer it.

Mr. Walker. I am not able to anſwer you, becauſe you put ſeveral Queſtions together; but this I ſay, I was never examin'd but once, though I have been ſubpœna'd often, to my great Torment and Trouble.

Oates. Did you give Evidence at that Trial, that you ſaw me in April 78?

Mr. Walker. I teſtified that I ſaw you, and by ſuch Circumſtances, it muſt be about ſuch a time as well as I could ſuggeſt; but I could not, nor cannot ſpeak poſitively.

Oates. Now, my Lord, I ſhall go on to another Part of my Evidence, and call ſome other Witneſſes; and firſt of all, I come to Mr. Serjeant Maynard, and I deſire he may be ſworn.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you aſk my Brother Maynard?

Oates. I call Mr. Serjeant Maynard to give an account of the Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons upon my Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot.

L. C. J. We will not admit that to be any Evidence at all; nor can it be by Law.

Oates. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant Maynard was one of the Committee of the Houſe of Commons that managed the Impeachment, and can give an account of the Evidence and Records that were produced at the Trial of the late Viſcount Stafford.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I know nothing truly, nor can remember any thing of it now.

L. C. J. He ſays he remembers nothing.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If Mr. Oates had told me before-hand, when he ſubpœna'd me, what time, and what particular things he would have examin'd me to, probably if I was there, I have Notes that I then took; but I can never ſwear to my Memory, for any Cauſe ſo long ago.

and

Oates. My Lord, I am very ſorry Mr. Serjeant Maynard's Age ſhould ſo impair his Memory.

L. C. J. I dare ſay, you are not more ſorry than he is for his Age.

Oates. Well, my Lord, I cannot help it: Then I deſire Mr. Blayney may be aſk'd whether he has his Notes of my Lord Stafford's Trial.

Mr. Blayney. No, my Lord, I have them not here; Mr. Oates by his Ticket of his Subpœna, deſir'd only the Notes of Ireland, Whitebread, and Langhorn's Trial.

L. C. J. But I muſt tell you, Mr. Oates, if thoſe Notes were here, they could be of no uſe to you, without the Record of my Lord Stafford's Attainder; if you aſk any thing upon another Trial, you muſt produce firſt the Record of that Trial, and then you may examine to what was given in Evidence at the Trial.

Oates. My Lord, it is of Record in the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. But that we are not to take notice of, without the Record be brought in Evidence before us: We muſt go according to the Courſe of Law in all Caſes.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I muſt betake myſelf to another Part of my Defence; and that is, to prove the frequent Attempts made to baffle the Diſcovery of this Popiſh Plot, and to ſtifle the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and to fling it upon a Proteſtant Peer.

L. C. J. But that is no Evidence neither.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Surely that is very collateral Evidence.

L. C. J. Nay, it is no Evidence at all in this Caſe; we muſt not admit of any ſuch Evidence to be given.

Oates. Good, my Lord, if this had not been true, which was ſworn by Witneſſes that had diſcover'd the Plot, why ſhould theſe Men appear to ſuborn Witneſſes (and they have been convicted of Subornation, and endeavouring) to baffle the Diſcovery, particularly as to Juſtice Godfrey's Death?

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, I muſt keep you to Evidence that is proper; we are upon our Oaths to go according to Law, and the Jury are upon their Oaths to try this Cauſe according to their Evidence; and we are bound to give them this Advice in Point of Law, that nothing muſt weigh, or have any Conſideration with them, that you offer, if it be not legal and proper Evidence. if you can ſay and prove, that any of the Witneſſes that have been produc'd this Day againſt you, have been tamper'd with; or that they have tamper'd with any of the former Evidence, that is a good Evidence againſt them; but it muſt not be by any means admitted, that the Time of the Court be taken up, or the Jury inveigled by that which has not a natural Tendency to the Buſineſs before us.

Oates. But if your Lordſhip pleaſe, this Conſult in April 78, was diſcover'd to the Houſe of Commons, among the other parts of the Diſcovery of the Treaſons of ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen: Now upon the Diſcovery of the Plot, I deſire that I might give in Proof the Procedings of the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. No, no, you cannot.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, is not the Journal of the Houſe of Commons Evidence?

L. C. J. No, we ſay it is not at all.

Oates. Is that the Opinion of the whole Court, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, undoubtedly, there is no Queſtion of it.

Oates. Is any Record of the Houſe of Lords Evidence?

L. C. J. Yes, I tell you it is, and that becauſe it is a Record; but there is a vaſt Difference between the Records of the Houſe of Lords, and the Journals of the Houſe of Commons.

Oates. The Journals have been deliver'd in as Evidence before now.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what they have been, but I am ſure they ought not to be, and whatever they have been elſewhere, they cannot be here; and I'll tell you a plain Reaſon for it, becauſe they have not ſo much Power in the Houſe of Commons, as to give an Oath: But the Houſe of Peers is a Court of Record, and therefore their Proceedings are Evidence, as the Proceedings of the King's-Bench here, or any Court of Record are.

Oates. Then, my Lord, if that part of my Evidence be over-rul'd, before I come to ſum up my Evidence, I deſire to offer this thing: My Lord, I can produce ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons in the ſeveral Parliaments, that can remember how they proceeded againſt the Lords in the Tower, and the Popiſh Traitors upon my Diſcovery, and what Credit I had in the Houſe of Commons; will that be Evidence, pray my Lord?

L. C. J. No, it will not, if you will produce any one that you told this to before the publick Diſcovery, that may be Evidence ſuch as it is, and is often allow'd; but what the Houſe of Commons did upon the Diſcovery, that's not any Evidence at all.

Oates. Then, my Lord, ſuppoſe I can prove, that I gave an early and timely Account to any of the Houſe of Lords of this Conſpiracy, and did acquaint them with the Conſult in April as Part of it; I deſire to know whether in producing any of thoſe Lords, I ſhall give that which is Evidence.

L. C. J. Call whom you will that you told any thing to, that is a ſort of Evidence, I tell you.

Oates. Then I call my Lord of Devonſhire.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord of Devonſhire.

Oates. My Lord, I beg your pardon for the trouble I put your Lordſhip to; but your Lordſhip ſees the Neceſſity of it: It is for the Juſtification of the Truth, to which I will give my Blood for a Seal if I be call'd to it.

L. C. J. My Lord of Devonſhire, your Lordſhip muſt be ſworn. [Which was done.

Oates. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to acquaint the Court and the Jury (your Lordſhip being at that time a Member of the Commons Houſe) what Account I gave there of this particular Conſult (to keep to that Point that is here in queſtion) before the Court this Day, and with what Credit I was received in all theſe Parliaments; for my Credit and the Credit of the Parliament is now in queſtion.

Earl of Devonſhire. My Lord, all I can ſay to it is this; you Mr. Oates gave a long Account of a Conſult and Conſpiracy among the Jeſuits: But I cannot remember any Particular, it is ſo long ago.

L. C. J. Every body knows this, you gave a long Narrative into the Houſe of Commons and Houſe of Lords too.

Oates. Ay, and it was a true one; but my Lord of Devonſhire, I deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed

pleaſed to give the Court and the Jury an Account, with what Credit I was received in thoſe three Parliaments your Lordſhip ſat as Member in.

Earl of Devonſhire. I remember that the two Weſtminſter Parliaments after the long Parliament, were ſo ſatisfied with the Diſcovery, that they paſſed a Vote in the Houſe of Commons ———

L. C. J. The Votes of the Houſe of Commons are no Evidence at all.

Oates. They ſhow what Opinion the Parliament was of.

L. C. J. Many Votes that have been made of late, I hope will neither be Evidence for, nor put in practice again.

Earl of Devonſhire. My Lord, it is well known to all the World the Vote I ſpeak of.

L. C. J. Nay, my Lord, I ſpeak not to your Lordſhip; for we all know thoſe Votes that I ſpeak of were not according to your Lordſhip's Mind: But we only ſay thus in general, that becauſe the Houſe of Commons cannot give an Oath, therefore what is done there, is not an Evidence here, or in any Court of Record.

Oates. But, my Lord, that I muſt urge; I do perceive that in the time of Parliament, and during the ſitting of the Houſe of Commons, Votes have been brought in as Bars to the Proceedings of Inferior Courts; and this Court does not look upon itſelf as ſuperior to the great Court of Parliament: and then if they may be brought ———

L. C. J. Which they cannot be, nor never were, nor I am ſure ought to be; nor I hope never will be as long as there is any Juſtice in the Nation.

Oates. But, my Lord, you will allow the Records of the Houſe of Lords to be Evidence?

L. C. J. Yes, I tell you, I will, and for that reaſon, becauſe they are Records out of a Court of Record: An Order of Court-Baron is no Evidence, becauſe it is no Court of Record; but a Judgment of a Court-Leet is Evidence, becauſe it is a Court of Record; and there's the difference.

Oates. My Lord, I call in the next place my Lord of Angleſey, if he be in Court.

L. C. J. No, he is not here.

Oates. Pray, will you give me leave to call my Lord Keeper then?

L. C. J. See in the Court of Chancery, whether my Lord Keeper be there.

Cryer. No, my Lord, he is not; he's gone.

Oates. He was ſuppœna'd, my Lord, and I can have Affidavit made of it: He was a material Witneſs for me.

L. C. J. I cannot help it; he is not here.

Oates. Pray call my Lord Chief Baron.

L. C. J. Go one of you into the Exchequer, and ſee if my Lord Chief Baron be there, and tell him, Mr. Oates calls for him as a Witneſs.

Oates. And Mr. Juſtice Levinz.

Cryer. The Courts are both up; and they are all gone.

Oates. They were ſubpœna'd, I am ſure, to be here; well, go and ſee, whether they are or no.

L. C. J. In the mean time do yo call ſome other Witneſſes.

Oates. I call my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones.

L. C. J. The Cryer is gone to look for the Judges.

Oates. Then I call my Lord of Clare.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord of Clare.

Earl of Clare. My Lord, I can remember nothing, it is ſo long time ago.

L. C. J. My Lord of Clare ſays, he can remember nothing.

Oates. I only call my Lord of Clare to aſk him one Queſtion, which I hope his Lordſhip will remember.

L. C. J. Swear my Lord of Clare.

[Which was done.

Well, what is it you aſk my Lord?

Oates. My Lord of Clare, the Queſtion I would aſk your Lordſhip is, with what Credit I was received in the Houſe of Lords upon my Diſcovery; and that you will, to the beſt of your Memory, give my Lord and the Jury an Account, how the Houſe of Peers proceeded upon my Evidence?

Earl of Clare. Truly, my Lord, I cannot give any Account, it is of ſo long ſtanding.

Oates. It is a great while ago, my Lord, and therefore it is hard meaſure, that I muſt be brought to this Trial ſo long after.

L. C. J. If it be a long time, we cannot help it: We cannot force People to proſecute ſooner than they will do.

Oates. I deſire Mr. Baron Gregory may be called.

L. C. J. He is not here, but ſee and call my Brother Gregory; I hear they are all together in the Treaſury.

Oates. Then I call Mr. Williams, that was Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. Here is Mr. Williams. [He was ſworn.

Oates. I deſire, Mr. Williams, becauſe you were then Speaker of the Commons Houſe of Parliament, you would be pleas'd to tell what you remember concerning the Credit I received in that Parliament, in which you were Speaker, upon the Diſcovery I made of the Popiſh Plot; and particularly as to the Conſult of Jeſuits to kill the late King in the Month of April 78.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, my Memory is never very good; but eſpecially in a Caſe that is at ſuch a diſtance of time, and which conſiſts of ſo many Particulars as this, I mean Mr. Oates's Diſcovery. But this, my Lord, I do remember; he was examin'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, and gave a long account: But it is more than any Man can do, to tell every Particular that is ſaid in that Houſe.

L. C. J. Was he upon his Oath, Mr. Williams, at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, he was as other Men are, that are examined in the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. We all know it could not be upon Oath, they have not Power to give an Oath.

Mr. Williams. What Reputation he was of, I cannot ſay ſo well, as what their Proceedings did teſtify.

L. C. J. Nor in caſe they did believe him never ſo much, is it any thing to this Queſtion; which is, whether he ſwore true or falſe at Ireland's Trial.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, when a Perſon is brought to the Bar, there to be a Witneſs in any Cauſe, every body is ſilent, and the Witneſs is heard what he has to ſay; and ſo was Mr. Oates. When he had done, he withdrew; but what the Opinion of the Houſe was upon it, I muſt ſubmit to their Votes and Reſolutions.

L. C. J. Which, you know, Mr. Williams, are no Evidence.

Mr. Williams. That I muſt ſubmit to the Court.

Oates. I deſire my Lord of Clare would be pleaſed to tell, if he remembers, what Credit the Houſe of Lords gave me upon my Diſcovery.

Earl

Earl of Clare. My Lord, I do not well hear Mr. Oates's Queſtion.

Oates. My Lord, my Queſtion is this, When I was brought to the Bar of the Lords Houſe, whether I did not receive the Thanks of the Lords Houſe for my Diſcovery?

Earl of Clare. Truly, Sir, at the beginning of the Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, I was not in Town, nor in the Houſe.

L. C. J. But now, Mr. Oates, I hope you are ſatisfied by the Anſwer that is given by your own Witneſs, that what is done in the Houſe of Commons, is no Evidence; and I would have you remember that is the Reaſon of it, becauſe they are no Court of Record, and becauſe they cannot ſo much as give an Oath.

Oates. My Lord, I ſee my Lord of Huntingdon is here; and though I did not ſubpœna his Lordſhip, nor deſign'd to have troubled him, yet being here, I deſire his Lordſhip would give an account what Credit I had in the Houſe of Lords upon my Diſcovery.

L. C. J. Swear my Lord of Huntingdon.

[Which was done.

Earl of Huntingdon. I do believe, my Lord, Mr. Oates's Diſcovery found a good reception in the Houſe of Lords; but it was grounded upon the Opinion, that what he ſaid was true, and that he was an honeſt Man; for ſo the Houſe then accounted him to be: and upon this it was their Lordſhips gave credit to his Teſtimony. And indeed had the matter been true, it was of high importance to have it throughly examin'd: But ſince that time it being apparent there were ſo many and great Contradictions, Falſities, and Perjuries in his Evidence, upon which ſo much innocent Blood hath been ſhed; I believe a great many Perſons who were concern'd in the Trials of thoſe unfortunate Men, are heartily afflicted and ſorry for their ſhare in it: And I do believe moſt of the Houſe of Peers have altered their Opinion, as to this Man's Credit; and look upon his Evidence as I do, to be very falſe.

L. C. J. Do you hear him, Mr. Oates?

Oates. No, my Lord, I do not very well.

L. C. J. Then, my Lord of Huntingdon, turn your Face to the Jury; and ſay what you ſaid to us over again.

[Which his Lordſhip did to the ſame effect.

Oates. Very well, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. There's your Credit with the Houſe of Lords, Mr. Oates.

Oates. My Lord, I call'd you in to anſwer my Queſtion, as to ſomewhat that is paſt, and not to give your Judgment how you are inclined to believe now.

L. C. J. Nay, but with your Favour, it was to declare what Opinion the Houſe of Lords had of you; and he ſays very well, and that this is in truth the ſame Anſwer that muſt be given, for the Judges and the Juries that tried the People upon your Evidence. Says my Lord of Huntington, at firſt truly I did believe Mr. Oates did ſwear true, and he had Credit with me, and ſo he had with others; but now upon further Examination into things, and in proceſs of time Diſcoveries have been made of the Truth, and that what he ſwore is falſe; ſo that now I believe in my Conſcience he is actually forſworn, and has drawn innocent Blood upon the Nation; and no body will believe a Word he ſays.

Oates. Well, my Lord, I have done with my Lord of Huntingdon.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. And he has done with you, as I perceive.

L. C. J. Yes, truly, methinks ye ſhake hands, and part very fairly.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. There's my Lord Chief Baron; what ſay you to him, Mr. Oates?

L. C. J. Is my Lord Chief Baron ſworn?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord, he is.

L. C. J. Then what do you aſk him?

Oates. My Lord, I call'd your Lordſhip, becauſe your Lordſhip ſat as a Commiſſioner of Oyer and Terminer in the Old-Baily, at Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Trials; and that which I call your Lordſhip for, is to give an acccount to my Lord and the Jury, of the Satisfaction your Lordſhip received concerning the Fulneſs and Fairneſs of the Evidence then deliver'd by me in thoſe Trials.

L. C. Baron. My Lord, I cannot charge my Memory with it.

L. C. J. He ſays he cannot remember.

L. C. Baron. No, not in particular; but in general I remember there were a great many Perſons that gave Evidence in thoſe Trials on the one ſide and the other: There were a great many Perſons that came from St. Omers, that gave Evidence there of Mr. Oates being at St. Omers, when he ſaid he was in Town.

Oates. And what Credit were they of, at that time, pray, my Lord?

L. C. Baron. I think they were Perſons of very good Credit; they were Gentlemen of good Families many of them.

Oates. Did the Jury believe them at that time?

L. C. Baron. I cannot tell what the Jury did.

L. C. J. Nor is it any matter at all what they did: But I would aſk you, my Lord, but one Queſtion: Have you heard this Evidence that has been given here to-day?

L. C. Baron. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. If you had, I would then have aſked you, whether you believe him now or not?

L. C. Baron. Truly, my Lord, I never had any great Faith in him, I do aſſure you, as to my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You hear what he ſays, Mr. Oates; you had never any great Credit with him.

Oates. My Lord, I am not at all concerned at this; I value my ſelf more upon my own Innocency and Integrity, than any Man's good or bad Opinion whatſoever.

L. C. J. Ay, your Innocency is very great!

Oates. Then, my Lord, I will conclude my Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, before Mr. Oates goes to ſum up his Evidece, we have ſome other Evidence to give.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Oates? Will you call any other Witneſſes to this Point?

Oates. My Lord, if they bring any other Evidence, I hope I may have my turn to anſwer it.

L. C. J. Ay, truly, if they bring any new Evidence that you have not applied to already, God forbid that you ſhould not be heard; but if it only gives an Anſwer to the Evidence that has been given, then you muſt not retort on them; for they are to have the laſt Word: but it is not fit withal, that you ſhould be denied any thing that is neceſſary or really of advantage to you.

Oates. If they offer any new Evidence to my Diſreputation, the Queſtion is, whether I may have a time allotted me to make my Defence againſt that Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, in God's name, by all means.

Mr. At. Gen. This is the uſual Method of Proceedings; but I would know if Mr. Oates has any more Witneſſes to examine to this Point, that he has examin'd to already?

Oates. My Lord, I think I have no further Evidence at preſent, till I hear what they further ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Then may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Oates. I hope when your Lordſhip ſums up the Evidence, you'll remember what has been ſaid by the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. You may aſſure your ſelf, I will remember whatſoever has been ſaid on the one ſide and t'other, as near as I can: The Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Underſtanding, and I ſee they take Notes, and I'll give them all the Aſſiſtance I can.

Oates. Truly, my Lord, I have ſome more Witneſſes to the ſame purpoſe, If your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare time to hear them.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, we ſit here to hear the Witneſſes, call whom you will.

Oates. Is my Lord Lovelace here?

L. C. J. I cannot tell, I do not ſee him here; but you did call my Brother Gregory, there he is, what ſay you to him?

Oates. Mr. Baron Gregory was Speaker of the Houſe of Commons in one of the Weſtminſter Parliaments.

L. C. J. Swear my Brother Gregory.

[Which was done.

Oates. I deſire your Honour would be pleaſed to give this Court and the Jury an account, you being Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, what Credit I received there in that Houſe upon my Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot?

Mr. Bar. Gregory. My Lord, that is a pretty general Queſtion, it is not poſſible for me to remember the Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons ſo long ago.

L. C. J. But, Brother, I tell you what he means by it: He would have you to anſwer this Queſtion, whether he was of good Credit in the Houſe of Commons or not?

Mr. Bar. Gregory. I know not what Anſwer to make about the Credit he there had; any Member of the Houſe of Commons may give as good and better an account in that matter than I; and truly I do not remember that Mr. Oates was before the Bar of the Houſe when I was Speaker: I believe it was before I was Speaker, that he was examined at the Commons Bar.

L. C. J. Well, he can remember nothing of it.

Oates. Is my Lord Lovelace there?

Cryer. He has been called, but he is not here.

Oates. Call my Lord of Stamford.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Call Sir Francis Winnington.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Call Silas Titus, Eſq;

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Call Sir George Treby.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Call Sir Francis Pemberton: Theſe have been all ſubpœna'd.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Is my Lord Biſhop of London?

L. C. J. Here is my Lord Biſhop of London, pray ſwear my Lord Biſhop of London. [Which was done.

Oates. I beg your Lordſhip, if you can, would give an account of your Remembrance in this matter: Your Lordſhip was often in Committees of the Houſe of Peers about this Buſineſs, and from firſt to laſt you were in the Committee for further Examination of the Popiſh Plot; and you were not only of the Committee, but you alſo ſat as a Baron in the Houſe. I humbly beg your Lordſhip would pleaſe to tell, as far as you can charge your Memory, what Reputation I had in the Houſe of Lords, where I was upon my Oath; and in particular, whether your Lordſhip remembers that I received the Thanks of the Houſe for the Service I had done for the King and Kingdom in the Diſcovery.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. It is a long Queſtion, my Lord.

L. B. of London. It is ſo, my Lord; but my Anſwer will be very ſhort: For it is a very little I can remember after ſo great a diſtance of Time, and the Tranſactions have been publick; nor can I acquaint the Court with any thing, but what is known already; and that is this, I remember that the Plot was diſcovered by him, and his Diſcovery was receiv'd as Evidence at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords; and believ'd, and the Thanks of the Houſe were given him at that time for it.

L. C. J. There's Sir George Treby; what do you aſk him? But firſt let him be ſworn.

[Which was done.

Oates. Pray be pleas'd to aſk Sir George Treby, who was Chair-man of the Committee of Secrecy, and was Manager in the Trial of the Lord Viſcount Stafford, that he will be pleas'd to tell what Credit I had in both Houſes upon that Trial.

L. C. J. I told you before, you muſt urge nothing of that Trial, unleſs you have the Record here.

Oates. Then my Lord, I deſire Sir George may give an account what he knows of the Correſpondencies between Mr. Coleman and the See of Rome?

L. C. J. No, that will not be any Evidence at all in this Caſe; for that is not at all here in queſtion.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I deſire Sir George Treby may ſpeak what he knows of my Credit in the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. Ay, what ſays he to that?

Sir George Treby. My Lord, I can anſwer for nothing but my own Judgment; I cannot tell what Credit he had with any particular Member of the Houſe of Commons; I do remember indeed, he was there ſeveral times at the Bar, but not upon Oath, but as others uſually are there: and concerning the Diſcovery, there was a Vote all the Kingdom knows of, that they were ſatisfied there was a Plot, but whether that Vote was grounded altogether upon his Evidence, or how far upon his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what any Man thought of it beſides my ſelf.

Oates. I deſire Mr. Serj. Pemberton might be call'd again.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Then pray call Sir William Dolben.

Cryer. He is not here neither.

Oates. Then I call Sir Edward Atkins.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Call Mr. Richard White.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. My Lord, theſe were all ſubpœna'd, but they will not come; they are frighted away.

L. C. J. We know nothing of that, they may come if they will.

Oates. Call Mr. Thomas Cox.

Cryer. He is not here; but here is Mr. White.

Oates. I pray he may be ſworn. [Which was done.] I deſire to know of him, whether he were not a Jury-man upon the Trials of Ireland and Whitebread?

Mr. White. No, I was not.

Oates. Then I am miſtaken; I beg your pardon for this trouble.

L. C. J. Well, there's my Brother Dolben come now. What ſay you to him? Swear my Brother Dolben. [Which was done.

Oates. May it pleaſe you, Sir William Dolben, you ſat as a Judge upon the Trials of Mr. Ireland, Mr. Whitebread, and Mr. Langhorn; and I call you, Sir William Dolben, to give an account to my Lord and the Jury, what Credit my Evidence had at thoſe Trials, and how the Jury was ſatisfied with it.

L. C. J. There is the Verdict, Man, that finds the Perſons you ſpeak of, guilty.

Oates. If that be Evidence enough, I am ſatisfied, my Lord.

L. C. J. Is not that better than his Opinion to ſhew how the Jury was ſatisfied? Ay, certainly; better than the Opinion of all the Twelve Judges for that point; they would not have convicted them except they had been ſatisfied with the Evidence.

Sir William Dolben. Have you done with me, Sir?

Oates. I have, Sir.

L. C. J. Have you called all your Witneſſes, or will you call any more?

Oates. No, my Lord, I will call no more at preſent.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we'll go on with another part of our Evidence. Gentlemen, you ſee Dr. Oates, to ſupport his Credit, has given two ſorts of Evidence; the one is, ſome Records of Trials at the Old-Bailey, wherein he had the good hap to be believed; the other is, ſeveral noble Perſons, and other Gentlemen, as to the Credit he has had given to his Evidence before. What they have ſaid I ſhall not meddle with at all at this time, but leave the Obſervations that are to be made thereupon, till we come to ſum up the Evidence for the King. But as to the firſt part of his Evidence, that is, as to the Records produced, and the Verdicts therein given, and the Opinions of the Judges, we have this to ſay in point of Evidence as an Anſwer. Firſt, we ſhall produce to you ſeveral Records, wherein he has not been believed; at that of Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Caſtlemain: and not only ſo, but we ſhall actually prove that he was perjur'd in them; that what he ſwore againſt them was utterly falſe, and you will hear this was not the firſt time that he had ſworn falſe; for in an Accuſation that he gave at a Trial at Haſtings, we ſhall prove he ſwore Buggery upon a Perſon, which was prov'd falſe.

Oates. Can you produce any ſuch Record, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, we ſhall.

L. C. J. Do not interrupt the King's Counſel; let them go on; you ſhall be heard quietly in your time.

Mr. Hanſes. Nay, Mr. Oates need not be ſo haſty as to aſk for the Records, by degrees we ſhall produce Records enough againſt him.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall prove alſo by the Journals of the Lords Houſe, that he did forſwear himſelf; for after he had there made a long Narrative of the Plot, being aſk'd whether he had any more to accuſe, than thoſe Perſons that he had nam'd, and this upon his Oath; he did there ſwear that he had no more Perſons to accuſe.

Oates. That were Members of that Houſe, it was.

L. C. J. Sir, you muſt be quiet till they have done.

Mr. At. Gen. But ſoon after he bethought himſelf, and accuſes the Queen and his Royal Highneſs the Duke, our now preſent Sovereign, of being in the Plot.

Oates. What Plot did I accuſe them of?

L. C. J. Nay, you muſt ſit down and be quiet; how now, will you not let the King's Counſel ſpeak? You were heard quietly, and ſo ſhall they be too.

Oates. Well, my Lord, I will be quiet.

Mr. At. Gen. Theſe things, my Lord, will ſhew what Credit he was of at that time. Another thing we ſay to theſe Records, is this; There were two other Witneſſes, Mr. Clay and Mr. Smith, beſides thoſe that were now produced, which were the Home-Witneſſes, that did poſitively ſwear, that in April and May 78, Oates was here in Town; he did then indeed make uſe of thoſe other canting Witneſſes, for I cannot call them any otherwiſe, that beat ſo about the buſh, and ſpeak of Uncertainties, and contradict one another; but thoſe that I name, Clay and Smith, were Home-Witneſſes; and there lay the Credit of his being in town, when the Witneſſes which came from St. Omers, ſay he was beyond Sea.

Oates. My Lord, I beg I may aſk one thing; whether my Lord Biſhop of London be there ſtill?

L. C. J. No, my Lord of London is gone.

Oates. I am ſorry for it, becauſe he could have given an account of this Smith, for he knows him.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, you ſhould have deſired him to ſtay while he was here; go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. I will, my Lord; and this which I am going to ſay, as an Anſwer to his Evidence, will give a full Anſwer to that other Objection which he made; which was, what was the Reaſon, when he had given ſuch an Evidence ſo long ago, it ſhould be delay'd ſo long e'er it was proſecuted. I'll give your Lordſhip a Reaſon, and a ſatisfactory one: Till thoſe Diſcoveries were made that have lately been made, the Evidence theſe Witneſſes gave, carried a Probability of Truth in it; and Sir Richard Barker himſelf added his Teſtimony to it, tho' he does not think fit now to come and confirm it: I ſay hitherto it had ſome ſemblance of Truth, and ſo did ballance the other Teſtimony of them that came from St. Omers. But when we had diſcover'd that it could be teſtified by twenty Perſons, that had not been at any of the former Trials, that he was certainly all that time at St. Omers; and when we had diſcover'd the Tampering and Practices of Mr. Oates, in ſuborning theſe Witneſſes to ſwear as corruptly as he ſwore at firſt, which we ſhall ſhew you palpably to be true that he did ſo; that gave us Encouragement to go on to make Enquiry into the Matter: but this was not diſcover'd till half a Year ago, or thereabouts. Now as to one of thoſe Witneſſes, that is Mr. Clay, the Caſe ſtands thus: indeed I expected he would have brought the ſame Witneſſes he did then, for I preſume they are all about Town, but he has not thought fit to do that: This Clay was then a Prieſt, and a Priſoner in the Gate-Houſe for that very reaſon, as being accuſed for being a Romiſh Prieſt. While he was there a Priſoner, Mr. Oates comes and threatens him, and ſollicits him to ſwear that he was here in town in May 78, that he might be provided with Proof againſt what the Boys of St. Omers (as he call'd them) would come to teſtify; and threaten'd him, if he did not, he would hang him, for he could ſwear him to be a Prieſt; and this was about three or four Days before the Trial of the five Jeſuits: At length they came to a Bargain and Agreement, as you will hear, that he ſhould come and ſwear this; when Mr. Oates cannot pretend that the Evidence of Clay was known at all by any of the Committees that were concern'd in the Management of his Diſcovery; or that he was ſo much as thought of for a Witneſs. But we ſhall prove how it came to paſs; and I believe, if Mr. Oates would call him now, (as I do not queſtion he knows where to have him) Clay would not be ſo hardy now, as to affirm his former Teſtimony. Then as for Mr. Smith, his Caſe ſtands thus: Mr. Oates had ſworn him into the Plot, as you will find in his Narrative that he gave in upon Oath, which is upon Record, and enter'd in the Journal of the Lords Houſe. He was a Schoolmaſter in Iſlington, and Oates ſwears High-Treaſon againſt him, and thereupon Warrants went out to take this Smith, and Mr. Oates was very violent in the purſuit of him but two or three Days before the Trial; and then, when all theſe Witneſſes from St. Omers were come, as he knew very well, he was in ſome doubt his Deſign would have fail'd, and then does he prevail with Smith to become a Witneſs for him. And 'tis evident he did tamper with him, for that which was done by him at that time: For now he gives him under his Hand (to ſhew the Impudence, as well as Villany of the Man, as it has been evident enough in all his Carriage) a Paper that ſhould give him authority to go free from all Proceſs and Arreſts upon any Warrants; and this Protection under Mr. Oates's Hand, is directed to all the King's Officers, thereby commanding them to take notice that this Mr. Smith, whom before he had accus'd of being in the Plot, was an honeſt Man, and employed in great Service for the King at that time. This Paper, when produc'd, will ſhew the Time when it was made; and then it will appear, that two Days after Smith comes and ſwears that he din'd with him the firſt Monday in May 78. This was what Smith ſwore then; and upon my mentioning of this Practice, if he have any ſhame in him, it muſt put him in ſome confuſion; for we are prepared to prove by undeniable Teſtimony, that Mr. Oates did not dine with this Mr. Smith that Day; we ſhall prove it by the whole Family: but the firſt time ever Mr. Oates came there, was in July after, when he came into England from St. Omers, which theſe Witneſſes ſay, was the latter end of June. Then it was that he was with Mr. Smith, and came to his Houſe, and not before. And we ſhall prove by ſeveral Witneſſes, that upon the Queſtion being aſked of Mr. Smith, how he came to teſtify ſuch a thing, his Anſwer was, I muſt have died for it, if I had not done it; 'twas only a Miſtake in point of time: But he threatened me, and ſo did ſome others too, that he wou'd have me hang'd for being in the Plot, if I did not comply with him, and ſwear this for him. My Lord, I ſhall offer this Evidence that I have open'd, and then I hope we ſhall ſatisfy the Jury, and all that hear his Trial, that he is one of the moſt notorious Villains that lives upon the Earth; to be ſure that ever was known in this Kingdom.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt, my Lord, we'll produce our Records: Where is the Record of Sir George Wakeman?

Mr. Swift. This is the Record of Sir George Wakeman, and this is a true Copy; I examin'd it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir Samuel Aſtry, read a Word or two of it.

Cl. of Cr. Here is an Indictment againſt Sir George Wakeman for High-Treaſon; he pleaded not guilty; and here is an Acquittal by the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. He being acquitted, I deſire he may be ſworn. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir George Wakeman, was Mr. Oates ſworn againſt you at the Trial?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, Mr. Sollicitor, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember what he ſwore againſt you at that Trial?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, I do, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that true that he ſwore, by the Oath you have taken?

Oates. Is that a fair Queſtion? I deſire the Opinion of the Court?

L. C. J. Ay! why not?

Oates. He was legally accus'd; he cannot ſwear himſelf off.

L. C. J. But he is legally acquitted too; we have a Record for that here.

Oates. Ay, my Lord, he was acquitted; 'tis well known how.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come, Sir, was that he ſwore againſt you at your Trial, true?

L. C. J. What do you ſay, Sir?

Sir George Wakeman. 'Twas falſe upon my Oath, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Particulars did he ſwear againſt you?

Mr. Pollexfen. Ay, pray tell the Particulars as near as you can what he ſwore againſt you.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will give a little Account what he ſwore againſt me before the King and Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That will not do, Sir George Wakeman; we do not aſk you that.

L. C. J. No, it muſt be only the Evidence that was given upon this Acquittal, which is the Record here produc'd before us; what did he ſwear againſt you then?

Sir George Wakeman. He ſwore at that Trial, as near as I can remember, that I undertook for a certain Sum of Money, 15000 l. as I think it was, to poiſon the King, and I was to do it by the means of the Queen. I was to provide this Poiſon for her, and ſhe was to give it to the King. This he ſwore at my Trial, which God forbid it ſhould be true; nothing can be more falſe?

L. C. J. I aſk you by the Oath you have taken, you are now acquitted, and ſo in no danger; and being upon your Oath, ought to ſpeak the Truth, without Malice or Ill-will to him that did accuſe you; was that he ſwore true or falſe?

Sir George Wakeman. Falſe, falſe, upon my Oath; I ſpeak it without any Malice againſt the Man in the World.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear my Lord Caſtlemain. [Which was done.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, I'll be bound to make it appear, that all he ſwore againſt me was falſe.

Mr. At. Gen. And ſo was it he ſwore againſt my Lord Caſtlemain, and others that were acquitted at the ſame time with Sir George Wakeman.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt, read the Record of my Lord Caſtlemain's Acquittal.

Cl. of Cr. Here is the very Record itſelf: it was in this Court, my Lord Caſtlemain was indicted of High-Treaſon, and tried and acquitted.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Caſtlemain, pray what did Oates ſwear againſt you at your Trial? And pray tell the Court, whether that was true or falſe.

Earl of Caſtlemain. My Lord, as near as I remember, Mr. Oates did ſwear at my Trial, that he met me in Lincolns-Inn-Fields, and that he went with me ſomewhere to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber in Duke-ſtreet in Covent-Garden, where he ſaid I did talk a great deal of Treaſon, and a great Diſcourſe of that kind he ſaid there was, and he ſwore that I was in ſeveral Cabals in relation to the King's Death. I was afterwards acquitted by the Jury that tried me, as appears by the Record; and here I do declare, as in the Preſence of God, and with all the Imprecations of Divine Vengeance to fall upon me, if I ſpeak any thing but the Truth, that not only that which he ſwore, was falſe, but that I never had any Thoughts in my Heart, much leſs did ever declare in my Words, of any injury or hurt againſt the late King. And beſides, that I never ſaw the Face of Oates in my Life, till after I was put in Priſon upon his Accuſation of me.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know what Religion that noble Lord is of?

Earl of Caſtlemain. I am a Roman Cartholick, my Lord.

L. C. J. We all know what Religion my Lord is of, you need not aſk that Queſtion.

Oates. That's not the Point, my Lord, I muſt have it declared in Evidence.

L. C. J. I wonder to ſee any Man that has the Face of a Man, carry it at this rate, when he hears ſuch an Evidence brought in againſt him.

Oates. I wonder that Mr. Attorney will offer to bring this Evidence, Men that muſt have Malice againſt me———

L. C. J. Hold your tongue; you are a ſhame to Mankind.

Oates. No, my Lord, I am neither a ſhame to my ſelf or Mankind: What I have ſworn is true, and I will ſtand by it to my laſt Breath, and ſeal it if occaſion be with my Blood.

L. C. J. 'Twere pity but that it were to be done by thy Blood.

Oates. Ah! Ah! my Lord, I know why all this is, and ſo may the World very eaſily too.

L. C J. Such Impudence and Impiety was never known in any Chriſtian Nation.

Oates. But this will not do the Work to make the Plot to be diſbelieved; Things are not to be done by great Noiſes: I will ſtand by the Truth.

L. C. J. Can you think to out-face ſuch Evidence as this with your Impudence?

Oates. But I hope you'll give me leave to make my Defence.

L. C. J. Then carry yourſelf as becomes you in the Court.

Oates. My Lord, I will do ſo.

L. C. J. If you do not, we know how to make you do it, you ſhall not think to domineer here.

Oates. My Lord, I hope I do behave myſelf as I ought.

L. C. J. No, you do not.

Oates. Ill Language may provoke any Man's Paſſion, my Lord.

L. C. J. Keep yourſelf within Bounds, and you ſhall be heard; but we'll ſuffer none of your Extravagancies.

Oates. My Lord, If I had been aware of this, I could have produc'd Evidence that would have ſupported my Teſtimony in theſe Matters.

L. C. J. Go on with your Proofs, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Attorney. We will do ſo, my Lord.

Earl of Caſtlemain. Have you done with me, Sir?

L. C. J. Have you any other Queſtions to aſk my Lord Caſtlemain?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then your Lordſhip may ſit down again where you were.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we ſhall ſhow the Lords Journal where it is recorded, that he ſwore he could accuſe no body elſe but thoſe that he nam'd, and then we ſhall give an Account, that ſoon after, he accus'd our preſent Sovereign, and the Queen Dowager.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is the Clerk of the Parliament?

Mr. Swift. Here he is; Mr. Walker?

Mr. At. Gen. Swear him. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Walker, is that the Journal of the Houſe of Lords?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver it in to the Clerk, and let him read it.

L. C. J. Then you muſt direct to the time, or elſe it will be to no purpoſe.

Mr. Swift. Sir Samuel Aſtry, pray turn to Friday the 19th of November 78.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Die veneris decimo nono Novembris 1678. Titus Oates being call'd in at the Bar, deſired to be heard a few Words before he was ſworn———

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I doubt this will not be Evidence: It is only a Paper of what he ſaid, taken before the Lords; but now whether that was upon Oath or no, is the Queſtion: nay it appears it was not upon Oath; but ſays, it was before he was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I deſire it may be read all out.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Titus Oates being called in at the Bar, deſired he might be heard a few Words before he was ſworn to ſpeak to the main Buſineſs: which being granted to him, he complained of the Reſtraint he is under, and being debarr'd of the liberty of his Friends coming to him, and of converſing with any body in private, and that no Engliſhman ought to be reſtrained, unleſs accuſed by one or more Witneſſes; and pray'd that the Reſtraint might be taken off, that he might be enabled to give his Evidence more cheerfully, and that the Houſe would be pleaſed to addreſs the King for that purpoſe, and that his Pardon may be renewed, becauſe he is under Miſpriſon of Treaſon. To which the Lord Chancellor told him, that the Houſe would take his Condition into Conſideration: And then being ſworn, he was told by the Lord Chancellor, that the Lords have received an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons in part upon Evidence by him given there, and that the Houſe expects he ſhould give an Account what that is, which has begot ſuch Aſtoniſhment in the Houſe of Commons as is expreſſed in the Addreſs. Upon which, Titus Oates ſaid, that in July laſt, he ſaw a letter from Sir George Wakeman———

L. C. J. Is this Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the uſe we make of it is to prove that he did accuſe the Queen.

L. C. J. What is the Accuſation of the Queen to this Purpoſe?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſay he had ſworn ſeveral Days before, that he had no other Perſons to accuſe.

L. C. J. You ſhould produce that firſt, that he ſwore ſo.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſhould ſo, I think, and I thought it had been ſo done.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence, for it is not upon Oath; it does not ſay ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, it does, my Lord; but we will go on in order.

L. C. J. Come then, let us ſee what was ſworn about his having no more Perſons to accuſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Aſtry, look the 30*th* of October 78.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Die Mercurii 30 Octobris 1678, Titus Oates, being called in, was ſworn at the Bar, and required to anſwer to what he is now called in for, concerning his Diſcourſe with the Lord Anneſley laſt Night, about the Duke of York.

L. C. J. I doubt this will not be Evidence neither; for we are now ſpeaking only about what ſhall be Evidence: We are not now meddling with the methods of the Houſe in their Examination of Witneſſes, but what is Evidence here; ſuppoſe an Oath be adminiſtred to me for a particular purpoſe in the Houſe of Lords, that I ſhall anſwer to what is aſked me concerning a Diſcourſe that I had with a third Perſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Aſtry look the next Day; for there, my Lord, he is examin'd upon the general.

Sir Samuel Aſtry Reads. Die Jovis 31 Octobris 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. But firſt read the latter end of the former Day's Proceedings, beginning at thoſe Words, Upon Conſideration.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Upon conſideration of what Titus Oates had ſaid, he was call'd in again, and told by the Lord Chancellor that the Houſe has directed he ſhall be heard again to-morrow at Nine a-clock, and the Lords do expect that by the Oath he hath now taken, he ſhould go thorow with what he hath to ſay, and therefore he ſhould prepare himſelf to deliver the whole Truth of what he knows concerning the Deſign againſt the King's Perſon, and the Government of this Kingdom.

L. C. J. But ſtill, Mr. Attorney, we are but where we were; for ſuppoſing upon my Examination upon Oath given me in the Houſe of Lords to a particular purpoſe, that my Lord Chancellor ſhould tell me here, my Lords intend to-morrow, that you by virtue of the Oath now given you, ſhould come and give them Satisfaction as to other Queſtions, I doubt that would not be Evidence in Weſtminſter-Hall: Let us not ſtretch any thing further than it ſhould be upon any account whatſoever. For ſuppoſe I give you an Oath to make true Anſwer to ſuch Queſtions as I ſhall aſk you concerning what was ſaid at the Seſſions-houſe at ſuch a Trial, and then I come after and aſk you upon the Oath you have taken, what do you ſay concerning ſuch a Buſineſs ſeven Years ago, would that be Evidence?

Mr. At. Gen. With Submiſſion, my Lord, if a Man be told he is upon his Oath, to ſay all he knows of ſuch a Deſign, what he ſays upon that Oath, is Evidence.

L. C. J. You ſay very true, Mr. Attorney, if I give him a general Oath; but what he ſays concerning any other Matter than that particular Thing which he was ſworn to give an Account of, can never be Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think we need not labour in ſuch a thing as this is.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Sollicitor, I think it is no Evidence at all; if you can prove he was ſworn to his whole Narrative, and can bring any thing out of that, you ſay ſomething.

At. Gen. We deſire that my Lord of Berkeley may be ſworn. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you aſk him?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account, whether Mr. Oates was not ſworn to his Narrative, and delivered in his Evidence at your Lordſhips Bar upon Oath.

L. C. J. My Lord of Berkeley, let me aſk you this Queſtion, Was every thing that he gave an Account of at the Bar of the Lords Houſe, given in upon Oath?

Earl of Berkeley. I cannot remember that, my Lord.

L. C. J. It is impoſſible that he ſhould.

Earl of Berkeley. All I can teſtify is but what I anſwered to the Queſtion which was aſked me at my Lord Stafford's Trial.

L. C. J. But that is not material now, my Lord, becauſe the Record of that Trial is not here.

Earl of Berkeley. The ſame thing is entered here particularly.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire it may be read again.

L. C J. Read it again with all my heart.

L. C. J. This is a particular Oath to a particular purpoſe; and ſhall I help it by intendment, that he was afterwards ſworn to the general Matter? No, I will not: Suppoſe any thing had happened afterwards that it ſhould have been thought fit to proſecute Oates; could the Man have been convicted of Perjury for this? Certainly he never could.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, my Lord, we ſubmit it to you; but we will now go on to prove that which Mr. Attorney opened, that Oates did ſuborn theſe Witneſſes to ſwear what they did ſwear: You have had one part of the Evidence that was then given; now we ſhall prove that Cley was ſworn at Whitebread's Trial, and what he did there teſtify about Oates's being in Town.

Oates. I own it, he was ſwore then.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you own that you ſuborned him?

Oates. No, I think not, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will prove that you did tamper with him, and by threatnings prevail'd with him to ſwear for you.

Mr At. Gen. Nay, we will prove that he was miſtaken in what he did ſwear a whole Year. Pray call Mr. Charles Howard.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire I may have leave to aſk the Court a Queſtion, and I beg the Opinion of the Court in it, whether a Popiſh Recuſant convicted, may be a good Witneſs?

L. C. J. We are not bound to anſwer your Queſtion; for we ſee no ground why you ſhould aſk it: If you have any occaſion to object againſt any Witneſs, and can produce any Record againſt him; then we will tell you more of our Minds.

Oates. Pray then let me aſk you another Queſtion, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee do not trouble us with thy Queſtions, let them go on with their Evidence.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether a Man confeſſing himſelf a Popiſh Prieſt———

L. C. J. We do not ſit to anſwer every idle Queſtion; 'tis nothing at all to the purpoſe: When you aſk a proper Queſtion, we will anſwer it.

Oates. Yes, it is my Lord, and you are of my Counſel in Matter of Law.

L. C. J. I am not ſo.

Oates. Yes, my Lord, the Court is always of Counſel for the Priſoner.

L. C. J. That were well, indeed, if we were bound to give Advice in every Caſe, where a Man is proſecuted at the King's Suit: indeed in thoſe Caſes where a Man can have no Counſel allowed him, the Court is of Counſel for him; but where he may have Counſel, the Judges are not of Counſel for him.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Beſides, we are not here putting of Caſes, but trying of a Cauſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is Mr. Charles Howard, ſwear him. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we bring this Gentleman Mr. Charles Howard only to this part of our Evidence, to prove that Mr. Clay was miſtaken a whole Year, miſtook 78, for 77.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Sollicitor, if you take this confuſed Method, we ſhall never be at an end, and for my part I cannot make any thing of it; it is impoſſible for me to retain theſe things in Memory, ſo as to give any Direction to the Jury, if there be not a Method uſed: for do you think that it is poſſible for a Man to retain in his Head a hundred things huddled up and down without any Order?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We beg your Lordſhip's Patience but a little while, and we ſhall have it in very good Order. Swear Higgins. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Pray what do you aſk him?

Mr. At. Gen. The Matter we examine him to, is this; for I would open to you the Nature of our Evidence: firſt he ſwore Smith into the Plot, and then gave him a Certificate, that he was an honeſt Man.

L. C. J. Is that Oates's Hand?

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall prove it to be ſo.

L. C. J. You muſt firſt prove what he ſwore of Smith.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire that we may read his Narrative.

L. C. J. But firſt prove it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. It is upon Record in the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. Was that delivered in upon Oath to the Houſe of Lords? Or elſe we ſhall be but where we were.

Mr. At. Gen. For Proof of that, we call my Lord Bridgwater.

L. C. J. Here he is. Swear my Lord. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Bridgwater, do you remember the Narrative that Oates gave in to the Houſe of Lords, and was it upon Oath? But firſt of all, if you pleaſe, I deſire my Lord may ſee the Book, whether any thing be there under his Hand, and then, whether it be enter'd to be upon Oath, and whether this be the Journal agreeing with the Paper deliver'd him?

L. C. J. This is a Narrative, my Lord, that he himſelf deliver'd in, and I would aſk my Lord Bridgwater this one Queſtion: Was not this Journal compared with the Narrative given in upon Oath by Order of the Lords Houſe?

Earl of Bridgwater. Yes, I muſt ſay I was one of the Committee appointed to take care of the Journal, and here is my Hand to it among other Lords, and that is a Copy of what Mr. Oates did deliver in as his Narrative, which was inſerted upon a Report of the Committee into the Journal Book by Order of the Lords, and we did examine the Narrative with the Book.

L. C. J. But what is all this to our purpoſe now? Do not miſtake me, my Lord Bridgwater, I do not ſpeak to you now, but to Mr, Attorney: What does this prove as to the Matter in hand?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord Bridgwater, did you ſee the Narrative brought in by Oates?

Earl of Bridgwater. That Narrative was deliver'd to us by the Clerk of the Parliament.

L. C. J. But, my Lord, do you know that Narrative was given in upon Oath?

Earl of Bridgwater. I know no other, but that the Clerk of the Parliament brought it to us.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is the Clerk of the Parliament will tell you that Oates was ſworn to it.

L. C. J. Prove it if you can; but hitherto I ſee nothing that looks like Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. Really, my Lord, I ſhould take it to be as much Evidence as any that was ever offer'd in the World.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Attorney, let us reaſon the Point a little: Suppoſe you bring an Anſwer in Chancery, except the Man be ſworn to it, can you read his Anſwer? and yet I ever look'd upon an Anſwer in Chancery as Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. In that Caſe the Record proves it ſelf, and ſo it ſhould here; and therefore we deſire it may be read.

L. C. J. But ſurely you would not allow an Anſwer to be Evidence, unleſs you prove it to be ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I always took it, that we need not come to prove a Man was actually ſworn to his Anſwer; but if it be once enter'd upon Record in Chancery, it proves itſelf.

L. C. J. It is true, Mr. Attorney, if it appears upon Record that the Anſwer was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if this Journal of the Houſe of Lords is a Record, then that which is enter'd into it, is a Record; 'tis a thing recorded as a Deed enrolled is, and proves itſelf.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, either we miſtake one another, or we do not differ in Opinion. If you could make it appear that Oates brought this thing in the Houſe of Lord, and deliver'd it upon Oath, that were Evidence; otherwiſe I cannot ſee how you can make Evidence of it.

Mr. At. Gen. I always thought, my Lord, that a Record out of a Court of Record, would have that Credit in another Court of Record, as to be read.

L. C. J. My Lord Bridgwater tells you, it was deliver'd to them by the Clerk of the Parliament.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let the Clerk read what is at the end thereof.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Hitherto examined the 3d of December, 1678. The Narrative and Examination of Titus Oates being firſt inſerted, according to the Order of the Houſe, of the 21ſt of November laſt, by us Angleſey, &c.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray read the Order of the 21ſt of November.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Die Jovis 21ſt of November, 1678. Upon Report made by the Earl of Bridgwater, from the Lords Sub-Committees for the examining the Journal of this Houſe, That upon Examination thereof, their Lordſhips find, that the Narrative made upon Oath by Titus Oates, at the Bar on the 31ſt of October laſt, of the horrid Deſign againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, is only mention'd in the Journal, but not enter'd at large in ſuch manner as he then related it; and that therefore their Lordſhips deſire the Direction of the

Houſe

Houſe concerning this Matter: It is thereupon ordered, that the ſaid Narrative made by Titus Oates on the ſaid 31ſt of October, ſhall be enter'd at large, and inſerted in the Journal, as Part of the Buſineſs of that Day.

L. C. J. Now you make it Evidence; for it appears that he was ſworn, and gave his Narrative upon Oath.

Mr. At. Gen. Then now, my Lord, I hope we may read it.

L. C. J. Ay, read it.

Mr. At. Gen. Read the 54th Article.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. This is the Narrative of Titus Oates, the 54th Article. That one Matthew Medborne, a Player in the Duke's Theatre; one Mr. Penny, Mr. Mannock, Mr. Sharpe, and Mr. Seddon; and one William Smith, a School-Maſter at Iſlington; and one Edward Everard, and others, meet in a Club on Thurſday Nights and Sunday Nights, with one Jones a Prieſt, and one Keymaſh within-mention'd: And all theſe Perſons are employ'd by the Jeſuits, to vilify the Houſe of Commons, and to go about the City to incenſe the People againſt them, and againſt the Biſhops of the Nation; and they deliver this Treaſonable Poſition, That the Commons aſſembled in Parliament are the Devil's Repreſentatives, and not the Nations; which treaſonable and deteſtable Words the Deponent did hear at the ſaid Club, which is kept at Fuller's-Rents, near Gray's-Inn. And in the Month of Auguſt the Deponent was order'd by the Jeſuits in London, to give the ſaid Perſons great Reſpects; and in their Names to thank the Club for their Faithfulneſs to them in that Particular.

Mr. At. Gen. Thus you ſee what he had ſworn againſt him; now we ſhall ſhew how he dealt with him. Is that Mr. Oates's Hand?

Witneſs. It is; yes, I believe it is.

Mr. At. Gen. I believe he will hardly deny it himſelf.

Oates. Let me ſee it, I pray you, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Shew it him. [Which was done.] Is that your Hand?

Oates. I cannot ſay it is my Hand, nor do I believe it to be ſo.

L. C. J. He does not own it to be his Hand.

Oates. I do not ſay it is not my Hand; but I do not remember any thing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Read it, Sir, pray you.

L. C. J. What is it you would read?

Mr. At. Gen. A Certificate under Oates's Hand of Mr. Smith's Honeſty, not three Days before the Trial of the five Jeſuits.

L. C. J. Read it, let us hear what it is.

Theſe are to certify that William Smith is no Papiſt; and that he is upon good Service at this time for his King and Country; of which, I hope, thoſe that are Inquirers after Recuſants, will take notice.

Witneſs my Hand this 3d Day of June 1679.

Titus Oates.

L. C. J. What harm is there in all this? I muſt needs ſay, I cannot comprehend what you would make of it.

Mr. At. Gen. This Protection was given Mr. Smith by Mr. Oates, three Days before the Trial; but after he had ſworn him into the Plot in his Narrative.

L. C. J. I ſee not any Plot, for my part, that he ſwore him into, unleſs you mean Treaſon againſt the Houſe of Commons: For that is the Accuſation he made, that he ſpoke ſuch Words of the Houſe of Commons. Pray read it again. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, and what is all this?

Mr. At. Gen. Is not this a ſwearing him into the Plot?

L. C. J. No, not that I ſee; it only gives an ill Character of him.

Mr. At. Gen. But he is accuſed as a Confederate with the Prieſts and Jeſuits.

Oates. Did I charge him, Mr. Attorney, with having any hand in the Plot againſt the King's Life?

Mr. At. Gen. I only offer this as an Evidence that there was tampering.

L. C. J. You call it a being in the Plot; I ſee no ſuch thing.

Mr. At. Gen. And then he comes and gives him an Acquittal under his hand, and then produces him as a Witneſs.

L. C. J. There can be no great matter in this, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we'll call Mr. Smith himſelf, and he will tell you how Oates drew him in: Swear Mr. Smith. [Which was done.] Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, how you came to ſwear at the former Trial, by whom you were perſuaded, and how you varied from the Truth.

L. C. J. That is very nauſeous and fulſome, Mr. Attorney, methinks, in a Court of Juſtice.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you ſwear at the former Trial? and was that true you did ſwear then?

L. C. J. I tell you truly, Mr. Attorney, it looks rank and fulſome; if he did forſwear himſelf, why ſhould he ever be a Witneſs again?

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not the firſt time by twenty that ſuch Evidences have been given.

L. C. J. I hate ſuch Precedents in all times; let it be done never ſo often. Shall I believe a Villain one Word he ſays, when he owns that he forſwore himſelf?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave; I muſt purſue my Maſter's Intereſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it was ever Teſtimony allow'd to be given, to detect a Subornation.

L. C. J. I am ſure 'tis not fit to be allow'd at any time: If he did forſwear himſelf in a Court of Record, in my Opinion he is not to be receiv'd as a Witneſs any more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do only make this uſe of him, to prove that Oates did ſuborn him.

L. C. J. Pray call ſome other Witneſſes, if you have them, to contradict him; but do not offer to bring a Man to ſwear, that he did forſwear himſelf before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we give Evidence here of a Man's being produced by Oates, to ſwear he was here in May 78, and he did make ſuch an Oath: Now I hope, with Submiſſion, my Lord, it is Evidence to contradict that Oath, if we can prove that he has confeſs'd he was forſworn, and miſtaken in his Oath; ſuch Evidence perhaps will be of little value, yet Evidence it is.

L. C. J. Make it what you will, Mr. Sollicitor; I think it is of no value at all, nor to be admitted, for the Man to come and ſwear it himſelf: Prove what you can by others.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Surely, my Lord, this Confeſſion of his to others, is of leſs value than when we bring the Man himſelf to confeſs his Fault; that Man himſelf coming and owning the thing, that he was miſtaken, with great Sorrow for it, ſure is a good Evidence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Argue the matter as long as you will, Mr. Sollicitor, you will never convince me, but that he that has once forſworn himſelf, ought not to be a Witneſs after that in any Cauſe whatſoever. If any Man tell me otherwiſe till Doomſday, I cannot be convinced of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I go but to aſk him this Queſtion, whether or no what he ſwore were true?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, we are all of another Opinion, that it is not Evidence fit to be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit it to you.

L. C. J. I tell you, Mr. Sollicitor, if you ſhould call him to know what it was he ſwore, and it does appear by any Evidence, or by his own Confeſſion, that it was falſe, you ought not to believe what he ſays, even in that matter. And I think truly, for Example's ſake, it ought not by any means to be admitted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit it to you; but then I humbly conceive, it will be in very many Caſes impoſſible to detect a Perjury or Subornation, if the Party ſuborn'd cannot be admitted to be a Witneſs.

L. C. J. What good will the admitting him to be a Witneſs do? For either what he ſwore then, or what he ſwears now, is falſe; and if he once ſwears falſe, can you ſay he is to be believ'd?

Mr. North. My Lord, if a Man come and ſwear———

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir, you have our Opinion; it has been always the Practice heretofore, that when the Court have deliver'd their Opinion, the Counſel ſhould ſit down, and not diſpute it any further.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we will go about the Buſineſs of Clay, and for that we will call Lawrence Davenport.

L. C. J. 'Tis certainly againſt the Law to admit a Man that has once forſworn himſelf to be a Witneſs again in any Cauſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Lawrence Davenport. [Which was done.] Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account how Clay came to be a Witneſs, and by whom he was wrought upon to be ſo.

Davenport. May it pleaſe you, my Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Oates came to the Priſon, I being then a Priſoner at that time in the Gate-houſe at Weſtminſter myſelf; and having no other Employment, I had the Government and Care of ſome of the Priſoners for a Livelihood, being in Cuſtody; and at that time Mr. Oates, as I ſaid, when old Clay was in Priſon, did come there to viſit this Clay at ſeveral times. And coming there to viſit this Clay, up ſtairs he went to his Chamber, and deſired to ſpeak with him; and I did deſire your Worſhip, Mr. Oates, that you would go in to him, and you did go into his Chamber, and there theſe Words you did ſpeak to him before the Trial of the five Jeſuits; that if he did not ſwear what you put to him, he ſhould be proſecuted as a Prieſt, which you did believe he would die for.

L. C. J. What is this Man's Name?

Mr. At. Gen. Lawrence Davenport.

L. C. J. Did you hear him ſay ſo?

Davenport. Yes, my Lord, upon my Oath I did hear him ſay ſo, and Sir William Waller was with him; and then he replied, and ſaid, with a Proviſo that you would give him his Gold and Silver that was taken from him, being then a Priſoner under my keeping in the Gate-houſe, and wanting his Money; if you would do that, he ſaid, he had been a Rogue before, and he could not ſay what he might do.

L. C. J. Now make it appear that this Clay was ſworn at the Trial.

Davenport. My Lord, afterwards I was Keeper to him under the other Keeper, and he had a Keeper to wait on him to Newgate Seſſions at the Old Bailey; wherefore this Gentleman that is ſtanding there, Mr. Oates, comes to us, ſays he, do not you trouble yourſelf about this Priſoner; let him alone with me, I'll ſee him at home again; and then the Jeſuits there did take their Trials; how it was I cannot tell, for we could not come into the Court. Afterwards they went to the Fountain Tavern by Newgate to Dinner, and Mr. Oates and he went to Dinner together; we were below in the Houſe waiting there till it was Night, and ſtill thinking that he ſhould come down again: but away went he home, and left us in the lurch; but indeed he did come home to the Priſon very honeſtly and civilly, becauſe he was civilly guarded.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we'll give you an account, that the next Morning after this Diſcourſe betwixt Oates and Clay at the Gate-houſe, this Witneſs told it to another that was a Priſoner there then too.

Oates. My Lord, I would aſk this Man a Queſtion, whether he had the ſole keeping of Clay, without any other Keeper with him?

Davenport. There was no Keeper in the Houſe but myſelf, where he lay, which was in Margaret's-lane, not in the Priſon, but in the Houſe.

Oates. Pray aſk this Gentleman, why he did not come in and teſtify this Diſcourſe he ſpeaks of, when Clay was a Witneſs.

Davenport. I was not by when he was ſworn.

Oates. Did he not know he was a Witneſs?

L. C. J. No, he ſays he did not go into the Court with you, he was not ſuffered to go in.

Davenport. My Lord, I am a poor Tradeſman, and know nothing what belongs to the Law.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, pray ſwear this Man, Mr.— [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what Davenport told you, and when.

Mr.———.He came and told me the next day in the Priſon, where I was then, what Mr. Oates and Sir William Waller had been tampering with Clay about, to make him ſwear for Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. What were the Words he told you they ſaid to him?

Mr.———. It was, that he muſt ſwear that Mr. Oates dined at Mr. Howard's Houſe ſuch a Day of the Month, and Mr. Clay did ſay he knew nothing of the matter; but then Sir William Waller and Mr. Oates did reply to him again, here's your Choice; if you will not ſwear this, we will try you for a Prieſt, and hang you, and ſo Clay agreed, if he might have his Money reſtored that was taken from him; he had been a Rogue before, and did not know what he might do.

Oates. Is this Evidence, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, doubtleſs, very good Evidence.

Oates. 'Tis only upon Hear-ſay that he ſpeaks.

L. C. J. But that eſtabliſhes the other Man's Teſtimony, this being told the very next Morning; for he would not conceal it, it ſeems.

Mr. At. Gen. Now that Clay was ſworn at the Trial, you admit, Mr. Oates.

Oates. Yes, I do, he was ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I think here's a plain Proof of a Subornation.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. You must observe how they apply this Evidence: They say you are an ill Man, not only as to swearing false yourself, but as to suborning others to swear more than they knew; and particularly as to this Clay, that you and Sir William Waller did threaten him, you would hang him up for a Priest, if he would not swear as you would have him; and by your Threatnings he was prevailed with to swear.

Oates. Is Mr. Clay in Court, my Lord?

L. C. J. Nay, I cannot tell where he is.

Mr. At. Gen. He was your Witness, Mr. Oates; we expected you would have brought him.

Oates. I cannot tell where to find him, my Lord, now, truly.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Howard.

Cryer. Here he is, Sir; he is sworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, you have not proved what he swore.

Mr. At. Gen. We are now about it, my Lord. Mr. Howard, pray were you at the Trial of the five Jesuits, or at Langhorn's, when Clay was sworn as a Witness for Dr. Oates?

Mr. Howard. Yes, I was at Langhorn's Trial, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the effect of his Testimony there?

Mr. Howard. He did swear, that he was with me and Mr. Oates at Dinner at my House, in May in the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. 77 did he say, or 78?

Mr. Howard. Stay, I will look upon my Notes I took at that time.

L. C. J. Ay, do so, to refresh your Memory, Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard. It was May 78, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, was he then at your House with Oates?

Mr. Howard. No, he was not there in May; Mr. Clay was with me and Mr. Oates both together in July 78, after the 4th Day of July.

Mr. At. Gen. That is, after the time he came to London from St. Omers.

L. C. J. You say very well; have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we must desire that the 28th Article of Mr. Oates's Narrative may be read.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. That in order to this Command on April 24. 78. Father Warren, Rector of Liege; Sir Thomas Preston, Baronet; Father Marsh, Rector of Gaunt; and Father Williams, Rector of Watton, and Master of the Novices; Sir John Warner, Baronet; Richard Ashby, Rector of the English Seminary at St. Omers, being sick of the Gout could not go. But out of the said Seminary went Sir Robert Bret, Baronet; Father Pool, Edward Nevile. There were in all with the Deponent nine or ten, who met in London in consult with Thomas Whitebread, Father Harcourt Senior, and Father Harcourt Junior, John Fenwick, Basil Langworth, William Morgan, John Keimes, Father Lovel, Father Ireland, Father Blundel, Richard Strange, Father Mico, Father Grey, and others, to the Number of fifty Jesuits, met at the White-Horse Tavern in the Strand, where they plotted their Designs for the Society, and ordered Father John Carey, who was also there, to go Procurator for Rome; at which Consult thus held in the Month of May, the Deponent was present to attend the Consultors, and deliver their Concerns from Company to Company; and then a little after they left the White-Horse Tavern, and divided themselves into several Clubs and Companies; some met at Mr. Saunders's House in Wild-street; others at Mr. Fenwick's, at Aires's House in Drury-Lane; others at Mr. Ireland's in Russel-street, near Covent-Garden; and in other Places. All which, tho' in several Companies, five or six in a Company, did contrive the Death of the King; and in order to which, there were Papers sent from Company to Company, which the Deponent did carry, containing their Opinions of the timing their Business, and the manner how it was to be done; and within three or four Days after the Deponent went to St. Omers, with the Fathers that came from the other side of the Water.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we produce this to overthrow their Witnesses, that speak of his being here a Week in May. Now Mr. Oates in his Narrative says, that the Consult ended the 24th of April; and that three or four Days after, he returned back to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Pray read that over again, where the Names are; for the Witnesses for the King swear, that Mr. Williams came over from St. Omers, but he there says he did not, I think.

It was read again.

L. C. J. I thought it had been otherwise, 'tis darkly penn'd.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I myself heard him declare in many Trials here, and at the Old-Bailey, that all was finish'd in that Day, and he went in a few Days.

Oates. Mr. Attorney, you are mistaken: For if you please, my Lord, the Consult was not dissolv'd in six or eight Days, tho' they were not sitting or acting every Day.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not a difference of six or eight Days that is contended for, but it is, either Mr. Oates, or his Witnesses, do not swear true. If it were as Mr. Oates says, that six or eight Days were allow'd after the 24th of April, then it must be the 5th or 6th of May that he went to St. Omers; and then his Witnesses, that say he was here the latter end of May, cannot swear true. And our Witnesses say he was all April and May, till the 23d of June, at St. Omers.

Oates. My Lord, Mr. Attorney does not apprehend the Evidence aright.

L. C. J. Well, you may make your Remarks by and by, and set him right if you can.

Mr. At. Gen. We have done our Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Oates?

Oates. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. Then you must conclude, and say what you have to say to the Jury.

Oates. My Lord, I have one thing more, and that is, a Copy of the Record out of the House of Lords. It is in the Journal the twenty-fifth of March, 79.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I have not the Book here, it was not spoke for.

Oates. But do you know this Hand?

[Shewing him a Copy.

Mr. Walker. Yes, and I believe it is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Tuesday the 25th of March, 1679.

Oates. It is the last Clause in the Journal of that Day.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Reſolved, Nemine Contradicente, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, that they do declare that they are fully ſatisfied by the Proofs they have heard, that there now is, and for divers Years laſt paſt hath been a horrid and treaſonable Plot and Conſpiracy contrived and carried on by thoſe of the Popiſh Religion, for the murthering of his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon, and for ſubverting the Proteſtant Religion, and the ancient and eſtabliſhed Government of this Kingdom.

Oates. There is an Order to have that Vote printed, and inſerted before the Form of Prayer for the Faſt. Pray, Sir, read the next Page.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Die Lunæ 25 Oct. 1680.

Upon Report from the Lords Committees for examining Matters relating to the Diſcovery of the late horrid Plot and Conſpiracy, that Captain Thomas Bickley hath lately vilified Dr. Titus Oates at a publick Meeting at Chicheſter, to the prejudice of his Majeſty's Evidence, for the further Diſcovery of the ſaid Plot: It is thereupon ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, that the ſaid Thomas Bickley be, and is hereby required to appear before their Lordſhips, in the Lord Privy-Seal's Lodgings, near the Houſe of Peers, on Wedneſday the third Day of November next, at eight of the Clock in the Forenoon. And it is further ordered, that Alderman Exon, and Alderman William Bury of Chicheſter aforeſaid, who were then preſent at the ſaid meeting, do likewiſe attend their Lordſhips at the time aforeſaid, to give Evidence of what they know concerning this matter.

L. C. J. What of all this? We know hereupon Bickley was turn'd out of Commiſſion, and now Bickley is in again. But it ſeems, as you had credit with ſome then, ſo you had not with others. Well, have you now done all?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Mr. Oates will ſum up his Evidence, then I will do the ſame for the King, when he has done.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you, Mr. Oates?

Oates. Now, my Lord, here is an Indictment preferr'd againſt me for Perjury, and the Evidence they have given for the King, is this. 1. They have called Mr. Foſter, and he tells you, that I was produced at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old Bailey, where he was ſummoned as a Juryman, upon the Trial of Ireland; and he ſays, that when I was produced at the Seſſions in the Old Bailey as a Witneſs, and ſworn (if I do remember Mr. Foſter aright in what he ſays) he did hear me ſwear, that there was a treaſonable Conſult of Jeſuits upon the twenty-fourth of April 78, at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand; and he does further ſay, that I ſaid thoſe Jeſuits afterwards came to a Reſolution to kill the King; and that they ſeparated themſelves into leſſer Clubs, the Reſolution being drawn up by one Mico; and that I carried it from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned, and did ſee it ſigned. My Lord, I did aſk Mr. Foſter, whether I in my Evidence call'd it a Conſult, or a traiterous Conſult. Now, my Lord, 'tis true I did call in a traiterous Conſult; it is as true that I did ſwear there was ſuch a Conſult; and it is as true, that I did ſwear this Conſult did divide itſelf into leſſer Companies; it is as true as I did ſay I carried that Reſolution about from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw them ſign that Reſolution for murdering the King, I do not mean of this King, but of the late King. My Lord, the Evidence I think I, nor no honeſt Man ſhall need to be aſhamed of: I am not aſhamed to own, that I repeated this Evidence ſeveral times, nor that I gave that Evidence upon Oath; for it is Truth, my Lord, and nothing but Truth, and I reſolve by the Grace of God to ſtand by it, and confirm it with my Blood, if there be occaſion. My Lord, to convict me of Perjury, they have brought a parcel of St. Omers Witneſſes, and theſe do ſwear that which they would have ſworn ſix Years ago; but then the Court thought them not fit to be ſworn, not only becauſe the Law will not allow them, but becauſe of their Religion, that can diſpenſe with falſe Oaths, if it were for a good Cauſe, and that was the Remark my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs then made on it. I ſhall not inſiſt much upon what they have ſworn, for that I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip and the Jury do very well remember: But I have five things to object to their Evidence, and I hope the Jury will take notice of my Objections, and make their Remarks upon them; for ſince you have heard the Evidence that is brought againſt me, it will be neceſſary for your Lordſhip to weigh the nature of theſe Witneſſes, and the value that the ſeveral Juries of London and Middleſex had for them. 'Tis true, there are ſeveral brought here now, that never were Witneſſes before; there are indeed other Men, but of the ſame Religion and the ſame Intereſt, and therefore their Teſtimony muſt be of the ſame value; I think your Lordſhip will allow me that. Therefore I begin with their Religion and that I take notice to be a great Objection to their Evidence, as I am adviſ'd by thoſe that are learned in the Law. And I muſt appeal to the Court, whether a Papiſt, in caſe of Religion, may be believed and received as a good Witneſs.

L. C. J. We muſt not hear any of theſe idle Expreſſions.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you think you are come here to preach Mr. Oates?

L. C. J. I'll tell you, a Papiſt, except you'll prove any legal Objection againſt him, is as good a Witneſs in a Court of Record, as any other Perſon whatſoever.

Oates. But if 'tis your Lordſhip's, I'll tell you my Lord Coke's Practice was not to admit them as good Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Do not tell me of my Lord Coke's Practice; the Law is otherwiſe: keep to the Buſineſs that you have here in hand, the Queſtion before us, whether you were forſworn in Ireland's Trial or not. Anſwer that if you can; but you muſt not run out into Clamours and idle Extravagancies.

Oates. My Lord, I demand it as my Right to be heard what I have to except againſt the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. I tell you, you ſhall be heard when you ſpeak properly; but are you to determine what is right, or what is wrong?

Oates. I am to determine my own Right now in this Point, and I inſiſt upon it, and demand it.

L. C. J. It may be, preſently you'll tell us we have no right to judge of it.

Oates. Yes, my Lord, you have; but I hope I have right to urge it.

L. C. J. Urge what you will that is to the purpoſe, but then you muſt keep to the matter in hand, and not make ſuch idle Excurſions as theſe are.

Oates. I will keep to the matter, my Lord, if you will hear me.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. So you ſhall; we'll make you keep to the Matter, or we will not hear you at all: Do not think your Impudence ſhall ſtorm us out of our Senſes.

Oates. My Lord, I do inſiſt upon it, that theſe Mens Religion is an exception to their Teſtimony, and a Papiſt is not a good Witneſs in a Cauſe of Religion; and I deſire I may have leave to argue that as a Point of Law in my own Defence.

L. C. J. No, Sir, it is no Point of Law at all.

Oates. Then I appeal to all the Hearers, whether I have Juſtice done me.

L. C. J. What's that? Why you impudent Fellow, do you know where you are? You are in a Court of Juſtice, and muſt appeal to none but the Court and the Jury.

Oates. I do appeal to the Hearers.

L. C. J. Take him away there; if you will not behave your ſelf as you ought, I can aſſure you, the Court will do what they ought to do, and ſtop your Mouth.

Oates. What you pleaſe, my Lord, I muſt make my own Defence as well as I can.

L. C. J. You are here in Judgment before us, and are to apppeal to us; we'll ſuffer none of your Common-wealth Appeals to your Mobile; keep within the Bounds of Decency, and ſay what you can for your ſelf.

Oates. My Lord, this I move to the Court as one of my Objections to this Evidence given againſt me, That their Religion makes them no good Witneſſes; eſpecially in this Cauſe.

L. C. J. I tell you that is nothing to the purpoſe, what their Religion is.

Mr Juſt. Holloway. Mr. Oates, we come not here to diſpute Points of Religion, we come to try a bare Matter of Fact, whether you are perjured, or no.

L. C. J. I tell you a Papiſt is a good Witneſs without a legal Exception.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray, Mr. Oates, is not a Papiſt as good a Witneſs as a Diſſenter?

Oates. My Lord Coke would not admit a Papiſt to be a good Witneſs in any Cauſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. How, not in a Cauſe of Meum and Tuum?

Oates. No, my Lord, not in any Cauſe between Party and Party.

L. C. J. Where is that Opinion?

Oates. I'll cite you the Caſe, if you pleaſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear it.

Oates. It is in Bulſtrode's Reports, the Second Part, 155. A Popiſh Recuſant is not to be admitted a Witneſs between Party and Party.———

Mr. Juſt. Withins. May a Preſbyterian be a good Witneſs, Mr. Oates?

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Or would Mr. Colledge have been a good Witneſs, Mr. Oates?

Oates. I tell you this was my Lord Coke's Practice.

L. C. J. You have our Opinion, and be ſatisfied with it; that Book ſays it was my Lord Coke's Practice, and we think if that was his Practice, his Practice was againſt Law.

Oates. Then another thing I object to their Teſtimony, is their Education.

L. C. J. That's no Objection at all neither.

Oates. My Lord, they are bred up in a Seminary againſt Law, and for which their Friends are to be puniſhed.

L. C. J. So is every Man living that's bred a Diſſenter, bred up againſt Law.

Oates. My Lord, I have not offered any Diſſenter as Evidence for me.

L. C. J. No, they are all no doubt of it very good People. Good-wife Mayo, and her Companions, excellent Proteſtants without all queſtion!

Oates. My Lord, I humbly offer a Statute to your Lordſhip: And that is Law ſure.

L. C. J. Yes, a Statute is Law. What Statute is it?

Oates. It is 27° of Eliz. Cap. 2. The Law ſays there———

L. C. J. Come we will ſee what the Law ſays. Read the Statute he ſpeaks of.

Cl. of Cr. It is intituled, an Act againſt Jeſuits, Prieſts, and other ſuch like diſobedient Perſons.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire that the Preamble of the Act may be read.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas divers Perſons called and profeſſed Jeſuits, Seminary Prieſts, and other Prieſts, which have been, and from time to time are made in the Parts beyond the Seas, by or according to the Order and Rites of the Romiſh Church, have of late come, and have been ſent, and daily do come, and are ſent into this Realm of England, and others the Queen's Majeſty's Dominions———

L. C. J. This is nothing to this Buſineſs before us at all.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Does this Statute ſay they are no good Witneſſes?

Oates. They own themſelves to be educated at St. Omers, and that is againſt this Law expreſsly.

L. C. J. What then! Do they own themſelves to be in Orders, Jeſuits and Prieſts, then you might ſay ſomewhat to them upon this Law; but do not ſpend our Time in ſuch Trifles.

Oates. I do not ſpend your Time in Trifles, my Lord; it is my Defence.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do you go on; for we will not ſit here to ſpend our Time for nothing.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, let me but ſhew this, I only propoſe one Statute more to your Lordſhip's Conſideration.

L. C. J. You may propoſe to read the whole Statute-Book.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, hear me out.

L. C. J. Speak then to the Buſineſs in hand.

Oates. It is the Statute made in the 3*d* of King Charles I. Chap. 2.

L. C. J. It is nothing to the purpoſe.

Oates. I am adviſed 'tis very material for me.

L. C. J. I tell you it is not, and we'll not let your Importunity prevail upon us to ſpend our time for nothing: There has been a great deal of Time ſpent to no purpoſe already.

Oates. Then if you will over-rule it, my Lord———

L. C. J. We do over-rule it: For it ſignifies nothing to this purpoſe.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to give me leave to offer their Judgments in Caſes of Conſcience, whereby they own they have Diſpenſations to ſwear Lyes for the promoting of the Cauſe.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence neither.

Oates. This is very hard in ſuch a Caſe as this.

L. C. J. No, it is not hard, that what is no Evidence in Law, ſhould not be ſuffered to be given in Evidence.

Oates. It is Evidence againſt the poor Diſſenters, my Lord.

L. C. J. Indeed, Sir, it is not Evidence againſt any one body in the World; if you will take my Word for it; if you will not, I cannot tell how to help it.

Oates. Then I offer you one thing more, my Lord, and that is what was ſaid and done in the Caſe of the Earl of Shaftesbury, when he was charged with High-Treaſon, and committed to the Tower of London; at ſeveral Seſſions in the Old-Bailey and at Hickes's-Hall, they did move that they might have liberty to bring in an Indictment of Perjury againſt the Witneſſes which did accuſe him of Treaſon, but now the Court there over-rul'd thoſe Motions, and would not ſuffer my Lord of Shaftesbury's Friends to bring Indictments of Perjury againſt them, becauſe they would not have the King's Evidence indicted of Perjury, nor the Popiſh Plot called in queſtion: this is a Matter of Fact in the Old-Bailey.

L. C. J. And this is all idle too.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, will you hear me?

L. C. J. But pray, Sir, will you hear me too? I tell you this is nothing to the purpoſe neither.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to ſpeak but theſe few Words then, as to my own Witneſſes I have produced. And the firſt is Cicely Mayo; and, my Lord, though it be your Lordſhip's pleaſure, not to have that good Opinion of her, as I think the poor Woman does deſerve, yet I hope her Evidence will have its due Weight and Conſideration with your Lordſhip and the Jury; ſhe ſays, ſhe ſaw me in Town in the Month of May: Now indeed ſhe could not be poſitive, what May it was, but ſhe ſaid it was the May before the Popiſh Plot broke out, that is, before the Rumour of that Plot was ſpread abroad, and ſhe believes the Plot broke out in 78. But this ſhe ſays poſitively, ſhe ſaw me in the Month of May here; my Lord, ſhe comes to give this Evidence freely and voluntarily: a Man that is a Knave, is a Knave for ſomething, either out of Malice, or for Gain or Intereſt; but ſhe has no Reward given her, nor can hope for any; but in Love to Juſtice, without any By-end or particular Intereſt, ſhe came here to teſtify the Truth, about her ſeeing me in London, in May 78. The next Witneſs is Mr. Butler, he was then Sir Richard Barker's Coachman. He lived ſome Years with him, as his Servant; but he is now ſet up for himſelf, and he ſays, that when he was about his Maſter's Buſineſs in the Coach-yard, and fitting the Coach for to fetch his Maſter home from Putney, I came in, and this was in the beginning of May, in a Diſguiſe; and he ſays, he ſaw me a ſecond time in another Diſguiſe. Then comes a third Witneſs that I called, and that is Page, and he came into the Hall, where the Patients uſe to wait for his Maſter, and there he met me, and ſpoke with me. Then I called Walker, the Miniſter, but it happens his Memory is not ſo good now, as it was heretofore; and indeed I cannot tell how to blame him, for 'tis ſo long ſince, that it is impoſſible for any body to remember the Circumſtances of Times and Places, that in ſome ſhort time after the Fact might have been remembred with far greater Eaſe. I expected Sir Richard Barker might have been here, being ſubpœna'd to juſtify the Evidence of theſe People; and I did expect that Mr. Smith would have been examined: but I perceived the Court tender of that Point, as knowing it would then eaſily have been ſeen upon which Side it was, that he was ſuborned, that is, to make ſuch a Confeſſion as Mr. Attorney would have hinted at.

L. C. J. Have you a mind to examine him, Mr. Oates? with all my heart. If you conſent to it, he ſhall be examined.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If you will, he ſhall be examined, it was for your ſake he was not.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. It was to do you Right, that he was refuſed to be ſworn before.

Oates. Good Mr. Juſtice Holloway, you are very ſharp upon me.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No, I am not ſharp upon you; I think the Court did you a great deal of Juſtice, you have no reaſon to complain.

Oates. But, my Lord, this I ſay, the Evidence upon which I am now indicted of Perjury is the ſame which was delivered ſix Years ago at the Old-Bailey, at Whitebread's Trial firſt, and then at Langhorn's Trial, where were ſixteen Witneſſes then produced and heard againſt me: But then, my Lord, what Credit did they receive at Whitebread and Langhorn's Trials? Now if this Evidence that I gave was then to be believed, though oppoſed by ſo many Witneſſes, what new Objection does riſe againſt it, which was not then hinted, and received an Anſwer? For as to all the Records that are brought out of the Houſe of Lords, they have not amounted to a Charge ſufficient to diminiſh any Man's Evidence in the World: for as to the Narrative that is entered there in the Journal, I think I and any Man elſe, that were concerned as I was, may very well defend the Truth of it; and I do avow the Truth of the Popiſh Plot, and will ſtand by it as long as I have a Day to live, and I do not queſtion but the Jury, upon Conſideration of thoſe Proteſtant Witneſſes that I have here brought againſt theſe Popiſh Seminaries, will acquit me of this Perjury. I leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury to judge; and I hope thoſe Paſſages of Heat, that have fallen from me in Court, ſhall not make me fare at all the worſe in your Judgment. I have called ſome noble Lords to teſtify for me; but I find, either the diſtance of time has wrought upon their Memories, or the difference of the Seaſon has chang'd their Opinion, ſo that now they diſbelieve that which they did believe before, and perhaps for as little Reaſon as———

L. C. J. As they believed you at firſt.

Oates. Yes, truly, my Lord, for as little reaſon as they believed me at firſt; for I cannot expect that a Man, who believes without a Principle, ſhould not recant that Belief without a Reaſon.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that?

Oates. I name no body.

L. C. J. But the Nobility that are here, and that have been Witneſſes in this Cauſe, are all Perſons of that Honour, that the Court is bound in Juſtice to take notice of, and vindicate them from your ſcandalous Reflections; but only I think that a Slander from your Mouth is very little Scandal.

Oates. Nor from ſome body's elſe neither.

L. C. J. But, Sir, you muſt be taught better Manners.

Oates. I find, my Lord, I am not to be heard in this Cauſe with Patience.

L. C. J. I think you do not deſerve to be heard at all.

Oates. I cannot tell how to help it, if you will not hear me.

L. C. J. Can't you ſay what you have to ſay for your ſelf without Reflections, and running out into ſuch Extravagancies?

Oates. My Lord, you will ſuffer me to offer no-that is material for my Defence.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. Do you think it decent for this Court to ſuffer Perſons of Honour, that by your own Deſire were ſworn to give Teſtimony in this

Cauſe,

Cauſe, ſhould lie under the Reproach of your Tongue?

Oates. Good Mr. Juſtice Walcot, was there ever any Man dealt with as I am, or had ſuch Evidence offer'd to be given againſt him? Here they offer to blacken me with the imputation of that foul, infamous Crime of Perjury; and who are the Witneſſes to prove it, but Youths out of a Seminary? Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Caſtlemain, known Papiſts, and perhaps Popiſh Recuſants Convict too. As for My Lord Caſtlemain, the Record of his Acquittal is brought as a Charge againſt me, to prove that I was forſworn, and not believed at his Trial; when all the World knows, it was becauſe there was but one Witneſs againſt him, that he came off, and that was the Reaſon that was urg'd by my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs at that very time, who would not admit Dangerfield to be a Witneſs, and reflected not at all upon my Teſtimony, but directed the Jury, for want of another Witneſs, to acquit him. Then, my Lord, here is Wakeman brought, and his Acquittal too; he ſwears all I ſaid againſt him was falſe: whereas, had it not been for two diſhoneſt Perſons, one I have now in my ſight, I ſhall not name any Names, we could at that time have proved five thouſand Pounds of the Money paid to him, and that he gave a Receipt for it. But, my Lord, this I am ſure of, if I had been brought in as a Witneſs in the Caſe of thoſe that ſuffered lately for the Preſbyterian Fanatick Plot (as they call it) I had never been call'd in queſtion, if my Evidence had been falſe; but it is apparent the Papiſts have now a Turn to ſerve, and theſe Papiſts are brought in, the St. Omers Youths, to bear this Teſtimony on purpoſe to falſify my Evidence, and to bring off the Popiſh Lords that now ſtand impeach'd of High-Treaſon for the Popiſh Conſpiracy: but, my Lord, I hope as the Court would never admit Indictments of Perjury againſt the Witneſſes in that Caſe of my Lord Shaftesbury, ſo you will not admit it here; and if my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones were in the right, who did the ſame thing in his Circuit, I hope I ſhall have that Right done me here. My Lord, it is not me they indict, but the whole Proteſtant Intereſt is aim'd at in this Proſecution; and hereby they arraign the whole Proceedings of ſo many Parliaments, all the Courts of Juſtice, and the Verdicts of thoſe Juries that convicted the Traitors that were executed; for my own part, I care not what becomes of me, the Truth will one time or another appear.

L. C. J. I hope in God it will.

Oates. I do not queſtion it, my Lord.

L. C. J. And I hope we are finding it out to-day.

Oates. But, my Lord, ſince I have not the liberty to argue thoſe things that were moſt material for my Defence againſt this Indictment, I appeal to the great God of Heaven and Earth, the Judge of all; and once more in his Preſence, and before all this Auditory, I avow my Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, all and every part of it, to be nothing but true, and will expect from the Almighty God, the Vindication of my Integrity and Innocence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Oates. My Lord, I have one thing to move to your Lordſhip; I deſire I may be brought up to-morrow by Rule of Court to hear my Trial that is then to be.

L. C. J. Ay, let him be brought up by Rule to his Trial.

Oates. My Lord, I lie under very great Affliction with the Stone and the Gout, and beſides that, I have lain in Irons theſe twenty-one Weeks; I beſeech your Lordſhip, that this Cruelty may not be inflicted upon me. My Lord, I am but hitherto a Debtor to the King upon a Civil Account; and if I ſhould be convicted upon theſe Indictments, I could then be but in Execution for a Treſpaſs: and I humbly conceive and hope the Court will ſhew me that Favour, as to acquaint my Keeper, that I ought not to be ſo handled.

L. C. J. Look you, for that, I tell you again what I have often ſaid, I expect from the Marſhal that he keep you as he ought to keep you; I have heard that there have been abundance of Attempts made for your Eſcape, and therefore the Marſhal muſt have the greater Care of you.

Oates. Let any of thoſe Complaints be made out, my Lord, and I'll be contented to be uſed how they will.

L. C. J. I repeat it again, Let the Marſhal have a care to keep you in ſalvâ & arctâ Cuſtodiâ, according to Law.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. If the Marſhal does otherwiſe than his Duty, inform againſt him, and take the Remedy the Law allows.

Marſhal. But the laſt Night, my Lord, Ropes were brought into his Chamber, on purpoſe to give him means to eſcape, and here are the Bundle of Ropes.

Oates. I know nothing at all of them, I aſſure you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, you have our Rule. Go on, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe; which is upon an Indictment of Perjury againſt Titus Oates, the Defendant; and the Perjury charg'd upon the Defendant, is laid to be in his Oath at the Trial of Ireland, at the Old-Bailey; and it is thus, That he in his Evidence at that Trial did ſwear, that there was a treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits, held at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 78, and that he was there preſent——

Oates. Ay, I was there.

L. C. J. You muſt be quiet, and let the Counſel go on without Interruption.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And that they ſeparated themſelves into leſſer Companies and Clubs, and that the Jeſuits came to a Reſolution to murder the late King, and that he the Defendant Oates, carried this Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw it ſigned by them: Now all this is laid in his Indictment to be falſe; for that, in truth, he was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand upon the 24th of April 78, nor did carry any ſuch Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſign'd, as he had ſworn in the Old-Bailey at that Trial; and ſo has committed wilful and corrupt Perjury.

Gentlemen, The Evidence that has been given to prove, that he was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult, nor did carry any ſuch Reſolution, has been by proving where he was at that very time that he ſwears this Conſult was held, that is, that he was really at St. Omers, in parts beyond the Seas, and not in London; and to make out this, we have produced no leſs than twenty Witneſſes, that ſwear poſitively, and give you very many Circumſtances to induce you to believe, that what they have taken upon upon them to remember, is really and effectually true.

Firſt, You have Mr. Hilſley, and he ſwears that he himſelf came away from St. Omers the 24th of April, New Stile, which is the 14th of April, Old Stile, which was a Sunday; that Night he came to Calais, the next day he arriv'd at Dover, and coming up to town towards London, the next Day he met with Mr. Burnaby, who was then going to St. Omers. And he further ſwears, that at that very time, when he came from St. Omers, he left Oates, the Defendant upon the Place: this, I ſay, was the 14th of April. And for a Confirmation of this to be true, he left him there at that time, I would mention what two other Witneſſes do teſtify, and therein do verify what he ſwears; for they tell you, that at this very time when he came over, or within a Day or two, but long before ſuch time as there was any occaſion to bring this to be a Queſtion, he told one of them, in a Diſcourſe that was between them, that he had left upon the Place from whence he came, which was the College at St. Omers, an Engliſh Miniſter, whoſe Name was Sampſon Lucy———

Oates. My Lord, I beg I may have leave to withdraw, for I am very weak and ill.

L. C. J. Then make room for him to go away, if he will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And they give you an account, that the Defendant, Oates, went by that Name there, and it is not denied by him that he did ſo: And this is a Circumſtance greatly verifying Mr. Hilſley's Evidence. Then comes Mr. Burnaby, who ſwears, That he met Mr. Hilſley when he came from St. Omers, about the 16th of April, Old Stile, and the 21ſt of April, Old Stile, he came to St Omers; and that when he came there, he found Oates there upon the Place; this was the 1ſt of May, New Stile: and he gives you this Circumſtance to ſtrengthen his Teſtimony, That he very well remembers, that upon the 2d of May, New Stile, the Day after he came to St. Omers, Oates intruded into his Company, and got himſelf acquainted with him. He ſays further, that upon the 3d of May, New Stile, he particularly remembers Oates was in his Company there, and they went into the Garden and walk'd together; he alſo ſays, he ſaw him the 5th of May New Stile, which is the 25th of April, Old Stile, the Day after this Day aſſign'd for the Conſult, with this Circumſtance, That he remembers to have ſeen him in the Rhetorick School, and ſo ſucceſſively afterwards he gives you a particular Account down to Midſummer: after that, Oates continued in the College at St. Omers, and then went away.

Then the next Witneſs we produce is Mr. Pool, and he gives you an account, that upon the 25th of April 1678, New Stile, which was the 15th of April our Stile, he came over here, and he left behind him at St. Omers, the Defendant Oates; for he particularly remembers, that he ſaw him there when he came away; ſo Hilſley left him the 14th of April. Mr. Pool came away the 15th of April, which is their 25th and left him at St. Omers, and does not remember, that he uſed to be abſent out of the College; and Mr. Brunaby finds him there the 21ſt of April; ſo that particularly at the times the other two came away, and Burnaby came thither, there he was, and there they ſaw him.

The next witneſs is Mr. Thornton, and he gives you an account when Oates came thither firſt, and how long he ſtaid there; he ſays he came about Chriſtmas 77, and there he ſtaid till Midſummer Eve 78; and he tells you ſome particular Days he ſaw him on; he ſays he ſaw him there on the 1ſt of May New Stile, and he ſaw him the 2d of May New Stile, in company with Mr. Burnaby, the next Day after his Arrival there, wondering at their ſudden Acquaintance. And he adds a particular Circumſtance, why he remembers it was the 2d of May; becauſe that Day the Scholars at St. Omers acted a Play, at which Oates had a Scuffle for a Seat: and he ſays he does likewiſe remember him to have been there, when Mr. Pool came away, which was the 25th of April, New Stile.

Then Mr. Conway, that was our next Witneſs, gives you an account likewiſe of Oates's coming to St. Omers about December 77, and how long he ſtaid there, viz. till the latter end of June 78. And he does not remember, that he lay out of the College above one Night, and that was in January. And he remembers particularly, that he ſaw him with Mr. Burnaby ſuch a Day in May.

Then we brought another Witneſs, and that was Mr. Haggerſtone, and he tells you, he had good reaſon to remember Mr. Oates, for he was in the ſame Claſſis with him; and this Gentleman gives an account particularly, that he remembers him to be there the next Day after Mr. Burnaby came, and agrees in teſtimony with all the reſt, that from Chriſtmas till Midſummer, he was not abſent out of the College but one Night.

We have another Witneſs, Mr. Beeſton, and he remembers, that Oates was playing at Nine-pins the 1ſt of May; he remembers the 2d of May to have ſeen him with Mr. Burnaby after the Play was over; and that agrees with the other Witneſſes about his being in Burnaby's Company the 2d of May: and he remembers likewiſe, that he himſelf was choſen Reader to the Sodality, but upon Mr. Oates's Importunity, he ſupplied the Place in Mr. Beeſton's room, only with this Reſerve and Condition, That Mr. Beeſton was to be Reader at any time, if Oates failed. And he gives you this particular account, that Oates did read, as he believes, every Sunday and Holiday, from the latter end of March, when he was choſen Reader, to within a Week of his going away; for that he did never read himſelf, as he ſhould have done if Oates had been abſent or failed to read.

We have another Witneſs, and that is Mr. Smith, and he ſwears his being there from Chriſtmas 77 to Midſummer 78, and he remembers particularly as to April and May, becauſe the 21ſt of April he himſelf fell ſick in the College, and went into the Infirmary, and remained there till the 7th of May; and he does remember that Oates viſited him very oft in that time in the Infirmary, and told him Mr. Hilſley was gone away, and Mr. Pool was gone away, and two or three other Particulars, which happened in the College at that time; ſo that there is another Evidence, that is very ſtrong with Circumſtances to confirm the Teſtimony of the reſt; and he gives you a very ſatisfactory Account of it, by ſhewing the Reaſons how he comes to remember theſe things.

Mr. Price, who was our next Witneſs, has given you a Relation all to the ſame purpoſe of Oates's coming there at Chriſtmas, and of his going away, at Midſummer. And he remembers particularly, that Oates was at St. Omers when the Jeſuits went to the Conſult at London; for that there was a Conſult, and at that time, is acknowledged to be true; but not ſuch as he ſays, nor was he there: but he ſays

ſays ſome of the Fathers did call there in the way to England. And at that very time, and after, he ſaw him there. And Mr. Doddington gives you the ſame Account.

Then comes Mr. Gerrard, and he tells you a Story to the ſame purpoſe; how long Oates was there, and when he came. And that the 2d of May he remembers Oates was at the Play; and he remembers the 26th of May, Oates was there, which was the 16th of May Old Stile. And he is ſure Oates was there at that time, for this reaſon, that being the Day whereon he himſelf was confirmed, St. Auguſtine's Day; and Oates was confirm'd with him: and therefore he has reaſon to remember Oates was at St. Omers.

My Lord Gerrard of Bromley was our next Witneſs, and he gives you an account to the ſame purpoſe; and to the general Evidence, in which he confirms the others, he adds this Particular, That Oates uſed to read with a ſingular canting Tone; ſo that he muſt needs remember him, and was ſo remarkable for other things, that he could not be abſent without being miſs'd, which he never was.

Then comes Mr. Morgan, who was there at that time, a Scholar; but he's now a Miniſter of the Church of England; and therefore not liable to Mr. Oates's great Exception of Religion. He confirms what all the Witneſſes ſaid of the Time of Oates's coming, and of the Time of his going away: and particularly he ſwears, That when Mr. Hilſley went away, he was there; when Mr. Pool went away, he was there; and when Mr. Burnaby came thither, he was there. And this is not all, for there is ſomething more remarkable in his Teſtimony; for he tells you particularly he does remember, That upon the 24th of April, Old Stile, the Day, Gentlemen, when Oates ſays he was at the Conſult in London, Oates was then at St. Omers. And the Occaſion of his remembring this, he gives you an account of; for, he tells you, upon reading the Trial of Ireland, where Oates ſwears, That he was here at the Conſult the 24th of April 1678, Old Stile, all the College reflected upon it, and wondered at the Impudence of the Man, that he ſhould dare to ſwear ſuch a thing, when all the College remember'd him to be there all the while. And upon recollection of Circumſtances, he himſelf did particularly recollect his own playing at Ball that very Day, and having toſs'd his Ball over the Wall, he borrow'd Oates's Key to go into the Garden to fetch it: And this was thought of whilſt things were freſh, and every Man remember'd this, or that, or the other thing to be done at ſuch a particular time.

Mr. Arundel, who was another Witneſs, proves the general Teſtimony of the reſt, and agrees in ſome particular things; and all he ſays, is to the ſame purpoſe.

Mr. Chriſtopher Turbervile, he comes and ſwears Oates's being at St Omers the 4th or 5th of May, which is the 24th and 25th of April Old Stile. For that upon Mr. Pool's going away, he changed his Chamber in the College, and ſaw Oates divers Days afterwards in his Chamber, and at the Door; and he knew that he conſtantly read in the Sodality, and that he left particularly the Sunday before he went away, which was about Midſummer 1678.

There was another Gentleman, and that was Mr. Anthony Turbervile, who gives evidence all to the ſame purpoſe; and this Circumſtance goes thorough all the Teſtimony of theſe Perſons, that there's ſcarce any body can come to, or go out of the College, but it is known to all that are there, every Man takes notice of it, 'tis the common Diſcourſe amongſt them; and therefore they give this as the Reaſon of their Belief, That he was there all this while, becauſe they did not remember any thing that ſhould give them occaſion to believe Mr. Oates was away from the College from Chriſtmas till Midſummer, but only one time; and the Remembrance of that does ſhew, that they do really obſerve theſe things, for they could all tell that in January he went to Watton, and ſtaid out one Night.

There is one Witneſs more that is poſitive and particular, and that is Mr. Clavering, and he remembers Oates, by a very remarkable Circumſtance, was at St. Omers at the very time of the Congregation is ſaid to be held in London; for he tells you there came a Perſon to beg Money of him, and there was a Collection made in the Houſe; and this Perſon did deſire to ſpeak with Oates, who was then in the College, and whom it ſeems this Perſon had known in Spain; but Oates did refuſe to ſpeak with him, and did not come down to him. Thus he remembers ſuch an one came there, and when he was there, he was ſent to Oates to deſire him to come down to this Man, and he would not. Ay, but now how is this remember'd to be at the time when the Congregation was held here in England? As to that, he gives this plain and full account, That it muſt be at that very time; for the Scholars did diſcourſe among themſelves, and were reckoning up what he had gotten among them, and what he had gotten at Watton; and finding that it was very inconſiderable that he had gotten at Watton, they talk'd among themſelves what ſhould be the Reaſon, and concluded it was, becauſe the Fathers were gone over to England to the Congregation.

Theſe particular Circumſtances our Witneſſes give you as the Reaſons of their particular Remembrances of the particular Times: But, Gentlemen, you muſt take along with you thoſe general Conſiderations too that are offered, which do affect the whole Time, from Chriſtmas till Midſummer. Firſt, That none can come or go, without being diſcourſed of in the College: Next, that much more Mr. Oates muſt needs be miſſed, than any other, being ſo remarkable a Perſon, as they tell you, that ſcarce any Week paſs'd without his making it remarkable by ſome ridiculous Action or another. They ſay he ſat ſingly by himſelf, at a particular Table, that no Man could come into the Hall, but they muſt ſee him; and therefore, if abſent, muſt needs miſs him. And yet they ſwear they do not ever remember him abſent, but that one Night; and if he had been abſent, they muſt needs have obſerved it, becauſe of all thoſe Circumſtances that have been reckoned up.

Theſe are the Witneſſes, Gentlemen, that we have produced to prove this Charge upon the Defendant, two of whom are brought only to verify Mr. Hilſley's Teſtimony; having heard it from him at that time that he had left Oates at St. Omers, when there was no Thoughts of this Queſtion.

Now among theſe twenty Witneſſes, there are not above two or three at moſt that were at either of the Trials before. They were never produced as Evidence, tho' indeed they proved the ſame thing that was teſtified by others then, but with many other Circumſtances and Particularities that were not before ſpoken of; ſome are now produced that were produced before, and the Reaſon is, becauſe they are themſelves concerned in thoſe

Parti-

Particularities which gave occaſion to the others to remember them.

Gentlemen, after the producing of ſo many Witneſſes, and ſo ſtrong a Proof, what is it that Mr. Oates has produced againſt it? His main Objection to their Teſtimony, is, There were ſeveral that came from St. Omers to teſtify at thoſe former Trials what theſe now ſwear, who were not believed, but I was believed, and the Men were convicted, condemned, and executed upon my Teſtimony: But is that all he has to ſay? No, ſays he, I have likewiſe Witneſſes to offer as a Counter-proof to them, a poſitive Proof that I was here in England at the time they ſwear me to be at St. Omers; and he ſays well; if that be proved, there is an end of the Caſe. Well, what is the Proof? The Witneſſes that he has, have been theſe four, Cicely Mayo, Servant to Sir Richard Barker; Butler his Coachman; Page, another of Sir Richard's Servants; and the Parſon Walker.

The Evidence of Page and Walker, tho' produced laſt by Mr. Oates, yet I crave leave to mention firſt, and ſet them out of the way. Page, he remembers to have ſeen Mr. Oates in a Diſguiſe at Sir Richard Barker's; that is, in grey Cloaths; but he is not certain as to the Time; and he cannot take upon him to ſay what time of the Year, or what Year it was, only he believes it was in May: and therefore that can be no ſufficient Evidence to contradict Witneſſes, that with great Particularity ſpeak to certain times. As for Walker, the Parſon, he ſaid he ſaw him between St. Martin's-Lane and Leiceſter-Fields; but he cannot remember the time when neither: nay, the Remembrance he has of it goes rather to another time, than the time in queſtion; for being aſked what Circumſtance he knew the Time by, he ſaid, it was about a Year and a Quarter before the Plot was diſcovered, which muſt be in April or May 1677, and that will do the Doctor no ſervice at all upon this Queſtion.

Now let us conſider Mrs. Mayo's Teſtimony; and the Oath that ſhe made was this, That when Oates came over into England, ſhe ſaw him at Sir Richard Barker's Houſe the latter end of April, or the beginning of May, and the Week before Whitſuntide. The latter end of April, or the beginning of May, was the firſt time that he came, that ſhe ſaw him; but that he came before, as ſhe heard, but the Coachman only ſaw him, and told her that Oates had been there: but the ſecond time ſhe did ſee him, and he went in and dined there in the Houſe. Sir Richard Barker was not there, but my Lady's Siſter, her Sons and Daughters were there. She ſays, that ſhe ſaw him again a Week before Whitſuntide; that when he came the firſt time he was in grey Cloathes, a white Hat, and a ſhort Perriwig. Afterwards he was in black Clothes, a pretty long Perriwig, not very long, but the Perriwig was brown: and theſe are the Circumſtances ſhe remembers to have ſeen him by.

Now let us ſee what Butler, the Coachman, ſays: He remembers about the beginning of May he ſaw Oates at his Maſter's Houſe in a Diſguiſe; the other ſaid it was the latter end of April, or the beginning of May; but I ſtand not upon that: but this he does ſwear. That the firſt time he ſaw him, Cicely Mayo ſaw him too, that he was then in grey Clothes, a white Hat, but his Hair was cut ſhort, and he had no Perriwig on; afterwards he came in a cinnamon colour'd Coat, and green Ribbons, and a long black Perriwig. This is Butler's Evidence.

Now theſe two People's Evidence are utterly impoſſible to be reconciled, they contradict one another ſo much: Firſt, they contradict one another in this; ſhe ſays, the firſt time he came ſhe did not ſee him, but the Coachman told her he had been there; but he ſwears, That ſhe did at that time look out of the Window into the Yard, and did ſee him as well as he. Another Contradiction is this, ſhe remembers the firſt time he came in grey Clothes, a white Hat, and a ſhort Perriwig; the Coachman ſwears he had no Perriwig on; but his Hair was cut ſhort to his Ears. Then again ſhe ſwears the ſecond time, he was in black Clothes, and an indifferent long Perriwig, and the Perriwig was brown; and the other ſwears he was in cinnamon-colour'd Clothes, and a long Perriwig, and it was a black one. Now thus you ſee the Witneſſes contradict themſelves, and cannot be reconciled to one another.

But take one thing more, which is very conſiderable, wherein ſhe contradicts Mr. Gerrard; for ſhe ſwears he was here a Week before Whitſuntide; that ſhe is ſure of: Now that falls upon the nineteenth Day of May; then upon the ſixteenth Day of May, was the Week before Whitſuntide; now, that is a moſt eminent Day, by the Teſtimony of Mr. Gerrard; for that happens to be the twenty ſixth of May, New Stile, and that was the Day he was confirmed with Mr. Gerrard at St. Omers: And no Man ſure can doubt which of the two Witneſſes is to be believed; and it cannot but be true, that he was there at that time, becauſe ſo remarkable a Circumſtance cannot be forgotten: and yet this Woman ſwears that he was there a Week before Whitſuntide, and that by computation muſt be the Time of his Confirmation. But, Gentlemen, another thing that I offer upon the Teſtimony of theſe Witneſſes, is this: If you will believe it, he himſelf contradicts his own Witneſſes, or they him, and one of them is forſworn: For he has ſworn the Conſult was the twenty fourth of April, and that three or four Days after that was over, he went back with the Fathers to St. Omers: Now this contradicts all that his Witneſſes have ſaid. But he has given himſelf, as he thought, ſome little Latitude; ſays he, the Conſult began the twenty fourth, but it held ſix or ſeven Days longer. We will for this time admit it to be ſo, and give him the ſix Days he requires; and yet after all, it will not come up to the time that his Witneſſes ſpeak to: for to the 24th of April, add ſix days, and that brings us juſt to the laſt Day of April; and then take four Days in May, to make up the three or four Days after the Conſult was over, and we are yet at a great diſtance from the Whitſun Week; for that was the 19th of May, and the Week before muſt be the 12th or 13th, and ſo it is impoſſible to be reconcil'd to Truth, what he and his Witneſſes ſwear; either the Evidence that the Doctor now brings, muſt be a Contradiction to his own former Oath, or his Oath proves they are miſtaken: beſides the Contradiction that is between the Witneſſes themſelves; for they vary in a great many material Circumſtances, which I have before reckon'd up to you.

But, Gentlemen, falſe Witneſſes are very often detected by little Circumſtances, though I muſt needs ſay, theſe are not ſmall ones; for theſe are very remarkable things in themſelves, and great Contradictions to one another, and therefore 'tis impoſſible they both can ſwear true.

There were ſome other Witneſſes that were produced by Mr. Oates formerly upon this Point; one of which was Clay, the Prieſt, and he you hear is contradicted by Mr. Howard's Teſtimony, who not only tells you he was not at his Houſe, when he ſays he was, but ſhews that Clay was miſtaken in point of Time: It was not in May, but in July. But that's not all, we have another Evidence, Gentlemen, to ſhow how this Miſtake comes to paſs, and which will give a great light into this ſort of Practice that has been uſed in this matter; for we have two Witneſſes that give you an account how Oates and Sir William Waller were at the Gate-Houſe with Clay, and there did threaten him, that unleſs he ſwore he dined with Oates, at Mr. Howard's, in May, they knew he was a Prieſt, and he ſhould be hang'd. The Man was ſomewhat cautious at firſt, for truly he knew nothing of the matter; but at laſt, upon condition he might have his Money again that was taken from him, he had been a Rogue formerly, and he did not know what he might do. Now, we find preſently after, that he was in fact brought as a Witneſs; what he ſwore, Mr. Howard tells you, and you have heard him contradicted in that point of Time. For Mr. Howard ſays, it was in July; and then it was agreed that Oates was in England; for our Witneſſes tell you that at Midſummer he came away from St. Omers.

So that, Gentlemen, the Evidence that was formerly produced for him, is not only taken away by poſitive Counter-proof, but there is fixed upon him, with great Infamy, the additional Crime of Subornation, by forcing People to ſwear for him under the Threats of being hanged; and we all know how ſuch People lay under great Fears and Terrors at that time.

There was another Witneſs that was produced formerly for him; but I ſhall not take upon me to repeat all the particular Evidence that has been now given about that Matter. In ſhort, our Objection to that Teſtimony lies thus: That Oates did ſwear in his Narrative, that Smith was a dangerous Man, and employed by the Jeſuits to ſtir up the People againſt the Government; that appears by Oates's own Oath. But it likewiſe appears, that afterwards they were reconciled, and that he gave Smith a Certificate under his Hand, that he was a good Proteſtant, and a good Subject, and about eminent Service for the King. Now we ſee no reaſon hitherto, why Mr. Oates ſhould change his Mind, after having ſworn him ſuch an ill Man, all of a ſudden to be ſo kind to give him his Protection, and ſo advantageous a Character, as that was in that Seaſon. But, Gentlemen, the Myſtery is eaſily unfolded, if we go three or four Days further in time, which brings us to the Trials of Whitebread and Langhorn; it ſeems Mr. Oates was then aware of that, which is now an Objection to his Teſtimony; for it was made an Objection at the firſt Trial of Ireland, That he was not at this Conſult, for he was then actually at St. Omers; but no Witneſſes were there to prove it; but now he was aware that ſome were a coming over, and it concerned him to make ſome good Proof if he could, that really and in truth he was here in London at that time.

And I cannot omit to take notice of what my Lord Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to obſerve and object to him now: It is a wonder a Man ſhould be here in Town ſo long; a Man that had much Acquaintance, as it ſeems he had; a Man that went about freely and publickly, as his own Witneſſes ſay he did, ſhould be ſeen by no body, but theſe few, ſhould not be able to give an Account, by any body, where he lodged, at any one Time in this Interval. Nay, by no Circumſtances that muſt occur to his own knowledge, to be able to ſhew where he lodged, is very ſtrange; though it ſhould be that he did lodge in the Houſes of thoſe that would not come to give Evidence, as he alledges, yet it is almoſt impoſſible, but there muſt be ſome other Circumſtances to prove his being here, beſides the Evidence of the Landlord of the Houſe where he lodged: but he gives no Account where he was lodged, and whom he converſed withal, but theſe People only; and that they ſhould ſee him, who were not his Intimates, and none elſe in the World, is to me one of the moſt ſtrange Things that can be conceived.

Now, Gentlemen, when he has given no manner of Satisfaction, that he was here, and is by twenty Witneſſes ſworn not to be here; what is it that he ſays to all this? Why he doth inſiſt upon it, that his Credit muſt not be now impeached, becauſe that once he had the fortune to be believed, and ſome Men have died and ſuffered for it; as if no Perjury were to be puniſhed, but that which is unſucceſsful; whereas the reaſon why Perjury is taken notice of in the Temporal Courts, is only becauſe of the Miſchief that it may do. Shall it then be no Crime when a Man has done the Miſchief, when the fear of that Miſchief was the ground of making it a Crime? That is a moſt monſtrous way of arguing. And yet this would Mr. Oates have look like an Argument, that becauſe he has been believed in his falſe Oaths, and Men have ſuffered by his Perjury, and he has been ſucceſsful in his Crime, that Succeſs has protected his Wickedneſs from Puniſhment. This I confeſs is a new way of arguing; and ſuch as none but Mr. Oates could certainly have invented.

But, Gentlemen, to contradict this, we have ſhown you, that as he has had the fortune to be believed; ſo he has likewiſe had the fortune to be diſbelieved. For there have been produced as many Records of Acquittals, where he was an Evidence, as there have been produced Convictions upon his Teſtimony; ſo that he has been as often diſbelieved as believed.

Whither then does he betake himſelf next? He has called a great many Witneſſes to give you, as Evidence for him, an Account what Opinions at that time the Houſes of Parliament, the Courts of Juſtice, and the Juries had of his Evidence; and then inſiſts upon it, that now to call his Credit in queſtion, is to arraign the Juſtice of the Nation, the Wiſdom of both Houſes of Parliament that believed him, the Honeſty of the Juries that convicted thoſe whom he accuſed, and the Integrity and Underſtanding of the Judges who were learned, wiſe, and juſt Men; and with great Earneſtneſs he aſks the Queſtion, why now at this time of day ſhould this be called in queſtion, which received ſo much Credit and Approbation ſo long ago, by the good Opinion that all ſorts of Men had of it at that time? And now to queſtion this, he would have thought to be a caſting a Blot upon the Wiſdom of the Nation, and an arraigning the Juſtice of it; when, if the thing be duly conſidered, the not puniſhing this heinous Offence with the utmoſt Severity that the Law will allow of, now, that theſe Circumſtances appear to make it plain and evident, would be a greater piece of Injuſtice and Reproach, rather to our Nation, than any ways a Reflection on the Juſtice of it.

Gentlemen, when we conſider the Circumſtances of this Caſe now, I do verily think it will appear to be a very ſtrange and wonderful thing to us, that ever any Man ſhould have believed him. And it is a ſtrange Conſideration to reflect upon, to think what Credit he had at that time. But withal, conſider, Gentlemen, could any one imagine, that it were poſſible for any Man on Earth to become ſo impudent, as to dare to expoſe himſelf before the High Court of Parliament, the great Courts of Juſtice, and there tell a moſt infamous Lye for the taking away the Lives of Men? The greatneſs of the Attempt, was a great Inducement to the Belief of it, becauſe no Man could be preſumed to dare the doing of ſuch a thing, if he had not a Foundation of Truth to build upon. And when he had thus made his Diſcovery, and that of ſuch a nature too, a moſt horrid, bloody, and traiterous Conſpiracy to murder the King, to overturn the Government, to maſſacre all the Proteſtants in the Kingdom, and to deface the very Name of the Proteſtant Religion; what was more natural than that the Parliament ſhould take all imaginable Care to prevent the accompliſhment of ſo great a Miſchief? And conſider too how much eaſier it was for him to relate his Evidence in a continued Story, than afterwards it was to maintain it, when it came to be examin'd and oppoſed by them that were accuſed, who beſt knew wherein, and by what means to prove him falſe.

Gentlemen, the Care the Parliament took to diſappoint any Deſigns of this Nature, and the means they uſed for the Security of the King and Kingdom, and the Preſervation of our Religion and Lives, (which I cannot but obſerve, was previous to the Trial of any one Offender, that was tried and convicted upon this Evidence) muſt needs put the whole Nation under great Apprehenſions of Danger and make the way much eaſier for him to be believed, as by ſad Experience we found it did. Under theſe Circumſtances came thoſe Men to be tried, with this further, (as we cannot now but think) that there were ill Men at work, that laboured to improve thoſe Fears and Jealouſies, that had already poſſeſs'd Men's Minds; the Wonder then will be the leſs, if Men under ſuch Diſadvantages, tried by Men under thoſe Fears and Apprehenſions, had the ill fortune to be convicted. But when Men had a little overcome their Fears, and began to conſider his Evidence more calmly, the Scene was changed, Oates loſt his Credit, and the Men were all acquitted. Nor is this Proſecution any Reflection on the Proteſtant Religion, whoſe Cauſe he falſly aſſumes to himſelf. No, Gentlemen, the Proteſtant Religion had no ſhare in that Invention. It needs not the ſupport of a Lye, no, not the moſt plauſible Lye, much leſs of one ſo infamous as this does now appear to be. It is rather a Vindication of our Religion, to puniſh ſuch Offenders as they deſerve, and the proper way to maintain the Juſtice of the Nation, and wipe off that Reproach this Man's Perjury has brought upon it.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been very long, and it cannot be expected after ſo much time has been ſpent in this Cauſe, and ſuch a difference of Teſtimony, and eſpecially conſidering that the Teſtimony has met with frequent interruptions, and I may ſay, ſome Part of it, delivered in great Confuſion, it cannot be thought or imagin'd, I ſay, that I ſhould be able to remind you of the ſeveral Particulars that concern this Caſe, and may be neceſſary to be obſerved about it. But, Gentlemen, I am ſure, by the Knowledge I have of moſt of you, you are Perſons of great Underſtanding; ſo that what may be omitted by me, I queſtion not, but your own Abilities will ſupply. I confeſs I am much ſhortned in my Labour, by the pains that Mr. Sollicitor has taken to ſum up the Evidence to you, and without all doubt, has done it with all Faithfulneſs to his Maſter, and with great Right to himſelf. I could not hear much of what he did ſay; but you who were nearer and did hear all, which I could not do, your Judgments will direct you to lay that Weight upon it, which it deſerves, and which the Law will allow; for, Gentlemen, I am bound to tell you, that you are to lay no weight upon any Allegations on the one ſide, or on the other, or what is obſerved to you by the Court, further than is ſupported by the Teſtimony that has been offered.

Now, Gentlemen, I think it not amiſs for me (before ſuch time as I enter upon the Conſideration of the Particulars, and reminding you what I take to be Evidence in this Caſe, and what not) to clear one Point, that this Perſon, Oates, the Defendant, againſt whom this Indictment of Perjury is brought, has endeavoured to inſinuate, on purpoſe to gain himſelf a Reputation; which if he could acquire this way, would add a greater Reproach to the Juſtice of the Nation, than it has contracted already, by giving too much Credit to ſuch profligate Wretches, as have too lately appeared among us. The Objection he makes and inſiſts ſo much upon; ſays he, I was believed very much before, I can produce you the Opinions of the Judges, that declared themſelves very well ſatisfied with my Evidence, and the Verdicts of Juries, two or three, that convicted Men upon my Teſtimony; and not only that, but here were likewiſe three or four Parliaments that did not only believe that Teſtimony (or rather Narrative, for I cannot call that Teſtimony, which was given before the Houſe of Commons) that I gave, but did declare their Satisfaction of the Truth of what I ſaid; which Satisfaction and Belief of theirs did produce Thanks from both Houſes to me for giving this Teſtimony.

But all this while, what Mr. Sollicitor ſaid upon this Point, is a plain and a full Anſwer to it: if in caſe upon a ſudden Information, the King, the Parliament, the Courts of Law, and Juries, were ſurpriz'd into this Belief, as not imagining there could be a pack of ſuch Villains, that could be wound up to that height, as theſe Fellows have been; that there could be ſuch an horrid Impoſtor, as this Fellow, that ſhould make ſuch Attempts, unleſs there had been ſome Truth in it.

Therefore the ſurprize of the thing, at that time might obtain a Belief; but God forbid, that that Belief, which was ſo obtained, ſhould protect the Party believed, from being call'd in queſtion for the falſhood of that Teſtimony, which was the ground of that Belief. It was hardly credible that any Perſon could be ſo wicked as to declare ſuch impudent Falſities as theſe; but, God forbid, that we ſhould continue longer under the ſame blindneſs and deluſion, the whole Matter is now laid open and detected. Therefore, Gentlemen, if you are ſatisfied in your Conſciences, and do believe upon the Teſtimony and Evidence that has been given here this day, that thoſe very things that were ſo much believed before, were credited upon the Surprize prize of a ſudden Diſcovery, or the Boldneſs of the Undertaking, yet now do plainly appear to be falſe; then be it, I ſay, upon your Conſciences, if you let this Falſhood go unpuniſhed. It is a Charge upon us who are upon our Oaths as Judges, and who muſt anſwer to the great Judge of all the World for our Judgments; and 'tis likewiſe a Charge upon you that are ſworn to try this Cauſe, and muſt anſwer, as well as we, for what you do in it, not to have regard to any thing that was done before upon that hurry and ſurprize, but ſeriouſly to weigh and conſider what is ſworn now, and from thence make a Concluſion, whether you are not ſatisfied that innocent Blood has been ſpilt by the means of this Fellow. Nay, in this Caſe, 'tis a contracting of much more Guilt than ordinary, as it is Murder done under the Forms of Law, and common Methods of Juſtice. That Men ſhould take away the Lives of their Fellow-Creatures, by Perjury and falſe Accuſations, is of ſuch dreadful conſequence, that if the Juſtice of the Nation ſhall be afraid to have ſuch matters detected, there would be an end of all the Security we have of our Lives, Liberties, and whatſoever is dear to us.

Gentlemen, the Juſtice of the Nation lies under a very great Reproach abroad, for this particular thing; and we muſt be, all of us, that have any Concern for the Honour and Good of our Country, uneaſy, till this matter be thoroughly ſearched into, and impartially determined; and I take it to be a Caſe of the greateſt Importance to the Settlement of the Kingdom, for the Credit of our Laws, for the Honour and Juſtice of our Kingdom, that ever came in Judgment in any of our Courts of Juſtice. And therefore as you reſpect your own Conſciences, and the Obligation of that Oath you are now under, and as you would be thought to bear any regard to the Peace, Honour, and Good of your Country, take care to examine ſtrictly and impartially into the Merits of this Cauſe, and weigh the Evidence which has been given on all ſides: be not at all diſmayed with the Apprehenſion of Clamour or Calumny, from any ſort of People whatſoever, for doing your Duty; neither be led away by the Inſinuations of what was believed formerly; for you hear the Reaſon which might make Oates be believ'd then; but it is incumbent upon you to enquire, whether you have not ſufficient reaſon to be ſatisfied what the Truth now is.

And, Gentlemen, I take my ſelf to be the more obliged to take ſome pains in the preſſing a ſerious and impartial Conſideration of theſe things upon you, becauſe I cannot but ſay, my Blood does curdle, and my Spirits are raiſed, that after the Diſcoveries made, I think, to the ſatisfaction of all that have attended this Day, to ſee a Fellow continue ſo impudent, as to brazen it out, as he has done this Day; and that there ſhould appear no more ſhame and confuſion than what was ſeen in the Face of that monſtrous Villain that ſtood but now at the Bar. The pretended Infirmity of his Body made him remove out of Court, but the Infirmity of his depraved Mind, the Blackneſs of his Soul, the Baſeneſs of his Actions ought to be look'd upon with ſuch Horror and Deteſtation, as to think him unworthy any longer to tread upon the Face of God's Earth. You'll pardon my warmth, I hope; for it is impoſſible that ſuch things ſhould come before any honeſt Man, and not have ſome extraordinary Influence upon him.

Gentlemen, As to the Merits of the Cauſe, you have the poſitive Proof of many Witneſſes, whoſe Teſtimony I ſhall by and by, as well as I can, repeat to you; but, pray you, firſt give me leave to obſerve ſomewhat, as to ſome Points that have been ſtarted at the Bar, as, Whether a Papiſt can be a Witneſs? Now, ſuppoſe all theſe Perſons that come here to teſtify this Matter againſt the Defendant, were Papiſts, as they are not, except you can take it upon your Oaths and Conſciences, that all theſe Men are guilty of voluntary and wilful Perjury, you muſt find the Defendant guilty.

As to their Difference in Religion, which Oates ſo much hung upon, I muſt tell you, every Papiſt or Roman Catholick, call them how you will, except the contrary be made appear by a legal Exception, I mean ſuch as would take off the Teſtimony of one that were not a Papiſt, is as good a Witneſs in a Court of Juſtice, as any Proteſtant whatſoever: we are not come here to controvert Points of Religion, but to try a bare Matter of Fact; ſo that all that ſtuff that you have heard here this day from the Defendant, and thoſe Inſinuations that he made about their Religion, on purpoſe to caſt dirt and filth upon all the Teſtimony that they have brought againſt him, muſt ſignify nothing with you at all. If in caſe ſuch Doctrine happen to prevail as he has this day preached, then it is in the power of any Villain to ſwear any miſchief whatſoever againſt a Roman Catholick, and that Roman Catholick has no way to vindicate himſelf, nor to make the Truth appear. We have no ſuch Exceptions to Witneſſes in our Law; every Man, till it is made to appear, that his Credit is forfeited, may and ought to be received as a Witneſs to give Teſtimony in any Cauſe: ſo that all that matter is of no import at all.

And, Gentlemen, I am the rather minded to hint this unto you, becauſe he has inſinuated ſomething out of the Trials of Grove and Pickering, and Ireland, which was in December, in the Year 1677, at which Trial Whitebread and Fenwick, who had pleaded to the ſame Indictment, were brought on to Trial; but becauſe there was but one Witneſs againſt them, the Court diſcharged them for that time, and they came not again to Trial till the Month of June or July thereafter, when they were convicted and executed. Now between that time of Ireland's Trial, and the time when Whitebread and the reſt came on to Trial again, ſays Oates, they had ſufficient time to have brought all their Witneſſes from St. Omers, to teſtify this buſineſs of my being there, having notice by the former Trial, what Evidence was againſt them: but all the Witneſſes they did bring, which were about fifteen or ſixteen, were not ſufficient to countervail the Teſtimony that Oates gave of his being here in Town; and thereupon they were convicted, condemned, and afterwards (I am ſorry to ſay it) executed.

This is the Objection he makes, but at the ſame time I muſt repeat what I ſaid before, when ſuch a diſmal Story as this was told, when he had the confidence to relate it before, in the Houſes of Parliament, and there obtained Credit; no wonder if, in that hurry, all of that Perſuaſion were look'd upon with an evil Eye; and the Conviction of thoſe that were at that time accuſed were too eaſy.

We muſt remember the Apprehenſions ſome were under of our Religion being to be ſubverted, our Government to be deſtroyed, our King to be murdered, our Throats to be cut by the Papiſts, to that height, that this very Fellow, Oates, was ſo much credited, that all other People almoſt were below him, and greater Reſpect ſhewn to him, than to the Branches of the Royal Family. Nay, it was come to that degree of Folly, to give it no worſe Name, that in publick Societies, to the Reproach and Infamy of them be it ſpoken, this profligate Villain was careſſed, was drunk to, and ſaluted, by the Name of the Saviour of the Nation. O prodigious Madneſs! That ſuch a Title as that was, ſhould ever be given to ſuch a proſtitute Monſter of Impiety, as this is!

Good God, whether were we running, when many eaſy People were ſo ſtrangely wrought upon by this Impoſtor, and when the villanous and black Deſigns of ſome evil Inſtruments amongſt us, could prevail ſo far, as to deceive almoſt a whole Nation into the Belief of ſo horrid a Falſhood; even at the ſame time that a hidden Treaſon too deeply contriv'd was carried on amongſt us? But, God be thanked, was not too lately diſcovered. The Conſpirators had a fair Game of it, whilſt this Fellow was believed, and they needed no other means to accompliſh their Deſign: But when he was found falſe, and the pretended Plot had loſt its Credit in the World, what is their next Step? Why, then they enter into that black and bloody Conſpiracy, from which it hath pleaſed God lately to deliver us.

I ſpeak this the rather, becauſe I know there are in my Eye ſeveral Perſons, whoſe Fears of Popery made them give credit to ſuch Villains as theſe before: but when it pleaſed God to open their Eyes, and the falſe Miſt vaniſh'd, they found a real Conſpiracy againſt the Perſons of that Bleſſed King, lately dead, and of our Gracious Sovereign, now living, carried on under the pretence of that falſe, but ſo much credited Diſcovery; and now God be thanked, all our Eyes are open. And I hope, as we are ſecured from what we ſo vainly dreaded, ſo we ſhall not be afraid to have Villany detected, and the greateſt Mark of Infamy that can be put upon it.

Yes, Gentlemen, there was a Conſult, and there was a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of our King, our Government, and our Religion: Not a Conſult at the White-Horſe in the Strand, but a Cabal and Aſſociation of perfidious Rebels and Traitors, who had a mind to embroil us in Blood and Confuſion; but, God be thanked, it had not its deſired Effect. The ſame ſort of Villains were Parties in this Conſpiracy, that had too great a hand in the late great Rebellion, which we to this day feel the ſmart of, and they had a mind to make uſe of the like Inſtruments, as they did before, to bring us into the like Miſery, as we were before involv'd in.

And is it not a prodigious thing, to have ſuch Actions as theſe to-day defended in a Court of Juſtice, with that Impudence and Unconcernedneſs, as tho' he would challenge even God Almighty to puniſh his Wickedneſs, and blaſphemouſly bleſſes God, that he has liv'd to do ſuch wonderful Service to the Proteſtant Religion; and is ſo obſtinate, in his Villany, as to declare he would venture his Blood for the Confirmation of ſo impious a Falſhood: and indeed, to ſpeak the truth, he makes no great Venture in it; for when he had pawn'd his immortal Soul, by ſo perjur'd a Teſtimony, he may very eaſily proffer the venturing of his vile Carcaſs to maintain it?

Gentlemen, Having thus ſaid, (and I could not forbear ſaying of it) give me leave to put you in mind of what lies before you now to be tried. Firſt, this Indictment takes notice, that there was an Indictment taken before the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery at Hicks's-Hall, of High-Treaſon againſt Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, and that Indictment and the whole Record is proved to you by Swift. For I muſt tell you as I go along, what Proofs there are all of the Particulars, and you, upon conſideration of all that is alledged, are to be Judges what is ſufficient Proof to convict the Defendant of the Crime that is laid to him; which is wilful and corrupt Perjury. The Indictment, Gentlemen, ſets forth the Oath that Oates did make at Ireland's Trial, and then avers it to be falſe: For the Oath that he did take, that ſtands thus, That he did ſwear he was preſent at a Conſult, held at the White-Horſe Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 1678. That he did ſwear, that it was there reſolved to murder the late King: How that that Reſolution was carried by him from Chamber to Chamber, that is, to Whitebread's and Fenwick's, and Ireland's Chambers, and ſaw them ſign this Reſolution there: And the Aſſignment of the Perjury, is, that he was not preſent at any Conſult, 'tis not that there was not any ſuch Conſult, tho' it appears by the Evidence that there was none ſuch, but that he was not preſent at any Conſult at all held there at that time.

Now, that he did make ſuch an Oath, is proved by a worthy Gentleman, Mr. Foſter; a Gentleman known to you all that live in the City of London; and he did truly make that Remark in the beginning of his Teſtimony, that any honeſt Man in his place would have done, that he was one of thoſe unfortunate Men, that tried Mr. Ireland; for tho' a Man do go according to his Conſcience, as to be ſure there is no queſtion to be made of it, but all theſe Jury-men did in finding that Verdict; yet when I come to find, that the Evidence upon which I convicted thoſe Men, is detected to be falſe, and that upon my Verdict the Perſons were executed; tho' no Guilt of their Blood is really contracted by me, yet I cannot but think my ſelf unfortunate, that I was, tho' innocently, an Inſtrument of their Death; and there is never an one of you, but would have thought your ſelves unfortunate, if you had convicted Men upon ſuch a Teſtimony, which tho' you believed then, yet afterwards you ſhould have reaſon to conclude was falſe. And yet Oates would have you think, that becauſe they believed him when he was a Villain, and not known to be ſo, you muſt believe him, notwithſtanding his Villany is now diſcovered; for that is all the Argument this learned Doctor has a mind to impoſe upon you by.

Gentlemen, Mr. Sollicitor has been very particular, in giving an Account of the whole Evidence, and then it comes to this, which is the natural Queſtion in the Caſe; Whether upon the Teſtimonies that have been given to you, there does remain ſo much as a Doubt, what Verdict you ought to give; for I confeſs, were it a thing in the leaſt doubtful, Matters of Perjury are ſo nice and tender, that we and you ought to be cautious how you convict People for Perjury in doubtful Matters; but if it be a thing without doubt, and plainly evident, that there was a Verdict thereupon, it adds to the Guilt, becauſe the Juſtice of the Nation is impoſed upon; the God of Heaven deliver every honeſt Man's Soul and Conſcience from ſuch Guilt. For my part, I would not for the Univerſe have the leaſt Guilt of innocent Blood lie upon me.

Then, Gentlemen, to prove what Oates ſwore is not true, you have no leſs than twenty-two Witneſſes, that ſwear directly he was not here in London the the 24th of April 1678. But it may be that it is not ſuch a poſitive Teſtimony as the Law requires to prove a Perjury: but then to ſwear directly that he was in another place at that time, is a poſitive Contradiction to his Evidence; and this has been teſtified by the Oaths of twenty-two Perſons, againſt the Credit of whoſe Teſtimony there is no Objection at all really made, but only Impudence; and that Shadow of an Objection, they are all Papiſts, and I am a Proteſtant: and truly a wonderful Credit it is, I muſt needs ſay, for the Proteſtant Religion to have ſuch a learned and pious Supporter, as Mr. Oates, to be of that Perſuaſion; but it is certain there was a Judas amongſt the twelve Apoſtles, and there are Raſcals of all Perſuaſions. And truly I take it makes never the more for his Advantage, nor the Honour of our Church, that he is pleaſed to call himſelf by that Name, which he, and ſuch as he, have brought into ſome Scandal and Reproach, by ſetting themſelves up, as the great Pillars of it; but we know Dr. Oates has been very liberal to himſelf, he has given himſelf Baptiſm, and given himſelf the Doctor's Degree, and now he gives himſelf the Title of the Reforing Proteſtant, Mr. Oates. We have Proteſtant Shoe-makers, and Proteſtant Joiners, and Proteſtant Atheiſts, and all ſorts of true Proteſtant Raſcals; but it becomes us and you to aſſert the Honour of our Religion, by diſowning any Fellowſhip with ſuch Villains, or their Actions.

Gentlemen, the Method that was taken, gives you an exact account in point of time, as to this whole Buſineſs. Firſt, ſays Mr. Hilſley, I left him, in time the 23d of April New Stile, at St. Omers, and I am ſure I ſaw him there then, which is the 13th Old Stile; the 24th of April New Stile, which is the 14th Old Stile, I came from St. Omers, I did not ſee him there that Morning, but I my ſelf came to Calais, it being Sunday, and I ſtaid there till Sunday in the Afternoon, and all Night. I came on Monday in the Afternoon to take water at Calais, and from thence went to Dover. And from thence the next Day I went towards London; but I ſtaid four or five Days by the way before I came to London; but then there is this Circumſtance that you muſt take along with you, Gentlemen, that at this time, one Mr. Burnaby was coming from London, and going to St. Omers, and met with Mr. Hilſley in his way towards London: ſays Hilſley, I came afterwards to Town, and that was upon the Monday following, which happens to be the 21ſt or 22d of April, our Stile; but this I do remember very particularly, which makes his Teſtimony to be true, and not dreſſed up for this occaſion; ſays he, I told one Osbourn at that time, that we had a pretty Fellow at St. Omers, that went ſometimes by the Name of Lucy, and ſometimes by the Name of Oates, a Miniſter of the Church of England; and there he comes and gives an account of his ridiculous childiſh Actions, and what a remarkable Fellow he was; and this, ſays he, I told to Osbourn.

Now, to make this good, you have one Mr. Dorrel, who tells you there happened a Diſcourſe, where he was preſent, between his Mother and Mr. Osbourn, about Religion; and amongſt other things Osbourn did ſay, Mr. Hilſley had told him he left Oates at St. Omers when he came away from thence; and Mr. Osbourn, he comes and ſays, I remember I did tell Mr. Dorrel and his Mother, at that time that Mr. Hilſley did tell me this Story: ſo that here are theſe two Witneſſes which ſupport Mr. Hilſley in that Circumſtance of the time of his coming away, and his Relation of Oates being left behind him, and that this was related about the 21ſt or 22d of April.

Burnaby is the next Perſon that was produced, and he ſwears he met Hilſley by Sittingburn; and he happens to ſet out for St. Omers the 18th of April, our Stile, and to come thither to St. Omers the 21ſt; and he ſwears poſitively, that he was there the 21ſt, 22d, 23d, and was there the 25th Day of April, our Stile; and he does poſitively affirm, that all thoſe Days he ſaw Oates there at St. Omers; that Oates intruded into his Company at his firſt coming; and that he and all the other Scholars wondered at the Confidence of the Man; and he particularly remembers that he was with him at a publick Entertainment that was there the 25th: and if ſo, then it is impoſſible that what Oates has ſworn of his being at the Conſult the 24th of April, our Stile, can be true. And except you can imagine Mr. Oates to fly from St. Omers the 24th Day in the Morning, and be at the Conſult and back again at Night, which is more than he would have believed, becauſe he ſwears the contrary, you muſt conclude that what he ſwore was falſe.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Pool, and he comes and ſays, he was there at St. Omers, and he came over from thence the 25th of April, and that was the Day after Oates ſwears the Conſult of the Plot to be here; and all the reſt of the Witneſſes do directly ſwear, That at the time that Pool went from thence, Oates was there: ſo that the Teſtimony of Pool is fully and poſitively confirmed; and Pool gives you a reaſon why he came over, which was the Death of a Brother of his, and upon a Proſpect of an Eſtate he came into England, which likewiſe is a reaſonable Circumſtance why he ſhould remember the time, becauſe he had ſuch Inducement to come over hither.

The next, Gentlemen, is one Thornton, and he comes to the Month of May, to the 1ſt and 2d of May their Stile, which was the 21ſt and 22d of April, our Stile; and particularly he is ſure Oates was there upon the 22d of April, Our Stile, that is, the 2d of May, their Stile. For, ſays he, there was an Action or Play of the Scholars; and I can tell you how I remember Oates was there, Oates had a mind to have a place to ſee the Play, which he had no Pretence or Title to; and he had a Scuffle with ſomebody about it; and therefore I remember by that Token, that he was there at that time.

Now, Gentlemen, it is not eaſy to be imagined, that ſix or ſeven Men ſhould agree in their Teſtimony in all thoſe Circumſtances, which in themſelves are but minute; yet when offered as Reaſons to induce Men's Remembrance, muſt be allowed as good Reaſons; and yet this is to be thought but a made Story. If Sir Richard Barker's Coach-man, and Mrs. Mayo had had any ſuch Circumſtances to ſupport their Teſtimony, they would have had much more Credit.

Then there is one Conway; and it is very obſervable what he ſpeaks of; for he was there all the while that they ſay Oates was there, and he gives you an account that he ſaw him with Burnaby the firſt time he came over, and agrees with Burnaby in this, that he wonder'd much at his Confidence and did think that he was very well known to him before: He ſwears Oates came in thither about the beginning of December 77, and he was not abſent, ſays he and ſeveral more, any one Night, except in January once at Watton, till he went away in June 78. Nay, they are ſo preciſe in their Memory for very good Reaſons, becauſe they are ſo regular in their Societies, and keep a ſtrict Order, each has his fixed Place in the Refectory, where all the Socii or the Members of the College do meet; and becauſe this Fellow was an old Fellow, older than the reſt, and likewiſe was a Dunce, therefore he was ſet at the Dunce-Table in every body's View, becauſe he was a Blockhead, and too old to keep company with the Boys: ſo that though perhaps one of thoſe young Fellows in a mixt Society may eſcape the View, and be abſent without being miſſed, yet remarkable Mr. Oates is not ſo eaſily forgotten, that us'd to ſit by himſelf. And as that noble Lord, my Lord Gerrard of Bromley ſays, he has a particular Face, and a particular Tone; and there was more reaſon to remark him than any other, both upon the account of his Perſon and of his Actions: ſo that I muſt needs ſay indeed, it is not a downright and poſitive Swearing, but their Teſtimony is given with deliberation and recollection of ſuch particular Circumſtances, as may reaſonably induce any unprejudic'd Perſon to give credit to it.

June

The next Witneſs, Gentlemen, is Haggerſtone, whoſe Evidence is wonderful particular, and very material as to the Circumſtances that accompany it. For you are to obſerve, that in theſe Colleges ſome are of the Sodality, and ſome are not; and ſome are of ſuch and ſuch Claſſes or Forms, and others of other. Now this Gentleman and Mr. Oates were of the ſame Form, and he does particularly remember that he was ſetting up for a Preacher, as he has an excellent knack that way; and he tells you, how ridiculous he made the late King in a Sermon; that he halted between two Opinions, and there ran a Stream of Popery between his Legs; and ſuch like precious Suff he vented. And to fix it to be about the ſame time that is now in queſtion, he ſays, he particularly remembers it was when he was Reader, when Mr. Oates was, it ſeems, the Buffoon to the Society, or, as I may call him, the Jack-pudding to the College, that uſed to make them Sport, and was guilty of ſo many ridiculous Things, that they could not but put particular Remarks upon him.

Next, I take notice, that this Perſon ſays, there were two Perſons, Williams and Marſh, that were qualified to give Suffrages in the Congregation, that is, they were paſt eighteen Years ſtanding, and did go over: For that there was a Conſult, is not denied, nor that it was in London, nor that it was upon the 24th of April; but they ſay, it was a Triennial Meeting, which they us'd to have once in three Years for the choice of ſome Officers to manage the Affairs of the Society; as for the choice of a Provincial, and other Perſons that they were to ſend upon their Errands, in order to the ſupport of their Society: ſo that under the Colour and Countenance of what was in itſelf ordinary and uſual, and that happened to be at that time, Oates, who had heard ſomewhat of it, and that it was the 24th of April, and that ſuch and ſuch were to be there, he upon that Hearſay, as ſhould ſeem at St. Omers, does feign and contrive this pretended Conſpiracy.

The next is one Beeſton; and it is very material too that he ſwears: For beſides what he teſtifies, That from the time of his coming, which was in December 77, he was not abſent till the 23d of June, when he went away; and for the Time in queſtion, he very well remembers his being there, by this Circumſtance: Says he, I was choſen to be Reader of the Sodality in the Month of March, but then Oates comes and gets the Office out of my Hands; but ſtill with me there was that Benefit reſerved, that if he ſhould at any time fail of reading there upon a Sunday or a Holy-day, I was then to have read, and to have ſupplied his Place. Says he, I was there from March, till the time Oates went away in June; and Oates read there that very Sunday before the time in June that he went away. And I am ſure I heard him read every time; and in caſe he had not read every time; I muſt have read in his abſence: But I did not read at all during that time.

Now, Gentlemen, when a Man is to ſucceed or to ſupply the Abſence of another in an Office that is peculiar as to the Charge incumbent upon the Officer, and conſiderable as to the Profit of it, that muſt needs make an impreſſion upon the Mind, and give a Man a more exact remembrance of the Thing; and therefore I recommend it particularly to your Obſervation.

The next is one Mr. Smith, and he ſays, he ſaw Oates there all the time: And as to one part of it, when he himſelf was in the Infirmary, Oates went to viſit him every two or three Days; nay, and about ſuch a time in May, ſays he, which was about the beginning of May, Oates being then in the Infirmary, not well, the Doctor and he had a pretty Dialogue together, and Oates ſpoke falſe Latin to the Doctor, for he ſaid, Si placeat Dominatio veſtra, in the beginning of his Complement: This he did particularly ſay was the Expreſſion that this excellent Scholar uſed to the Phyſician at his firſt application to him, and all the whole College took notice of that Piece of his Learning.

The next is one Price, and he tells you, he was there all the time that the others ſpeak of; he remembers him very well, and particularly ſays, I am ſure Oates was there the 11th of May N. S. which will be the firſt of May O. S. becauſe, ſays he, I know he was ſoundly beaten that day, upon a quarrel that he had there. This particularly he ſpeaks to, beſides his remembrance of the other Circumſtances in concurrence with the former Witneſſes.

Mr. Doddington ſwears the ſame, and Mr. Gerrard alſo ſwears the ſame, with that other particular Circumſtance that Mr. Sollicitor repeated to you, which was of Oates's being there upon the Day of Confirmation, the 26th of May N. S. the 16th of May O. S. and he is ſure of it, becauſe he was confirmed along with him, and therefore it is impoſſible he ſhould forget it: And my Lord Gerrard, who was next, gives this reaſon upon his remembrance of all the fore-mentioned Particulars, that he always took ſpecial notice of the Man for his canting Tone, his Phyſiognomy, and remarkable Behaviour.

Then there is Mr. Morgan, who is no Papiſt, but a Miniſter of the Church of England; now Mr. Oates was angry with all the reſt, becauſe they were Catholicks; but what has he to ſay to Mr. Morgan, who is a Proteſtant? Why the truth is, there are none of them to be believed, becauſe they ſwear againſt him, and really he ought to be permitted to give that reaſon, or it is like to go very hard with him; for if in caſe you believe but a third part of the Teſtimony that has been given, it is enough to do his Work.

But what ſays Mr. Morgan? Truly he comes up to the 24th of April particularly, and he tells you how he remembers it; and the firſt occaſion he had to look into it was, they being all ſurprized at St. Omers at what Oates had ſworn, and Mr. Morgan recollecting with himſelf, did remember that very Day he was playing at Ball within the College, and happened to toſs his Ball over the Wall into the Garden, and not being able to recover it any other way, he ſpied Oates walking and looking into his Book, and therefore he deſired him to lend him his Key, and by the help of that, he went in and fetched his Ball; and this was the very Day that Oates ſwore he was here.

Mr. Arundel ſays the ſame: The two Turberviles ſay the ſame; and one of them is poſitive to have ſeen him there, either the 24th or 25th, or 23d and 24th of April O. S. which is the 3d and 4th, or 4th and 5th of May N. S. and if it were either of theſe Days, it cannot be poſſible he ſhould be here at the Conſult.

The next is Mr. Clavering, and I cannot but particularly take notice of what he has ſworn: He ſays Mr. Oates was there all the time that the reſt ſpeak of; but it ſeems particularly about the time of the Congregation in London: There comes in a Stranger that was poor, and this Gentleman, Mr. Clavering, made a Collection for him: and it was talked of in the College as the reaſon why he had not Succeſs in his Collection, becauſe the Fathers were gone to the Congregation. Nay, and yet farther ſays he, I do remember particularly that Mr. Williams and Mr. Marſh did go over to the Congregation, but Oates did not; for I do remember when Williams and Marſh came back again, I had ſome Diſcourſe with Mr. Oates, about the Congregation: He came to me, and deſired to know of me what account I was able to give of the Matter of that Meeting after the Conſult was over. Now had Mr. Oates been there, and been a Perſon of that great Truſt that he had ſworn himſelf into, he needed not ſure have aſked Mr. Clavering at St. Omers, what the Buſineſs of the Conſult was at London, where he himſelf had been, but the other had not.

There is, beſides Mr. Copley, another Witneſs, Mr. Cooke, that ſpeaks particularly of the 30th of April, that he was ſure Oates was there then, becauſe of the Proceſſion, and becauſe he walked by himſelf in it; and Wright the laſt Witneſs gives a general Account, but ſpeaks to no particular time.

And now, Gentlemen, after all this Evidence, viva voce, you muſt give me leave to hint Teſtimonium Rei, an improbable Oath was that which Oates owns he made, if it be conſidered in all its Parts. Can any Man believe that fifty Perſons ſhould meet together in a Tavern in London, and theſe fifty Perſons ſhould come to a Reſolution to kill the King and ſubvert the Government, and alter the Religion; and that this Conſultation being drawn up in the Tavern (for ſo he ſwears it was) they ſhould ſever themſelves into leſſer Clubs and Companies, and take care that none ſhould ſign when they were altogether and among themſelves, but muſt have it carried up and down from one Man's Chamber to another, and find no body to truſt with this Affair, that, if diſcovered, muſt ſubject them to preſent Deſtruction, and ruin their whole Party, but only Mr. Oates, who was none of their own Order, nor does appear to be of ſuch Credit amongſt them? Can you believe any Men ſhould be ſo void of Senſe and Reaſon, that of fifty together, and thoſe reputed as ſubtile as any ſort of Men whatſoever, there ſhould not be one Man of common Underſtanding, that ſhould take care for a more rational Management of ſo great and hazardous an Undertaking? When they were met together, and might have diſpatched it in a quarter of an Hour, they ſhould ſeparate themſelves into ſeveral Parts of the Town, and truſt a Reſolution of that nature in Mr. Oates's Pocket, in whom if they had had more Confidence than they ſeem to have, yet it was folly and madneſs to give him that Opportunity of deſtroying all of them, and making himſelf. Were there no other Evidence but the very Teſtimony of the thing, it would go a very great way with me, I confeſs; but I muſt ſay withal, you are Judges of this Fact, upon a ſuperadded Teſtimony of Twenty-two Witneſſes, viva voce; I think it leaves the thing without any doubt.

Gentlemen, the Anſwer given by the Defendant to this Charge is very fallacious; and tho' he puts ſuch a Countenance upon it, as though his Witneſſes were ſuch Perſons of Credit, that nothing could be objected againſt them, yet he is certainly very much miſtaken in that: He has produced but two poſitive Witneſſes, and thoſe two, as poſitive as they are in their Proof, are likewiſe poſitive in their Contradictions of one another, and what they have ſaid is left to your Conſideration.

The one is a Coachman, the other was Sir Richard Barker's Houſe-keeper; they indeed do ſay, Sir Richard Barker's Wife's Siſter, and his Nephew, and his Daughter, and his Nieces, and a worſhipful Knight, and I know not who, that the old Woman tells me are gone into my Country, were all there at the ſame time, and no body comes to teſtify it, but only this Coachman and this old Woman: Theſe, Gentlemen, are things fit to be thought of.

But now let us conſider how they agree in their Evidence. Says the Woman, I ſaw him not till the beginning of May; but I am ſure he was there before once or twice. And how does ſhe know that? Becauſe the Coachman told her ſo; and he came there ſeveral times, but he did dine there but once; and when he came there the firſt time ſhe ſaw him, he came in ſuch a Diſguiſe, and he had a ſhort Perriwig, and a kind of ſhort white Coat, and a white Hat; but when the Coachman comes to ſwear, he tells you the firſt time he ſaw him, the Woman ſaw him too, that he had his own Hair, and cut cloſe to his Ears, that made him look, as the young Fellow told her, like a Quaker. And when I aſked the Coachman, Are you ſure that Benjamin the young Fellow did ſee him the firſt time you ſaw him there? He told me, No; but he was ſure the old Woman did look out of the Window and ſee him, which ſhe denies. I then aſked him how often he dined there? He tells you ſeveral times, and there were ſuch and ſuch, and the old Woman did ſee him dine there ſeveral times; which ſhe denies that ſhe ever ſaw him dine there above once. And I take notice of one of the Evidence, the Coachman, he gives but an odd ſort of Reaſon for his remembrance: In February, ſays he, my Lady died, and my Maſter was ſick at Putney, and Oates came into the Yard while I was cleaning my Coach; and I am ſure it was when the Coat of Arms hung over the Door, becauſe he aſk'd me about my Lady's Death, and therefore it muſt be in May; when, for ought does appear to the contrary, it might be in any other Month after the Eſcutcheon was up; and in the other Circumſtances there is no Certainty at all: So that it is plain, theſe Witneſſes ſwear according as their Humour leads them, and not according to any Remembrance they have of the thing.

And I rather believe it, becauſe the third Witneſs, that is Page the Apothecary, that uſed to make up Sir Richard Barker's Medicines, gives an Evidence contrary to both thoſe; he cannot remember the Year poſitively or particularly: but I'll tell you how he thwarts and contradicts the other Peoples Teſtimony; for he remembers he came in ſuch a Diſguiſe, but he believes no body ſpoke to him but himſelf, becauſe he found him walking in the Place, that was for the common Reception of the Patients, and he aſked for Dr. Tongue, and he not being within, he went away very diſcontented: And ſo now theſe three Witneſſes ſeem to contradict one another; and the laſt Witneſs Walker, who is the Parſon, he ſays nothing to the Matter; for it does plainly appear, the Time which he ſpeaks of, which was about a Year and a half before he was called to teſtify at the five Jeſuits Trial, muſt be in the Year 77, and not in the Year 78, which is the Queſtion here, which muſt be before he went firſt to St. Omers.

Gentlemen, the other Part of Mr. Oates's Defence has been upon this Topick: Says he, I have been believed heretofore, the Parliaments have given me Credit; and to prove it, he has called ſeveral noble Lords and Perſons of Quality. The firſt was my Lord of Devonſhire, who ſays he cannot remember any Particulars of his Evidence, 'tis ſo long ſince; but he remembers the Parliament, upon the Evidence given of the Plot, did make ſuch Votes as we do all know of. And there were a great many People that gave credit to his Teſtimony, who, God be thanked, are of another Opinion now. And my Lord of Clare ſays, he was not in the Houſe of Lords at the beginning of the Diſcovery, and cannot remember any thing in particular. But my Lord of Huntingdon was a little more particular; and Mr. Oates began to be angry with him, becauſe he ſpoke ſo much: Says he, I remember Mr. Oates was examin'd in the Houſe of Lords, and was believed there, becauſe they did believe he ſpoke Truth at that time; but now, upon Conſideration of the Contradictions and Falſities of his Evidence, I cannot but ſay, I do believe him, ſays he, to be a great Villain, and that he has been guilty of ſpilling innocent Blood. And this noble Lord ſpeaks with great Honour and Conſideration: And truly, I believe, if every Man that is here were to ſpeak his Mind, my Lord has delivered the Opinions of us all, and many Thouſands more in the Nation.

Mr. Oates call'd next my Lord Chief Baron, my Brother Gregory, my Lord of London, Sir George Treby, Mr. Williams, and my Brother Dolben. But they all tell you, they are able to give no particular Anſwers to his Queſtions; and this was the Sum of his Evidence.

To this Mr. Attorney-General has given a Reply of Evidence, that truly is of very great moment. Firſt, here is produced Sir George Wakeman, whom Oates accuſed of High-Treaſon, and he ſuffered his Trial and was acquitted; ſo that as well as the Jury had given Credit to him in the former Verdicts, ſo ſays Mr. Attorney, I muſt ſpeak likewiſe for the Credit of that Verdict that did diſbelieve him, becauſe though he did ſwear as roundly and briſkly up to the matter as he had done before, yet when he had not the Hurry and Surpriſe of his Diſcovery to ſupport him, his Villany was detected, and the Innocent acquitted. And beſides the Record of the Acquittal, here is the Perſon himſelf who is now under no dread or danger, having ſtood his Trial and being acquitted; and he takes it upon his Oath, and in the Preſence of the great God, and the Searcher of Hearts, that whatſoever Oates ſwore againſt him at his Trial, was every Tittle of it falſe: And this Acquittal of his, being after great and mature Conſideration, is an Evidence of another-guiſe Quality, than the Verdicts of the other Convictions.

Next to him, is my Lord Caſtlemain, a Perſon of very great Honour; and he gives an account he was arraigned of High-Treaſon at this Bar, and upon his Trial Oates was produced as a Witneſs againſt him, and there he ſwore he met with my Lord Caſtlemain in Lincolns-Inn-Fields, and great familiarity there was between them, ſo that my Lord could not truſt him in a leſs Affair than the Plot; and away he goes with him to Fenwick's Chamber, there to talk about a Deſign of killing the late King; Mr. Oates, of all Mankind muſt be the great Repoſitory of this Secret. But the Jury then being Perſons of great Underſtanding and Integrity, did not believe Oates, but acquitted my Lord Caſtlemain. And he does here take it upon his Oath, back'd with all the Imprecations of Evil to himſelf that a Man can uſe, that there was not one Word of Truth in Oates's Teſtimony; nor did he ever ſee Oates in his life, till ſuch time as he was taken up upon his Accuſation. Now are here two Perſons of Honour and Quality, that upon their Oaths do particularly give you an Account, as in the Preſence of Almighty God, that Oates has twice forſworn himſelf againſt them.

Gentlemen, there is notice to be taken of the Journal of the Houſe of Lords; and though it is true for the ſake of the Precedent, and to ſecure the Juſtice of the Nation, we did keep them ſtrictly to their Proof, that it was upon Oath. And as to the Buſineſs of Smith, though we do believe the Thing in our private Judgments, yet we thought it not fit to be permitted, that Perſons ſhould upon their own Oaths confeſs themſelves to be guilty of Perjury, and afterwards give Evidence againſt others; for ſuch are not to have the Countenance of ever being Witneſſes again: Yet by the Records of Parliament, and other Evidence, there is enough to make the matter aimed at clear.

For it is clear by his Narrative, that Oates did firſt ſwear, as far as he could well ſwear, to bring him into the Diſpleaſure of the People: For that was his way to intimidate all he had to do with, and thereby force them to comply with his Deſigns. And there was no more plauſible Accuſation at that time, than to accuſe a Man for ſaying ſomewhat againſt the Parliament, or being in a Combination to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion. But you ſee when he comes to have his own Turn ſerved, then this Man upon whom he had fixed ſuch an odious Character, is really no Papiſt at all, but engaged in Service for his King and Country, and has Mr. Oates's Paſſport, a Thing of great advantage to him at that Seaſon. This the King's Counſel made uſe of with great reaſon, as an Evidence of tampering: For the Man has altered his Opinion of one he

he has before accuſed, and now brings him as an honeſt Men to give Evidence for him. And this, ſay they, muſt be intended to be done by Practice and by Threats.

And the rather, Gentlemen, for that you have an Account by Witneſſes ſworn, that there was one Clay a Popiſh Prieſt, that lay in Priſon at the Gate-houſe, and while he was there, Oates and Sir William Waller came into the Priſon to him, and tampering with him, ſays Oates, I hear there are ſome St. Omers Boys that intend to teſtify that I was at St. Omers, when I ſay I was at London; but you muſt ſwear, that you dined with me at Mr. Howard's in May 1678; or if you will not, you know I know you to be a Prieſt, and I'll hang you. Says Clay, where is my Silver and Gold that was taken away from me? And we all know Sir William Waller was wonderful good at the fingering of Gold; he us'd to take away broad Pieces as Popiſh Reliques, becauſe of the Croſſes upon them. Says Clay, Give me my Gold again, I will ſwear for you; I have been a Rogue before, and I may be a Rogue again. And accordingly a Contract is made for him to ſwear directly that Oates and he were together at Mr. Howard's Houſe in May 78. This very Fellow that tells you now the Story, told it the next Morning to another Man, who has likewiſe ſworn the ſame. Then is Clay conveyed by Oates to the Old-Bailey, and there ſwears, being thus threaten'd and ſuborn'd, that in May 1678, he and Mr. Oates dined together at Mr. Howard's Houſe, and you have Mr. Howard produc'd, who does ſwear that Clay did ſwear ſo; but indeed he was not there with Mr. Oates at Dinner till July after.

This, Gentlemen, is direct Corruption and Subornation; and if a Man will be a corrupt Knave, and endeavour to ſuborn Witneſſes to ſwear that which is falſe, he is the more likely to ſwear falſe himſelf. Beſides that, you are to take notice, here is his own Narrative produced, where you have it ſworn by himſelf, that he went back to St. Omers about the beginning of May, and was there all the Month of May, and in June till the latter end of it. Then all this while, either Mr. Oates, or his Witneſſes, are perjured in the Caſe: He ſays, he ſtaid but three or four Days in England after the Conſult was over, and then went ſtreight back again to St. Omers. Which muſt be the firſt Week in May; but if you believe his two Witneſſes, he din'd with them ſeveral times after that: And ſo it is apparent, ſome of them are guilty of groſs and foul Perjury.

Now, Gentlemen, I cannot but reſort back to the Objection that I made at firſt. 'Tis ſtrange to me, that a Man that came upon ſuch a Deſign, ſhould go publickly about the Streets at Noon-day, though in a Diſguiſe, yet he was known. But if you take the Perſons Time to be in the Year 1677, then it is eaſily reconciled what they did ſay of their ſeeing him in ſuch a Diſguiſe; and ſo all their Teſtimony may ſtand together, and perhaps they may miſtake in a Point of Time, though not in the Subſtance of their Evidence: and I would out of Charity conclude it to be ſo.

But I will ſay, if they are to be taken ſtrictly to the Year 1678, it is monſtrous to imagine, that we ſhould have no body brought to let us know where he lodged, where he eat, with whom he convers'd, for all that time.

Gentlemen, I have detained you the longer in this Matter, becauſe I take it to be of ſo great Weight, wherein the Juſtice and Honour of the Nation are ſo much engag'd, and it was therefore fit this Cauſe ſhould be tried in the moſt ſolemn and publick manner, in order to vindicate the Nation from the Reproach and Calumny of Injuſtice and Oppreſſion. And ſure I am, if you think theſe Witneſſes ſwear true, as I cannot ſee any colour of Objection, there does not remain the leaſt doubt, but that Oates is the blackeſt, and moſt perjur'd Villain that ever appear'd upon the face of the Earth.

Cl. of Cr. Tipſtaff, you muſt take care of the Jury.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, if any of you have a mind to drink at the Bar, before you go, you ſhall have ſome got for you.

Jury. No, my Lord, we do not care for drinking.

L. C. J. Then we will ſtay for you.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and after about a quarter of an Hour's ſtay, they returned and delivered their Virdict: That the Defendant was guilty of the Perjury whereof he was indicted. Which being Recorded, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſpoke to the Jury, to this effect.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, that we are not, God be thanked, in thoſe Times of Diſorder and Confuſion that we have been heretofore in, to have Humming or Hiſſings to declare the Auditors Approbation or Diſlike of Juries Verdicts. But becauſe there has been this Day mention made of the Opinions of Judges about Verdicts, I ſhall take the liberty to declare my Mind to you now, That for my part, I am ſatisfied in my Conſcience, you have given a good and a juſt Verdict; and ſo I believe is very other Judge upon the Bench.

To which the reſt of the Judges aſſented; and then the Court aroſe.

A Second Trial of Titus Oates D. D. at the King's-Bench, for Perjury, May 9. 1685. Paſchæ 1 Jac. II.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of the other of the Cauſes between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Oates, for Perjury; the ſame began about Nine in the Morning, and proceeded after this manner.

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence: Then the Defendant was called; who, appearing in Perſon, was adviſed to look to his Challenges: but he challenged none; only he deſired, that they might be all ask'd, Whether they were of the Grand Jury that found the Bill? which was done. And all denying it, the Twelve ſworn were theſe:

Sir Thomas Vernon Kt.
Nicholas Charlton Eſq;
Thomas Langham Eſq;
Thomas Hartop,
Francis Griffith,
John Kent,
} Jur'
George Toriano,
Henry Loades,
John Midgley,
John Pelling,
Thomas Short, and George Peck.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, hearken to the Record.

Memorandum, That by a certain Inquiſition for our Sovereign Lord the King, at the Guild-Hall of the City of London, and within the ſame City, on Tueſday the 28th of October, in the 36th Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. before Sir Henry Tulſe, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir William Turner, Knight; and Sir James Edwards, Knight, Aldermen of the ſaid City; Sir Thomas Jenner, Knight, one of his Majeſty's Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the ſame City; Sir Robert Jefferies, Knight; and Sir John Peake, Knight, other Aldermen of the ſaid City; and others their Companions, Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King; by his Majeſty's Letters-Patents under the Great Seal of England, to enquire of ſeveral Offences in the ſaid Letters-Patents contain'd, and to hear and determine the ſame, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of this Kingdom, by the Oaths of twelve Jurors, honeſt and lawful Men of the City of London aforeſaid, who then and there being ſworn, and charged to enquire for our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the Body of the ſaid City, upon their Oaths, preſent:

That at a certain Seſſion of our ſaid Lord the King, holden for the County of Middleſex at Hicks's-Hall in St. John-ſtreet, in the County aforeſaid, on Monday (to wit) the 16th Day of December, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord, Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the 30th, before Sir Reginald Foſter, Baronet; Sir Philip Matthews, Baronet; Sir William Bowles, Knight; Sir Charles Pitfield, Knight; Thomas Robinſon, Humphrey Wyrley, Thomas Harriot, and William Hempſon, Eſquires, Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King; to enquire by the Oaths of honeſt and lawful Men, of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; and by other ways, manners, and means, whereby they might, or could better know, as well within Liberties as without; by whom the Truth of the matter might be better known and enquired of, concerning all Treaſons and Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Waſhings, Falſe-making, and other Falſifying of the Moneys of this Kingdom of England; and of any other Kingdoms and Dominions whatſoever; and of all Murthers, Felonies, Manſlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, and other Articles and Offences in the Letters-Patents of our ſaid Lord the King, to them, or any four or more of them, thereupon directed, ſpecified; as alſo the Acceſſaries of the ſame, within the County aforeſaid, as well within Liberties as without, by whomſoever, howſoever had, made, done, or committed, and to hear and determine the ſame Treaſons, and other the Premiſes, according to the Law and Cuſtom of this Kingdom of England, aſſigned by the Oaths of Ralph Wain, John Vaughan, Richard Foſter, Thomas Paget, Robert Newington, Henry Tompkins, Robert Hayes, John Greenwood, Peter Stinyeſon, Joſiah Richard Richman, Auguſtine Bear, John King, Nathaniel Brit, Francis Fiſher, Edward Forſter, and Samuel Lynn; honeſt and lawful Men of the County aforeſaid, ſworn, and charged to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the County aforeſaid, upon their Oaths; it was preſented, That Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk; William Ireland, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Fenwick, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Clerk; Thomas Pickering, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; and John Grove, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Gentleman; as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Serene, and Excellent Prince, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their ſupreme and natural Lord; not having the Fear of the Lord in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly withdrawing and contriving, and, with all their might, intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, to diſturb; and the true Worſhip of God, within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by Law eſtabliſhed, to ſubvert; and Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure; and the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which true and faithful ful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him the ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw, put out, and extinguiſh; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 24th of April, in the 30th Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles II. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, and traitorouſly, did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to procure and cauſe; and our ſaid Lord the King, from the Regal State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England, wholly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſinherit: and him our ſaid Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put; and the Government of the ſaid Kingdom, and the ſincere Religion of God, in the ſame Kingdom, rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, at their Will and Pleaſure to change and alter; and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, through all its parts well inſtituted and ordained, wholly to ſubvert and deſtroy, and War againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to levy.

And to compleat and perfect the ſame their moſt wicked Treaſons, and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; they, the aforeſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, the aforeſaid 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did aſſemble themſelves, unite, and congregate; and then and there falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did conſult and agree, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church, to change and alter. And the ſooner to compleat and perfect the ſame their moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown; afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, between themſelves did conclude and agree, that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, him our ſaid late Lord the King ſhould kill and murder; and that they, the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and others, falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, a certain number of Maſſes, between them then and there agreed, for the Health of the Soul of him the ſaid Thomas Pickering, therefore ſhould ſay, celebrate, and perform; and therefore ſhould pay unto the ſaid John Grove a certain Sum of Money between them then and there agreed.

And the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oaths aforeſaid, did further preſent, That the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, upon the Agreement aforeſaid, then and there falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did take upon themſelves, and to the ſame Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Lord the King, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, then and there falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did promiſe, that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, him our ſaid late Lord the King would kill and murder: And that they, the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, John Grove, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Lord the King, unknown, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did give their Faith each to other, and upon the Sacrament then and there traitorouſly did ſwear and promiſe to conceal, and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Conſultations, and Purpoſes ſo between them had, him our ſaid late Lord the King traitorouſly to kill and murder, and the Romiſh Religion within this Kingdom of England to be uſed, to introduce, and the true reformed Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly and by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to alter and change. And that the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, in Execution of the traitorous Agreement aforeſaid, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, and divers Days and Times after, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, Muſkets, Piſtols, Swords, Daggers, and other offenſive and cruel Weapons, him the ſaid late Lord the King to kill and murder, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did prepare and obtain, had and kept for themſelves; and that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, and divers Days and Times after, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and in other Places within the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did lie in wait, and endeavour our ſaid late Lord the King traitorouſly to kill and murder; and that the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly and traitorouſly did prepare, perſuade, excite, abet, comfort and counſel four other Perſons to the Jurors unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, him our ſaid late Lord the King traitorouſly to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided; and thereupon it was ſo far proceeded, that afterwards, at the Court of Goal-Delivery of our ſaid Lord the King, at Newgate, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey in the Suburbs of the City of London, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, the 17th Day of December, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, before the Juſtices of the ſaid Lord the King, of the ſame Goal-delivery, then and there held by Adjournment, of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, came the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove, under the Cuſtody of Sir Richard How Knight, and Sir John Chapman Knight, Sheriff of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; into whoſe Cuſtody, for the Cauſe aforeſaid, they were before committed: Being brought to the Bar there, in their proper Perſons, and preſently being ſeverally aſked concerning the Premiſes above-charged upon them, how they would acquit themſelves; the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove did ſeverally ſay, That they were not thereof guilty; and for the ſame, for good and bad, they did ſeverally put themſelves upon the Country; and by a certain Jury of the Country, in that behalf duly impannell'd, ſworn and charged then and there in the ſame Court, before the Juſtices of Goal-delivery aforeſaid, were tried: And that upon that Trial, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove at London aforeſaid; to wit, at the Juſtice Hall in the Old-Bailey aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, aforeſaid; the Defendant (Titus Oates) late of the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre aforeſaid, in the Ward aforeſaid, Clerk, was produced as a Witneſs, on the part of the ſaid late Lord the King, upon the Trial aforeſaid; and before the ſaid Juſtices of Goal-delivery, in the Court aforeſaid, then and there held, upon the Holy Goſpels of God, was duly ſworn to ſpeak and teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of and in the Premiſes between our ſaid Lord the King, and the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove. And that the ſaid Titus Oates then and there, in the Court of Goal-delivery aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, by his own proper Act and Conſent of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily and corruptly, did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid, then and there ſworn and impannell'd to try the Iſſue aforeſaid between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove; That the ſaid William Ireland, in the Indictment aforeſaid mentioned, was in Town (within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the places adjacent to the ſaid Cities, meaning) upon the 1ſt or 2d Day of September, in the Year 1678. Whereas in truth and in deed the ſaid William Ireland, in the Indictment aforeſaid mentioned, was not in Town, nor within the Cities of London or Weſtminſter, or the places adjacent to the ſame Cities, or either of them, upon the 1ſt or 2d Day of September, in the Year 1678. And ſo the aforeſaid Titus Oates, the aforeſaid 17th Day of December, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court aforeſaid, upon the Trial aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, between our late Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove, ſo as aforeſaid had, by his own Act and Conſent, and of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily and corruptly, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury.

And the Jurors aforeſaid, laſt ſworn to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the City of London aforeſaid, upon their Oaths aforeſaid, do further preſent, That at another Seſſion of our ſaid late Lord the King, held for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's-Hall in St. Johns-ſtreet, in the County aforeſaid, on Thurſday (to wit) the 12th Day of June, in the 31ſt Year of our ſaid late Lord King Charles II. before Sir Philip Matthews Baronet, Sir Thomas Orby Knight and Baronet, Sir William Pultney Knight, Sir William Bowles Knight, Thomas Robinſon, Thomas Harriot, Eſquires, and others their Companions, by Letters Patents of our ſaid late Lord the King, to the ſame Juſtices afore-named, and others, and to any four or more of them, under the Great Seal of our ſaid late Lord the King made, to enquire, by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and by all other ways, manners and means, by which they might or could better know, as well within Liberties as without; by whom the Truth of the Matter might be beſt known and enquired, of all Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Waſhings, Falſe-making, and other Falſifyings of the Money of this Kingdom of England, and of other Kingdoms and Dominions whatſoever; and of all Murders, Felonies, Man-ſlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, Rapes, Meetings and unlawful Conventicles; Speakings of Words, Combinations, Miſpriſions, Confederacies, falſe Allegations, Treſpaſſes, Riots, Routs, Retainers, Eſcapes, Contempts, Oppreſſions; and of other Articles and Offences in the ſame Letters Patents of our ſaid Lord the King, ſpecified: As alſo, the Acceſſaries of the ſame, within the County aforeſaid, as well within Liberties as without, by whomſoever and howſoever had, done, perpetrated or committed; and of other Articles and Circumſtances concerning the Premiſes howſoever; and the ſame Treaſons, and other the Premiſes, to hear and determine according to the Law and Cuſtom of this Kingdom of England; being aſſigned by the Oaths of Henry Aſhurſt Eſq; Edward Gavel, John Radford, John Warral, William Hanmar, Robert Pritchard, John Tredder, Gilbert Ureweyn, David Collivex, Abraham Harriſon, Charles Morgan, Philip Trehearn, John Collier, Robert Whiterod, William Webb, Thomas Edwards and Abraham Tillent, honeſt and lawful Men in the County aforeſaid, ſworn and charged to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the County aforeſaid; upon their Oaths it was preſented, That Thomas White, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk, otherwiſe called Thomas Whitebread, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Fenwick, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; William Harcourt, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, otherwiſe called William Harriſon, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Gaven, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; and James Corker, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Serene and Excellent Prince, our late Sovereign Lord King Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme and Natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance; but being moved, and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the Cordial Love, the true, due, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear; wholly withdrawing, and contriving, and with all their Might intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb; and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by Law eſtabliſhed, to overthrow; and the Government of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure; and the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Lord the King, towards him the ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw, put out, and extinguiſh; and our ſaid late Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring, and put; the 24*th* Day of April, in the 30*th* Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Lord King Charles II. &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, and the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, with divers other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly and traitorouſly did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King to procure, and cauſe; and our ſaid late Lord the King, from the Regal State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England, utterly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſinherit; and him our ſaid late Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring, and put; and the Government of the ſame Kingdom, and the ſincere Religion of God in the ſame Kingdom, rightly and by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom eſtabliſhed, at their Will and Pleaſure to change and alter; and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, through all its Parts well inſtituted and ordered, wholly to ſubvert, and deſtroy; and War againſt our late Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to levy: And to perfect and compleat the ſame, their moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Imaginations, and Purpoſes, they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, and James Corker, and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, the aforeſaid 24th Day of April, in the 30*th* Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did aſſemble, unite and gather themſelves together; and then and there falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly did conſult, conſent and agree our ſaid late Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed to change and alter, to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, and the Government of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert; and that one Thomas Pickering, and one John Grove, him our ſaid late Lord the King ſhould kill and murder: And that they the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon. John Gaven, Anthony Turner, James Corker, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, a certain number of Maſſes, between them, then and there agreed upon, for the Health of the Soul of him the ſaid Thomas Pickering, therefore ſhould ſay, celebrate and perform; and therefore ſhould pay upon the ſaid John Grove, a certain ſum of Money, between them then and there agreed upon. And that the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, in the further Proſecution of the Treaſons and Traitorous Conſultations and Agreements aforeſaid, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 24*th* Day of April, in the 30*th* Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, did ſeverally give their Faith each to other; and upon the Sacrament, then and there traitorouſly did ſwear and promiſe to conceal, and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Conſultations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, ſo between them had, him the ſaid late Lord the King traitorouſly to kill and murder, and to introduce the Romiſh Religion, to be uſed within this Kingdom of England; and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly and by the Laws of this Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to alter and change; and that the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, James Corker, and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, in further Proſecution of the Treaſons and traitorous Intentions and Agreements aforeſaid, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 24*th* Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traitorouſly, did prepare, perſuade, excite, abet, comfort and counſel four other Perſons to the Jurors unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid late Lord the King, him our ſaid late Lord the King traitorouſly to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. Whereupon, it was commanded the Sheriff of the County aforeſaid, that he ſhould not omit, &c. but ſhould take them to anſwer, &c.

Which Indictment the ſaid Juſtices of our Lord the King, afterwards (to wit) at the Goal-delivery of our ſaid Lord the King, of Newgate, holden by Adjournment for the County of Middleſex, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Friday (to wit) the 13*th* Day of June, in the 31*ſt* Year aforeſaid, before Sir James Edwards Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir William Scroggs Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of his Majeſty's Court of Kings-Bench; Sir Francis North Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of his Majeſty's Court of Common-Pleas; Sir Thomas Allen Knight and Baronet, one of the Aldermen of the ſaid City of London; Sir George Jefferies Knight, Recorder of the ſaid City of London; and other their Companions, Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, aſſigned to deliver his Goal of Newgate of the Priſoners in the ſame being, by their own proper Hands did deliver there, in the Court of Record, in form of Law to be determined: And thereupon, at the ſaid Goal-delivery of our Lord the King, of Newgate, holden by the Adjournment aforeſaid, for the County aforeſaid, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, the ſaid Friday the 13*th* of June, in the 31*ſt* Year aforeſaid, before the aforeſaid Juſtices of our ſaid late Lord the King laſt named, came the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, under the Cuſtody of Sir Richard How, Knight, and Sir John Chapman Knight, Sheriff of the County aforeſaid; into whoſe Cuſtody, for the Cauſe aforeſaid, they were before that time committed; being brought to the Bar there, in their proper Perſons; who were committed to the aforeſaid Sheriff, &c. And immediately being ſeverally demanded concerning the Premiſes aforeſaid, in the Indictment aforeſaid ſpecified, charg'd upon them as above, how they would thereof acquit themſelves; the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, did ſeverally ſay, that they were not thereof Guilty: And thereupon, for good and bad, did ſeverally put themſelves upon the Country. And thereupon, upon the Indictment aforeſaid laſt recited, at the Seſſion of our Lord the King, at the Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, it was ſo far proceeded, that the Iſſue aforeſaid between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, afterwards (to wit) the aforeſaid Friday the 13th Day of June, in the 31ſt Year aforeſaid, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, by a certain Jury of the Country in that behalf duly impannell'd, ſworn and charged, was tried; and that upon the Trial of the Iſſue aforeſaid laſt mentioned, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, at London aforeſaid, (to wit) at the Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre in the Ward of Faringdon without London, aforeſaid the ſaid Defendant, Titus Oates, was alſo a Witneſs produced on behalf of our ſaid late Lord the King, upon the Trial aforeſaid, upon the Indictment laſt aforeſaid: And he, the aforeſaid Titus Oates, then and there at the Seſſion laſt aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court of the ſame Seſſion (to wit) at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, was duly ſworn upon the Holy Goſpels of God, to ſpeak and teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth of, and in the Premiſes, in the Iſſue aforeſaid laſt mentioned, ſo as aforeſaid joined between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner. And that the ſaid Titus Oates then and there, at the Seſſion aforeſaid laſt mentioned, in the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court of the ſame Seſſion, upon his Oath aforeſaid, upon the Indictment laſt aforeſaid, by his own proper Act and Conſent, of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid laſt mentioned, ſo as aforeſaid ſworn and impannell'd to try the Iſſue aforeſaid between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner; That William Ireland (one William Ireland, then before convicted and executed for High-Treaſon againſt our late Lord the King, meaning) took his leave of him the ſaid Titus Oates and others, at the Chamber of the ſaid William Ireland, then being in Ruſſel-ſtreet (a certain Street called Ruſſel-ſtreet, lying within the City of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, meaning) between the 8th and 12th Day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. Whereas, in truth and in deed, the ſaid William Ireland did not take his Leave of the ſaid Titus Oates, or any other Perſons whatſoever, at the Chamber of the ſaid William Ireland, then being in Ruſſel-ſtreet aforeſaid, between the ſaid 8th and 12th Days of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. And ſo the ſaid Titus Oates, upon the ſaid Friday the 13th Day of June, in the 31ſt Year aforeſaid, at the Seſſion laſt aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court of the ſame Seſſion, upon the Indictment laſt aforeſaid, ſo put in Iſſue, and tried as aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, by his own proper Act and Conſent, and of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, in manner and form aforeſaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in manifeſt contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned; and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty: And for his Trial, hath put himſelf upon the Country, and his Majeſty's Attorney-General likewiſe; which Country you are, Your Charge is, to enquire, whether the Defendant, Titus Oates, be Guilty of the Perjury he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find him Guilty, you are to ſay ſo: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more: And hear your Evidence.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Attorney, my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones has ſent to know, whether you have any thing to do with him to-day, here? Sir George Jefferies.

Mr. At. Gen. Not at all, that I know of. Sir Robert Sawyer.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, do you intend to make uſe of my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones, or any of the Judges of the Common-Pleas, as Witneſſes?

Oates. Yeſterday, my Lord, I did call for them, to have made uſe of them, as Witneſſes?

L. C. J. But have you any thing to ſay to them to-day?

Oates. I cannot tell, as yet.

L. C. J. Then my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones muſt be told, that he does not know, whether he ſhall, or not. Go on, Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Then Proclamation was made for Information, and Evidence was made in uſual manner.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment againſt Titus Oates, Clerk, for Perjury: And this Indictment ſets forth, that William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, in the 30th Year of the late King, were indicted of High-Treaſon, and tried at the Old-Bailey; and at that Trial, the Defendant, Titus Oates, was produced a Witneſs for the King; and being ſworn to tell the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, did falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, depoſe, and ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jury that did try that Cauſe, that the ſaid William Ireland was in Town (within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the Places adjacent, meaning) upon upon the firſt or ſecond Day of September, in the Year 1678. Whereas, in truth, the ſaid William Ireland was not in Town, nor within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the Places adjacent, upon the firſt or ſecond Day of September, in the Year 1678. And ſo the ſaid Titus Oates hath committed wilful and corrupt Perjury. And the Indictment further ſets forth, that upon the 13*th* Day of June, in the 31ſt Year of the late King, Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, were indicted and tried at the Old-Bailey for Treaſon, and at that Trial, the ſaid Titus Oates was a Witneſs produced on the part of the King: And being ſworn to teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, by his own Act and Conſent, of his own moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily and corruptly did depoſe, and ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jury, that William Ireland (one William Ireland, before that time convicted and executed for High-Treaſon, meaning) did take his leave of him the ſaid Titus Oates, at his the ſaid William Ireland's Chamber, then being in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the 8*th* and 12*th* Day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. Whereas, in truth, the ſaid William Ireland did not take his leave of him the ſaid Titus Oates, or of any other Perſons whatſoever, at his the ſaid William Ireland's Chamber, then being in Ruſſel-ſtreet aforeſaid, between the ſaid 8*th* and 12*th* Day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. And ſo the ſaid Titus Oates did then and there commit wilful and corrupt Perjury. And this is laid to be to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in contempt of the Laws of this Land, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity. To this he has pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove it, we do not queſtion, but you will find him Guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Mr. Oates ſtands indicted for having perjured himſelf: The Inſtances Gentlemen, that we charge him with, are theſe: Firſt, what he ſwore at the Trial of Ireland; and we ſay, that at that Trial he did ſwear Ireland was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September, 1678. The ſecond Inſtance is, what he ſwore at the Trial of the five Jeſuits; and there we ſay, he did ſwear, that Ireland was in Town between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, and that he took his leave of him here in Town at his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet; and we do charge him by this Indictment, that he has forſworn himſelf in both Inſtances: And that Ireland, Gentlemen, was neither in Town between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, nor the 1*ſt* or 2*d* of September. And we ſhall make it out very evidently: For, Gentlemen, as to the Proof in this Caſe, our Caſe ſtands thus: we ſay, that the 3*d* of Auguſt, 1678, Ireland went into Hertfordſhire, to a Houſe of my Lord Aſton's, and from thence went into Staffordſhire. I will not ſtand to open the Particulars, where he was every Day; but we ſhall give you an Account, in a Method very eaſy to be remembred and obſerved, where he was till the 14*th* of September. But one remarkable Inſtance, Gentlemen, I deſire to take particular notice of; and that is the Time of Pancras-Fair, which is upon the 2*d* of September always, a known Day, and a known Place in that Country. Now we have among the reſt, many Witneſſes to prove, that Mr. Ireland was there that Day, and not in Town. And when we have proved this, as we ſhall by a whole Cloud of Witneſſes, I believe, you Gentlemen of this Jury, will no more doubt, that Mr. Oates is forſworn in theſe Particulars, than the Jury yeſterday did in that Particular; nor than, I believe, the whole Kingdom does by this time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall go to our Evidence; and firſt, we produce the Records of the two Trials of Ireland, and the five Jeſuits. Swear Mr. Swift. [Which was done. Pray, Sir, put in the Records. Are thoſe true Copies?

Mr. Swift. My Lord, I examined theſe Records with the Originals, and they are true Copies.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Oates, will you have them read? Or to ſave the time of the Court, will you agree them?

Oates. My Lord, I conſent to ſave the time of the Court; if they ſhall be made uſe of for Evidence for me.

L. C. J. No doubt, they are Evidence for you as well as againſt you, when they are produced here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Mr. Oates does admit the Records, then ſhall we go on, and prove what he did ſwear at thoſe Trials; and for the firſt part of the time, which is between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, we deſire that Mr. Thomas Harriot, and Mr. Rainsford Waterhouſe may be ſworn. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Harriot, pray do you remember at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, was Mr. Oates produced and ſworn as a Witneſs?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, he was, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what Teſtimony he gave about Ireland's being in Town, and when it was, he ſaid, he was in Town?

Mr. Harriot. My Lord, he did poſitively ſwear, that Mr. Ireland, the late Jeſuit, did take his leave of him the ſaid Oates and others, at the ſaid Ireland's Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, betwixt the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you of the Jury that tried the five Jeſuits, Mr. Harriot.

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I was Foreman of that Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you, Mr Waterhouſe? Were you preſent at that Trial?

Mr. Waterhouſe. Yes, I was of the Jury too.

Mr. Sol. Gen, What did Oates ſwear at that Trial?

Mr. Waterhouſe. He ſaid, that Mr. Ireland took his leave of him the 12*th* of Auguſt. My Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs then aſked him, are you ſure it was the 12*th*? And then he ſaid, he would not be poſitive it was the 12*th*, but between the 8*th* and 12*th* it was, I am poſitive upon my Oath.

Mr. At. Gen. It is ſo in the Print too; but we will now go on.

L. C. J. But will the Defendant aſk theſe Witneſſes any Queſtions.

Oates. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will aſk Mr. Harriot a Queſtion.

L. C. J. Ay, do aſk him what you will.

Oates. Mr. Harriot, did I ſwear, that he took his leave of me, or I took my leave of him?

Mr. Harriot. You ſwore, that Ireland took his leave of you and others, between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, 1678; between thoſe two Days, and in that Year.

Mr. Juſt Withins. It is a nice Queſtion, that of your's, Mr. Oates, upon my Word.

Oates. My Lord, I know what reaſon I have to aſk that Queſtion; I am ſure in Perjury, the Court ought to keep up the Witneſſes ſtrictly to what is ſaid in the Indictment.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Well, you have his Anſwer according to the Indictment.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk Mr. Harriot this Queſtion, whether he took Notes of the Trial?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I did ſo, Sir.

Oates. My Lord I deſire to know of Mr. Harriot whether he has thoſe Notes by him?

Mr. Harriot. No, Sir, I have them not here; but I have had them by me this four or five Years, or more. It was my manner in all the Trials, wherein I was concerned as a Jury-Man, to read the Trials ſtrictly over, when they were printed, eſpecially where I happened to have any Notes, that I took at the Trial; and to compare the printed Trial with my Notes: and where I found any thing doubtful, I uſed to put a Query upon it. And this and many other things, I found to be in the printed Trial ſtrictly according to my Notes.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know, what Trial he was Foreman at?

Mr. Harriot. That of the five Jeſuits, in June; the 13*th* of June, 1679.

L. C. J. Have you any thing to aſk Mr. Waterhouſe?

Oates. Yes, my Lord. Pray, Sir, let me aſk you a Queſtion.

Mr. Waterhouſe. Ay, if you pleaſe, Sir.

Oates. Did you take Notes of that Trial you ſpeak of, Sir?

Mr. Waterhouſe. No, I did not.

Oates. How come you then to remember this, that I was ſo poſitive as to the time betwixt the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt?

Mr. Waterhouſe. Becauſe I was one of the Jury; and becauſe my Lord Chief Juſtice made a ſtop, when you ſaid, 'twas the 12*th* of Auguſt, and bad you conſider: And you conſider'd, and conſider'd it; and did affirm poſitively, that it was between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt.

L. C. J. He gives you a plain Reaſon for his Remembrance.

Oates. My Lord, I have done with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we deſire Mr. Foſter may be ſworn. [Which was done.] Mr. Foſter, Pray will you tell what you remember Mr. Oates ſwore at Mr. Ireland's Trial, about Ireland's being in Town?

Mr. Foſter. I was one of the Jury at the Trial of Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pickering, and Mr. Grove; and I did ſee Mr. Oates ſworn, as a Witneſs for the King, at that Trial; and ſo was Mr. Bedloe: And Bedloe there gave Evidence, that there was a Meeting at Harcourt's Chamber; and Ireland, Grove, and Pickering were there: And that this was the latter End of Auguſt. Mr. Ireland did make his Defence, as much as he could, to prove, that he was not in Town from the Beginning of Auguſt, to the Middle of September; and brought divers Witneſſes. But upon his denying to be here the latter End of Auguſt, Mr. Oates did come and ſwear: I am certain (ſays he) that the firſt or ſecond of September, he was in Town; for then I had of him Twenty Shillings.

Oates. Was I poſitive, that he was here in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September?

Mr. Foſter. You were poſitive, Sir, to the 1ſt or 2d; I have it in my Notes in Writing.

L. C. J. He tells you, it is in his Notes: And therefore he's ſure you ſaid ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. In the printed Copy, if it be right, there is mention made of the Word Poſitive.

L. C. J. I think, that is in Auguſt, between the 8th or 12th he was poſitive.

Oates. Did I ſay theſe Words, I was poſitive?

Mr. Waterhouſe. I ſay you affirmed that he was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September.

L. C. J. It is not neceſſary, that you ſhould uſe the Word Poſitive: The Queſtion is, whether it was poſitively affirmed?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Was not that true that you ſaid? Did not you affirm a poſitive Truth?

Oates. My Lord, I'll tell you the Reaſon why I aſk the Queſtion, becauſe I have forgot my ſelf, whether I us'd the Word or no; and therefore I aſk for my own Information now.

L. C. J. Well, aſk for what Reaſon you will, you have receiv'd an Anſwer to your Queſtion; and upon my Word he gives a notable Evidence: Says he, Bedloe had ſworn a treaſonable Practice by Ireland, in the latter end of Auguſt. Then Ireland comes, and make his Defence: Says he, That cannot be; for I was out of Town at that time: I was not in London all Auguſt, nor the beginning of September. Then come you in, to ſupport the Teſtimony of Bedloe; and ſwear, that he was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September; for then he gave you twenty Shillings. And ſo you come to rivet the Matter that was ſworn before by Bedloe.

Oates. My Lord, what I ſwore was Truth.

L. C. J. That is now to be tried.

Mr. At. Gen. We have another of the Jury here, Mr. John Byfield: Pray, ſwear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, Sir, what did you hear Oates ſwear at that Trial?

Mr. Byfield. I heard the ſame that they have teſtified before.

L. C. J. But you muſt tell us what that was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you a Jury-man at that Trial?

Mr. Byfield. Yes, I had a Summons to the Old-Bailey———

L. C. J. But what did Oates ſwear? That's the Queſtion.

Mr. Byfield. Mr. Oates did poſitively aſſert, that Ireland was here in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September; and to confirm it, he ſaid, he receiv'd of him twenty Shillings.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we ſhall go to our Evidence to prove, that all this is abſolutely falſe: For Ireland went out of Town into Staffordſhire, and did not return till after the 9th of September. And for this, we call Anne Ireland.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Ireland, pray where did you take your leave of your Brother Mr. Ireland, who was executed, in Summer 1678, and when?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I took my leave of him the beginning of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day in Auguſt, do you remember?

Mrs. A. Ireland. The 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was it?

Mrs. A. Ireland. In my own Lodging.

L. C. J. Where was your Lodging?

Mrs. A. Ireland. In Ruſſel-ſtreet, Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. Now tell us again the time when it was?

Mrs. A. Ireland. It was on Saturday Morning, as I remember, the 3d of Auguſt, the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day.

L. C. J. How come you to remember ſo particularly, that it was then?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Becauſe upon St. Ignatius's Day, we were invited to Mr. Gifford's at Hammerſmith; my Brother, my Mother, and I, were invited to ſtay all Night: But my Brother refuſed to ſtay, becauſe——

L. C. J. Which Brother? What was his Name?

Mrs. A. Ireland. William Ireland.

L. C. J. Did they ſtay there?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, my Lord, my Brother came home on foot, but we ſtaid all Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is an Almanack of that Year: And the 3d of Auguſt was on a Saturday.

Mrs. A. Ireland. He ſaid he could not ſtay, becauſe he was to go into the Country upon Saturday. I aſk'd him, Why he would ſet out on Saturday? And ſays he, I'll go to Standen, there I ſhall meet with my Lord Aſton, and his Family; and have an Opportunity to go with him into Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. She ſays, he went out of Town on Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day; which was Saturday the 3d of Auguſt. But there being a Diſcourſe between her and her Brother, why he ſhould make choice of a Saturday; which ſhe thought, it ſeems, was an inconvenient Day to take a Journey on: And upon that, her Brother made anſwer again, That that Night he would only go to Standen, to my Lord Aſton's Houſe, where he ſhould meet with Company to go along with him into Staffordſhire.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. A. Ireland. St. Ignatius's Day was on Wedneſday.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month is St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. A. Ireland. It is either the laſt Day of July, or the 1ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Look on your Almanack, if you have any one of that Year, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. We have no ſuch Saint in our Almanack.

Mrs. A. Ireland. It was, as near as I can remember, the 3d of Auguſt, that he went out of Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The 3d of Auguſt, at that time, was on a Saturday.

Lord Petre. St. Ignatius's Day is always the laſt Day of July, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. In this Almanack, another Saint has juſtled him out; and that is Biſhop German.

L. C. J. And in my Almanack, a third has juſtled them both out: but my Lord Petre ſays, it is always the laſt of July; and that was on a Wedneſday that Year.

Mrs. A. Ireland. I remember it was on a Wedneſday.

L. C. J. And you are ſure he went out of Town the Saturday after?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, I am ſure he went out of Town then; for I aſked him, why he would go on a Saturday? And he told me, he would go but to Standen that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And that does hold, according to the Computation, to be the 3d of Auguſt.

Oates. My Lord, ſhe is not poſitive in this, that he went out of Town the 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, but ſhe is; for ſhe ſays, that ſhe was the Wedneſday before (which was St. Ignatius's Day) with him a little way out of Town.

L. C. J. And that it was Saturday after he went out of Town; and ſhe gives the Reaſon, that ſhe entered into a Diſcourſe with him. why he would go on Saturday? And he made that Anſwer which you hear.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Oates knows what Day St. Ignatius's Day is upon, I preſume.

Oates. It is the laſt Day of July, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In our Proteſtant Almanacks, it ſeems, we give another Biſhop place.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Ireland, when did you ſee him again?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Juſt a Fortnight before Michaelmas, and not before.

L. C. J. You were his near Relation, I ſuppoſe?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, my Lord, I was his Siſter.

L. C. J. Pray, when he came to Town again, where did he lodge?

Mrs. A. Ireland. He uſed to lodge at the ſame place where we did always; and in the mean time, while he was abſent, my Mother lent one Mrs. Eagleſton his Lodging.

L. C. J. Is that Perſon, you lent his Chamber to in his Abſence, here?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, My Lord.

L. C. J. When did ſhe enter upon his Lodging?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell; her Maid fell ſick, and ſo ſhe came down a pair of Stairs lower into his Lodging. It was in a ſhort time after he went out of Town, my Lord, as I remember.

L. C. J. When did he come to Town again, do you ſay?

Mrs. A. Ireland. He came to Town again a Fortnight before Michaelmas; it was that Day Fortnight before Michaelmas; that Michaelmas-day fell on——

L. C. J. Have you any Queſtions to aſk her Mr. Oates?

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know, why ſhe did not give this Evidence before? Or whether ever ſhe did give this Evidence at any of the Trials?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, I was at my Brother's Trial; and there I gave the ſame Evidence.

Oates. Were you there at the Trial of the five Jeſuits? And did you give the ſame Evidence then?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, I was not call'd.

L. C. J. But were you there?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I was in the Court at the ſame time, but was not examin'd.

Oates. What Year is it you ſpeak of, that he went out of Town the 3d of Auguſt?

Mrs. A. Ireland. The Year 78.

Oates. I deſire, my Lord, to aſk this Gentlewoman, what Religion ſhe is of?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Oates. I deſire to know, whether her Name be Ireland or Ironmonger?

Mrs. A. Ireland. My right Name is Ironmonger; but becauſe of his Profeſſion, he went by the Name of Ireland; and for his ſake we go by that Name too.

Oates. By what Name did you give Evidence at Ireland's Trial?

Mrs. A. Ireland. By that Name of Ireland.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Oates, that is a good Name enough to be call'd by; you may remember, you were called Titus Ambroſius, and Sampſon Lucy, at St. Omers.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Eleanor Ireland.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. When did your Son go out of Town?

Mrs. El. Ireland. The 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was the 3d of Auguſt ?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, I am ſure it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Year was it ?

Mrs. El. Ireland. My Memory is not good enough for that ; I cannot tell what Year, my Daughter can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the ſame Year he was tried afterwards ?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, it was the ſame Summer ; at Michaelmas after he was taken up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did he return again out of the Country ?

Mrs. El. Ireland, The 14th of September after.

Oates. My Lord, I would aſk her, Whether or no ſhe gave this Evidence at her Son's Trial ?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, I was a Witneſs there ; but they would not permit me to ſpeak half ſo much ; they would hardly let me ſpeak at all.

Oates. I deſire to know, whether ſhe was an Evidence at the five Jeſuits Trials ?

Mrs. El. Ireland. No, I was not there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mrs. Duddle, and Mrs. Quino. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come, Mrs. Duddle, do you remember when Mr. Ireland went out of Town, in the Year 78 ?

Mrs. Duddle. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was the 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why do you think it was the 3d of Auguſt ?

Mrs. Duddle. He went for a Recreation out of Town three Days before, which was upon an Holiday, St. Ignatius's Day ; and he went out of Town one Night then, and he came and ſtaid but two Nights after ; and went out of Town upon the Saturday.

L. C. J. Did he ſtay out of Town one Night ?

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, he ſtaid out of Town all Night.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he ſtaid all Night ?

Mrs. Duddle. I am ſure he ſtaid but one Night.

L. C. J. But what ſay you to that, Mr. Attorney ? this Witneſs contradicts the other.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Ay, plainly.

Mrs. Duddle. Mrs. Ireland, and Mrs. Anne Ireland, and he went out upon a Recreation out of Town, it being Holiday ; and I remember well, that was of a Wedneſday : and that Saturday he went away, and never came again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

L. C. J. But mind my Queſtion, Woman.

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he come home that Night he went on the Recreation ?

Mrs. Duddle. I do not know.

L. C. J. But juſt now, you ſwore he ſtaid out all Night.

Mrs. Duddle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, but you did though ; prithee mind what thou art about.

Mrs. Duddle. I do not ſay he, but I am ſure his Siſter and the Company ſtaid out that Night. I remember very well, he went the third Day after, which was Saturday. And Mr. Jenniſon came to aſk for him three Weeks after : and there was a Perſon of Quality with him in the Coach ; I think it was Sir Miles Wharton. And he aſking for him, they gave him an account, that they had not heard from him ſince he went ; which was then three Weeks after he was gone. And I remember well, he did not come to Town again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

L. C. J. How can you tell that ?

Mrs. Duddle. My Lord, I can tell it very well : For I was almoſt every Night in the Room where he uſed to lie ; and there lay a Gentlewoman there, that I knew.

L. C. J. What was her Name ?

Mrs. Duddle. Mrs. Eagleſton.

L. C. J How come ſhe to lie there ?

Mrs. Duddle. Her Maid fell ſick, and ſhe chang'd her own Chamber, and lay there all the time he was out of Town.

Oates. My Lord, is this good Evidence ?

L. C. J. Ay, why not ?

Oates. My Lord, I think ſhe contradicts the other Witneſs : For ſhe ſays he lay out two Nights.

L. C. J. No, there you are miſtaken too. But I tell you what I did obſerve before. Mrs. Anne Ireland ſwore, that they did ſtay all night ; but Mr. Ireland refuſed to ſtay there, but would go home, becauſe he was to go his Journey on Saturday. Then this Woman comes ? and ſhe ſaid at firſt, that he went out of Town on the Wedneſday, and ſtaid out all Night, and lay at home but two Nights, and then went away. But now when I put her in mind to take care what ſhe ſaid, ſhe ſwears, ſhe is ſure the Siſter lay out, but ſhe is not ſure of Ireland's lying out. But ſhe is poſitive he went away on Saturday the 3d of Auguſt, and return'd not till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

Oates. My Lord, I humbly conceive, ſhe having once ſworn falſe——

L. C. J. Ay, but ſhe immediately recollected her ſelf.

Oates. By what Token does ſhe remember it to be the 3d of Auguſt ?

L. C. J. She ſaid before, it was the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day, which was on a Wedneſday, the laſt Day of July ; and he went then out of Town. She call'd it by the Name of Recreation.

Oates. Was it the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day ?

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, it was : And I had not remember'd it, but that it was upon that Holiday.

Oates. This is a Roman Catholick, I ſuppoſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. I cannot tell. What Religion are you of ?

Mrs. Duddle. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord. Mr. Jenniſon knows what I ſay to be true.

Oates. Were you a Witneſs in any of the Trials at the Old-Bailey ?

Mrs. Duddle. I was in the Court, but was not call'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you, Mrs. Quino ? When did Mr. Ireland go out of Town ?

Mrs. Quino. I muſt ſay the ſame ; it was the 3d Day of Auguſt, on a Saturday.

L. C. J. How do you know that it was on a Saturday the 3d of Auguſt ?

Mrs. Quino. By the ſame Reaſon that ſhe ſpeaks. I mark'd that other Day he went out of Town ; and he came again, and his Mother ſtaid there that Night : And he went on Saturday Morning out of Town. I know it very well ; for my Huſband was his Taylor, and he had ſomewhat to alter in his Clothes ; and I brought it immediately after it was done.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he went out of Town that Day ?

Mrs. Quino. He went out of the Houſe, and as I take it, went out of Town ?

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Did he ſay he was to go out of Town?

Mrs. Quino. He had his Boots on; and took Horſe at the Bull-Inn in Drury-Lane.

L. C. J. How do you know it?

Mrs. Quino. Becauſe his Servant that was there has teſtified it.

Mr. At. Gen. Now ſwear my Lord Aſton. [Which was done.] We'll bring Ireland now upon the 3d of Auguſt at Night, to my Lord Aſton's Houſe at Standen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will your Lordſhip give my Lord and the Jury an account, when Mr. Ireland came to your Houſe, and how far he travelled with you afterward?

Lord Aſton. My Lord, being in Town, I was ſpoke to, and deſired, that Mr. Ireland might have the Opportunity of going in my Company down into Staffordſhire; which I conſented to. I went out of Town, as I remember, the latter end of July 1678, and this ſame Mr. Ireland came to me at my Houſe in Hertfordſhire at Standen, upon the 3d of Auguſt at Night.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that, my Lord?

Lord Aſton. As I remember, it was Saturday, and in the Evening.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay with your Lordſhip?

Lord Aſton. My Lord, I ſtaid till Monday at Standen; and upon Monday he went in my Company to St. Albans, which was the 5th of Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither then did you go, my Lord?

Lord Aſton. There I met with my Brother and Siſter Southcoat.

L. C. J. Sir John Southcoat you mean, my Lord.

Lord Aſton. Yes, my Lord. And thence, in four Days we went to my Houſe at Tixhall.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Ireland travel with you all the way?

Lord Aſton. I cannot charge my Memory, my Lord, that he did, ſo as particularly to ſwear it: But there he came into my Company ſometimes at Tixhall; but I cannot tell the particular Days: Nor could I ſpeak poſitively to thoſe Things that I have ſpoke to now, but that I find in my Note-Book, that at that time he did come to my Houſe at Standen, and did go with me to St. Albans.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, did he go that Journey to Tixhall along with you?

Lord Aſton. I cannot ſay poſitively that, Mr. Attorney; but I have a general Notion that he did. Nor could I teſtify this ſo poſitively, I ſay, but by Notes that I have of things at that time: Where I have only writ down theſe things concerning Mr. Ireland, and that he came the 3d of Auguſt to my Houſe at Standen: That on Monday we went together to St. Albans; and there met us Sir John Southcoat, and my Siſter his Wife; and thence I went to Tixhall; and there I arriv'd the 8th of Auguſt, which was Thurſday.

L. C. J. My Lord, I aſk you this Queſtion; you ſay, you have a general Apprehenſion, that he did go with you to Tixhall: Pray, did he come with you to Standen for that purpoſe, to go with you to Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. I had no buſineſs with him at all; but he deſired the opportunity to go down in my Company into Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, do you remember you ſaw him within four or five Days after at Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. To name particular Days, I cannot; but that I ſaw him ſeveral Days at Tixhall, I am ſure.

Oates. My Lord, you ſay that Sir John Southcoat went with you to Tixhall.

Lord Aſton. Yes, he did ſo.

Oates. My Lord, I would aſk this Nobleman, whether he was at the Trial of the five Jeſuits? or the Trial of Ireland?

Lord Aſton. No, my Lord, I was not.

Oates. Then I would aſk my Lord, if he ſaw Mr. Ireland executed?

Lord Aſton. No, I did not.

Oates. Then I would aſk him this Queſtion; whether the Ireland that was executed be the ſame Ireland he ſpeaks of?

Lord Aſton. Amongſt thoſe that knew him well, I have been told it was the ſame.

Oates. That is but Hear-ſay, my Lord; he does not ſpeak of his own Knowledge.

L. C. J. For that matter, I ſuppoſe, you'll produce ſome other Ireland, Mr. Oates, if it was not the ſame.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it this Mrs. Ireland's Brother, that was here a Witneſs now?

Lord Aſton. He was ſo reputed, and ſo looked upon.

L. C. J. That is all one. If any body ſhould aſk me, if you were the ſame Mr. Oates that was at St. Omers; I ſhould ſay, I heard ſo; and it would be very good Evidence, unleſs ſome one elſe were produc'd.

Oates. My Lord, I ſubmit; I will be directed by the Court in any thing that is fair, and not injurious to my Defence.

L. C. J. We will not direct you in any thing that's foul, but pray keep to thoſe Queſtions that are pertinent.

Oates. Are you ſure Ireland went the whole Journey with you, my Lord?

Lord Aſton. I did anſwer that; I have but a general Notion of it, he came to me for that purpoſe.

Oates. Then my Lord is not poſitive he went with him into Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. No, he is not; but I would aſk you this Queſtion. My Lord Aſton, do you believe he went with you Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. I make no doubt of it, I would pawn all I have in the World upon it; only I cannot ſwear it, becauſe I have it not in my Notes, as I have thoſe two other Days.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you like him the worſe, becauſe he is cautious, Mr. Oates?

Oates. No, Sir, I do not. But pray, my Lord, aſk him, becauſe it is a Queſtion here about a point of Time; whether he remembers, that within eight or ten Days, he ſaw Ireland at Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. I cannot ſay any thing as to that.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir Edw. Southcoat.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. I thought you had called him Sir John Southcoat.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir John is ſick, and cannot be here.

Oates. I ſuppoſe my Lord Aſton is a Roman Catholick?

L. C. J. Ay, that all the World knows very well: but I tell you what, Mr. Oates, I obſerve, he is not ſo eaſy in giving his Oath; nay, he is wonderful cautious in ſwearing: I ſpeak it for his Commendation, not as his Fault, he is not very forward at ſwearing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Well, what do you aſk this Gentleman, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. We deſire Sir Edward Southcoat would give an account, whether he met Mr. Ireland at my Lord Aſton's? And when?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I was with my Lord Aſton in his Company.

L. C. J. When was that, Sir?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The 4th of Auguſt I ſaw Mr. Ireland at my Lord Aſton's.

L. C. J. Was it the ſame Ireland, that was afterwards tried and executed?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. It was the ſame Ireland that was commonly reported; I did not ſee him executed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the ſame that was reputed to be this old Gentlewoman's Son?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, go on with your Evidence.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Upon Monday we began our Journey to Tixhall, and went that Night to St. Albans, where we met my Father and Mother, and thence we continued on our Journey the next Day.

L. C. J. Was he with you there that Day you went to St. Albans?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. He was with us, I remember very particularly. It was hot Weather, and my Lord Aſton invited him into the Coach; for before he was riding by the Coach-ſide, and there I remember a particular Diſcourſe that he and my Lord Aſton had; from thence we went on to Northampton, and came there Tueſday Night.

L. C. J. Was Ireland with you there?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Ireland was with us there.

Oates. My Lord, I did not well obſerve what this Gentleman ſaid.

L. C. J. Pray mind your Buſineſs your ſelf, he ſpeaks plain enough; go on, Sir.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Mr. Ireland was with us, I ſay my Lord, all the Journey; and I do remember it particularly by a pretty Horſe Mr. Ireland rode upon; and I had a Diſpute with my Couſin, who ſhould buy him: I took particular notice every day of him, as he rode by the Coach, and converſed with him every Night in the Inn. We went, I ſay, from St. Albans to Northampton on the Tueſday; from Northampton we went to Coventry on the Wedneſday, and from thence to my Lord Aſton's, at Tixhall, on the Thurſday.

L. C. J. Come, let us go by degrees. Was Mr. Ireland with you, when you went from my Lord Aſton's at Standen to St. Albans?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. You ſay it was a hot Day, when you ſet out; and my Lord Aſton did invite him into the Coach.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he came into the Coach on Monday, which was the firſt Day we ſet out: and came that Night to St. Albans.

L. C. J. You lay there that Night?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. At the great Inn, at the Bull.

L. C. J. Ay, that is the great Inn.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The next Night, my Lord, we came to Northampton.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We lay at the Sign of the George; it was Sir William Farmer's Houſe, but made uſe of for an Inn, becauſe the Town was burnt down.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you all that day?

Sir Edw. Southcaot. He rode with us all the day.

L. C. J. And you took notice of it, becauſe of his Horſe, you ſay?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, he had a very pretty Horſe, my Lord; and my Brother bought the Horſe of him, after we came back again.

L. C. J. Whither went ye the next day?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The next Night we lay at the Bull in Coventry, and from thence on Thurſday, we arrived at my Lord Aſton's at Tixhall.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Jury deſires to know what he ſays? For they have not heard it.

L. C. J. He ſays, Mr. Ireland went with my Lord Aſton in the Coach, it being a hot Day, on Monday the 5*th* of Auguſt, from Standen, my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Hertfordſhire, to St. Albans, and lay there at the Bull Inn that Night; that he went the next day, which was Tueſday, the 6*th* of Auguſt, with them to Northampton. That he rode upon a pretty Horſe, which makes him remember it particularly; and that there was a Diſpute on the Road, who ſhould buy him; and when they came back, his Brother bought him. He ſays, they lay on Tueſday Night at Northampton, at the George, which was a Gentleman's Houſe, which was turned into an Inn, becauſe of the Fire: That he went with them the next day to Coventry, which was Wedneſday the 7*th* of Auguſt, and lay with them that Night at the Bull in Coventry; and the next day, which was Thurſday the 8*th*, they came, and Ireland with them, to my Lord Aſton's Houſe at Tixhall in Staffordſhire.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Edward Southcoat, how long did he ſtay with you at Tixhall, at my Lord Aſton's?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. He ſtaid with us there till the Tueſday after; and then we began our Journey from my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Tixhall into Wales, to St Winifred's Well.

L. C. J. That is Holy-Well, you mean.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You ſay he ſtaid all Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and till Tueſday after you came to my Lord Aſton's at Tixhall?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. So then, my Lord, we are gotten to Tueſday the 13*th* of Auguſt, which is paſt the time of the Perjury, that is laid ſecond in the Indictment; but in point of Time, is the firſt that happened, for he ſwore that Ireland took his leave of him, and others here in Town, between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go on Tueſday, Sir?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Towards Wales.

Mr. Jones. Was he at Tixhall the 12*th* of Auguſt?

L. C. J. He ſays, he was till Tueſday the 13*th.* Pray let us not have the ſame Queſtions repeated over and over again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go on Tueſday Night?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We went to Nantwich, and lay at the Holy-Lamb there.

L. C. J. Where were you the next Night?

Sir. Edw. Southcoat. The next Day we reached to St. Winifred's Well.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there?

Sir Edw. Souchcoat. At the Star, which is the great Inn there.

L. C. J. It is ſo.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Ireland there with you?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did ye go then?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We ſtaid not but one Day at Holy-Well; for we arrived there pretty late at Night, and all the Morning we ſpent there, and went away in the Afternoon, and came that Evening to Cheſter, and lay there only one Night, and came the next Day to Tixhall again.

Mr. At. Gen. Which was Friday the 16*th* of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk him, whether this Gentleman, Mr. Ireland, was with them all the while, in this Journey to Holy-Well.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Every Day particularly; I remember it very perfectly.

Mr. At. Gen. After he came to Tixhall again, how long did he tarry there?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. That I cannot ſo well ſay. I do remember truly, but he was afterwards at my Lord Aſton's at Tixhall, I remember ſome ſcambling Days; but I cannot fix upon only two.

L. C. J. Which are they?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was, or what Day of the Week; but one Day that I remember him there, was Mr. Chetwind's Race with Sir Henry Gough; and one other Day.

L. C. J. When was that Horſe-Race?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. My Lord, I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. At. Gen. When was the other time you ſpeak of?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I remember him there one Thurſday upon the Bowling-Green at Tixhall, where there was a particular Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we deſire to know, when his Brother did buy the Horſe of Mr. Ireland.

Sir Edw. Southcoat. When we came back; for he came home with us from my Lord Aſton's, and we began our Journey, the 9*th* or 10*th* of September, from Tixhall to Kingſton; and when we arriv'd at my Father's Houſe, my Brother bought the Horſe of him.

L. C. J. Did you come home back again with Mr. Ireland, do you ſay?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, we did.

L. C. J. When did you ſet out from Tixhall?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The ninth of September, my Lord, I think it was; I am ſure, it was upon a Monday, the 9*th* or 10*th*.

L. C. J. When did you come home?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We were four Days on our Journey.

L. C. J. And did you come ſtraight to London?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. No, we went to my Father's Houſe in Surrey.

L. C. J. Which way did you come?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The firſt Night we came to the Bull in Coventry; and from thence, the next Night, we went to the Altar-Stone at Banbury; and from Banbury, we came the third Day to Agmondeſham (I think, it is called) a little Town in Buckinghamſhire: And from thence the fourth Day, to my Father's Houſe, by Kingſton in Surrey.

Mr. At. Gen. And then Ireland ſold his Brother his Horſe.

L. C. J. How long was he at your Father's Houſe in Surrey, Sir Edward?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. My Lord, we came on the Thurſday; and as I take it, he went on the Saturday to London. My Brother after he had bought his Horſe, lent him the Horſe to Town; and ſent a Man with him, to bring it back again.

Mr. At. Gen. That Saturday, my Lord, makes it come juſt to the Fourteenth of September; and is the very Day Fortnight before Michaelmas-day.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to aſk this Gentleman, whether he ſaw Ireland all Auguſt, and till the Fourteenth of September in Staffordſhire, and elſewhere? And, how long in Staffordſhire?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I cannot ſay, as to any particular Days of the Months, after our coming from Holy-Well, till our coming from Tixhall to London.

L. C. J. Marry, if he did, he would contradict what he had ſaid before: For from the time of coming from Holy-Well, to the time of coming back to London, he could tell but of two Days, and thoſe uncertain: For he remembers not by the Times, but by other particular Circumſtances.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk him this Queſtion, When was the firſt Day he ſaw him in September?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Truly, my Lord, I remember not any Day before we began our Journey home?

Mr. At. Gen. But, my Lord, this is his Teſtimony: He was in his Company till the ſixteenth of Auguſt. It is true, there were other times that he ſaw him at Tixhall; but he cannot particularly ſpeak unto them: But by and by, we ſhall go on to every Day, and prove particularly where he was.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know, Was Sir Edw. Southcoat at the Trial of Ireland a Witneſs, or no?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. No, I was not, my Lord.

Oates. Were you at Whitebread's Trial, Sir?

Sir Edw. Southcoat Yes, I was, and gave the ſame Evidence I give now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. John Southcoat. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. This is Sir Edward Southcoat's Brother, my Lord.

L. C. J. What, he that bought the Horſe?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, I bought the Horſe of Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Well, what do you aſk him?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, When did you meet Mr. Ireland in Auguſt 1678? And where?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I met with Mr. Ireland, upon Monday the Fifth of Auguſt, at the Bull-Inn in St. Albans, with my Lord Aſton: I came thither that day with my Father and Mother. And the next Day we went to Northampton; and there we inn'd at the Sign of the George, Sir William Farmer's Houſe; which is an Houſe in the Road, us'd for an Inn ſince the Town was burnt: And I converſed with him every day, in our Journey. And from thence, the next day, we went to Coventry, to the Bull-Inn there; and from thence, to my Lord Aſton's (on Thurſday Night) at Tixhall: There we ſtaid all Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Mr. Ireland was there; I was with him all the while. And then upon Tueſday we ſet out for Holy-Well in Flintſhire; and went that Night to Nantwich, to the Lamb there. And the next day we went through Cheſter to Holy-Well: We ſtaid that Night at Holy-Well; and the next day came back again towards Noon, to Cheſter; and there lay that Night: And then the next Night, which was Friday, we came back again to Tixhall.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you both thoſe Journeys, all the while?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he was; I did ſee him, and rode with him every Day.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, how long were you at Tixhall, after you came from Holy-Well?

Mr. John Southcoat. We ſtaid there till we came away for good and all.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you all that time?

Mr. John Southcoat. No, he was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember, that Mr. Ireland came to Tixhall the Ninth of September; and came along home with you, when you came?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, I do remember it very well.

L. C. J. What Day did you come home, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. We came home in four Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he leave you?

Mr. John Southcoat. We came home upon Thurſday, and he went to London on Saturday.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, can you recollect when you did firſt ſee him again at Tixhall, after you came from Holy-Well?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I cannot tell particularly any Day, till the Day we came away.

L. C. J. Do you remember the Horſe-Match between Mr. Chetwind and Sir Henry Gough?

Mr. John Southcoat. I was there, my Lord; but I do not remember Mr. Ireland was there.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay at your Father's Houſe in Surrey, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. Two Days, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You lent him your Horſe you bought of him, I think, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, up to London, I did; and I ſent my Man with him, to bring him back again.

Mr. At. Gen. Has Mr. Oates any Queſtions to aſk this Gentleman?

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to aſk Mr. Southcoat, whether or no he is ſure, that Ireland was in his Company from the Fifth of Auguſt to the Sixteenth?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, every day, I am ſure of it; I remember it very well.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, Whether or no he teſtified this that he now ſwears, at Ireland's Trial?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I was not at Ireland's Trial.

Oates. Then I deſire to aſk him, Whether or no he did teſtify this at the five Jeſuits Trial?

Mr. John Southcoat. No; I was not ſent for to any of the Trials.

L. C. J. I am ſorry you were not, Sir: 'Twas pity you were not there. It might have ſaved ſome innocent Blood.

Mr. At. Gen. Now ſwear Harriſon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account when you ſaw Ireland, and where?

Harriſon. In the Year of our Lord 1678, my Maſter Sir John Southcoat, went with my Lady, on Monday the Fifth of Auguſt, to St. Alban's; and we came with a Coach and four Horſes: For my Maſter had an old Servant, that had a Pair of Horſes, which my Maſter made uſe of. And there we met my Lord Aſton, in the Company of Mr. Ireland. And the next Morning, my Lord Aſton went with my Maſter and Lady towards Tixhall: And I rode by, in Mr. Ireland's Company; and came acquainted with him that Day. That Night we came to Northampton; and there we inn'd at a Stone-Houſe, that was uſed for the Inn, the Town being burnt before. The next Night we went to Coventry; and on Thurſday we came to Tixhall: There we ſtaid till Tueſday. After we went to Holy-Well; and the Tueſday Night we lay at Nantwich: And thence we went to Holy-Well, and ſtaid there on Wedneſday Night: And on Thurſday we came to Weſt-Cheſter; and I parted with him upon the Friday at Weſt-Cheſter.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you know this Ireland? Was it he that was tried and executed?

Harriſon. I was at Mr. Ireland's Trial.

L. C. J. Was it the ſame Man that was tried?

Harriſon. My Lord, I ſaw him at his Trial, the Hair of his Face was grown, and he was a little diſordered; he did not look ſo well, becauſe he was not ſo well dreſs'd; but it was the ſame Man, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before this Man goes, we have more Queſtions to aſk him: When did you ſee him again, after you left him in Cheſter you ſay?

Harriſon. I ſaw him ſeveral times at Tixhall; I ſaw him at the Bowling-green upon Thurſday; and I ſaw him when the Horſe-Race was between Mr. Chetwind and Sir Henry Gough: I cannot tell what Day it was; for I had no reaſon to keep an account of the particular Days at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you come up with your Maſter again the 9th of September?

Harriſon. My Lord, I did ſo; I have a Note wherein I ſet down the Charges at that time. It is in this bit of Paper, which I have kept in my Almanack ever ſince. My Lord Aſton ſent his Coach with us to Banbury, where my Maſter's Coach was to meet him; but came only to Coventry the firſt Night. The next Night, which was Tueſday, we came to the Altar-Stone at Banbury, and there we lay: From thence on Wedneſday, we came to Agmondeſham, where we were ill lodged. The next Day we baited at Uxbridge, and came to Kingſton, and ſo to Sir John Southcoat's Houſe, upon the Thurſday Night. Upon the Friday Mr. Ireland ſold his Horſe to Mr. John Southcoat, my Maſter's Son. Upon the Saturday Morning, I came with him from my Maſter's Houſe towards London; he did ride upon the Horſe he had ſold to Mr. Southcoat, and ſo we came up to Town, and took water; and I took a little Bag that belonged to Mr. Ireland upon my Arm, and we landed at Somerſet-Houſe, and I came with him to his Lodging in Ruſſel-ſtreet; and when he came there, he went up ſtairs, where two Women met him, and welcom'd him home: Said they, We are glad you are come, we thought we had loſt you, becauſe we had never heard from you all this while. There I took my leave of him, and did not ſee him again till his Trial at the Old-Bailey; and this was Saturday the 14th of September.

L. C. J. Pray let me ſee your Paper you ſpeak of.

[Which was delivered in, and the Court look'd upon it.

L. C. J. Did you write this in your Journey?

Harriſon. Yes, my Lord, I did it at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Are the particular Days inſerted there, my Lord?

L. C. J. No, they are not, Mr. Attorney.

Har-

Harriſon. I could not write well; it was only but Memorandums for myſelf.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was the Saturday he came to Town?

Harriſon. It was the 14th of September, my Lord.

L. C. J. That agrees with all that the Women ſaid, that he came on Saturday a Fortnight before Michaelmas, being the ſame Day of the Week as Michaelmas-day was: Thus far it is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day.

Oates. My Lord, there was a time when this was not believed.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Oates, we know there was a time, when there were Ignoramus Juries, and things were believed, and not believed, as the Humour went. What can you, Mr. Oates, ſay to it? I muſt needs tell you, prima facie 'tis ſo ſtrong an Evidence, that if you have any Senſe in the World, you muſt be concern'd at it.

Oates. Not at all, my Lord; I know who they are, and what is the end of it all.

L. C. J. Upon my Faith, I have ſo much Charity for you, as my Fellow-Creature, as to be concerned for you.

Oates. 'Tis not two Straws matter, whether you be or no; I know my own Innocency.

L. C. J. Thou art the moſt obſtinately hardened Wretch that ever I ſaw.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him, whether he did not appear at Mr. Ireland's Trial? And let it be remember'd what Credit he had then for all this Story he tells now. Theſe People come here to ſerve a Turn only, and care not what they ſwear againſt me.

L. C. J. You muſt hold your tongue.

Oates. My Lord, I muſt ſpeak the Truth, and I will ſpeak the Truth.

L. C. J. I think there is ſcarce a Word of Truth comes out of thy Mouth.

Oates. You may think what you will, my Lord; but theſe Popiſh Traitors, I am ſure, will ſwear any thing, and ſuborn Witneſſes upon Witneſſes againſt me to overthrow the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Withins If you cannot behave yourſelf better than you do, we muſt ſend you elſewhere; we muſt not ſuffer this Behaviour: And therefore either be quiet, or get you gone.

L. C. J. Let him keep himſelf in order, and we'll hear him. If he thinks by boiſterous Impudency to outface Juſtice, we will not ſuffer it. Go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. George Hobſon.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you in the Journey to Tixhall with Mr. Ireland, and my Lord Aſton in 78?

Mr. Hobſon. Yes, I was ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell all your Knowledge of that matter.

Mr. Hobſon. From the 3d of Auguſt till the 16th at Night, I was preſent with him every Day.

L. C. J. How do you know you were?

Mr. Hobſon. That is to ſay, the 3d of Auguſt he came to my Lord's Houſe at Standen in Hertfordſhire in the Evening, and there he remained till Monday the 5th of Auguſt; and that Day in the Morning, he went, together with other Company, to St. Albans, where we met Sir John Southcoat and his Lady towards the Evening; and we all lodged there, becauſe that was the appointed Place to meet at: We lodged the 6th of Auguſt at Night at Northampton; upon the 7th at Coventry; upon the 8th at Tixhall, my Lord's Houſe, where Mr Ireland remained till Tueſday the 13th in the Morning. And upon the 13th in the Morning we ſet forth with my Lady Aſton, my Lord's Mother, Sir John Southcoat, and Mr. Ireland, and the other Company, towards a Place called Holy-Well in Flintſhire. That Night, being Tueſday the 13th of Auguſt, we lodged at Nantwich in Cheſhire; the Wedneſday Night we lodged at Holy-Well, where Mr. Ireland was with the reſt of the Company; and on Thurſday Night we returned back again to Cheſter, and lay there. Upon Friday we came back again to my Lord's Houſe at Tixhall. After that I did not ſee Mr. Ireland till Monday the 26th of Auguſt, when he came back again to our Houſe: Where he went in the mean time, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Whoſe Houſe is it that this Man means by our Houſe?

Mr. Hobſon. I mean my Lord Aſton's Houſe at Tixhall.

L. C. J. You knew him very well, did not you?

Mr. Hobſon. Yes, my Lord, I knew him very well.

L. C. J. You ſay, he came back the 26th of Auguſt to Tixhall?

Mr. Hobſon. Yes, as I remember, he did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. How long after the 26th of Auguſt was it, that you ſaw him at Tixhall?

Mr. Hobſon. When he went away for London.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Hobſon. The 9th of September.

L. C. J. Did you come along with him to London?

Mr. Hobſon. No, my Lord; I ſaw him go; he was not in the Coach, but he was in the Company.

Oates. My Lord, I would fain aſk him a Queſtion, when he was firſt acquainted with Mr. Ireland, that he ſpeaks of?

Mr Hobſon. I never ſaw him till he came to my Lord Aſton's at Standen.

Oates. Were you at the Trial of Mr. Ireland Sir?

Mr. Hobſon. No, my Lord, I was not; I was then in Staffordſhire.

Oates. Then it is material, my Lord, for me to aſk him this Queſtion, it relating to a particular Perſon; whether Ireland that was executed, was the Ireland he ſays he was with?

L. C. J. I will aſk him, if you will. Was that the ſame Man that was afterwards tried and executed?

Mr. Hobſon. I believe it was, my Lord.

Oates. I inſiſt not ſo much upon the Queſtion, but only in reference to the Witneſs, his Acquaintance being ſo ſhort with him.

L. C. J. Truly, I think it is not ſo very ſhort; for he ſwears he was with him from the 3d of Auguſt till the 16th every Day.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I have no great Acquaintance with you; but I know you, Mr. Oates, becauſe I have ſeen you ſo often.

L. C. J. Is it the ſame Ireland that was at the Trial? You, Harriſon, you ſaw him then?

Harriſon. The very ſame, and no other.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Certainly no body doubts that.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit he ſhould have his Queſtion anſwer'd, if the Witneſs can. Pray, go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear George North. [Which was done.] Pray, will you give an account where you met Mr. Ireland, and whether you was with him in his Journey?

North. My Lord, I ſaw him the 4th of Auguſt, which was Sunday, at Standen, my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Hertfordſhire: Upon the 5th, he went with my Lord to St. Albans; where my Lord met with Sir John Southcoat and his Lady; and I was with them. And from thence we went on Tueſday to the George at Northampton: And from thence, on Wedneſday the 7th, to the Bull at Coventry: And upon the 8th, we came to Tixhall, which was Thurſday. And from Thurſday the 8th, to Tueſday the 13th, I did ſee him every day at my Lord's Houſe at Tixhall.

L. C. J. Whither went he then?

North. He went with my old Lady, and ſome other Company to go to Holy-Well.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him again?

North. I did ſee him ſeveral times after that at Tixhall: But I took no particular notice of him again till he went away for London.

L. C. J. When was that?

North. I did ſee him the 9th of September. He came to go with Sir John Southcoat to London: Mr. John Southcoat, and he. I took my leave of him.

Oates. What Religion are you of, Sir?

North. I am a Catholick, my Lord.

Oates. I deſire to know, how he comes to remember this ſo well?

North. I waited at the Table; and he was every day at Dinner with my Lord.

Oates. Were you at the Trial of Ireland a Witneſs?

North. No indeed, my Lord, I was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Richard Ingletrap, [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an account, whether you knew Mr. Ireland, and where you ſaw him?

Ingletrap. The 1ſt of Auguſt, my Lord, I was ordered to be at Standen in Hertfordſhire, to wait upon my Lord Aſton, to go with him to Tixhall. And the 3d of Auguſt I ſaw Mr. Ireland there at Standen Lodge at my Lord's Houſe. The 4th Day he reſted there, being Sabbath-day.

Mr. At. Gen. What are you, an Hackney-Coachman?

Ingletrap. Yes, my Lord, I am ſo. And upon the 5th, which was Monday, he went with my Lord Aſton to St. Albans; upon the 6th to Northampton; on the 7th, to Coventry; and the 8th Day, to Tixhall Lodge. He was in the Company and went all the way with him; and I was there too.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay there?

Ingletrap. Till Tueſday the 13th.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there till Tueſday?

Ingletrap. I do not ſay, that I did ſee him every Day.

L. C. J. Did you go with them on Tueſday to Holy-Well?

Ingletrap. No, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. But, my Lord, you obſerve, that is paſt one of the Times that he ſwore Ireland was here in Town; that is, between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt.

L. C. J. It is ſo.

Mr. A. Gen. Pray, what Religion are you of, Mr. Ingletrap?

Ingletrap. I am a Proteſtant, my Lord.

Oates. Were you at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, or that of Ireland?

Ingletrap. No, I was not.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire you would aſk him, he being a Proteſtant, how he came to be acquainted with Ireland, that was a Prieſt?

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Oates, is there no Converſation to be between Papiſts and Proteſtants?

Oates. Truly, very little, my Lord: But that is not to the Point now. I deſire to have an Anſwer to my Queſtion.

Ingletrap. There was no great Acquaintance between us, my Lord; for I never ſaw him before that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Andrew Wetton. [Which was done.] Did you go that Journey with my Lord Aſton to Tixhall.

Wetton. No; I went from Tixhall to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. What day did you ſet out from Tixhall?

Wetton. Upon Tueſday the 13th of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you lie that Night?

Wetton. At Nantwich at the Holy-Lamb. And the next Day we baited at Cheſter; and from thence we came the next Night to Holy-Well: There we ſtaid all Night, and till next day at Noon. We din'd at Holy-Well, and came that Night back to Cheſter: And from thence, the next day, we came home to Tixhall.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland there all the while?

Wetton. Mr. Ireland was there, I look'd after his Horſe.

L. C. J. When did he come firſt to Tixhall?

Wetton. He came upon the 8th, and ſtaid till the 13th; and then went to Holy-Well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what Religion are you of?

Wetton. I am a Proteſtant, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. And the 9th of September he came away from Tixhall to London, you ſay?

Wetton. Yes; I ſaw them take Coach; and he did ride on horſeback.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him often at Tixhall, between the time he came from Holy-Well and the time he went to London?

Wetton. Yes, he was there ſeveral times; but I cannot tell the particular Days: But, my Lord, if you pleaſe, I can tell you the very Money he gave me, which was a Shilling and two Six-pences, when we came back from Holy-Well.

L. C. J. And the 16th, you ſay, he came back from Holy-Well?

Wetton. Yes, it was the 16th, upon Friday, that he came from Holy-Well.

L. C. J. And he ſays, the 9th of September he came back again from Tixhall to London; and that he ſaw him ſeveral times, in the mean time, at my Lord Aſton's Houſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So, my Lord, we are paſt one of the times; and have fix'd him at Tixhall upon the 16th.

Mr. At. Gen. We have a couple of Witneſſes more upon this Point, and then we ſhall go on to the 17th; and ſo all along to the 9th of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Thomas Sawyer. [Which was done.] When came Mr. Ireland to Tixhall? can you tell?

Mr. Sawyer. He came the 8th of Auguſt to Tixhall, and continued there till the 13th: And then he he went away; but whither he went, I cannot tell: But, as I was told, it was to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come to Tixhall again?

Mr. Sawyer. When my old Lady Aſton came home, which was Friday the 16th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know when he left Tixhall for good and all?

Mr. Sawyer. The 9th of September, my Lord, he went with Sir John Southcoat to go to London.

L. C. J. Can you remember he was there at any time between the 16th of Auguſt, and the 9th of September?

Mr. Sawyer. He was once or twice there; but I cannot tell the particular Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Perſuaſion are you of, as to Religion, Sir?

Mr. Sawyer. I am one of the Church of England, my Lord.

L. C. J. Truth is the ſame in all Perſuaſions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we would obviate Mr. Oates's Objection, that they are all Papiſts.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Frances Allen. [Which was done.] Pray, will you give an account, when you ſaw Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire?

Mrs. Allen. He came the 8th Day of Auguſt to Tixhall, and continued there the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and to the 13th in the Morning, and then he did go to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. She will tell you one particular Circumſtance, how ſhe remembers him about that time.

Mrs. Allen. The 10th of Auguſt was Saturday; and that which cauſeth me to remember it, is this: There was a Woman, one Sarah Paine, I think her Name was, which teſtified at the Trial, that he was in Town at that time; but he was not: For he was at Tixhall upon the 10th, which was Saturday; and the 11th, which was Sabbath-day: And I ſaw him in the Chamber thoſe Days.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to know him ſo well?

Mrs. Allen. I was a Servant to my Lord Aſton, and look'd to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and waſh'd his Linnen; and thoſe Days I ſaw him in his Chamber.

Mr. At. Gen. When he went from Tixhall to Holy-Well the 13th, when did he come back again?

Mrs. Allen. The 16th Day, which was Friday.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he come afterwards to Tixhall at any time?

Mrs. Allen. He went away the 17th, and I can tell you by a good Token, that he did ſo: For the 17th I carried his Clothes into his Chamber, that he was to take with him.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come again to Tixhall?

Mrs. Allen. He came ſeveral times, but truly I cannot tell what Days particularly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when did he go away for good and all?

Mrs. Allen. I remember his going away with Sir John Southcoat, but I cannot tell the time.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Religion are you of?

Mrs. Allen. I am a Proteſtant of the Church of England; ſo I was chriſtened, ſo I have lived, and ſo I hope to die before you all.

L. C. J. Upon my word, ſhe is very kind, ſhe has a mind to die before us: 'Tis a ſign ſhe lives a good Life, ſhe's ſo ready to die.

Mr. At. Gen. So, my Lord, you ſee that the 17th of Auguſt he departed from my Lord Aſton's. Now we ſhall call Mrs. Harwell to give you an account, whither he went on the 17th. Swear Mrs. Jane Harwell. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live, Mrs. Harwell?

Mrs. Harwell. I live now in Town, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you live in the Year 78?

Mrs. Harwell. At Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Ireland, he that was executed?

Mrs. Harwell. Very well, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did he come to your Houſe at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Harwell. The 17th of Auguſt, 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Harwell. Upon Saturday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. From whence did he ſay he came at that time?

Mrs. Harwell. I do verily believe it was from Tixhall that he came; I cannot poſitively ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long ſtaid he there?

Mrs. Harwell. He came to my Houſe the 17th of Auguſt 1678. He ſupped there that Night, and I think he lay in my Houſe every Night till the 26th of the ſame Month. Upon the 19th Day, after Dinner, I went with him a good part of the Town of Wolverhampton; and upon Friday following, which was the 23d, he went a little way out of Town, to a Fair hard by, and return'd the ſame day, and ſtaid at my Houſe the next day, being Bartholomew-day. The next day being the 25th, being Sunday, he was at my Houſe, and he ſtaid, as I ſaid, every Night, and lay at my Houſe; and went away on Monday the 26th of Auguſt. It was, to the beſt of my remembrance, in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whither he did ſay he was going, when he went from your Houſe on the 26th?

Mrs. Harwell. I think to Tixhall, he ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee him again after that?

Mrs. Harwell. He returned to me again the 4th of September following. That Night he ſupped at my Houſe, and lay there; and he ſtaid at my Houſe Thurſday the 5th of September, Friday the 6th, and he went away on the 7th from me for good and all.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did it go then?

Mrs. Harwell. To Tixhall, I think, I cannot tell.

Mr. At. Gen. Whence did he ſay he came, when he came laſt to your Houſe; which was Wedneſday the 4th of September?

Mrs. Harwell. Then he ſaid, he came from Boſcobel and Black-Ladies, and that way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any thing that makes you remember he was at Boſcobel?

Mrs. Harwell. I have ſome Circumſtances that make me believe and remember it.

L. C. J. Ay, tell us what they are.

Mrs. Harwell. My Lord, upon Monday the 2d of September, I heard Mr. Ireland would be at Boſcobel, and I ſaid to my Friend that told me ſo, Sure Mr. Ireland will not be there that Night, and I ſo near him; Yes, ſaid ſhe, he will. Then, ſaid I, I will write to him; and ſo I did. And I tell you the 4th of September, which was Wedneſday, he came to my Houſe, and ſtaid that Night, and the two next Days with me, and went away upon the Saturday after.

L. C. J. You ſay, you did write to him upon the 2d of September?

Mrs. Harwell. Yes, I did ſo.

L. C. J. What was the occaſion of your writing to him at that time?

Mrs. Harwell. One Madam Dormer was then in thoſe Parts, and he being gone a viſiting his Friends at Black-Ladies, I writ to him, and deſired him to give her a Viſit, for I knew ſhe would be glad to ſee him.

L. C. J. He came back to you the 4th of September, you ſay?

Mrs. Harwell. Yes, he did ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he own upon the fourth of September, that he had received your Letter?

Mrs. Harwell. He ſaid he had been at the Place, my Lord, but I know not whether he had received my Letter or no; but I am ſure he waited upon my Lady, for ſhe told me ſo afterwards.

Oates. I deſire to know, whether this Gentlewoman was at Ireland's Trial?

Mrs. Harwell. No, my Lord; but I heard that upon the 17th of December following, Mr. Ireland was tried at the Old-Bailey for High-Treaſon. Upon the 19th, I was informed by the Poſt what was ſworn againſt him; and particularly as to this time, which I knew to be falſe: And upon my own Coſt and Charges I ſent an Expreſs away to Town here to a Friend that I knew, upon reading the Letter that was written to me, that Mr. Ireland was falſely accuſed; and by that Expreſs, alſo I ſent a Petition, humbly beſeeching his late Majeſty, that we might bring in Witneſſes to prove, that Mr. Ireland was in Staffordſhire, when Mr. Oates ſwore he was in Town; and upon that the King ſtaid the execution about five Weeks. We did hope for a ſecond Trial, but we could not obtain it; and he was executed. I did it at my own Coſt and Charges: For I thought it my Duty, if I could, to ſave his Life, knowing that to be falſe which was ſworn againſt him.

L. C. J. She ſpeaks gravely and ſoberly, upon my Word.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. So ſhe does indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have abundance of them, my Lord. Swear Mr. William Ruſhton.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell my Lord what you know of Mr. Ireland's being at Mrs. Harwell's in Auguſt 1678, at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Ruſhton. My Lord, in the Month of Auguſt 1678, I did ſee Mr. William Ireland at Wolverhampton in the County of Stafford; and it was upon the 18th of Auguſt, and I ſaw him there, from the 18th to the 25th, every one of the days but one, and that I cannot be poſitive in. He went that day to Litchfield, which was upon the 23d, as I take it, but I cannot be poſitive; but all the reſt of the days I did ſee him there once, if not twice or thrice a day.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he lodge then?

Mr. Ruſhton. At Mr. Jyfford's, or Mrs. Harwell's.

Oates. Were you at any of the Trials of Ireland, or the five Jeſuits, Sir?

Mr. Ruſhton. No, I was never at one till now.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, what Religion is this Gentleman of, I deſire to know?

Mr. Ruſhton. Not of your Worſhip's Religion, Dr. Oates.

L. C. J. But anſwer his Queſtion.

Mr. Ruſhton. I am a Catholick.

Oates. A Roman Catholick he means, I ſuppoſe,

Mr. Ruſhton. Yes; I am a Roman Catholick, and a loyal Subject.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mrs. Katherine Winford.

Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Winford, pray did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Mrs. Harwell's, in the Year 1678?

Mrs. Winford. Yes, I did, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Court what you do know of that matter.

Mrs. Winford. I did hear at Wolverhampton, that Mr. Ireland came to Town the 17th of Auguſt, and I did ſee him there the 18th, and I did ſee him there the 19th, and I did ſee him there the 20th; and I ſaw him there upon the 22d, 23d, 24th, and 25th, and that was the laſt time I ſaw him there.

L. C. J. At Mrs. Harwell's was it that you ſaw him?

Mrs. Winford. Sometimes at Mrs Harwell's, and ſometimes at my Father's Houſe, who lived in that Town.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know how ſhe comes to remember thoſe Days ſo particularly?

Mrs. Winford. I remember them, becauſe St. Bartholemew's Day was the 24th of Auguſt, and that was the Saturday after he came to Town; and the firſt day I ſaw him was the Sunday before, and ſo I reckon it to be on thoſe days I ſaw him.

L. C. J. Have you any other Queſtions to aſk her, Mr. Oates?

Oates. No, my Lord, I have not: She was a Witneſs before at Whitebread's Trial, and was not believed there.

L. C. J. Well, make your Remarks by and by, and let them now go on with their Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. William Stanley.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when?

Mr. Stanley. Upon the 18th of Auguſt 78. It was Sunday, I ſaw Mr. Ireland in Wolverhampton in the Morning, and in the Afternoon he was in my own Houſe. Upon Monday the 19th I ſaw him twice that day at my own Houſe; I poſitively ſpeak that, and I verily believe I did ſee him on Tueſday the 20th, and Wedneſday the 21ſt; but Thurſday and Friday I cannot ſay I did ſee him thoſe two Days: For he went upon one of them to Litchfield. But upon Saturday and Sunday I am ſure I ſaw him, and two or three times ſome days.

Oates. Pray, Mr. Stanley, did you know him before?

Mr. Stanley. No, I did not, Sir.

Oates. Was you at his Trial?

Mr. Stanley. No, I was not.

Oates. Were you at the five Jeſuits Trial?

Mr. Stanley. No, I was not in London ſince, till the laſt Term.

Oates. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Stanley. What Religion are you of, Mr. Oates?

L. C. J. Nay, do not aſk Queſtions, but anſwer the Queſtions he aſks.

Mr. Stanley. I am a Roman Catholick.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Stanley, pray can you recollect any Circumſtance how you came to remember that it was ſuch and ſuch Days that you ſaw him?

Mr. Stanley. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. What are they, tell them us?

Mr. Stanley. I buried a Child that Morning, being Sunday the 18th of Auguſt, and he came to my Houſe in the Afternoon, and I entertained him with thoſe things that I had provided for to entertain my Friends at the Funeral. On Monday was a Wake, and the young People went all to the Wake, and left Madam Harwell alone; and ſo ſhe came with him to my Houſe, and I entertained him with the ſame kind of Entertainment that I did the Day before.

L. C. J. That is a remarkable Circumſtance indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Dorothy Purcell. [Which was done.] What ſay you Mrs. Purcell, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Purcell. I ſaw him the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21ſt, 22d, and 23d Days of Auguſt, 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you ſee him?

Mrs. Purcell. At a Friend's Houſe in Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How come you to remember thoſe Days of the Month?

Mrs. Purcell. I remember them by particular Circumſtances.

L. C. J. What are thoſe particular Circumſtances? Let us hear them, how come you to name thoſe very Days, the 18th, 19th, and ſo on?

Mrs. Purcell. I can remember it as well as any thing in the World.

Oates. I deſire, my Lord, that ſhe may tell how ſhe does remember it.

Mrs. Purcell. That's enough, and as much as need to be ſaid, I remember very well.

Oates. But I deſire to know how you come to remember it?

Mrs. Purcell. I remember it, I tell you, very well; and I do affirm I ſaw him there.

Oates. But you do not tell what Circumſtances you remember it by.

Mrs. Purcell. No, there is no need of it, I am ſure I ſaw him there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell him ſome Circumſtances.

Mrs. Purcell. Thoſe were the Days before Bartholomew Eve.

Oates. My Lord, is this any thing of Evidence?

L. C. J. The Jury heard it, and they will conſider of it.

Oates. What Religion are you of, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Purcell. Muſt I tell what Religion I am of?

L. C. J. Yes, anſwer his Queſtion.

Oates. I dare ſay, ſhe is a Papiſt; ſhe need not trouble her head to anſwer it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Scott. [Which was done.] Were you at Wolverhampton when Mr. Ireland was there?

Scott. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you do any ſervice for him there?

Scott. I look'd to his Horſe.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come thither, do you remember?

Scott. I cannot tell juſt the time that he came in.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it that he came thither?

Scott. It was of a Saturday.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month was it?

Scott. I cannot tell very well what Month it was; it was in Auguſt I think.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Scott. The ſpace of a Fortnight off and on.

Oates. Is that Evidence, my Lord, that he has delivered?

L. C. J. It is but very ſmall Evidence. It is only circumſtantial to confirm the other Teſtimony.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was it before Ireland was tried and executed, can you tell that?

Scott. No, I know nothing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. John Stamford. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when was it, I pray you?

Mr. Stamford. My Lord, in the Year 1675, I was ſent beyond Sea to St. Omers, to fetch over two young Gentlemen that were Students there; and there I became acquainted with Mr. Ireland, who was then Procurator of the Jeſuits at St. Omers. And in Auguſt 78, I did ſee him in Wolverhampton, upon the Sunday after the Aſſumption of our Lady; which was the 15th of Auguſt, he came to ſee me, and I ſaw him there that Day.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month is the Aſſumption of our Lady?

Mr. Stamford. That is always the 15th of Auguſt, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. How often did you ſee him there?

Mr. Stamford. I ſaw him Sunday and Monday, and till that Day ſeven-night; I ſaw him every Day in that Week but one, when he went to Litchfield.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know how he comes to remember that it was at that time?

L. C. J. He tells you a Reaſon for it, becauſe it fell out to be upon the Sunday after the Aſſumption of our Lady, which is always the 15th of Auguſt.

Oates. My Lord, he ſays he came acquainted with Mr. Ireland at St. Omers.

L. C. J. Yes, he ſays, that was in the Year 1675.

Oates. I deſire to know, my Lord, what buſineſs he had there?

L. C. J. He tells you, he went to fetch over two young Men that were Students there.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what Religion he is of.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Stamford. I am a Roman Catholick.

Oates. I deſire to know what is his Profeſſion?

Mr. Stamford. I am a younger Brother of a good and loyal Family as any of the County of Stafford, and that ſuffered as much as any for the late King.

Oates. I believe if it were look'd into, he is ſomewhat elſe beſides a younger Brother.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he ſays he is of a loyal Family.

L. C. J. I am ſure there is ſuch a Family in that County that were great Sufferers for King Charles I. and the late King; and were very inſtrumental in Services for the late King, at his eſcape from Worceſter: but whether he be of that Family or no, I cannot tell.

Mr. Stamford. The Doctor thinks I am a Jeſuit, but I'll aſſure him I have a Wife and Children.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Oates was about to have made him a Prieſt, but it ſeems he hath a Wife and Children, and ſo is out of Danger.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Swear Mrs. Katherine Fowler. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Fowler, at Wolverhampton in 1678?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it?

Mrs. Fowler. I did ſee him on Saturday the 17th of Auguſt at Wolverhampton; he came that day to my Mother's Houſe, where I was.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he ſtay there?

Mrs. Fowler. Till the 27th, which was Monday was Seven-night after: I was in his Company every day in that time unleſs it were Friday, which day they ſay he went to Litchfield to the Fair.

L. C. J. Is Mrs. Harwell your Mother?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, my Lord, ſhe is, and I lived at that time with my Mother.

L. C. J. How do you remember this? Have you any Tokens that you can give us, why you remember it was then?

Mrs. Fowler. My Lord, I recollected my ſelf after Mr. Ireland's Trial, in which Mr. Oates ſwore that he was here in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, that that was the very Month that Mr. Ireland was in Wolverhampton, and thereupon I concluded that Mr. Oates had not ſworn true, by that Recollection when it was freſh in my Memory, being within half a Year after.

Oates. Madam, are you Mrs. Harwell's Daughter?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I am ſo, Sir.

Oates. Did you not know one Mr. Jenniſon?

Mrs. Fowler. Which Jenniſon?

Oates. Mr. Robert Jenniſon.

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I do know him.

Oates. Are you not a-kin to him?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, but I am ſorry to own I have ſuch a Relation.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Gifford.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire, and when I pray you?

Mr. Gifford. I ſaw him there at Wolverhampton the 17th of Auguſt 1678, and he continued there till the 26th; I ſaw him there every day.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to aſk this Gentleman, whether he were at the Trial of Ireland?

Mr. Gifford. No, I was not in Court, nor examined as a Witneſs.

Oates. Were you at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, Sir?

Mr. Gifford. I was there, but was not examined.

L. C. J. Was it every day, ſay you, that you ſaw him at Wolverhampton?

Mr. Gifford. Every day.

L. C. J. They ſay, he was one day out of Town at Litchfield.

Mr. Gifford. He was out of Town that day, but I ſaw him.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elizabeth Gifford.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You hear the Queſtion, did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire in 78, and when?

Mrs. E. Gifford. Mr. Ireland came to Wolverhampton the 17th of Auguſt, and continued there till the 26th.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you remember it?

Mrs. Gifford. By a Wake that was juſt hard by, that was at that time: and he came to my Uncle's Houſe upon the Sunday following the Aſſumption of our Lady.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee him every day till the 26th?

Mrs. Gifford. I remember I did ſee him every day but two days that I was abroad at the Wake.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether ſhe was examined at any of the former Trials?

Mrs. Gifford. Yes, at the five Jeſuits Trial, I was.

Oates. Were you not at Ireland's Trial?

Mrs. Gifford. No, I was not.

Oates. There was one Gifford examined there.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elizabeth Keeling.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when?

Keeling. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell when it was.

Keeling. It was the 17th of Auguſt he came to my Miſtreſs's Houſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Auguſt?

Keeling. Auguſt before the Plot.

L. C. J. Who was your Miſtreſs?

Keeling. Mrs. Harwell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Keeling. He came on the Saturday, and I ſaw him there till the Monday. When I was ſent for to my Mother's Burying, I left him and Madam Dormer at Dinner, and came back on the Thurſday. And in his Chamber I heard him diſcourſe, but I did not ſee him. Upon the Friday he went abroad, and returned again that Night. Upon the Saturday I ſaw him, and he continued there till Monday Morning, and then he went away, and returned on Wedneſday the 4th of September, and ſtaid till Saturday the 7th; and then went away from Wolverhampton.

Oates. I deſire to know what Religion this Woman is of?

Keeling. I am a Roman Catholick, God be thanked.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Keeling, when did Mr. Ireland return again, do you ſay, after he went firſt to Wolverhampton?

Keeling. It was the Wedneſday ſeven-night after, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. That was the 4th of September.

L. C. J. How long ſtaid he there then?

Keeling. Till Saturday in the Forenoon.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he ſay he was going then?

Keeling. He ſaid he went to Bellamour to Dinner.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him at any time after?

Keeling. No, my Lord, I ſaw him no more.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Richardſon.

Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give an account when you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and where, in the Year 78?

Mr. Richardſon. My Lord, I ſaw a Gentleman that I was informed was Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, at a Wake; which was Monday the 19th of Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he lodge?

Mr. Richardſon. At Mrs. Harwell's.

Mr. At. Gen. What are you, a Tradeſman?

Mr. Richardſon. Yes, an Apothecary in Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How many Days did you ſee him at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Richardſon. I ſaw him only one Day in the Market-place.

L. C. J. You did not know Mr. Ireland before?

Mr. Richardſon. But I was informed that was he.

L. C. J. What become of that Ireland that you were informed was at Wolverhampton then?

Mr.

Mr. Richardſon. I heard preſently after that, upon Mr. Oates's Plot, he was ſecured and executed.

Mr. At. Gen. What Religion are you of, pray, Sir?

Mr. Richardſon. I am of the Church of England.

Oates. Pray, Sir, I would aſk you this Queſtion.

Mr. Richardſon. As many Queſtions as you pleaſe, Mr. Oates.

Oates. Who told you it was Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Richardſon. Mrs. Harwell.

Oates. When was it ſhe told you it was Ireland?

Mr. Richardſon. To the beſt of my remembrance, it was before he was apprehended as a Traitor.

Oates. He is uncertain when he was told ſo.

L. C. J. Well, make what advantage you can of it by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Eleanor Graves.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Miſtreſs, did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton at any time?

Mrs. Graves. Yes, I did, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it?

Mrs. Graves. The firſt time was ſix Years ago in Auguſt, it is now going on ſeven Years ſince.

Mr. At. Gen. What time in Auguſt was it?

Mrs. Graves. The firſt Day was the 20th or 21ſt, I am ſure I ſaw him upon the 22d; for I dined with him, and was with him all the Afternoon, and ſupp'd with him. Upon the 23d we went to Litchfield together, which was Bartholomew Eve. And I ſaw him the 25th, which was Sunday after.

L. C. J. Are you ſure it is the Ireland we are now ſpeaking of?

Mrs. Graves. They ſaid it was the ſame Mr. Ireland that was executed. They call'd him ſo.

L. C. J. Nay, there is no great doubt, but only for Mr. Oates's Satisfaction.

Mr. At. Gen. At whoſe Houſe did he lie at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Graves. At Mrs. Harwell's

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it you ſupp'd with him, I pray you?

Mrs. Graves. He dined and ſupp'd at a Relation's Houſe of mine.

L. C. J. Who was that? name him.

Mrs. Graves. It was at my Uncle Winford's.

L. C. J. Did you go along with him to Litchfield, do you ſay, on the 23d?

Mrs. Graves. Yes, and ſo did my Uncle; and at Night we came back together.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Religion are you of, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Graves. I am of the Church of England.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to aſk her, how did ſhe know it was the ſame Ireland that was try'd?

Mrs. Graves. It was the ſame Ireland that they ſaid was afterwards executed. I know no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you go back with him to Mrs. Harwell's from Litchfield?

Mrs. Graves. I did, to my Uncle Winford's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Now we come, my Lord, to another Period of Time, which is from the 26th of Auguſt to the 29th; and for that, we firſt call Sir Thomas Whitegrave, who is a Juſtice of the Peace, and a worthy Gentleman; a Member of the Church of England in that County. Swear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir Thomas, will you be pleas'd to give the Court an account, whether you ſaw Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire 1678, and what time it was?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. I ſaw Mr. Ireland upon the 29th of Auguſt before the Popiſh Plot; it was upon a Thurſday in the Afternoon upon Tixhall Bowling-green; and I diſcourſed with him: he told me he was to go home that Night with Sir James Simmons and Mr. Heveningham. They told me afterwards he went on Saturday to Hilderſham, and went thence on Monday following towards Boſcobel: ſome time after that, a Rumour came down that Mr. Ireland was accuſed with others, of being in a Plot of the Papiſts; and myſelf, and ſome others that were in Commiſſion for the Peace in that County, did reflect upon the time that Ireland was in the Country; and we were a little diſturbed, becauſe he had been at particular Places among our Neighbours, whom we knew to be Catholicks.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember no Day but that one, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. Only the 29th I ſaw him there, and diſcourſed with him; and afterwards there was word ſent to me, to deſire me that I would come up to London at his Trial.

L. C. J. And did you come up, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. No, I did not; I had no Subpœna; and being a Juſtice of the Peace, I did not think fit to leave the Country at that time without a Subpœna.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know of this Gentleman, how long he had been acquainted with Mr. Ireland.

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. I never ſaw him before, nor ſince.

L. C. J. He goes no further than the 29th.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, he does not. Then ſwear Mr. William Fowler. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an account when you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and where?

Mr. Fowler. I ſaw Mr. Ireland upon the 27th of Auguſt 78, in Staffordſhire, at a Horſe-Race at Etching-hill. The Race was run between Sir Henry Gough, and Captain Chetwind.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee him any other Day in that Month?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, the 19th of Auguſt I ſaw him at Tixhall Bowling-green.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When elſe did you ſee him?

Mr. Fowler. I ſaw him the 10th of Auguſt before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where, at Tixhall, at my Lord Aſton's Houſe?

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Sir Thomas Whitegrave was upon the Bowling-green the 27th of Auguſt?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, he was, and did diſcourſe with Mr. Ireland there.

L. C. J. What became of Mr. Ireland afterwards?

Mr. Fowler. He went about the Country for ſome time, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it the ſame Ireland that was executed?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, it was the ſame.

L. C. J. You ſay you ſaw him the 29th at Tixhall Bowling-green.

Mr. Fowler. Yes, I did ſo.

L. C. J. When you heard he was taken up for the Plot, what did they ſay whither he went at that time?

Mr. Fowler. I think he went to Mr. Heveningham's, or thereabouts.

Oates. I would fain know this Gentleman's Religion.

Mr. Fowler. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. We aſk it only becauſe Mr. Oates deſires to be ſatisfy'd in that Point.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Howard.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time in Auguſt 78, did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire, and where?

Mr. Howard. I came out of Shropſhire upon the 27th of Auguſt, to the Horſe-race at Etching-hill; and there I ſaw this Mr. Ireland upon the 28th. I dined at one Mr. Herbert Aſton's Houſe at Bellamore, and there I ſaw him again.

Mr. At. Gen. What other time did you ſee him?

Mr. Howard. Never any other time?

Oates. How does he know it was the ſame Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Howard. I came up to Town ſoon after, and they told me that knew him, that it was the ſame Ireland that ſuffer'd.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Drayton.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Drayton. At Etching-hill Race,

Mr. At. Gen. What Day was that?

Mr. Drayton. That was the 27th of Auguſt 1678.

M. At. Gen. When did you ſee him after?

Mr. Drayton. The next Day following I did not ſee him; but the Thurſday following I ſaw him at Tixhall, and he went home with Mr. Heveningham to Aſton; and I ſaw him on Friday, he was with us there, and went a fiſhing, and we catch'd a great Pike of a Yard long, which was not ordinary with us. Upon the 31ſt, which was Saturday, my Maſter went to kill a Buck in the Park, and Mr. Ireland went along with him; and they went to a little Village hard by, and there I parted with him, and did ſee him no more that day. Mr. Gerrard of Hilderſham was to meet my Maſter a hunting, but he was ſick, and did not: Then upon Sunday the 1ſt of September, I was ſent to ſee Mr. Gerrard of Hilderſham, and there I ſaw Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Who was your Maſter, pray you?

Mr. Drayton. This Lord Gerrard of Bromley's Father.

Mr. At. Gen. He was accuſed by Dugdale of the Plot, and died afterwards in Newgate.

Oates. Pray aſk Mr. Drayton what Religion he is of?

Mr. Drayton. I am a Roman Catholick.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir James Simmons.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Sir James?

Sir J. Simmons. Upon Tueſday the 27th of Auguſt 78, I remember very well I ſaw Mr. Ireland at the Horſe-race at Etching-hill, between Sir Henry Gough and Mr. Chetwind; and I remember particularly, that Sir Henry Gough's Horſe diſtanc'd him. I did not ſee him before he came to the Inn; but there we met, and drank together. And Thurſday the 29th of Auguſt, being at Tixhall Bowling-green, Mr. Ireland was there, and came home with my Father Heveningham and me, and ſome Gentlemen in the Country; and came to Aſton, and ſtaid there that Night. I remember the next Day was Pancraſs Fair, and I went to the Fair, and did not come home.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month is that Fair uſually kept?

Sir J. Simmons. It is an unconſtant Time; now and then in September, now and then in Auguſt; and that Year we had a Subſcription to get it regulated to a certain Day.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him after?

Sir J. Simmons. My Lord, I cannot ſwear to the Saturday, becauſe I cannot ſo well tell whether I came back from the Fair on Friday Night; I think I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Green. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Green. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee him in 78?

Mr. Green. The firſt time was Etching-hill Race the 27th of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What other Days do you remember?

Mr. Green. Thurſday the 29th I ſaw him; I belong to Sir James Simmons, and Mr. Ireland came home with him, and ſome other Gentlemen, to Mr. Heveningham's at Aſton, and was a ſetting with him on Friday the 30th in the Afternoon. And Saturday the 31ſt he was a hunting with Mr. Gerrard. Nay, more than that, I ſaw him drawn on the Sledge, but not executed; and that was the ſame Man that was there at that time.

Oates. What Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. Green. I was ever a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. Pray, were they a fiſhing that Day?

Mr. Green. In the Morning he was, and they got a great Pike; I ſaw the Pike, and did eat part of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Fallas. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Sir?

Fallas. Upon the Thurſday after Sir Henry Gough's Race, which was Thurſday the 29th of Auguſt, Mr. Ireland came to Mr. Heveningham's, and I look'd to his Horſe there. Upon Friday Morning they went a fiſhing, and got a great Pike; and I did ſee them go out a ſetting after Dinner, he and Mr. Green, with my Lady and the Keeper; and I ſaw him come in again: and I ſaw him drink a Glaſs of Table-Beer in the Hall. Upon Saturday Morning, which was the 31ſt of Auguſt, they went a hunting in Mr. Gerrard's Park, and kill'd a Buck; and afterwards my Maſter aſk'd him to go home with him again, but he would not; for he ſaid he muſt go to Mr. Lowe's at Four, aud we parted at Three. And I came here, and ſaw him executed; but while he was at my Maſter's Houſe, his Horſe was never out of the Stable, but I brought it to him.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you ſee him executed?

Fallas. It was the 24th of January afterwards, I think.

Oates. What Religion are you of?

Fallas. I am for the Church of England, a Proteſtant; I always was ſo.

Oates. Pray, my Lord, aſk him when he was acquainted with Mr. Ireland?

Fallas. The firſt time was the 29th of Auguſt, when he came to my Maſter's Houſe.

Oates. That does not come to my time, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. But it comes very cloſe to it; it reaches to the 31ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. It is within a Day of you, upon my word.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And I'll tell your Lordſhip what is yet more conſiderable; this Place is an hundred and twenty Miles from London: but we ſhall not leave him there.

Oates. I deſire to know whoſe Servant he is?

Fallas. I am a Servant to Mr. Heveningham, and I ſerve the King; I come to teſtify the Truth. I was here before, but then we muſt not be heard; all the Cry was againſt us, that we were Rogues, and muſt be knock'd on the head.

L. C. J. Were you here at any of the Trials?

Fallas. I was at the Council-Table, and there I was in great danger of being knock'd on the head.

Oates. Would they have knock'd him on the head at the Council-Table, does he ſay?

Fallas. I have been in the Room by the Council-Table, where they have cried, knock them down, hang them Rogues; do they come to be Witneſſes againſt the Saviour of the World? And they came about me there, and aſked me if I knew any of them, or was of their Company? And I was glad to ſay I came thither about a Suit of Law I had with a Brother of mine; and then they pitied me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we have brought him, my Lord, every Night where he lodged from the 3d of Auguſt to the 31ſt.

Mr. At. Gen. And then we ſhall prove that he went to Mr. Gerrard's at Hilderſham that they ſpeak of; there he was the 31ſt and 32d———

L. C. J. How, Mr. Attorney, the 32d! I doubt you will hardly be able to tell us where he was then.

Mr. At. Gen. The 1ſt of September I mean, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, we underſtand you very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. John Proctor.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland in 78?

Proctor. I ſaw him the 31ſt of Auguſt 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where?

Proctor. At Fulford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At whoſe Houſe?

Proctor. At Mr. Lowe's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was the Place the other Witneſs ſaid Ireland told him he was to be at four of the Clock, and therefore went away at three.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you ſee him afterwards?

Proctor. I ſaw him the next day, the 1ſt of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Where?

Proctor. At Eſquire Gerrard's.

Mr. At. Gen. How far is that from Mr. Lowe's?

Proctor. It is a Mile and an half.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Proctor. Not there, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. What Religion are you of?

Proctor. I am a Proteſtant.

L. C. J. What did you hear became of that Ireland afterwards?

Proctor. I ſaw him executed at Tyburn afterwards, and it was the ſame Man.

L. C. J. Where did you live then?

Proctor. I lived at Fulford then.

L. C. J. What, with Mr. Lowe?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord.

Oates. It ſeems he was a Servant to a Papiſt.

L. C. J. What then, what of that?

Oates. My Lord, I deſire you would aſk him, whether he ever ſaw Ireland before the 31ſt of Auguſt which he ſpeaks of?

Proctor. No, I did not

L. C. J. But you are ſure it was the ſame Man you ſaw executed?

Proctor. Yes, I am ſure of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Circumſtance can you tell that he was the 1ſt of September at Mr. Gerrard's?

Proctor. I went to Dinner thither that Day: I rode before Madam Brooke.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that 1ſt of September?

Proctor. It was upon a Sunday, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that about Pancraſs Fair-time?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He can tell you another Circumſtance how he comes to remember him at Mr. Lowe's the 31ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Ay, by what Token do you remember that he was there the 31ſt of Auguſt?

Proctor. I went that day to . . . . . pay ſome Money, and came home again in the Afternoon; and juſt as I came in, he came thither.

Oates. How does he ſay he knows him to be the ſame Man?

L. C. J. He has told you twice, he ſaw him executed.

Oates. What Religion is he of, does he ſay?

L. C. J. He is a Proteſtant.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. John King.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, do you acquaint the Court and the Jury where you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and when.

Mr. King. I ſaw Mr. Ireland at Mr. Gerrard's of Hilderſham the 1ſt of September, that Year that the Plot broke out, which was in the Year 78. There I ſaw him on Sunday; and there he ſtaid all Night, and ſo did I; and on Monday Morning I went to Mrs. Crompton's where I liv'd, and he came thither to Millage as ſoon as I, which is within a Mile of Hilderſham, and dined there the ſame day.

L. C. J. How far is that from London, pray you?

Mr. King. An hundred and ten Miles.

L. C. J. And he was there at Dinner, you ſay?

Mr. King. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. How long was it before Dinner was done?

Mr. King. I believe he might go thence about two of the Clock.

L. C. J. Where did he ſay he deſigned to go then?

Mr. King. He deſigned to go to Boſcobel that Night.

L. C. J. Do you remember any body elſe was at Mr. Gerrard's then when you ſaw him?

Mr. King. Yes, Mr. Jerman Drayton was at Hilderſham at that time.

Oates. Pray, what Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. King. I am a Roman Catholick, Mr. Oates.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Francis Lee.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury where you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and when.

Lee. I was a Servant to Mr. Gerrard, and Mr. Ireland upon Saturday Night came to my Maſter's Houſe, and ſtaid all Night and all Day on Sunday, and went away on Monday to Millage.

L. C. J. What time and what Year was it?

Lee. It was in 78; but I am not certain of the Day of the Month: It was on a Saturday he came, and I have Witneſſes to prove I was there at that time.

L. C. J. What Month was it?

Lee. It was in Auguſt, as I think, the laſt Day; but I am not certain. And he went on Monday to Millage, and there dined at Mrs. Crompton's; and from thence he went to Pancraſs, and thence he did go to Boſcobel, and ſtaid all Night there.

Mr. At. Gen. That was the 2d of September.

L. C. J. How do you know he went to theſe Places?

Lee. I was told ſo.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know how long this Man was acquainted with Ireland before?

Lee. I never ſaw him but at that time.

Oates. How does he know it is the ſame Man then?

Mr. King. Here is a Man that ſaw me with him, and was preſent at Ireland's Execution.

L. C. J. Who is that, Proctor?

Mr. King. Yes. my Lord.

L. C. J. Then call Proctor again. [Who came in again.] Who went along with you to Dinner on Monday?

Lee. My Lord, he did ſee me at Hilderſham at Mr. Gerrard's.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Proctor, was this Gentleman there at that time?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee him there.

L. C. J. Was that the ſame Man that was executed, which you ſaw at Mr. Gerrard's.

Proctor. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Did you dine with Mr. Ireland on Monday at Mrs. Crompton's?

Lee. Yes, my Lord, I did, and went afterwards with him to Pancraſs, and ſtaid there two Hours, and then he went to Boſcobel.

Mr. Sol Gen. There are the two Days gone which Mr. Oates ſwore to, and in which he was ſo poſitive that it was either the 1ſt or 2d of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Biddolph.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland, and where?

Mr. Biddolph. My Lord, I was in Staffordſhire the latter end of Auguſt and the beginning of September, and I was at Mrs. Crompton's Houſe, which is my Aunt, the 2d of September being Monday, where I ſaw Mr. Ireland, and dined with him that day; and after Dinner he went with Mr. Gerrard's Son, who was to go to School to Boſcobel. And I will give your Lordſhip a particular Circumſtance that may ſatisfy you that I am not miſtaken in the time: As I came thorough Northamptonſhire that Summer, I was at my Lord Cullen's, and he deſired me to be at a Horſe-Race at Newton-Slade, where there is a Plate always run for upon the firſt Thurſday in September, and that Year it was the 5th of September. Now when I dined at my Aunt Crompton's, ſhe would have had me ſtaid all Night at her Houſe, but I excuſed my ſelf, and told her I had promiſed to come to my Lord Cullen's to be at the Race, and I muſt needs be there before, to be as good as my Word to my Lord; and therefore I went away to Pancraſs, and ſo on my Journey, otherwiſe I had ſtaid with my Aunt all Night: And I am ſure this was Monday before this Horſe-Race.

Oates. My Lord, this Gentleman ſpeaks to no Year particularly.

Mr. Biddolph. It was in 1678, the Year before Mr. Oates's Plot broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. Now we will call Mrs. Crompton: Swear her. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Crompton?

Mrs. Crompton. He was at my Houſe at Millage in Staffordſhire at Dinner, the ſame Day that my Nephew Biddolph did dine there: As for the Day of the Month, I cannot ſo well tell it, becauſe when my Friends dine with me, I don't uſe to note down the Day particularly; but it was, I remember, a pretty remarkable time, for it was about Pancraſs-Fair. Mr. Gerrard of Hilderſham came with him, and Mr. Ireland being a Stranger, I aſked who he was, and they told me it was Mr. Ireland: He never was at my Houſe before nor after; he was a meer Stranger to me.

L. C. J. What Day was it, ſay you?

Mrs. Crompton. It was the ſame Day my Nephew Biddolph dined there.

L. C. J. Was it Monday the 2d of September, do you remember?

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays he was at her Houſe at Millage that Day, and ſhe ſays it was the ſame Day he dined there.

Mrs. Crompton. But I never note down the particular Days when my Friends dine with me, except I had particular occaſion to do it, as I had none at this time.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire to know what Religion this old Gentlewoman is of?

Mrs. Crompton. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Palmer.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Palmer, where did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Palmer. I was at Dinner at Mrs. Crompton's at Millage, where there was a Gentleman called Mr. Ireland that did dine there.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Palmer. I cannot tell truly what Day it was.

L. C. J. Who was there beſides you at Dinner that Day?

Mrs. Palmer. 'Tis ſo long ſince, I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Biddolph there?

Mrs. Palmer. Not that I remember, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you bring her for, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. She dined there that Day it ſeems; but if ſhe cannot remember it, I cannot help it.

L. C. J. But theſe kind of Witneſſes do but ſlack your Proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think we do over-do our Buſineſs indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have one more Witneſs to this Point, and that is Mrs. Mary Holmes; ſwear her. [Which was done.] Where did you ſee Mr. Ireland in the Year 78?

Mrs. Holmes. I ſaw him at Millage, my Lord.

L. C. J. When?

Mrs. Holmes. The firſt, or the beginning of September, I am ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Holmes. Monday.

L. C. J. You have Proof enough of this, Mr. Attorney-General.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, I think ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſwear Mrs. Eſther Gifford. [Which was done.] Mrs. Gifford, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Gifford. Upon the 2d of September 78, I ſaw Mr. Ireland, above a hundred Miles from this Place.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where?

Mrs. Gifford. At Pancraſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it?

Mrs. Gifford. In the Afternoon about four or five a-clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ſtay there all Night?

Mrs. Gifford. I cannot tell indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Pendrel.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we are come to the 2d of September in the Evening; we ſhall prove where he was that Night and the 3d, and then we ſhall return to the 4th of September, when Mrs. Harwell ſwears he came back to Wolverhampton.

Mr. Hanſes. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pendrel?

Mr. Pendrel. I ſaw him upon the 2d of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you ſee him?

Mr. Pendrel. At Boſcobel at my Houſe, there he lodg'd with me that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Year was it?

Mr. Pendrel. In the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the September before the Plot, and before Mr. Ireland was executed?

Mr. Pendrel. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. Did you know him before?

Mr. Pendrel. No, I did never ſee him before, as I know of.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Pendrel. He ſtaid that Night and the next Day all day, and went away the 4th of September to Black-Ladies.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whoſe Houſe is that?

Mr. Pendrel. It is Mr. John Gifford's.

L. C. J. You ſay you live at Boſcobel; did you hear any thing of a Letter came to your Houſe for Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Pendrel. Not that I know of, my Lord, there was not any that I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mrs. Pendrel.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Miſtreſs, will you give an account where you ſaw Mr. Ireland.

Mrs. Pendrel. I ſaw him at Boſcobel, at the Royal Oak; he came there the 2d Day of September.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell what Year it was?

Mrs. Pendrel. It was the firſt beginning of the Plot.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he ſtay there?

Mrs. Pendrel. He ſtaid Tueſday, and Wedneſday he went to Black-Ladies, and ſo away to Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have but one Witneſs more, my Lord, for Wedneſday the 4th of September, and then we have done. Swear Mr. Charles Gifford. [Which was done.] When did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mr. C. Gifford. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I ſaw Mr. Ireland at my Father's Houſe at Black-Ladies——

Oates. My Lord, I would aſk Mrs. Pendrel a Queſtion before ſhe goes: Whether ſhe was not a Witneſs at the five Jeſuits Trial?

Mrs. Pendrel. I was in Court, but they would not ſuffer me to ſwear.

Oates. Did ſhe not give Evidence there?

L. C. J. She was examin'd, but ſhe could not be ſworn, becauſe ſhe came to teſtify againſt the King in a Capital Cauſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what ſay you, Mr. Charles Gifford?

Mr. C. Gifford. My Lord, I ſay I ſaw Mr. Ireland at my Father's Houſe at Black-Ladies, and he ſtaid there an hour and an half, and went through Chillington, and ſaid he would go to Wolverhampton.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month was it?

Mr. C. Gifford. I am morally certain, it was the 4th of September, and ſo he went to Wolverhampton, as I am informed. He came to our Houſe to ſee a Lady that was there.

L. C. J. What Lady was it?

Mr. C. Gifford. It was one Madam Wells.

Mr. At. Gen. Thus, my Lord, we have lodged him the 4th of September at Wolverhampton, when Mrs. Harwell ſays, he return'd to her; and ſo, my Lord, we have given an Account where he was from the 3d of Auguſt to the 14th of September.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have prov'd where he was every Day in that time, but only the 8th of September, and for that we muſt leave it to the Jury. We have proved that he came away from Mrs. Harwell's the 7th, and he ſaid he was to go to Tixhall; and the 9th he did go from Tixhall in Sir John Southcoat's Company, and came to London the 14th.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to it, Mr. Oates?

Oates. Has Mr. Attorney done his Evidence, my Lord?

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall call no more Witneſſes, unleſs you go about to ſupport your own Credit, and then we have other Witneſſes to call.

Oates. I do not value any Witneſſes you can bring againſt my Credit.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, for the preſent, we do not deſign to call any more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then let us hear what you ſay to it.

Oates. My Lord, here is an Indictment exhibited againſt me, which ſets forth, that I ſhould ſwear at Mr. Ireland's Trial, that Mr. Ireland was in Town the 1ſt and 2d of September; and it ſets forth, that in truth he was not in Town: And likewiſe it ſets forth, that I ſwore at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, that Mr. Ireland took his leave of me and others here in Town at his Lodging in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt: whereas the Perjury there aſſigned, is this, That he did not take his Leave of me, or any other Perſon, betwixt the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, at his Lodging in Ruſſel-ſtreet. Now, my Lord, I was not the only Witneſs of Mr. Ireland's being in Town in the Month of Auguſt, nor the only Witneſs of his being in Town about that time in September. My Lord, my Proſecutors have endeavoured to maintain this Charge againſt me thus: The firſt thing they have gone upon, as far as I can remember in the Indictment, is as to the 1ſt or 2d of September, or rather, they have endeavoured to prove both under one. Now in anſwer to all this Evidence, my Lord, the firſt thing I ſhall offer to your Lordſhip's Conſideration, and the Conſideration of the Jury, is the great Hardſhip I lie under, after ſix Years time, to be put to diſprove what the Counſel here have now offered againſt me. My Lord, I obſerve firſt, that this Indictment, which is now upon Trial, is founded upon the Trial of Ireland, which was the 17th of December 1678, at the Old-Bailey, and it is now ſix Years after that Evidence of mine was delivered. A ſecond thing is, that the Indictment is found by ſpecial Commiſſion, as appears by the Indictment itſelf. Now I muſt recommend to the Conſideration of your Lordſhip and this Jury, why the Proſecution of this pretended Perjury has been delay'd ſo long, when it appears by the Evidence which has been produced, that the Witneſſes to prove it were known ſix Years ſince, as much as they are now; and there is no colour of Evidence offered, offered, that any new Fact has been lately diſcovered which was not then known. There is no Reaſon, my Lord, that is aſſigned or can be aſſigned for this Delay, but only that the Hardſhip might be the greater upon me: For now it is difficult, if not impoſſible for me to maintain the Evidence I then gave, ſo many Perſons being ſince dead, or gone beyond the Seas, and many things that were freſh then, are now grown out of Memory; and I beg your Favour to inſiſt upon this, and I think it cannot be denied me. If ſuch a Practice as this be admitted, no Witneſs is ſafe in giving his Teſtimony againſt any Conſpirators whatſoever. For, my Lord, I muſt deſire leave to offer another thing to your Conſideration, before I ſpeak to the particular Evidence, and that is this; That here is nothing but a bare Point of Time upon which this Perjury is aſſigned; when the Subſtance of the Teſtimony that I gave at the Trials of Mr. Ireland and the reſt about the Popiſh Plot, is not aſſigned as any Perjury at all; it is only a Circumſtance of Time and Place. And, my Lord, I ſhall offer this to your further Conſideration, that Ireland was convicted for a treaſonable Reſolution to murder the late King, and not for being in Town in Auguſt or September 78, or elſewhere; and he was not convicted for his being in his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, and taking his leave there in Auguſt, which is one matter of the Perjury now aſſigned. Next, my Lord, 'tis hard and unreaſonable to tie up Witneſſes that come to diſcover Plots and Conſpiracies, to ſpeak poſitively as to Circumſtance of Time and Place, and every little Punctilio in their Evidence, to bind them up to ſuch Niceties in the delivery of their Teſtimonies, as to Time and Place. It is uſual to ſpeak with latitude, as to ſuch kind of things, and 'tis probably my Evidence which is now in queſtion, was not that Ireland was the 1ſt or 2d of September poſitively here in Town; but, my Lord, I did (I believe) give myſelf a latitude, and would not confine myſelf to either the 1ſt or 2d, 5th, 6th, 7th, or 8th; but, my Lord, that he was in September there, I am poſitive. I muſt therefore beg your Lordſhip's and the Court's Opinion, whether that Mr. Foſter did prove that I was poſitive and preciſe to the Days of the 1ſt and 2d of September 78?

L. C. J. In my Opinion it is a plain Evidence that you did ſwear poſitively to thoſe two Days; and you ſpoke to a Circumſtance very material in your Evidence, that either the 1ſt or 2d of September you had twenty Shillings of him in Town here: Now that Circumſtance of his Kindneſs to you, was not a Circumſtance either of Time or Place.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I ſhall begin with my Proofs: but, my Lord, I deſire I may have free Liberty to mind my Buſineſs; for here is a Gentleman behind me that will not let me be at quiet, but is either meddling with me or my Papers.

L. C. J. Who is it? Let me know him, and I will take care to make him quiet, or ſet him farther off. You, Gentlemen that are at the Bar ſhould know better, one would think: He muſt have liberty to make his own Defence; and if he complains and lets me know who meddles with him, they had better do ſomewhat elſe.

Oates. My Lord, the firſt thing that I offer, is, that Ireland was convicted of Treaſon, and for that you have the Record.

L. C. J. It is allowed of all ſides, that Ireland was convicted and attainted of Treaſon.

Oates. Then, my Lord, the principal Defence which, as near as I can remember, Mr. Ireland made at his Trial, was an Endeavour to prove that he was not in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, nor the 1ſt and 2d Days of September, which are the Points now in Iſſue; and he then produced one Mr. Gifford, and his Siſter and Mother; and fifteen or ſixteen Witneſſes were produced at Mr. Whitebread's Trial, of which there is another Record, that being ſix Months after Mr. Ireland was tried: There Mr. Whitebread produces ſeveral Witneſſes, Mr. Gifford, I ſay, and ſeveral others, I think to the number of ſixteen, which were to prove Ireland's being out of Town in theſe times that theſe Witneſſes ſpeak of. Now, my Lord, all thoſe ſeveral Witneſſes being produced to prove Ireland then out of Town, the very Point that is now in Iſſue, was then ſo; and notwithſtanding all thoſe Witneſſes, the Jurors who tried Mr. Ireland, and the Jurors who tried Mr. Whitebread and the other four Jeſuits, found them guilty; tho' they endeavour'd with all their force imaginable to oppoſe my Teſtimony, and it was left to the Conſideration of the Jury what their Witneſſes had ſaid. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to remember, my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs did obſerve to the Jury, that the Evidence of the Priſoner at the Bar did conſiſt only in Punctilio's of Time; which, as near as I can remember what he ſaid, he called a Nicety of Time; and in Whitebread's Trial he was pleaſed to call it catching in Point of Time. And it was obſerv'd at Ireland's Trial, that his Defence was ſo weak, that my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, upon the Integrity of Bedloe's Evidence and mine, uſes theſe Words to the Jury, (tho' he then endeavour'd to do what theſe Witneſſes do now:) It is moſt plain the Plot is diſcovered, and that by theſe Men, and that it is a Plot, and a villanous one. Which ſhews not only the Fullneſs and Satisfactorineſs of our Proof that we gave, but does alſo take notice of the little Shifts and catching Tricks he made uſe of to prove himſelf out of Town; which would not weigh with the Court. Therefore I obſerve, it is but the ſame Objection that then was made, and is not a new one now. And my Lord Chief Juſtice that then was, ſpeaking of that Proof he brought (which the Court heard with patience, but could eaſily ſee thro' the Vanity of it) ſaid, What Arts they have of evading this, I know not; for as they have turn'd their Learning into Subtilty, ſo they have their Religion too. All this is well remembered by thoſe that were by, and heard that Trial: And tho' Ireland laboured to diſprove me in that Circumſtance of Time, yet ſtill the Court did juſtify the Evidence that Mr. Bedloe and myſelf had given. And the ſame Chief Juſtice ſaid, I leave it to you to conſider, whether you have not as much Evidence from theſe two Men as can be expected in a Caſe of this nature; and whether Mr. Oates be not rather juſtified by the Teſtimony offer'd againſt him than diſcredited. This was after his Plea was debated and conſidered: and I muſt further obſerve to your Lordſhip, that tho' Mr. Ireland by his falſe Witneſſes preſſed this matter as far as he could then, and urged the Court to believe it; yet when the Jury brought in their Verdict and found him guilty, the Chief Juſtice expreſſed the Satisfaction of the Court in theſe Words: You have done, Gentlemen, like very good Subjects and very good Chriſtians; that is to ſay, like very good Proteſtants: and now much good may their 30000 Maſſes do them. This, my Lord, was the Caſe of Mr. Ireland, at his Trial; and the ſame Point of his being out of Town was again managed before a ſecond Jury at the Trial of the five Jeſuits; but the Court ſaw the Deſign of the Popiſh Party to blemiſh the Evidence given of the Plot: but yet they look'd upon it only as a Trick. And my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, in ſumming up the Evidence at that Trial, ſays, They fall foul upon Mr. Oates, meaning myſelf; he appears to have been their Agent, and whilſt ſo, bad enough: But if he had not had a mind to become a good Man, he would not have done us that good he has done, in the Diſcovery of the Deſign they had engaged him in. And if your Lordſhip pleaſe to remember, that at that Trial of the five Jeſuits, when all Arts were uſed to prove Ireland out of Town, and me at St. Omers, in the ſame Charge to the Jury, my Lord Scroggs did take notice that the Jeſuits were very exact at catching in a Point of Time; but now ſays, that is a thing that no Man can preciſely charge his Memory withal; and therefore he does there perſuade the Jury, that that ſhould not be too ſtrictly the Meaſure of their Judgments about Truth and Falſhood, by the Miſtake of ſeven or eight Days: For, ſaid he to the Jury, examine your ſelves how often every day you do miſtake things that have been tranſacted half a Year ago, and err in point of Time, taking one Week for another, and one Month for another; and therefore you are not to lay too great a Weight upon the Point of Time. Now, if too great Weight, my Lord, be not to be laid upon a point of Time, then this Charge that is now brought againſt me is not of weight at all. And beſides, my Lord, this ought to be conſidered, if this were the great Objection then, and then anſwered, it ceaſes to be an Objection now. And, as the Court did obſerve at the ſumming up of the Evidence, that they made their Defence about the Uncertainty of a Point of Time, which was no Defence at all; ſo that, my Lord, the whole Courſe of my Plea is this: 'Tis a hard caſe for a Man, after ſix Years, to be indicted for a Circumſtance of Time. I will firſt offer the Teſtimony of one Witneſs that is dead, and that is Mr. Bedloe, who at his Death confirmed all that he had ſworn of the Popiſh Plot to be true, and affirmed that he had rather ſpoken leſs than the Truth, than more; and for that I deſire that my Lord Keeper may be called, who took his dying Examination.

and

L. C. J. As for that, Mr. Oates, it is a thing very well known to the World, and particularly to a worthy Gentleman that ſits by you, [Pointing to Mr. North] that Mr. Bedloe, when he was ſick, did make ſome ſuch Proteſtation.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I deſire that Mr. Blaney may be ſworn, to give an account what Mr. Bedloe teſtified at Ireland's Trial.

Then Mr. Blaney was ſworn.

Oates. Mr. Blaney, pray will you ſee in your Notes of Ireland's Trial, whether Mr. Bedloe did not ſwear that Mr. Ireland was in Town, the latter end of Auguſt 78, or the beginning of September?

Mr. Blaney. Whereabouts in the Trial is it, Sir?

Oates. It is in the printed Trial, folio 41.

Mr. Blaney. My Lord, I do find theſe Words in my Notes, that Mr. Bedloe ſhould ſay, about the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September, but I believe it was the latter end of Auguſt, Mr. Ireland was at Harcourt's Chamber, and being aſked the Queſtion by my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, Whether he ſaid poſitively, it was the latter end of Auguſt; he ſaid it was in Auguſt, he would not be poſitive to a Day, but he thought the latter end.

L. C. J. 'Tis very well known too, that Bedloe did ſwear Ireland was in Town the latter end of Auguſt, or beginning of September; and to confirm it upon Mr. Ireland's denial, you ſwore he was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September; and gave you twenty Shillings, that was the Occaſion of your Oath.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I deſire to call ſome Witneſſes to teſtify to the Depoſition that was taken of Mr. Jenniſon, about Ireland's being then in Town.

L. C. J. When was that Depoſition taken, and before whom?

Oates. It was taken in the Year 79, by Sir Edmund Warcup.

L. C. J. But we cannot admit that in Evidence, unleſs the King's Counſel will conſent.

Oates. My Lord, I will then produce what he ſwore at another Trial.

L. C. J. Why, where is he, is he dead?

Oates. My Lord, it has coſt a great deal of Money to ſearch him out; but I cannot any where meet with him, and that makes my Caſe ſo much the harder; that I cannot, when I have done all that Man can do, to get my Witneſſes together. I ſent in the depth of Winter for him, when I thought my Trial would have come on before; but I could never hear of him.

L. C. J. We cannot help that.

Oates. Will what he ſaid at any other Trial be Evidence here?

L. C. J. Look you, though in ſtrictneſs, unleſs the Party be dead, we do not uſe to admit of any ſuch Evidence; yet if you can prove any thing he ſwore at any other Trial, we will indulge you ſo far.

Oates. Have you the Record of Sir George Wakeman's Trial there, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

Mr. At. Gen. Here it is; if Mr. Oates have any uſe for it, we will lend it to him.

L. C. J. Put it in; and now prove what you can, what Jenniſon ſwore at that Trial.

Oates. Mr. Blaney, have you your Notes of Sir George Wakeman's Trial here?

Mr. Blaney. No, Sir, the Ticket of your Subpœna did only mention Ireland, Whitebread, and Langhorn's Trials. But I did formerly upon another Occaſion look for the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, but could not find it among all my Notes.

Oates. Sir, can you remember then what Jenniſon ſwore at that Trial, about Ireland's being here in Town?

Mr. Blaney. Truly, my Lord, I can never truſt my Memory at all when I take Notes; and it is now ſo long ſince that Trial, that I dare not undertake to ſay I remember any Particulars of it.

L. C. J. He ſays it is ſo long ſince, that he cannot remember any thing. But there is Sir Edmund Warcup now; is he ſworn?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you aſk him then?

Oates. I would deſire to examine Sir Edmund Warcup, my Lord, about the Depoſition of Jenniſon that he took.

L. C. J. But we tell you that cannot be admitted as Evidence, without they will conſent to it on the other ſide.

Oates. My Lord, he proves Mr. Ireland here the 19th of Auguſt, and that contradicts theſe Witneſſes.

L. C. J. If they will admit it, well and good; elſe we cannot do it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will be ſo fair with Mr. Oates, if he will admit Mr. Jenniſon's Letter, that is under his hand, wherein he does own that he was miſtaken in his whole Evidence about that matter, we will conſent his Depoſition be read.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If he will not conſent to that, there's no reaſon you ſhould conſent to the other, Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Oates, Mr. Attorney makes you this Offer; you deſire to have Mr. Jenniſon's Depoſitions read, which cannot be done without their Conſent; they tell you they will conſent, if you will let them prove what he has own'd ſince about that Buſineſs.

Oates. My Lord, I will conſent with all my heart; let them read any Letter under his hand.

L. C. J. Well, do it on both ſides by conſent; and now, Mr. Oates, do you produce his Examination.

Oates. Pray, Sir Edmund Warcup, will you pleaſe to give the Court an account, what Depoſition Mr. Jenniſon made before you, about Ireland's being in Town in Auguſt 78?

Sir Edmund Warcup. If my Lord commands me, I will.

L. C. J. Ay, you muſt anſwer his Queſtion.

Sir Edmund Warcup. This Mr. Jenniſon did make one Information before me, and according to the Duty that was incumbent upon me, I deliver'd it in to the King and Council, and there it has lain ever ſince; for me to remember the Particulars of it, is impoſſible.

L. C. J. Have you his Examination here, Mr. Oates? If you have, ſhew it him.

Sir Edmund Warcup. If I ſee my Hand to it, atteſting it was ſworn before me, I can ſay ſomewhat to it.

Oates. My Lord, he ſays he deliver'd it in to the Council; but it is printed.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence, Man.

Sir Edmund Warcup. I can ſay nothing to it, unleſs I ſaw it under my own hand.

Oates. That is impoſſible for me to have, my Lord.

L. C. J. I cannot tell how to help it.

Sir Edmund Warcup. You have no more to ſay to me, Sir, have you?

Oates. No, Sir, I have not. Pray call Sarah Batten.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that the ſame that was Sarah Paine?

Oates. I think ſo, Sir; I am not ſure it is ſhe, till ſhe come hither.

Cryer. Here is Sarah Batten.

Oates. Pray ſwear her, and call Sir Thomas Doleman. [Which was done.] But Sir Thomas Doleman did not appear.

Oates. Pray was not your Name Sarah Paine?

Batten. My Lord, I deſire my Charges before I ſpeak.

L. C. J. What is your Name, good Woman?

Batten. My Name is Sarah Batty.

Oates. Was not your Name Sarah Paine, once?

Batty. No, my Maiden-Name was Sarah Edmunds.

Oates. Was not you a Witneſs at the Trial of Mr. Ireland.

Batty. No, Sir.

Oates. Did not you live with my Lord Arlington?

Batty. No, Sir.

Oates. Then I have been at all this Charge for nothing. Are you ſure your Name was not Sarah Paine?

Batty. No, indeed, Sir.

Oates. They told me that ſhe liv'd at Uxbridge, and thither I ſent.

Batty. I do live at Uxbridge, Sir.

Oates. Upon your Oath, were you a Witneſs at any of the Trials, or no?

Batty. No, my Lord, I was not.

Oates. Then I have nothing to ſay to her.

L. C. J. What other Witneſſes have you to call?

Oates. We have laboured all we could to find her out, and ſearched for her with all the care imaginable; and here we thought we had had her, but it ſeems it is not ſhe.

L. C. J. We cannot help it.

Batty. I hope, my Lord, you will conſider my Charges in coming up hither.

Oates. I will take care of thee, Sweet-heart.

L. C. J. Who do you call next?

Oates. Pray call Mr. Charles Clare.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Pray call Mr. Percival. My Lord, I deſire Mr. Blaney may give an account what ſhe ſwore about Ireland's being in Town, ſeeing I cannot have her here.

L. C. J. That we cannot do neither, without Mr. Attorney will conſent: For this, as well as the other, is an extraordinary thing.

Oates. You ſee by my bringing this Witneſs, my Lord, that I have done what I could to find her out.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Attorney, will you conſent?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, it is ſo irregular, that we cannot conſent to it.

Oates. Pray call Mr. Percival and Mr. Vaughan.

Cryer. They do neither of them appear.

Oates. Then I muſt loſe the benefit of her Teſtimony.

L. C. J. Have you done?

Oates. No, my Lord, I will have done immediately.

L. C. J. Take your own Time.

Oates. I deſire Sir Michael Wharton may be call'd.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Pray call Mr. Charles Chetwind.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Pray call Mr. Robert Bowes.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. Pray call Mr. John Savile.

Cryer. He is not here.

Oates. My Lord, I have ſerved all theſe with Subpœna's; and if they will not come, I cannot help it.

L. C. J. Nor we neither.

Oates. Mr. Jenniſon was uſed as a Witneſs in the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, and ſo was Mr. Bowes, and Mr. Burnet, who was produced to prove the Circumſtance of Mr. Jenniſon's Evidence: But, my Lord, ſince I cannot have the benefit of his Evidence, nor of Sarah Paine's, I muſt only ſum up all I have to ſay in two or three Words. My Lord, beſides that what I did deliver in Evidence at thoſe

thoſe Trials, I gave in upon Oath; you have Mr. Bedloe's Evidence at the Trial of Ireland, teſtified by Mr. Blaney: and the Teſtimony of him as a dying Man, given in to my now Lord Keeper, wherein he averr'd, that what he had ſpoken of the Plot, was all true. And you hear that he ſwore, Mr. Ireland was here in Town in Auguſt, and ſo did Sarah Paine too; and I think upon myſelf as very hardly uſed, to have ſuch a part of my Teſtimony brought in queſtion, after Witneſſes are dead, or gone out of the way. As for Mr. Jenniſon, his Evidence was formerly made uſe of; and his Evidence was approv'd of too, as is well known to thoſe that ſat Judges upon the late Viſcount Stafford. But this is that, my Lord, I muſt needs ſay for myſelf, that as I hope to ſee the Day of Salvation in another World, whatever I have ſworn about Mr. Ireland's being here in Town betwixt the eighth and twelfth of Auguſt 78, and in the beginning of September, is true, as I ſhall anſwer it before God another day. And, my Lord, as to the Evidence this day brought againſt me, I deſire you would but obſerve, though that there are many of thoſe Witneſſes, yet a great part of them do not come up to the eighth or twelfth of Auguſt: And I hope your Lordſhip will remember, and remark to the Jury, what little credit thoſe of them had that came to teſtify in the behalf of Mr. Ireland at his Trial, and at the five Jeſuits Trials, of which there are two Records before you; and they do firſt juſtify this, that Ireland and the reſt of them were guilty of what they were accuſed of; and then, that theſe Witneſſes did not teſtify the Truth.

Beſides theſe two Trials, my Lord, you have a third Verdict, and that is at the Trial of Mr. Langhorn: Now the whole Popiſh Plot almoſt was laid forth in thoſe three Trials; and, my Lord, I believe verily I am the firſt Precedent in all England, of any one's being indicted for Perjury, that was a Witneſs for the King in ſuch a caſe as this, after ſix Years time elapſed; after Verdict upon Verdict, and Judgment and Execution upon theſe Verdicts; and when no new Objection is now offer'd, but what was then ſtarted; and no new Circumſtance occurs now, but was as forcible then, except it be the Change of the Seaſon. And I deſire it may be conſider'd, when all the Judges of England were Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer at thoſe Trials, theſe Matters were fully diſcuſſed and debated; and then they did look upon all the Objections as fully anſwer'd and confuted.

My Lord, I am confident if I had been a Witneſs in any other Cauſe, than of a Conſpiracy of the Papiſts, I might have had fairer quarter than I have now: And I do verily believe, that at this rate, it is more ſafe for Papiſts to be Traitors, than for any Proteſtant to diſcover a Popiſh Plot.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I beſeech you to take my Caſe in your ſerious Conſideration, as to the Hardſhip of it; and ſince all my Witneſſes are in Places unknown, or they are ſuch as, conſidering the Times, dare not appear, ſome of them being Lawyers, and under fear they ſhall fare the worſe in their Practice; and others being Perſons that depend upon the Law, and think they ſhall be look'd ill upon, as I am now look'd upon with a hard Eye by the Popiſh Party and their Adherents: yet I hope, you that are ſworn to do Juſtice, will not let me be ruined by a number of falſe Witneſs, by the Evidence of Papiſts that are Parties. For if your Lordſhip pleaſe to conſider that Vote of the Lords Houſe, which is a Court of Record, wherein they do declare, that they are fully ſatisfied by the Proofs they have heard, that there then was, and for divers Years laſt paſt had been, a Horrid and Treaſonable Plot and Conſpiracy, contrived and carried on by thoſe of the Popiſh Religion, for the murdering of his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon, and for ſubverting the Proteſtant Religion, and the ancient and eſtabliſh'd Government of this Kingdom: which Vote of Parliament, my Lord, does make the Papiſts to be all Parties in this Caſe; and where they are Parties, I hope they ſhall not be admitted as Evidence, or at leaſt not be believed; becauſe there is a turn to be ſerv'd by them againſt me, and a Revenge they are reſolv'd to take upon me: for they have hopes now of bringing in their Religion, and are to welcome that in with my Ruin; and this is the Cauſe of this Proſecution. Their Eyes do ſee now what their Hearts ſo long deſired, that is, the Death of a great Man, who died but lately, and againſt whoſe Life they had conſpired ſo often, and ſo long. My Lord, if this had been the firſt Conſpiracy that ever the Papiſts were guilty of, there might have been ſome more Scruple and Objection in the caſe: But if you caſt your Eyes upon Campian, and others in Queen Elizabeth's Time; of Garnet, and the Powder-Jeſuits in King James's Time; and the Deſigns of the Popiſh Party in the Time of the late King Charles the Firſt, diſcovered to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: If theſe things do paſs for Truth, and there is no Averment againſt ſo many Records as we have of their Conſpiracies, then my Diſcovery is no ſuch improbable a thing; and I hope then the Gentlemen of the Jury will take it into their Conſiderations, who they are that are Witneſſes in this Caſe; Men whoſe very Religion is Rebellion, and whoſe Principles and Practices are pernicious to the Government, and thereby they are to be look'd upon as dangerous Perſons in Church and State. But, my Lord, if the Letters of Coleman be well conſider'd, they will juſtify me; that he correſponded with le Chaiſe the French King's Confeſſor, for the promoting of Popery in England, is notorious to all Mankind, that have either read or heard that Trial: Your Lordſhip was of Counſel for the King in that caſe, and heard how it was opened, and plainly proved upon him. And when his Letters have been made ſo publick, and proved under his own hand, nay, and confeſſed by himſelf; I think no Man will doubt but that muſt be a plain Proof of the Plot, and will be enough to vindicate me.

My Lord, I have one Word more, and then I have done, and leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury. My Lord as they would now fling the Popiſh Plot upon me, ſo there is an evident Deſign to fling the Murder of Godfrey upon a Proteſtant Peer; and becauſe an Indictment was, upon the Teſtimony of the Traitor Fitzharris, againſt that noble Lord, they have reſolv'd to have profligate Villains to take his Life for that Murder: that is apparent; and ſo they will go on ſtep by ſtep, if they be let alone; and think at length to wipe their Mouths with Solomon's Whore, and ſay, they have done no miſchief. My Lord, I leave theſe things to the Conſideration of the Court and Jury; I will not detain you any longer. I have called what Witneſſes I could get, but the diſtance of Time has made it impoſſible for me to have thoſe here now, that did give Evidence in this matter before.

My Lord, I have one Favour to beg of the Court; I had but a bad Night laſt Night, and am now in great pain; I deſire that you would grant me one Requeſt, that I may have Counſel aſſign'd me, to argue the Errors in yeſterday's Indictment: My Lord, I am but a poor Man, and cannot be at the Charge of feeing Counſel.

L. C. J. We did aſſign you Counſel before, you may have who you will for Counſel.

Oates. Will your Lordſhip be pleas'd to do me the Favour to let me have ſome time to prepare and inſtruct Counſel.

L. C. J. Ay, what Time would you have?

Oates. A Week's time, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

L. C. J. Give him till this Day ſeven-night, there may be no hurt in that.

Oates. Till Monday come ſeven-night, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, let me have.

L. C. J. No, no, we cannot do that; we give you a Week's time, which is more than ordinary: for by the Rules of the Court there are but four Days allow'd, and thoſe would be out Monday or Tueſday.

Oates. I thank your Lordſhip for that Time you have given me; but I hope you will be pleas'd to take the Particulars I have mention'd into your Conſideration; and I deſire I may have liberty to go home, becauſe I am not well.

L. C. J. Ay, you may go, if you will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Queſtion that you are to try, is a Perjury, which is charg'd on the Defendant Titus Oates, for ſwearing that William Ireland was in Town upon the firſt or ſecond of September 78. And likewiſe, for ſwearing, that he took his leave of him at his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the eighth and twelfth of Auguſt 78. And we do aſſign the Perjury in both thoſe Points, that he is forſworn in both; and the Evidence of that Perjury is, that it is impoſſible to be true what Oates did ſwear, becauſe Mr. Ireland was not in Town between the eighth and twelfth of Auguſt, nor the firſt or ſecond of September.

Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence that has been given, and there has been no leſs than between forty and fifty Witneſſes produced, to ſhew that it is really impoſſible what Oates did ſwear ſhould be true: He tells you that this Matter is in a Circumſtance of Time, wherein it is difficult for a Man to be poſitive to a Day, and a Man may be allow'd ſome Latitude in ſuch a Caſe; nay, it is uſual with Witneſſes in Points of Time, to ſwear with a Latitude. But, my Lord, to ſhew that, if we ſhould grant that falſe Doctrine to be true (and falſe moſt certain it is, and of miſchievous conſequence it would be, if, when things are charged upon Men, that depend upon Circumſtance of Time and Place, the Witneſſes ſhould not be ſtrictly kept to thoſe Circumſtances) yet, I ſay, granting that Poſition, it is impoſſible it ſhould do him any ſervice in the Caſe before you: For between the beginning of Auguſt, and the 14th of September (which includes both the Times he ſwears to, and the Latitude of above twenty Days to boot) there is not any one Moment of Time, wherein his Oath could be true.

Gentlemen, you obſerve what the Witneſſes have ſaid, how they have given you an account of every particular Day of both Months, from the 3d of Auguſt, when he firſt left London, to the 14th of September, when he return'd back again: We did aſk the Witneſſes, that it might appear to be plainly true, what they ſwear, if they had any particular Circumſtances that made them to remember it; and they have given a great many, and now it lies upon us to ſhew you that it is Demonſtration, that what they have ſaid and teſtified muſt be true; and that thoſe Days they ſpeak of, he was in the Places they named

For take the Periods of Time, and you will find you have him from the 3d of Auguſt to the 16th, with my Lord Aſton, going from London to Tixhall; upon the 17th they give you an account of him at Mrs. Harwell's to the 26th; from the 26th to the 4th of September, there are others that give you a particular account, by remarkable Circumſtances, where he was every day in Staffordſhire; from the 4th to the 7th you find him at Wolverhampton. For the 8th indeed we do give no particular account where he was that Day; but we prove that upon the 9th he was at Tixhall, and from thence he came away with Sir John Southcoat towards London; and there you have a particular account where he was, every Day till the 14th, when he return'd to his Lodging.

And now, Gentlemen, I ſhall ſhew you, that, if you believe theſe Witneſſes ſaw him in theſe Months; that certainly it was upon thoſe Days they ſpeak of, that they did ſee him.

Firſt, that he went out of Town in Auguſt, you have theſe Witneſſes, Anne Ireland, Eleanor Ireland, Mrs Duddle, Mrs. Quino, and my Lord Aſton. Well, how come they to remember it was upon the 3d of Auguſt? Why the four Women remember it by this particular Remark; three Days before there was a Holiday, which they keep in memory of Ignatius; and upon that Day they remember Mr. Ireland went abroad to take a Recreation, and came home again that Night, tho' the reſt of the Company ſtaid there; becauſe he was to go out of Town upon the third Day after, which muſt be the 3d of Auguſt; for Ignatius's Day, you hear, is always the laſt Day of July. And they do poſitively ſwear, that upon the 3d of Auguſt, he took his leave of Anne Ireland and Eleanor Ireland. Mrs. Duddle remembers that he went out that Day. Mrs. Quino, whoſe Huſband was his Taylor, ſays, he did ſtay a little to have ſomewhat in his Clothes mended; and ſhe ſaw him in his Boots, and he ſaid he was to go out of Town. Mrs Anne Ireland ſays, they took the liberty to lodge a Gentlewoman in his Chamber, and ſaw him not again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas: And that he did go out of Town upon the 3d of Auguſt, is further prov'd by my Lord Aſton, who noted it down in his Book at that time, that Ireland came to his Houſe at Standen in Hertfordſhire; ſo that here is as ſtrong an Evidence as can be, that he did go on the 3d of Auguſt, and that they remember it to have ſo been, by all the Circumſtances that can be imagin'd.

Well, the 3d of Auguſt he went out of Town. The 4th of Auguſt we give an account where he was: he ſtaid that Day with my Lord Aſton at Standen. The 5th of Auguſt he ſet out with my Lord Aſton's Company, and went to St. Albans. The 6th he went to Northampton. The 7th, to Coventry. The 8th to Tixhall; and the Company that went with him proves it, which was Sir Edw. Southcoat, and Mr. John Southcoat; and Harriſon and Hobſon, who ſaw him go in the Company; and Mr. North, who ſays he ſaw him every day; and Ingletrap, the Coachman that drove the Coach: all theſe remember it poſitively, and ſome of them ſpeak of a remarkable pretty Horſe, which he rid upon.

Now when he comes from Tixhall, (for we have brought him hither by manifeſt Proof, by Men that

that could not forget, by Men that ſaw him in the Company) there he remain'd (as they all teſtify) till the 13th of Auguſt, and that was the Tueſday after his Arrival at Tixhall; and from thence he went that Day a Journey into Flintſhire, to Holy-Well; and that is proved by the Witneſſes, that were in his Company in that Journey. They tell you, the 13th he lay at Nantwich. The 14th at Holy-Well. The 15th, at Cheſter. And the 16th he came back again to Tixhall. And ſo here you have abundance of Witneſſes, that give you a particular account where he was, in what Company they ſaw him, from the 3d of Auguſt to the 16th. If he were then in this Company from the 3d to the 16th, he could not be in his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the 8th and the 12th.

Then we came to the 17th, and then we find him to be at Wolverhampton, where he continued to the 26th; and that it muſt be between the 17th and the 26th, is plain: For after that time which Mrs. Harwell ſpeaks of, the other Witneſſes give ſuch Circumſtances, that it cannot be otherwiſe. You find him on the 27th at a Horſe-race, which is a remarkable Circumſtance; and theſe are things, that Men do very well remember what days of the Month they happen upon. We then give you an account of the 29th; that at Tixhall he was ſeen in company upon the Bowling-green, with Perſons of Quality; Sir Thomas Whitegrave, and others: ſo we give you an account where he lodged. The 28th he was at Bellamore. The 29th he went to Mr. Heveningham's, there he lodg'd till the 1ſt of September; and this is remember'd by particular Circumſtances, that he went a fiſhing, and a ſetting, and a hunting. Then the next day, which is the 1ſt of September; and the next day after, the 2d of September, they ſaw him at Mr. Gerrard's; he din'd upon the 2d at Mrs. Crompton's, and lay at Boſcobel; there he continued the 3d, and the 4th he came to Wolverhampton again.

So that this ſhews, that what Mrs. Harwell did ſpeak of, was true; for if Mrs. Harwell did ſee him, as 'tis not at all doubted but ſhe did, it muſt be in that Interval of Time between the 16th and the 27th; where we give you an account of him by other undeniable Circumſtances, that he lodged at other Places, and could not lodge at her Houſe at Wolverhampton.

Beſides, Gentlemen, the particular Circumſtances that they do remember him by, proves it to be on thoſe Days. Mrs. Harwell gives her poſitive Oath, that he did come there the 17th, and lay there every Night to the 26th, which was on the Monday Seven-night after; and that he came again the 4th of September after, and lay there till the 7th.

Then there is Ruſhton, another Witneſs, that ſaw him at her Houſe, the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21ſt, 22d, and 25th. And, I ſay, it muſt be thoſe Days, becauſe we have given an account, by other Witneſſes, of all the other Days. And it muſt be that very time that Oates ſpeaks of; for it was the Summer before Ireland was apprehended and executed for the Plot, which was Michaelmas 1678.

Mr. Winford, ſhe remembers him at Wolverhampton, the 18th, 19th, 22d, and 24th.

Stanley remembers the 18th and 19th; and if you aſk him how he remembers it, he tells you, by a Circumſtance that moſt Men would remember; he buried his Child that day, and entertain'd Ireland with the Proviſion for the Funeral. Now Men uſually remark ſuch Accidents as theſe; for that is a thing a Man cannot forget, that has any Concern in the World for thoſe that are ſo nearly related to him; and therefore ſuch Circumſtances muſt of neceſſity evince the Truth of what he ſpeaks, becauſe it is brought to his mind, by an Accident that cannot be forgotten.

Mrs. Purcell, which is the next Witneſs; and ſhe remembers to have ſeen him the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21ſt, 22d, and 23d; for ſhe remembers the laſt of them was the day before Bartholomew-day, which was a remarkable day.

Then there is another Man, that look'd to his Horſe whilſt he was there, but his memory will not ſerve him to ſpeak to any particular Time; he only evidences, that he was there; and the other Witneſſes ſpeak to the Time.

Mr. Stamford, he remembers it to be at that time, becauſe he ſaw him on the Sunday after the Aſſumption of our Lady, which is always the 15th of Auguſt: and the like ſays Mrs. Gifford. Theſe Circumſtances verify her Teſtimony.

And Mr. Gifford remembers, he came on the 17th Day; and he ſaw him every day, till the 26th Day.

And Mrs. Fowler, who is Mrs. Harwell's Daughter, ſhe remembers he came the 17th day; and ſhe was in his Company every day, till the 26th, except one day, when he went to Litchfield; that was the day before Bartholomew-day, which was Friday.

Mrs. Keeling, ſhe ſwears, that upon the 17th day he came there, which was Saturday. She ſaw him on the Sunday, and on the Monday; and went on the Monday in the Afternoon, to the Funeral of her Mother, which is another Circumſtance, that ſhe muſt needs remember; and by that, has the Remembrance of the Day of the Month when he was there: And ſhe return'd back again on Thurſday, and heard him that day, but did not ſee him. But ſhe ſaw him every day after, till he went away; and ſhe remembers his going away was upon the 27th. And ſhe remembers likewiſe that he return'd the 4th of September after.

Mr. Richardſon, he proves, that he ſaw him upon the 19th Day of Auguſt at Wolverhampton; as he was told, it was he: And being aſk'd, when he was told ſo? He ſays, Mrs. Harwell told him ſo, ſome time before he was apprehended; ſo that ſhe could not tell it him then, to ſerve a Turn. And he is a Proteſtant too.

So is likewiſe Eleanor Graves; who gives you an account that ſhe ſaw him there on the 20th, 21ſt, and 22d; and on the 23d, ſhe went to Litchfield with him; and upon the 25th, ſhe ſupp'd with him at Mr. Winford's.

Now, Gentlemen, you have a full account of it, even to a Demonſtration, that he muſt be in theſe Places at this time, if you will believe one thing, that is, that theſe Witneſſes ſaw him at all. And ſure none can doubt, but theſe Witneſſes did, upon the Circumſtances they have teſtified, ſee him in Auguſt and September: and then it muſt be thoſe particular Times, that they ſpeak of.

At Wolverhampton then you have him to the 26th: The 27th day, you have an account of him at the Horſe-race at Etching-hill. The 28th, Mr. Howard gives you an account, he dined at Bellamore, at Mr. Aſton's. The 29th you find him at the Bowling-green at Tixhall; and from thence to Mr. Heveningham's, where he lodg'd that Night, and ſtaid there the 30th; which is prov'd by the Circumſtances of fiſhing in the Morning, and ſetting in the Afternoon. And the next day, which was Saturday the 31ſt, you hear he was at the killing of a Buck; where Mr. Gerrard was expected, but Sickneſs prevented his coming. And you have him the 1ſt of September, which was Sunday, at Mr. Gerrard's Houſe, where ſeveral of the Witneſs did ſee him.

And beſides, one Proctor tells you, he ſaw him the 31ſt of Auguſt, at Fulford, at Mr. Lowe's. And he very well remembers that to be the Time, by a remarkable Circumſtance: For (ſays he) the laſt Day of Auguſt I went to pay ſome Money, (which is a thing Men are generally very punctual in) and when I came home again, I found him there. And he ſwears he ſaw him at Mr. Gerrard's Houſe, the 1ſt of September, the Day after.

Mr. King remembers he ſaw him at Mr. Gerrard's of Hilderſham, the firſt of September; and that he dined at Mrs. Crompton's, the ſecond of September; and ſtaid there till two of the clock in the Afternoon; and went from thence, with an intent to go to Boſcobel.

Lee ſays, he ſaw him at Mr. Gerrard's Houſe and at Mrs. Crompton's: that he dined there, and went from thence to Pancraſs, and from thence to Boſcobel.

Mr. Biddolph remembers, he dined with him on the ſecond of September, at his Aunt's; and that by this Circumſtance, he was deſired by my Lord Cullen, to ſee an Horſe-Race in Northamptonſhire; and promiſed my Lord Cullen to come: Which Horſe-Race is always on a certain Day, the firſt Thurſday in September; and that Year it happen'd to be the fifth of September: And it was the Monday before, that he dined at his Aunt's; and becauſe of his Promiſe to my Lord Cullen, he would not ſtay all Night. And ſo it muſt be the ſecond Day of September, that he ſaw him there.

Mrs. Crompton ſays, it was the ſame Day, that her Nephew, Mr. Bidddolph, dined there: For he was a Stranger, and ſhe never ſaw him before, nor after.

And there is another Gentlewoman, Mrs. Palmer, that ſwears, he dined at Mrs. Crompton's; but ſhe cannot tell the particular time when.

Mrs. Gifford ſaw him at Pancraſs, between the Hours of four and five in the Afternoon, upon the ſecond of September: and Lee went along with him to Pancraſs; and from thence he went to Boſcobel.

Mr. Pendrel ſays, he ſaw him the ſecond of September at Night; for he came to his Houſe. Which agrees with all that the other Witneſſes ſay, which was, that he intended to go to Boſcobel that Night. He and his Wife both teſtify, that there he lodged upon the ſecond of September, and ſtaid there the third of September; and went from thence the fourth, to Black-Ladies: where Mr. Gifford tells you, he dined.

And we have given you an Account before, where he was the Fourth at Night: For then he was returned to Wolverhampton; and there he lodged to the ſeventh of September. And after the ſeventh of September, though we do not give you a poſitive Evidence, That upon the ſeventh of September, at Night, or upon the eighth, he was at my Lord Aſton's; yet we have given you that which amounts almoſt to a Demonſtration, that he muſt be there upon the eighth of September. For he went from thence with Sir John Southcoat, to go towards London, on the ninth. And our Evidence is the more credible, becauſe they ſwear cautiouſly all of them: Unleſs they remember ſome remarkable Circumſtance, they will not take upon them to fix upon a particular time.

Then, Gentlemen, we give you an account, by the Perſons that were in his Company where he was every Day, all along from the time he left Tixhall, down to the time he came to Sir John Southcoat's Houſe in Surrey. And this Journey took up the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth of September: There are four Days; and he ſtaid there one Day. Then he ſold Mr. Southcoat his Horſe. Mr. Southcoat lent him his Horſe to come to Town; and the next day he did come to Town; And ſo we have brought him to Saturday the Fourteenth of September.

And now, let all the World be judge, if there be any poſible room left, that any one word Mr. Oates has ſaid, can be true; even giving him the Latitude of Time, he himſelf deſires, and ſays all Witneſſes muſt be allowed. No, there is not one Minute for him, wherein he can be verified in any one Tittle of his Evidence, as to Ireland's being in Town. And this is that which I call (and ſure, well I may ſo call it) a Demonſtrative Proof, that what Oates did ſwear is utterly falſe.

Gentlemen, the Jury had not this Evidence at the Trial of Ireland: Some there were, that went out of the Town with him; and ſome, one or two of Wolverhampton, were at the five Jeſuits Trials; but not above five or ſix in all of theſe forty odd, that now appear. True indeed it is, all theſe were not there; and Ireland upon that, unfortunately ſuffered; for ſo I may take leave to ſay, it was Unfortunately.

Mr. Oates has ſaid one thing unto you, which he lays much ſtreſs upon: He would have you look upon it as a great Hardſhip, that this Proſecution comes ſo late; and that it is ſtrange, after ſix Years time ſpent, this ſhould now be ſet on foot.

But, Gentlemen, I cannot but with much Sorrow remember to you, and I know you all remember it too well; That there was a time, when the City of London was ſo far corrupted, that it was become a Refuge and a Sanctuary for High-Treaſon; when there was no Juſtice to be had for the King there; when Men lodged themſelves within thoſe Walls, as a Protection for their Conſpiracies: we all remember the Time, when Indictments were preferred, and a plain Evidence given to a Grand-Jury, even to the publick Satisfaction of all that heard it; and yet they have refuſed to find the Bill: And not only ſo, but were ſo abetted by the Rabble, that it was ſcarce ſafe for the Judges to ſit upon the Bench. Theſe are things none of us can forget, but muſt be perpetually remembred, to the ſhame of the Authors and Contrivers of them: And therefore it is no wonder an Indictment was not preferred againſt Mr. Oates, at that Time, when the plaineſt Proof againſt Criminals could not be admitted. And this will give every Man Satisfaction, why it has been delayed; and I hope at the ſame time give every Man a Caution, how they fall into the like Circumſtances again.

But, Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence that is now offered, to prove this Matter of Fact; and it is a plain Demonſtration, if you will believe that Mr. Ireland was ſeen by theſe Men at all, he was ſeen at thoſe very times they have particularly declared: For upon Conſideration of the Circumſtances, it is impoſſible it ſhould be at any other times; and ſo I leave it to you to judge upon the whole, whether the Defendant be perjured or no.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Caſe has taken up a great deal of Time; but it is a Caſe of that moment and conſequence, that ſure no time ought to be thought too long, that is employed for

for the diſcovering of the Truth, ſo neceſſary to be diſcovered, as the Matter now in queſtion. For as I ſaid at the beginning upon this Occaſion, and I cannot but ſay it again now; I confeſs, I cannot without Horror and Trembling, reflect upon the many Miſchiefs and Inconveniencies we have been run into, if the Teſtimony given this Day in this Cauſe againſt Oates prove true, as I cannot in the leaſt imagine, where there ſhould remain the leaſt Objection againſt the Truth of it; I cannot, I ſay, but bewail, that ſo many innocent Perſons (to the Reproach of our Nation be it ſpoken) have ſuffered Death upon this account.

God deliver me, from having the leaſt ſtain of innocent Blood imputed to me; and it is more to be lamented, when we ſee that Impudence, which has brought that Infamy upon our Land, continues with a brazen Face, defying all Shame to this day. But by this we may be informed, how ſome Men's Conſciences are ſeared, and that there are ſome People that do indeed live without the Fear of God in the World. For if that Man, who has aſſumed to himſelf the Habit and Character of one that ſhould preach to others, Religion, Virtue, and the Things that become true Chriſtians, ſhall become ſuch a Monſter of Impiety and Impudence, in defiance of Heaven and Earth; what greater and more manifeſt Proof can there be of a ſeared Conſcience?

I cannot but lament likewiſe the Wickedneſs of our Age, when I reflect upon the Teſtimony of that other Wretch, (indeed I cannot uſe Terms ſevere enough for him) that when he was going into another World, ſhould perſiſt in ſuch groſs Falſities; I mean Bedloe, infamous Bedloe; and let his Name be for ever infamous to all Mankind, that have any regard, or deference for the Truth; that he ſhould with his lateſt Breath dare to affirm, that every Word he had ſaid of the Popiſh Plot, was true: when it is as clear as the Sun, by the Teſtimony of this Day, that every Word he ſwore about Ireland, was utterly falſe. Good God of Heaven! What an Age have we lived in, to ſee Innocence ſuffer Puniſhment, and impudent Falſity reign ſo long!

Gentlemen, I hope all Eyes are opened, (I wiſh they had been ſo long ſince;) let us lay the Burden, the Infamy and Reproach of theſe Things, upon them that deſerve it; for we cannot but know, we are reckoned as a By-word to all our Neighbours, and ſhall remain Monuments of Ignominy to all ſucceeding Ages and Times, if we do not endeavour to diſcharge our ſelves and our Religion, and the Juſtice of our Nation from theſe Scandals.

Gentlemen, I think I am obliged, in the firſt place to take Notice of what Mr. Sollicitor General has mentioned, concerning the Inſolency of thoſe Times, wherein the Faction was grown to that extravagant Height, that, in truth, a Man durſt not appear, with ſafety of his own Life and Fortune, to teſtify the Truth. And, is it not a ſhame, that it ſhould be remembred, what one of the Witneſſes this day teſtifieth? That when he came to appear at the Council-Table, to atteſt a Matter of Fact, before this innocent Blood was ſpilt, (for ſo I muſt call it, if that which has been ſworn this Day is true) the Rabble ſhould be ſo boiſterous, as to cry out, Where is that Villain, that dares come to give Evidence againſt OATES, the Saviour of the Nation? Oh, horrid Blaſphemy, that no leſs an Epithet ſhould be given to ſuch a profligate Wretch as Oates, than that which is only proper to our Bleſſed LORD! As though Oates had merited more than all Mankind; and ſo indeed he has, if we take it in a true Senſe: He has deſerved much more Puniſhment, than the Laws of this Land can inflict.

And I muſt needs ſay, Gentlemen, That this is an Inſtance, why there ſeems not to have been Puniſhment enough ordain'd in Law for Perjury, becauſe our Law-makers did not foreſee, that there could ever be ſuch Villains, ſuch Miſcreants, as theſe.

We have indeed another Inſtance in the Law, of a Crime for which there is no adequate Puniſhment; and that is in the Caſe, where a Child kills his Father: Parricide has no peculiar Judgment aſſigned for it; but we are forced, becauſe theſe Things have been ſometimes practiſed, by a Conſtruction in Law, to make that Child as a Servant to his Father, and ſo puniſh him with the Judgment of Petty-Treaſon: but take him immediately as he is a Child, and not as a Servant, and I ſay there is no particular Proviſion in Law, to puniſh ſuch an Offence: And, what is the reaſon of it? Becauſe it is ſo unnatural, and againſt the Imaginations of Mankind to believe, there ever could be ſuch a wicked Child in the World.

If that be not to be imagined, how could it be imagin'd, that there ſhould be ſuch horrid Villains, as ſhould attempt the Deſtruction of the Government of three Kingdoms? Good Lord! What times do we live in? Surely, 'tis ſuch an Age, as was never known, from the Creation of the World to this day.

And to this muſt be added, what aggravates the Miſchief that all this is done under the Umbrage, Countenance, and Pretence of Law; the Proceedings of Law, the uſual Methods of Juſtice, are made the Inſtruments of the moſt horrid Injuſtice. The Murder of our late bleſſed Sovereign, King CHARLES the Martyr, of ever-happy Memory, though a Crime as high in it ſelf, as the Law knows of; yet I may ſay, it was aggravated very much, that that unfortunate, but glorious King, ſhould be brought to the Block, by a Pretext of Law, and cut off by a colourable Method of Juſtice; 'tis that which makes that Murder ten times more baſe and infamous. So, Gentlemen, the Deſtruction of poor innocent Perſons, by falſe Accuſations, by the pernicious Evidence of perjured Witneſſes, in a Court of Juſtice, makes their Crime infinitely more odious, than common Murder.

Gentlemen, I cannot but ſpeak with warmth in a Caſe of this nature; and I the rather ſpeak ſo, becauſe, at the time when thoſe things were done, we all know, the Nation was in a hurry, and a ſort of ill-minded Men had crept in among us, who had blown us up to ſuch an height, that nothing but what comply'd with their malicious and deviliſh Deſigns, was to be believed; when the King could not get common Juſtice done againſt real Traitors; but the very Streams of Juſtice were all corrupted, though the Fountain (God be thanked) was preſerved pure.

When the Faction (by Cabals and Intrigues) had got Sheriffs of their own Party, and laboured to get all other Officers of their own wicked Principles, then came all thoſe Miſchiefs we ſo long labour'd under. When thoſe Fellows, that had ſo great a ſhare in the late Rebellion, were the only fit Men to be truſted with the Government; and all the while were deſigning to deſtroy it, and to bring us into the ſame miſerable Condition we formerly were in.

Was it ever (I ſpeak to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, Citizens of London, who know its antient Conſtitution, and have too well experienced its late Convulſions) was it ever known, till Juſtice was deſigned to be corrupted, that there was any labouring to be Sheriffs? No, Endeavours were always uſed to be excuſed, and Fines paid to get off from that Office: And the reaſon is plain; for never was there a wiſe and wealthy Citizen, that had a mind, out of a principal Part of his Eſtate, to ſquander away ſo much as is neceſſary to defray the Charge of that Office: But it was the Deſign that thoſe Raſcals had upon the Government, that made them ſo greedy of thoſe Places; and they thought they had now an Opportunity to effect their Deſign, upon theſe Fellows pretended Diſcovery. They believed, that becauſe we were hurried into the Miſchiefs of the late Times, by Pretences of Popery, the ſame Bait would be ſwallowed now: Therefore the Cry muſt be ſet up, Popery was a coming in. They concluded, if they could but make uſe of the ſame Engines, they ſhould have the ſame Effect: Witneſs a Peer, that is now dead, one that was a main Inſtrument of our Confuſion in the late Times, and thereby experienced in Villany, was made uſe of as the chief Tool in theſe late Contrivances.

But alas! when they found thoſe Pretences and Projects would take no longer, then they fly to that, which was indeed the bottom of all; I mean, The bloody Conſpiracy. When they found they could not overthrow the Government by Methods of Law, they betake themſelves to downright Treaſon. For by this time the Eyes of the honeſt Citizens were opened; and they found what Intereſt was driving on: And it was time to have them open, when a Cauſe in Guild-Hall was always tried according to the Characters of the Client, and not the Merits of the Cauſe; when if a Man was blaſted with the Name of a Tory, he was ſure to loſe it: But if a whining Raſcal was ſanctified with the Name of a Whig, he was ſure to have it go on his ſide: Witneſs the famous Cauſe of Mr. Loades, about his Lemons.

But when Sheriffs came to be elected in due manner, ſuch as were fit to be truſted with the City Buſineſs; what do they, but break out into a horrid Conſpiracy, to take away the Life of that bleſſed King, that merciful Prince, ſo lately deceaſed, to the Grief and Sorrow of all his loving and loyal Subjects? And not only ſo, but to rob us of his ſacred Majeſty, our preſent moſt Gracious Sovereign; whom I pray GOD to preſerve long to reign over us. [To which, the Auditory gave a great Acclamation, ſaying, Amen.]

Gentlemen, When theſe Things are thought upon, you muſt give me leave to obſerve (let others think what they pleaſe) that was the real Plot, the true Plot: For there is one thing obſervable, that attends this whole Affair, that every Man who ſuffered for the Plot, which the Witneſſes truly call Oates's Plot, to a Man denied it, even to the laſt Gaſp; and took it upon their Deaths and Salvations, that they were innocent: Nay, when they had not thoſe Hopes Bedloe had of Life, (for I cannot believe, that he could have been ſo egregious a Villain, as to have atteſted ſuch notorious Lyes, if he had not hoped to have recovered, and thereby increaſed his own Reputation) yet not a Man of the others, but diſowned it with their dying Breath. Now, on the other ſide, there was not a Man, that was concerned in the Conſpiracy, of which this, was to be the Blind and the Colour, had the Confidence to deny it, when they came to ſuffer for it. All this ought to be put in the Balance, and duly weighed.

For, Gentlemen, becauſe it is a Matter that is not only publick here, but all the World over, we muſt have the Juſtice of the Nation vindicated, and its Diſ-reputation wiped off. And having taken notice of theſe Things, which I could not well omit upon this Occaſion, I muſt now put you in mind, what is neceſſary for you to take into your Conſideration, as to the particular Caſe before you. And,

Firſt, You muſt obſerve, that this Indictment againſt Oates, is for committing wilful and corrupt Perjury; which is alſo ſaid to be done maliciouſly. And if it were falſe, ſurely it was malicious; becauſe by his falſe Oath, have innocent Men been convicted, condemned, and executed.

Secondly, You are to conſider, how far the Thing goes, to make it material to the Iſſue: For if it were upon a Nicety only, or a Catch, or any of thoſe fine Words, that he has been pleaſed to make uſe of; it were not fit to perjure him upon it. But it is certainly very material: For Time and Place are Matters ſubſtantial to diſcover Truth and Falſhood by; as in the Caſe of Suſannah, the Perjury of the Elders, as you may remember, was detected by thoſe very Circumſtances. But I ſhall ſhew you the Occaſion of this Oath; and that will manifeſt it to be a material Part, in reſpect of the Time. For,

Firſt, Here was a Conſult held, as he teſtified, the 24*th* of April, 1678; and then he ſwears Ireland was in Town, and preſent at the Conſult: But all that Oates ſwore, would not do the Feat, becauſe that he was but one Witneſs. Then comes Bedloe, his worthy Yoke-fellow (a Brace of ſuch Witneſſes, as the Lord deliver all Mankind from) and he aſſigns another Fact upon Mr. Ireland, in the Month of Auguſt, the latter end of it, or the beginning of September; which is material, and makes two Witneſſes againſt Ireland, which Oates knew well enough: For he is his Arts-Maſter; he knows all the Tricks, and can tell the very nick that will do. And therefore, when he finds Mr. Ireland ſo poſitively affirming, that he was then out of Town; and if ſo, Bedloe did not ſwear true: then does this Oates come in, (and thereby makes his Teſtimony material to the Point then in Iſſue,) ſays he, The firſt of September, or (at leaſt) the ſecond, I will ſwear he was in Town; for he gave me twenty Shillings. And that is given as a Token, why he does remember it. And thus he did prop up Bedloe's Teſtimony, againſt Mr. Ireland's Defence. This is proved to you by Mr. Waterhouſe, who was one of the Jury. And the ſame thing does the next Gentleman ſwear, which is Mr. Byfield: They do both agree in that Circumſtance punctually, that he ſwore he had then of him twenty Shillings.

Ay, (but ſays he for himſelf, becauſe I would remove the Objections out of the way, as they occur to me) 'tis very hard, this being now ſome ſix or ſeven Years ago, that I ſhould be called to queſtion about ſuch a thing; when they might have had a time to diſprove it before.

Beſides, Gentlemen, the Anſwer that has been truly given to you, concerning the Miſerableneſs of the Times; when, the Truth of it is, there was no Juſtice to be had for Proteſtants, if we ſpeak of the Church-of-England Men under that Name: For either they were Papiſts in Maſquerade, or Popiſhly

Popiſhly affected; or the Names of Tory and Tantivy, and I know not what, was enough to do their work for them: And no body was reckon'd of the Sober, Virtuous, Godly Party, but thoſe that were under Aſſociations and Covenants; as tho' there was no Sanctity to be found in any but thoſe who were bent to deſtroy all Virtue and Religion. I ſay beſides that, there is another Anſwer, which I am ſorry has ſo much weight in it: Could any Man have believed that Oates ſhould dare ſo impudently to ſwear a Falſhood, and that in a Cauſe where Life was concern'd; and the Man hang'd upon his Teſtimony? To what purpoſe then ſhould his Relations interpoſe to diſprove Oates, after his Death? That would not revive him. But you find there was an Inclination that way; and I wiſh to God, with all my heart, it had taken effect: For what ſays the old Gentlewoman? As ſoon as ſhe heard what Mr. Oates had ſworn, which ſhe knew to be falſe, immediately ſhe diſpatch'd an Expreſs to London; and ſent a Petition to the King, That either Ireland might have a new Trial, or his Execution might be repriev'd, till they brought up ſuch Witneſſes, as would have made it apparent, and as clear as the Light, that what this Fellow had teſtified, was notoriouſly falſe. But ſuch, ſuch, I muſt ſay, was the Misfortune of the Time we were in, that ſtopp'd the Fountain of Mercy it ſelf, from letting forth its wonted Streams; and even compell'd that compaſſionate Prince, rather than he would give any diſturbance to his People, to permit that Execution againſt his own Inclination; becauſe there was a Verdict, and Judgment in the Caſe. For as he was really the Fountain of Juſtice, ſo was he of Mercy too. And it is well known to thoſe that had the happineſs to be near his Perſon, how oft he expreſſed his Concern for having conſented to this Execution. And this continued with him even to his dying Day, as the buſineſs of my Lord of Strafford did with his Royal Father.

And, Gentlemen, I choſe to mention this Paſſage concerning his late Majeſty, for this reaſon, That when we live in ſuch tumultuous Times, when things are put ſo hard upon Princes, as to compel them to reſtrain their Mercy, where they think it due, rather than ſeem to ſtop the Current of Juſtice; this ſhould not be remember'd with any Reflection upon them, but with Infamy to thoſe that are the Cauſes and Grounds of it: When ſuch prodigious Wretches, as Oates and Bedloe, for there appears no Evidence before you, but of thoſe two profligate Villains, who came out of Goals, and after having been guilty of Villanies almoſt of all ſorts that ever were committed, came to be ſanctified by committing more; and were therefore call'd, The Saviours of the Nation.

Gentlemen, The next Objection that is made againſt the Evidence for the King, is, That they are all Papiſts; who deſign nothing but to deſtroy the Government, and ruin the Proteſtant Religion. And this muſt be taken to be the whole Deſign of all theſe Perſons of Quality, and others, that they come to forſwear themſelves, and damn their Souls to all Eternity, on purpoſe only to deſtroy Innocent, Proteſtant Mr. Oates. Alack-a-day! When at the ſame time, I muſt tell you, if it were neceſſary, you have about ſeven or eight Proteſtant Witneſſes of the Church of England, that confirm the Teſtimony of the reſt: Not that we muſt think, or ought to have any ſuch Conception among us, but that Roman Catholicks in point of Law, are good Witneſſes; and are to be credited as much as any other Witneſſes whatſoever, unleſs there be ſome Objection made to them; which would be the ſame againſt a Proteſtant as a Papiſt: For there remains a Right in them, and they ought to have equal Credit given to their Teſtimony, with thoſe of any other Perſuaſion, if a regular Objection be not ſtarted againſt them. And ſure I am, that has been always the Law; and ſhall be my Practice, while I have any thing to do with the Adminiſtration of Juſtice. Let the Sober Party, as they call themſelves, make what Reflections they pleaſe upon it, or trouble themſelves as they will about it, I value them not, nor their Opinion: Let them ſend as many Penny-Poſt Letters and Libels as they have a mind to do; two of which I received laſt Night, about yeſterday's Trial. This I am ſure of, Lying is as much the Talent and Inclination of a Preſbyterian, as ever it can be of a Papiſt: Nay, more; for it is as inſeparably incident to a Preſbyterian (and ſuch ſniveling, whining, canting Knaves) to lye, as to ſpeak. They can no more forbear Lying than they can forbear Speaking; for generally, as often as they do the one, they do the other.

Beſides, I muſt obſerve to you, with what Caution, Care, and Sobriety, both of Expreſſion and Action, all theſe Gentlemen and Women have delivered their Teſtimony, with the greateſt Tenderneſs and Care that poſſibly could be: And as well as they have given it with Caution, ſo I cannot but put it home to you, Gentlemen at the Bar, to give it its due Conſideration.

For tho' the other Juries did believe Oates, and not them at that time; yet that is not to be your Meaſure, becauſe you have not the ſame Reaſon to do it. Could any Perſon think, that there ſhould be ſuch Villains upon Earth, as impudently to ſwear downright Treaſon againſt their Fellow-Subjects, if there were no Truth in the Accuſation? That was the thing that guided thoſe Juries, who were all of them, no doubt, very honeſt Men; and that was it, which influenc'd the Parliament to do what they did in the matter. For it was morally impoſſible to be thought, any ſuch Wickedneſs could be ſo publickly attempted.

But, God be thanked, the Eyes of all honeſt and underſtanding Men are opened. And we ſee the fault was in our Credulity; and that theſe were Fellows ſhould not have been believed: And it concerns us, when the Truth has been ſo debauch'd, and our Credulity ſo impoſed upon, to ſhew the World our juſt Reſentment thereof.

And this I ſay to you, Gentlemen, with a purpoſe to vindicate thoſe Perſons who were concern'd as Jurors, in the Trials of all thoſe Cauſes; becauſe that is the thing much harp'd upon, and aim'd at: That becauſe he was believ'd before, to diſbelieve him now, would caſt a Reflection upon the Juries; whereas, if that Opinion hold, never will there be any ſuch thing as Perjury detected, ſo long as the Sun and Moon endure: For if a Verdict be obtain'd upon falſe Teſtimony, and it ſhall be enough for the Witneſs to ſay, I was believ'd at ſuch a Trial, and therefore do not you offer to proſecute me for Perjury: That would be the fineſt Doctrine that could be taught, to give a Licence to deſtroy all Truths, Juſtice, and human Society.

Therefore I leave it home upon you: Upon your Conſciences be it; for, in the preſence of the Great God of Heaven and Earth, that ſees all our Hearts, and will judge us for our inward Thoughts at the laſt Day, Liberavi animam meam. If you can find all theſe Perſons (in number forty-ſeven) guilty of wilful, wilful, downright, malicious, and corrupt Perjury, then you muſt acquit the Defendant.

For the Particulars of the Evidence, which abound in many material Circumſtances in point of Time and Place, I ſhall run them over as ſhort as I can, and remind you of them; not becauſe I think it extraordinary neceſſary, as tho' there were the leaſt doubt of the Fact, but for the Satisfaction of all Mankind, that are not under invincible Prejudice againſt the Truth. And I am ſure, upon yeſterday's Buſineſs there remain'd not any doubt with any that heard it, ſave one, who I know had a great ſhare in the Deſign, that was at the bottom of it; and I doubt, was one of thoſe Perſons that ſet this Villain on work: his Name may be conceal'd for the preſent, but a few days will diſcover it here, or in ſome other place.

Gentlemen, what Mr Attorney, or Mr Sollicitor-General, or any of the King's Counſel have ſaid, or what the Defendant has ſaid for himſelf, if not proved, and made plain by Evidence, is to be no Guidance at all to you, who are only to go according to the Teſtimony given to you; for that is purſuant to your Oath, which Oath is the Rule of your Enquiry.

The Witneſſes that prove, that he did ſwear ſo in both the Points in the Indictment; I need not mention, they were ſo full: They tell you he ſwore, that Ireland was in Town from the 8th to the 12th of Auguſt: but becauſe he fixed upon the 8th at firſt, there was Caution given him, Be not ſo preciſe to a Day, conſider with your ſelf. Then comes he to ſtab the Buſineſs to the quick, and to rivet it home: If I cannot be poſitive to the 8th, I will be poſitive between the 8th and 12th. And as to the other Point, I did obſerve before that, becauſe Bedloe was at a ſtand, upon Ireland's denying his being in Town the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September, therefore comes Oates up again, to fix it home; and, ſays he, I am ſure he was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September, becauſe he gave me twenty Shillings. That he ſwore this, is teſtified by three Gentlemen who were Jury-men at thoſe Trials.

Now, that this is notoriouſly falſe, falſe to a tittle; and, and as Mr. Sollicitor does obſerve, not the leaſt time left to give any ſort of countenance to what he ſwore, is thus made out to you.

Firſt, you are to take notice, that upon the 3d of Auguſt, being Saturday, it is ſworn by three or four Witneſſes, that he went out of Town; and this is not ſworn as Mr. Oates gave his Evidence poſitively without Circumſtances, but they give you an account how they remember it; becauſe upon the Wedneſday before, which was a publick Day of Note among them, and always kept as a Feſtival in memory of St. Ignatius, upon the laſt day of July, as both they and Mr. Oates himſelf do affirm, there went Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Anne Ireland, and their Mother out of Town to a Friend's Houſe to dinner. Mrs. Ireland did deſire him to ſtay there all night, as ſhe did. No, ſays he, I cannot ſtay all night, becauſe I muſt go out of Town on Saturday, and I muſt provide things neceſſary for my Journey: Nay, that is not all; for it goes yet further. Says his Siſter unto him, Why do you begin your Journey on a Saturday? That is an improper Day. Oh! ſays he, I do it, becauſe I am that Night to go to my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Hertfordſhire; where I am to meet with Sir John Southcoat, and go down with them into the Country: This does the Mother ſwear, and the Siſter. And then the Maid-Servant, and the Taylor's Wife, do give you another Token, that it was Saturday the 3d of Auguſt, becauſe he had ſomething to be mended in his Clothes, and ſtaid for them; and he was to go out of Town, for he had his Boots on.

There is yet this Circumſtance further, wherein thoſe four do all agree, That as he went out of Town the 3d of Auguſt, ſo he did not return till the 14th of September; for they ſay it was the Saturday Fortnight before Michaelmas, and the ſame Day of the Week that Michaelmas-day was of. So that you will find, that there is a conſtant Proof, and as plain a one as any poſſibly can be in the world, as to the time of his going out and coming home. And where he was in the mean time, proved directly by a great Company of Witneſſes, except one Day. For you ſee, the 3d of Auguſt he went to my Lord Aſton's at Standen: Several there are that ſaw him there the 4th, and dined with him there; particularly, Sir Edward Southcoat. And to ſhew that it is not a thing they are poſitive in, and ſwear it roundly without Conſideration, they give you an account of the Reaſons of their Knowledge. You are to conſider alſo the Teſtimony given by my Lord Aſton, a Perſon of great Honour and Quality: Says he, tho' I dare venture all I am worth in the World upon the Truth of it, that Ireland did go along with me all the Journey: yet, becauſe I did not take ſuch particular notice of the reſt of the time as I did of thoſe two Days, I will not take upon me to ſwear it. If Mr. Oates had had the fortieth part of that Caution in his Evidence, I dare ſay, you had not had the trouble of this Day's Trial.

The Fifth, you have a great many Witneſſes who give you an account that he came on Monday night to St. Albans with my Lord Aſton; there is Sir Edward Southcoat, Mr. John Southcoat, my Lord Aſton, the Coachman, and all the Servants. Sir Edward tells you, that Monday was a hot Day, and my Lord Aſton took him into his Coach; but he rode a horſeback all the reſt of the way, and had a fine going Horſe, which Horſe Mr. John Southcoat bought of him when the whole Journey was ended. They tell you likewiſe, upon the 6th and 7th Days, the very Inns they lodged at upon the Road; and particularly at Northampton, they lay at the George, which was Sir William Farmer's Houſe, which was then let to an Inn-Keeper, becauſe of the Fire in that Town. And, which is moſt material of all, for Mr. Oates's Satisfaction, you have for theſe times no leſs than four Witneſſes, that are Proteſtants of the Church of England, who give you the ſame account. There are in all no leſs in number than fourteen to this Point; and whether you will believe thoſe fourteen to be wilfully perjured, without Evidence to the contrary, is left to you; and if they do ſwear true, Oates that was yeſterday found perjured, muſt be convicted of Perjury again to-day: For in ſhort, the Queſtion is, Whether you will believe Perſons of Credit, that have no ſtain upon their Reputation, or Oates, that upon plain Evidence was found guilty of Perjury yeſterday.

When we come to Tixhall, we have no leſs number that teſtify where he was from day to day, and from night to night, to the 17th, and from the 17th to the 26th. You have fifteen Witneſſes more, all as direct and poſitive, as can be in the World, ſwearing where he was from time time. It ſeems he came to Tixhall on Thurſday the 8th; there he ſtaid till Thurſday following, and then he went to Holy-Well: he lay the firſt Night at Nantwich; the next Night at Holy-Well, at the Sign of the Star, a notorious Inn there; he came to Cheſter on Thurſday, and and ſome of the Company left him there, but others came back with him to Tixhall; who ſay, he went away on Saturday Morning, which happens to be the 17th. And thus you have a full account of him, quite from the 3d to the 17th, beyond all controverſy, plainly proved by Perſons of undoubted Credit. And if he were, where they ſay he was, from the 3d to the 17th, how could Oates ſwear true, that he took his leave of him here in Town, between the 8th and 12th?

Now let us come from the 17th to the 26th, and you have no leſs than fifteen Witneſſes, four whereof are Proteſtants; which I urge not as a neceſſary Qualification to be a Witneſs, but to anſwer Oates's Objection, as tho' this was a Popiſh Deſign to deſtroy him. They have given you an account where he was from time to time, by convincing Circumſtances, which you have heard; particularly of one Day that he went to Litchfield; one of the Witneſſes went with him, and a Proteſtant Witneſs too, that came back with him again, and ſupp'd with him at her Father's Houſe. The Apothecary tells you, the Day that he ſaw him was a Wake-day, which is a remarkable Time in the Contry. You are told of the Funeral of one Woman's Mother, that made her ſtay away from Monday till Thurſday: of another Man's Child. I mention them but ſhortly to you, becauſe I know you have taken Notes of them, and they are only uſed as Inſtances to manifeſt the Integrity of the Witneſſes, that this was not a thing contrived on purpoſe to make a Story of, but did really happen in the Order they tell it. And I muſt remember you of another Circumſtance ſome of them do ſwear, that whereas Oates had a mind to evade their Teſtimony by that Queſtion; whether this was the ſame Ireland that was tried? It was moſt certainly he; for that is made too evidently to appear, by their ſeeing him executed at Tyburn, I am ſorry to ſay, innocently.

From the third of Auguſt to the twenty-ſixth, there is not one Night, but you hear where he was: And from the twenty-ſixth of Auguſt to the ſeventh of September, you hear where he was, at the Horſe-match, upon the Bowling-green, at Mr. Hevening-ham's, Mr. Lowe's, Mr. Gerrard's, Mrs. Crompton's, Mr. Pendrel's Mr. Gifford's, and Mrs. Harwell's: And from the ſeventh to the fourteenth, ſave only one day, viz. the eighth, you have a particular Account too; and it does not appear by a rambling Evidence, but a faithful Account is given of all the Time, ſave that eighth day; which ſhews the Caution of the Witneſſes. And it cannot but be eaſily preſumed, he was either at Tixhall, or thereabouts; becauſe he was at Wolverhampton the ſeventh coming to London the ninth. How eaſy is it to imagine him there the eighth; and the rather, becauſe where he was the eighth, is not material to the Point in queſtion before you, but where he was the firſt and ſecond?

And, Gentlemen, if in caſe you had a mind to imagine, he was the eighth at London, it muſt be by a ſtrained Imagination: for you muſt take him to be at Wolverhampton the ſeventh, and make him ride poſt to London that Night, and return poſt from London the eighth to Tixhall, to be ready there early in the Morning upon the ninth, or take four days Journey back again; or elſe you cannot give the leaſt countenance to any other Imagination, but that he was about Tixhall the eighth of September.

Well, at Tixhall you have him the 9th of September; and from thence, you have it teſtified by all the Perſons that came along with him all the way, that he lay one Night at Coventry, another at Banbury, a third at Agmondeſham: That he baited at Uxbridge the fourth, which was the 12th of September; and came to Sir John Southcoat's Houſe that Night, being Thurſday. He ſtaid there Thurſday Night, and Friday; and upon Saturday the 14th of September, Sir John Southcoat's Man went along with him to London, whither he rode upon the Horſe he ſold Mr. Southcoat: the Man ſaw him at his Lodging; and he ſays, they wondered when he came in, that he had ſtaid ſo long.

And when we return to the four Witneſſes they begun with at firſt, who make all this Teſtimony to ſtand well together; that he went away the 3d of Auguſt, and was never in Town till the 14th of September; and every day, but the 8th of September, which makes nothing to the buſineſs, is particularly ſpoke to: and he muſt be there that day too, except you will put him upon very hard Service, to ride poſt to London and back again, in twenty-four Hours; for no other reaſon, but only to commit a Treaſon, that none ever found out, but Mr. Oates. And, I am ſure, if he did, he took a great deal of pains, to a very little purpoſe.

Gentlemen, I have taken up much of your Time, and detained you the longer in this matter, becauſe I cannot but ſay, with grief of heart, our Nation was too long beſotted; and of innocent Blood there has been too much ſpilt, 'tis high time to have ſome account of it. 'Tis a Mercy we ought to bleſs Almighty God for, that we are prevented from ſpilling more innocent Blood! God be bleſſed, our Eyes are opened; and let us have a care for the future, that we be not ſo ſuddenly impoſed upon by ſuch Prejudices and Jealouſies, as we have reaſon to fear, ſuch Villains have too much fill'd our heads with of late.

Gentlemen, 'tis incumbent upon you to try, according to the Evidence that has been given, whether the Defendant be Guilty, or Not Guilty. And 'tis incumbent upon us that ſit here as Judges, to ſee the Law executed, as we will anſwer it at the Tribunal of the great Judge of Heaven and Earth; before whom we muſt appear, and receive our Trials at the Great Day. And God forbid, but we ſhould uſe our utmoſt Endeavours, to inflict the greateſt Vengeance, that the Juſtice of the Nation can permit us to inflict upon ſuch Villains as theſe are; that have contracted ſo much Miſchief and Reproach upon us, and ſo much Guilt upon themſelves.

Gentlemen, I am ſorry, I ſay, I have kept you ſo long. 'Tis a Caſe of ſuch Importance, that I could not but ſay what I have done it in. There may be other Circumſtances ariſing from the Evidence, which I may have omitted; but were very largely and fully ſpoken to by Mr. Sollicitor. Whatſoever has been forgotten by him, or by me, I am ſure, will be ſufficiently ſupplied by your own Obſervations; for I know you to be Gentlemen of great Knowledge and Experience in Matters of this nature.

Then the Jury withdrew, to conſider of their Verdict; and, after half an Hour's Receſs, return'd to the Bar; and, anſwering to their Names, deliver'd in their Verdict, That the Defendant was guilty of the Perjury whereof he ſtood indicted: Which being recorded, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſpoke to the Gentlemen of the Jury to this effect.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, becauſe there has been ſome notice taken to-day, as there was yeſterday, day, concerning the Opinions of Judges, about Verdicts that have been given, I would ſay a word or two to you: not that I much admire the doing of it, at any time; nor would I do it now, for your ſakes; becauſe, I am ſure, you act according to your Conſciences, and affect not Commendation. But becauſe it may be neceſſary, for the Satisfaction of ſome People, that they ſhould know our Opinions alſo in this matter; I muſt tell you, you have given a Virdect, that becomes your Honeſty, Integrity, and Loyalty. And I declare, in the preſence of Almighty God, the Searcher of Hearts, that had I been of the Jury, I muſt have given the ſame Verdict. Gentlemen, 'tis an honeſt and juſt Verdict, that you have given; and by it, you have contributed, as much as in you lies, to vindicate the Nation from the Infamy it has ſo long lain under.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. For my part, I think, if you had given any other Verdict, you had found againſt plain Demonſtration; the Evidence was ſo full and clear.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. The Court is very well ſatisfied with the Verdict; and you have acquitted yourſelves like worthy, honeſt Gentlemen.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. There is nothing can be ſaid to the Verdict, but that it is a juſt Verdict, and according to the Evidence.

[And then the Court aroſe.

Die Lunæ, 11 Maii, 1685.

THIS Day Mr. Wallop moved, that in regard the Court was pleas'd to give the Defendant time, till Saturday next, to move in Arreſt of Judgment, upon the Conviction on Friday laſt; they would pleaſe to give to the ſame day, to move in Arreſt of Judgment, upon the Conviction on Saturday: which the Court granted. But afterwards, upon the Motion of Mr. Attorney-General, they order'd, that a Note of the Exceptions to both Indictments, ſhould be ſent to the King's Counſel, ſome days before Saturday.

Die Sabbati, 16 Maii, 1685.

THIS Day being appointed for the Defendant to move what he could in Arreſt of Judgment, upon the two Convictions of Perjury; he was brought by Rule from the Priſon, to the King's-Bench Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney-General, have you any thing to move?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment upon Oates, who is convicted upon two Indictments, for two notorious Perjuries.

L. C. J. Who is Counſel for Oates?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Wallop moved for him.

L. C. J. What is it that Mr. Wallop has to ſay.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire I may ſpeak one Word. It was Thurſday Night before my Attorney could make an end of examing the Records; Sir Samuel Aſtry knows it very well: Then I ſent the Rule to thoſe Gentlemen that were aſſign'd to be my Counſel; and the Exceptions were deliver'd in but yeſterday. I pray I may have a Day or two more, that my Counſel may be prepared to argue for me.

L. C. J. We cannot do that; we gave you beyond the ordinary Rules, in extending it till today.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, he talks of examining the Records; he had Copies of them all this long Vacation.

Oates. My Lord, my Attorney will be ready to make Oath, that he finiſh'd the examining but on Thurſday Night.

L. C. J. We do all know they were pleaded to the laſt Term; and you have had all this Vacation, to conſider of them: And we have indulg'd you beyond the ordinary Time.

Oates. My Lord, I deſire but a day or two more.

L. C. J. No, we cannot do it; we have done more already than we ordinarily do. Perſons that are convicted, uſe to have but four Days allow'd them to move in Arreſt of Judgment; but you, inſtead of having but four Days after, had eight.

Oates. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to give me time till Monday.

L. C. J. I tell you, we cannot do it. If Mr. Wallop have any thing to ſay for you, we'll hear him.

Mr. Wallop. I have nothing to ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Here are four Exceptions deliver'd to me laſt Night, as made by Mr. Wallop.

L. C. J. But he ſays he has nothing to ſay. We know not whoſe theſe Exceptions are.

Oates. I do deliver in thoſe Exceptions, my Lord; pray let them be read.

L. C. J. Read them, Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Dominus Rex verſus Oates. The Defendant's Exceptions.

I. That a Witneſs ſworn in the behalf of the King in a Proceſs of High-Treaſon, cannot be puniſh'd for Perjury by the King.

II. That it does not appear, that the Indictments of Ireland, &c. found in Middleſex, were legally tranſmitted into London; and conſequently, all the Proceedings thereupon were coram non Judice.

III. That the Perjuries aſſign'd, are in Matters foreign to the Iſſue.

IV. It is Reſolutio Signat' in that part of the Indictment, that mentions what the Defendant ſwore; and in the Perjury aſſign'd, 'tis Reſolutio Signand'; and it is no good Aſſignment of the Perjury.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Theſe are doughty Exceptions indeed.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, what ſay you unto them?

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think I need not ſay much to them. The firſt Exception is a plain Miſtake of the Indictment: For had Mr. Oates been indicted upon the Statute, it had been ſomething; but at the Common Law, certainly he may be proſecuted by the King, tho' he was Witneſs for the King before. As to the ſecond, that it does not appear Ireland's Indictment was well tranſmitted from Middleſex to London; that, ſure, is well enough: For after it is recited, that they were ſo and ſo indicted, it does ſet forth, that the Trials were had upon Records there depending before the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery; and it ſhall be taken, that they were well brought before them. As to the third Exception, that the Perjuries aſſign'd are foreign to the Matter in Iſſue; that is not ſo: For it is apparent, one of the Indictments is in the expreſs Point of the great Treaſon charg'd againſt them, that is, the Conſult of the 24th of April. And as to the ſecond Indictment it appear'd upon the Evidence, that there was at treaſonable Meeting ſworn in Auguſt; and he ſwore Ireland was here in Town in the beginning of Auguſt, Auguſt, and in the beginning of September. And then for the fourth matter, that he ſwore he ſaw them ſign it; and the Perjury aſſigned is, that he did not carry it to be ſigned; that receives a plain Anſwer: For we alledge, he falſely and corruptly ſwore that he was preſent, and that he carried the Reſolution to be ſign'd, and he ſaw them ſign the Reſolution. Now, in theſe two things we have laid the Perjury; 1. We ſay he was not there: And, 2. He carried no ſuch Reſolution to be ſign'd. Indeed, we do not ſay that he did not ſee it ſign'd, nor we need not; for if he were not there, nor did carry it, he could not ſee them ſign it. There is nothing in the Exceptions, my Lord; and therefore, I pray your Judgment.

L. C. J. Is there any body of Counſel for Mr. Oates, that will ſay any thing to theſe Exceptions?

Oates. I pray, my Lord, that I may have liberty but till Monday, for my Counſel to prepare.

L. J. C. No, we cannot do it: Indeed, if there had been any colour, or weight in the Exceptions, it might have been ſomething; tho' we have indulg'd in this caſe already, more than ever we uſed to do in Caſes of this Nature; for it is known to every body, that knows any thing of the Courſe and Practice of the Court, that after Conviction, no more than four Days are allow'd, to move in Arreſt of Judgment. And being the Practice of the Court, it is the Law of the Court; and I am ſure, as little Favour ought to be ſhewn in a Caſe of Perjury, as in any Caſe whatſoever: But yet, however, becauſe he ſhould not think that the Extremity of the Law was aimed at by the Court in this Caſe, and he hinder'd in his legal Defence, the Court did indulge him more time than is uſually granted in ſuch Caſes. Now, as for the Exceptions, certainly they are very frivolous.

For the Firſt, It would be admirable Doctrine indeed, in caſe it ſhould obtain, that if a Man be a Witneſs in any Caſe for the King, and forſwear himſelf, he ſhould not be proſecuted for Perjury at the King's Suit: For we know that no Man can be proſecuted for his Life, (except it be in Caſes of Appeal) but at the Suit of the King; and to be ſure, all Proſecutions for Treaſon muſt be at his Suit. If then Witneſſes come and forſwear themſelves, to take away Men's Lives, and they ſhould not be called in queſtion for it, criminally, by the King; that were a fine Way to ſanctify the greateſt Villainy, and make the Proceſs of Law to become an Inſtrument of the moſt infamous Cruelty in the World. I preſume, no Gentleman at the Bar would think that an Exception fit to put his Hand to.

Then as to the Second, That the Perjury is not aſſigned in Points material to the Iſſue, that is plainly otherwiſe; for the time muſt needs be very material, becauſe it was impoſſible that Mr. Ireland could be guilty of the Treaſon ſworn againſt him, at his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, if he were not in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt: Nor could he be privy to the Treaſon ſworn by Bedloe the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September, in Harcourt's Chamber, if he were out of Town from the 3d of Auguſt till the 14th of September; and therefore both thoſe Perjuries were in the very Points in Iſſue.

And then for the 24th of April, which is the main Perjury of all; it is not laid in this Indictment, that there was no Conſult of the Jeſuits upon that Day: nor is there any notice taken, that there was no Conſult at the White-Horſe Tavern; but it ſays only, that Oates did ſwear, there was a Conſult there, and that he was preſent at it; and that he ſaw the Reſolution written down by Mico, if I do not miſremember the Name: And that upon the 24th of April, he went with it from Chamber to Chamber, to have them ſign it. And then comes the Indictment, and aſſigns the Perjury, Ubi reverà he was not at the White-Horſe Tavern that Day; and I think it is pretty plain he was not, for he was then at St. Omers.

Then admitting all that Matter about the ſigning of the Reſolution, to be out of Doors, a plain Perjury is aſſign'd and prov'd. For it was moſt proper for them to lay it as they did; and ſo it was in the other Point too, he ſwore he carried the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw it ſigned. Now, ſay they, he did not carry it from Chamber to Chamber, to be ſigned; and if ſo, then he could not ſee it ſigned; and it will all be well enough ſure. And if any one part of the Oath he ſwore proves falſe, that is ſufficient to maintain this Verdict; and 'tis notoriouſly plain, it was falſe throughout.

And of this Matter he now ſtands convicted, upon as full and plain an Evidence as ever was given in any Caſe in the World; and I am ſorry to think that any Man, who is guilty of ſuch an Offence, ſhould continue ſo obſtinate and hardened in Villany as he appears to be.

But I think it not amiſs for me to ſay ſomething upon this occaſion, for the Satisfaction of ſome that hear me; and for an Example for the future. The Crime whereof this Man ſtands convicted, is certainly a very heinous one, attended with ſuch diſmal Conſequences that enſued upon it, that I think no Man can have a true Chriſtian Spirit in him, but he muſt begin to melt with the Conſideration of the great Miſchiefs his Perjury has brought upon himſelf and us: It has brought the Guilt of innocent Blood upon many; to be ſure it hath up his own Head, and I pray God deliver all Men from having any hand in innocent Blood.

And as the Crime is great, ſo it is to be known, that a proportionable Puniſhment of that Crime can ſcarce by our Law, as it now ſtands, be inflicted upon him. But that you may ſee we have conſidered how to puniſh it, as ſuch a Crime does deſerve; we have conſulted with all the Judges of England, that if the Law would allow it, he might have ſuch a Judgment for this heinous Offence, as might be proper to terrify all others from committing the like again. For Puniſhment is not intended only for the ſake of the Offender, to reward him according to his Deſerts; but it has a Proſpect alſo of Example and Terror to all others, that they ſhould take care how they offend in any ſuch manner, and that is as conſiderable a Part of the End of the Law as any other.

Gentlemen, it is known, that by the old Laws of England Perjury was puniſhed with Death; it grew a little more moderate afterwards, not to make the Crime the leſs, but becauſe of the Danger there might be of Malice of ſome revengeful Perſons, by endeavouring by Perjury to convict others of Perjury. But the next Step was cutting out of the Tongue, to ſhew that the Law in all Ages had an Abhorrency of falſe Oaths, and puniſhed that impious Crime of Perjury with the moſt terrible Puniſhments.

Since that time our Anceſtors have yet been more moderate, and have not extended the Judgment to Life and Member; but by the unanimous Opinion of all the Judges of England, whom we purpoſely conſulted with upon this Occaſion, it is conceived, that by the Law, Crimes of this nature are left to be puniſhed according to the Diſcretion of this Court, ſo far as that the Judgment extend not to Life or Member.

And I tell you this, Gentlemen, the rather, becauſe I obſerve our Law-Books are more ſilent here, in regard the Judgments for theſe Offences are not ſo ſolemnly and particularly entered up, as they are in Caſes Capital: But they are left more diſcretionary; becauſe that Crimes of this Nature may be attended with particular Circumſtances either to aggravate, or leſſen the Puniſhment: And therefore the Puniſhment might be diſtributed accordingly.

And for that reaſon, Gentlemen, it is well known to us all, that that was the occaſion of taking away the Court of Star-Chamber, as the Preamble of the Act for taking it away does manifeſt: That inaſmuch as the Authority, for the Correction of all Offences whatſoever, was by the common Law of this Land originally fixed in the Court of King's-Bench; and the Proceeding by Information in the Star-Chamber, when it might be by Proceſs in this Court, was look'd upon as a double Way of Vexation; therefore that Court is aboliſhed, and the Authority of the King's-Bench Court left entire. And it is notoriouſly known, how Puniſhments, of all ſorts and kinds, were inflicted by the Court of Star-Chamber for Perjury, and ſuch like Offences, while that Court was up; and ſince that time, in Fox's Caſe and others that you have heard of, it has been according to the Diſcretion of this Court, puniſhed, as ſeverely as this Court thought fit, ſo as the Sentence did not extend to Life or Member.

Now I thought it proper for me, not only for the ſake of the Caſe now before us; but alſo for your Learning ſake, to tell you, this was the Reſolution of all the Judges of England, upon Conſideration of the Precedents, and of all the Rules of Law; which have been fully debated, and conſidered of: And this, I declare, is their unanimous Opinion.

If then this be ſo, and it is left to the Diſcretion of the Court to inflict ſuch Puniſhment as they think fit; far be it from this Court at any time, as on the one ſide to inflict Puniſhment heavier than the Crimes deſerve, (no, we would rather uſe Commiſeration, than extraordinary and exorbitant Severity;) ſo, on the other ſide, to let go Crimes ſo notorious and heinous as theſe, without the ſevereſt Mark that can, by Law, be put upon them. When a Perſon ſhall be convicted of ſuch a foul and malicious Perjury, as the Defendant here is, I think it is impoſſible for this Court, as the Law now ſtands, to put a Puniſhment upon him any way proportionable to the Offence, that has drawn after it ſo many horrid and dreadful Conſequences: We do therefore think fit to inflict an exemplary Puniſhment upon this villainous perjur'd Wretch, to terrify others for the future; which is not my part to pronounce: But what it is, my Brother will tell you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, you will be pleaſed to remember there are two Judgments.

L. C. J. There are ſo, we know it very well, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. That which was tried firſt, was about the Conſult about the 24th of April; we deſire that ſome particular Mark may be ſet upon that Day.

Then the Judges conſulted a little together, and Mr. Juſtice Withins pronounced the Sentence thus:

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Titus Oates, you are convicted upon two Indictments for Perjury; I ſay, for Perjury: I muſt repeat the Word twice, becauſe you are doubly convicted. One of the greateſt Offences, that our Law has cognizance of; 'tis ſo in its own Nature: But your Perjury has all the Aggravations that can be thought of to heighten it. If a Man kills another with his Sword, and there be forethought Malice in the Caſe, he is to be hang'd for it: But when a Man ſhall draw innocent Blood upon himſelf by a malicious, premeditated, falſe Oath, there is not only Blood in the Caſe, but likewiſe Perjury, corrupt, malicious Perjury: I know not how I can ſay, but that the Law is defective that ſuch a one is not to be hang'd. For, if we conſider thoſe dreadful Effects which have followed upon your Perjury, we muſt conclude our Law defective; they are ſuch, as no Chriſtian's Heart can think of, without bleeding for that innocent Blood which was ſhed by your Oath; and every knowing Man believes, and every honeſt Man grieves for. God be thanked, our Eyes are now opened; and indeed we muſt have been incurably blind, if they had not been opened firſt by the Contradictions, Improbabilities, and Impoſſibilities in your own Teſtimony; but likewiſe by the poſitive, plain, direct, and full Proof of forty-ſeven Witneſſes to one particular Point. Againſt whom you had not one Word to object, but they were Papiſts and Roman Catholicks; which is no Objection at all: tho' at the ſame time, it did appear, that nine or ten of them were Proteſtants of the Church of England. That was all you had to ſay; you had not one Word to juſtify your ſelf from that great and heinous Perjury you were accuſed of. I hope, I have not been thought a Man of Ill-nature; and, I confeſs, nothing has been ſo great a Regret to me in my Place and Station, as to give Judgment, and pronounce the Sentence of Law againſt my Fellow-Subjects, my Fellow-Creatures: But as to you, Mr. Oates, I cannot ſay, my Fellow-Chriſtian. Yet, in this Caſe, when I conſider your Offence, and the diſmal Effects that have follow'd upon it, I cannot ſay, I have any Remorſe in giving Judgment upon you. And therefore having told you my Thoughts ſhortly about your Crime, and how readily I pronounce your Sentence; I ſhall now declare the Judgment of the Court upon you. And it is this:

Firſt, The Court does order for a Fine, That you pay a Thouſand Marks upon each Indictment.

Secondly, That you be ſtript of all your Canonical Habits.

Thirdly, The Court does award, That you ſtand upon the Pillory, and in the Pillory, here before Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, upon Monday next, for an Hour's Time, between the Hours of Ten and Twelve; with a Paper over your Head (which you muſt firſt walk with round about to all the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall) declaring your Crime. And that is upon the firſt Indictment.

Fourthly, (On the ſecond Indictment.) Upon Tueſday, you ſhall ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, at the Royal Exchange in London, for the ſpace of an Hour, between the Hours of Twelve and Two; with the ſame Inſcription.

You ſhall upon the next Wedneſday be whipp'd from Aldgate to Newgate.

Upon Friday, you ſhall be whipp'd from Newgate to Tyburn, by the Hands of the Common Hangman.

But, Mr. Oates, we cannot but remember, there were ſeveral particular Times you ſwore falſe about: And therefore, as annual Commemorations, that it may be known to all People as long as you live, we have taken ſpecial care of you for an annual Puniſhment.

Upon the 24*th of* April every Year, as long as you live, you are to ſtand upon the Pillory, and in the Pillory, at Tyburn, juſt oppoſite to the Gallows, for the ſpace of an Hour, between the Hours of Ten and Twelve.

You are to ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, here at Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, every 9*th of* Auguſt, in every Year, ſo long as you live. And that it may be known what we mean by it, 'tis to remember, what he ſwore about Mr. Ireland's being in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt.

You are to ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, at Charing-Croſs, on the 10*th of* Auguſt, every Year, during your Life, for an Hour, between Ten and Twelve.

The like over-againſt the Temple Gate, upon the 11*th.*

And upon the ſecond of September, (which is another notorious Time, which you cannot but be remember'd of) you are to ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, for the ſpace of one Hour, between Twelve and Two, at the Royal-Exchange: And all this you are to do every Year, during your Life; and to be committed cloſe Priſoner, as long as you live.

This I pronounce to be the Judgment of the Court upon you, for your Offences. And I muſt tell you plainly, if it had been in my power to have carried it further, I ſhould not have been unwilling to have given Judgment of Death upon you; for, I am ſure, you deſerve it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we will take care, that the Clerk ſhall diſtinguiſh the Judgments in the Entries. [Then the Priſoner was taken away.

This Sentence was afterwards executed with great Severity; but immediately after the Revolution, the Houſe of Commons came to this Vote.

Tueſday the 11th of June, 1689.

Reſolv'd, That the Proſecution of Titus Oates upon two Indictments for Perjury in the Court of King's-Bench, was a deſign to ſtifle the Popiſh Plot, and that the Verdicts given thereupon were corrupt, and the Judgments given thereupon were cruel and illegal.

There was an Attempt to get this Judgment revers'd, but ſtill continuing his Diſability as a Witneſs; but this Attempt did not ſucceed, only the Houſe of Lords addreſs'd the King to grant him a Pardon, which was accordingly done. See State Trials Vol. VIII. Pag. 455. and Vol. VII Pag. 476.

How ſayeſt thou, Alice Liſle, art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon contained in this Indictment, or not Guilty?

Liſle. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, by whom wilt thou be tried?

Liſle. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Then Proclamation was made for the Jurors impanell'd to try the Iſſue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar, to appear. And the Priſoner deſiring, by reaſon of her Age and Infirmities (being thick of hearing) ſome Friends of her's might be allow'd to ſtand by her, and inform her of what paſs'd in the Court; one Matthew Brown was named, and allow'd of by the Court to give her all Aſſiſtance that he could in that matter. Then the Names of the Jurors were call'd over, and the Appearance recorded: And it being a Cauſe of great Expectation and Moment, the Lord Chief Juſtice order'd the Sheriff to take care, that a very ſubſtantial Jury ſhould be returned, of the beſt Quality in the County.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made in uſual manner, and the Priſoner was bid to look to her Challenges, and the Jury was ſworn in this Order.

Cl. of Ar. Alice Liſle, hold up thy Hand: You Gentlemen of the Jury that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to her Charge: She Stands indicted by the Name of Alice Liſle, &c. Upon this Indictment ſhe hath been arraigned, and upon that Arraignment ſhe has pleaded thereunto, Not Guilty; and for her Trial has put her ſelf upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether ſhe be Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof ſhe is indicted in manner and form as ſhe ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find her Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, ſhe had at the time of the High-Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince: If you find her not Guilty, you are to enquire whether ſhe did fly for it; if you find that ſhe did fly for it, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels ſhe had at the time of the Flight, as if you had found her Guilty. If you find her not Guilty, nor that ſhe did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mundy. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, This is an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt Alice Liſle, the Priſoner at the Bar; and the Indictment ſets forth, that ſhe, as a falſe Traitor againſt our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, her ſupreme and natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in her Heart, nor regarding the Duty of her Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and withdrawing the Love and true Obedience which ſhe owed to him as her Sovereign, and intending, as well as in her lay, to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to depoſe the King and put him to death, the 28th day of July, in the firſt Year of this King, well knowing one John Hicks,* late of Keinſham in the County of Somerſet, Clerk, to be a falſe Traitor, and to have raiſed War and Rebellion againſt the King, ſhe did then at Ellingham in this County, in her Dwelling-Houſe traitorouſly entertain, conceal, and comfort the ſaid John Hicks, and for his maintenance and comfort then gave him Meat and Drink. This is laid to be againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided: To this ſhe has pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove this Fact, you muſt find her Guilty.

Mr. Pollexfen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King. The Priſoner that ſtands now at the Bar, Alice Liſle, is the Widow of one Liſle, who was in his Life-time ſufficiently known: The Perſon mentioned in the Indictment to be entertained and concealed by her, John Hicks, is a Conventicle-Preacher, and one, that for bringing the traitorous Purpoſes intended in this late horrid Rebellion to effect, was one of the greateſt and moſt active Inſtruments: for he was perſonally in this Rebellion, and did perſuade and exhort ſome loyal Perſons, that happened to have the Misfortune of being taken Priſoners by that rebellious Crew, to quit their Duty and Allegiance to the King their Sovereign Lord, and become Partakers with them and the reſt of his traitorous Accomplices, in taking Arms under their falſe pretended Prince. This, my Lord, we ſhall prove to you by plain, evident, and undeniable Teſtimony of thoſe very Perſons whom this Seducer thus applied himſelf to. Gentlemen, after it pleaſed God, by his Bleſſing on the victorious Arms of the King, that the Rebels were defeated, their pretended Prince and

* This Hicks was a Diſſenting Miniſter, and hanged afterwards at Glaſſenbury.

and Head, with ſome of the Chief of his Accomplices, were taken Priſoners, and that in a place near the Houſe where the Priſoner lived, when all the Country was full of hurry in purſuit after thoſe wicked Rebels, thus, by God's Bleſſing and Providence, diſſipated, and forc'd, like Vagabonds, to ſkulk up and down: then does this Hicks, having got from the Battle as far as Warminſter in the next County, ſend a Meſſenger, one Dunne, to the Priſoner's Houſe, to deſire her and requeſt her, that ſhe would receive and harbour him and his Friend (who that was, will appear by and by). Mrs Liſle returns an Anſwer by the Meſſenger, that ſhe would receive him, but does withal give particular Direction, that the time when they did come ſhould be late in the Evening. Accordingly he comes in the beginning of the Night, at 10 of the Clock, booted and ſpurred, and brings with him another Arch-Rebel, one Nelthorp, that ſtands outlaw'd for a moſt black and horrid Treaſon. When they come to the Priſoner's Houſe, they turn their Horſes looſe at the Gate; for the Danger was ſo great, and their Apprehenſions of being taken ſo urgent upon them to conceal and ſhift for themſelves, that they thought it convenient to let their Horſes go where they would. When they came there, the Meſſenger, as we ſhall prove by himſelf, was convey'd away to a Chamber; but Mrs. Liſle cauſes Meat and Drink to be ſet before Mr. Hicks and Nelthorp, and they ſupped with her, and afterwards they were lodg'd by her particular Order and Direction. The next Morning Colonel Penruddock, who had ſome intimation, in his ſearch after the Rebels, that ſome Perſons lay conceal'd in Mrs. Liſle's Houſe, comes thither, and tells her, after he had beſet the Houſe, Madam, you have Rebels in your Houſe, I come to ſeize them, pray deliver them up. She denied that ſhe had any in her Houſe; but upon ſearch Hicks, and Nelthorp, and that other Fellow, the Meſſenger, were all found there, and ſhe thereupon ſecured with them. The Method wherein we ſhall give our Evidence, will be this; we ſhall firſt begin with this piece of Evidence, that we ſhall prove, that Hicks was actually in the Army, and in the Rebellion; and then we ſhall prove the ſeveral ſubſequent Facts as have been opened. We deſire Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert, and Mr. Taylor may be ſworn.

Liſle. My Lord, as for what is ſaid concerning the Rebellion, I can aſſure you, I abhorr'd that Rebellion as much as any Woman in the world——

Lord Jefferies. L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Liſle, becauſe we muſt obſerve the common and uſual Methods of Trial in your Caſe, as well as others, I muſt interupt you now: You ſhall be fully heard when it comes to your turn to make your Defence, but any thing you ſay now beforehand is altogether irregular and improper. You, it may be, are ignorant of the Forms of Law, therefore I would inform you: You are firſt to hear what your Accuſation is; you ſhall aſk any Queſtions of the Witneſſes that you will, after the King's Counſel have examin'd them, as they go along; and when all their Teſtimony is delivered, you ſhall be heard to make your own Defence, and have full ſcope and liberty to inlarge upon it as long as you can: it is a buſineſs that concerns you in point of Life and Death; all that you have or can value in the World lies at ſtake, and God forbid that you ſhould be hinder'd, either in time or any thing elſe, whereby you may defend yourſelf; but at preſent it is not your turn to ſpeak, for the Forms of Law require your Accuſers firſt to be heard; and it is abſolutely requiſite, that the uſual Forms and Methods of Law be inviolably obſerv'd, and be ſure it does the Priſoner no injury that the Law is kept ſo ſtrictly to; and we have that Charity, as well as Juſtice, that it becomes, and is not below all Courts to have for Perſons in your Condition; and we are obliged to take care, that you ſuffer no Detriment or Injury by any illegal or irregular Proceedings. For tho' we ſit here as Judges over you by Authority from the King, yet we are accountable, not only to him, but to the Kings of Kings, the great Judge of Heaven and Earth; and therefore are obliged, both by our Oaths, and upon our Conſciences, to do you Juſtice, and by the Grace of God we ſhall do it, you may depend upon it. And as to what you ſay concerning your ſelf, I pray God with all my heart you may be innocent. Pray call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert, and Mr. Taylor. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Who do you begin with?

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Pope, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning this Hicks: Pray tell your whole Knowledge.

Mr. Pope. My Lord, I had the misfortune to be taken Priſoner by Monmouth's Army, going about ſome Buſineſs of my own; and after I had been taken ſome few days, we happened to be brought to Keinſham, and we were put into Sir Thomas Bridges's Stables, and kept under a Guard there. Whilſt we were there, I did ſee that Gentleman that goes by the Name of Mr. Hicks, who is now in Salisbury Goal, and there I ſaw him yeſterday; he came and aſked for the Priſoners, which were about four or five in number, and he aſked them how they did? They made him little reply. Then he deſired to know how we were dealt with, whether he were kindly uſed, or no? I replied, no, for we had had but a piece of Bread theſe two Days. He made me anſwer, that he was ſorry for that, for it was otherwiſe intended. And there was with him another Gentleman that was called the King's Chaplain, that is, the Duke of Monmouth's; and afterwards he pretended he would do us a Kindneſs in ſpeaking to the King (as he called him) for us. He talked with us ſome little time, and by and by he began to aſk us what was the reaſon that we were there? We told him we were taken Priſoners; upon which, ſaith he, this King (meaning, as I ſuppoſe, the late Duke of Monmouth) is a good King and a Proteſtant; and a great deal to that purpoſe, with ſome reflecting Words on the Government, and upon the Perſon of the King: and he told us, he wondered what we had to ſay for our ſelves, being Proteſtants, that we did what we did in ſerving a Popiſh Prince, and not obeying a Proteſtant one. This is the Subſtance of what I have to ſay upon this matter.

L. C. J. Tho' you were pleaſed to phraſe it, Sir, in the beginning of your Teſtimony, a Misfortune that you were taken Priſoner by the Rebels; yet, I ſuppoſe, you could not be without the Conſolation of a good Conſcience, that you ſuffered in the way of doing your Duty.

Mr. Pope. My Lord, I am very well ſatisfied I did ſuffer in a good Cauſe.

L. C. J. There is one piece of happineſs in it; that by that means you are able to give this Teſtimony this day, and do the King this piece of Service. But pray, Sir, let me aſk you this Queſtion:

Are you ſure the Man you ſaw yeſterday at Salisbury is the ſame Man that you ſpoke with at Keinſham, that goes by the Name of Hicks?

Mr. Pope. Yes, my Lord; and when I was there yeſterday with him, I aſked him whether he knew me; and told him, ſaid I, you may well remember you ſaw me at Keinſham. Saith he, I do not remember that ever I ſaw your Face before. Said I, you remember Sir Thomas Bridge's Stables there? Said he, I remember I did ſee ſome Priſoners. Said I, was not it there you ſaw me, and had ſuch a Diſcourſe with me? He ſeemed to deny it, but I told him, a Man of your Coat ſhould not tell Untruths, you cannot but remember you ſaw me there. Saith he, I will recollect my Memory if I can; and he afterwards ſent to the George in Salisbury for me, and then he told me, he did recollect that he ſaw and talked with ſuch a Perſon there.

Mr. Rumſey. Sir, I would aſk you this one Queſtion; did you ſee him in the Army about the time of the Fight?

Mr. Pope. I think I ſaw him about a day or two before.

L. C. J. Had he any Weapon on?

Mr. Pope. I think not, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Our next Witneſs is Mr. Fitzherbert. Pray, Sir, will you give an account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Hicks.

Mr. Fitzherbert. My Lord, during the time that I was a Priſoner with this Gentleman at Keinſham, the 25*th* of June, I ſaw this Man, John Hicks, who held a Diſcourſe with Mr. Pope near an Hour's time, diſparaging the Government and his Majeſty, and extolling the Duke of Monmouth, what a brave Prince, and how good a Proteſtant he was.

L. C. J. Then he was among them, was he?

Mr. Fitzherbert. Yes, my Lord, he was, and I ſaw him yeſterday at Salisbury.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame Man that you ſaw in Monmouth's Army?

Mr. Fitzherbert. Yes, he owns himſelf to be the ſame Man.

Mr. Pollexfen. How often did you ſee him there beſides that time when he diſcourſed with Mr. Pope?

Mr. Fitzherbert. I ſaw him ſometimes out of the Town, but I never diſcourſed him.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there before or after that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Fitzherbert. It was after.

L. C. J. Would the Priſoner aſk this Witneſs, or the other, any Queſtions?

Liſle. No, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, Mr. Taylor, what ſay you to the matter?

Mr. Taylor. My Lord, I ſaw him at the ſame time that theſe Gentlemen ſpeak of, at Sir Thomas Bridge's at Keinſham.

Mr. Pollexfen. Were you a Priſoner there, Sir?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, I was.

Mr. Pollexfen. What Place was it you ſaw him in?

Mr. Taylor. It was in the Stables the firſt time that I ſaw him.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you with him? What did he ſay to you?

Mr. Taylor. He ſaid, he wonder'd at us, that we ſhould take up Arms againſt ſo good a Prince, and a Proteſtant, as the Duke of Monmouth, and againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and hold up with Popery: Saith he, York is but a Papiſt; and a great many ſuch Words.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord; but I cannot tell particularly the Time and Place; up and down the Army.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him at Salisbury.

Mr. Taylor. Yes.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame Man?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, it is.

Mr. Pollexfen. Next, my Lord, we come to prove the Meſſage and Correſpondence between this ſame Hicks, and the Priſoner Mrs. Liſle.

Mr. Jennings. Swear Mr. James Dunne.

[Which was done.

Mr. Pollexfen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to obſerve, the Times will fall out to be very material in this Caſe: The Battle at King's-Edgmore was the 6th of July; three or four days after, was the taking of Monmouth, and my Lord Grey at Ringwood; upon the 26th of July, ten or twelve Days after the taking of Monmouth, was this Meſſage ſent by Dunne to Mrs. Liſle: ſo we call Dunne to prove what Meſſage he carried upon the 26th, and what Anſwer was return'd; he will tell you, that Tueſday was the time appointed for them to come, in the Night, and all the other Circumſtances. But withal, I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip, that this Fellow, Dunne, is a very unwilling Witneſs; and therefore, with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip, we do humbly deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to examine him a little the more ſtrictly.

L. C. J. You ſay well: Hark you, Friend, I would take notice of ſomething to you by the way, and you would do well to mind what I ſay to you. According as the Counſel that are here for the King ſeem to inſinuate, you were employ'd as a Meſſenger between theſe Perſons, one whereof has already been proved a notorious Rebel, and the other is the Priſoner at the Bar, and your Errand was to procure a Reception at her Houſe for him.

Dunne. My Lord, I did ſo.

L. C. J. Very well. Now mark what I ſay to you, Friend: I would not by any means in the world endeavour to fright you into any thing, or any ways tempt you to tell an Untruth, but provoke you to tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, that is the Buſineſs we come about here. Know, Friend, there is no Religion that any man can pretend to, can give a Countenance to Lying, or can diſpenſe with telling the Truth: Thou haſt a precious immortal Soul, and there is nothing in the World equal to it in value: There is no relation to thy Miſtreſs, if ſhe be ſo; no relation to thy Friend; nay, to thy Father or thy Child; nay, not all the temporal Relations in the world, can be equal to thy precious immortal Soul. Conſider that the great God of Heaven and Earth, before whoſe Tribunal thou, and we, and all Perſons are to ſtand at the laſt Day, will call thee to an account for thy reſcinding his Truth, and take vengeance of thee for every Falſhood thou telleſt. I charge thee therefore, as thou will anſwer it to the great God, the Judge of all the Earth, that thou do not dare to waver one tittle from the Truth, upon any account or pretence whatſoever: For tho' it were to ſave thy Life, yet the value of thy precious and immortal Soul is much greater, than that thou ſhould'ſt forfeit it for the ſaving of any the moſt precious outward Bleſſing thou doſt enjoy; for that God of Heaven may juſtly ſtrike thee into eternal Flames, and make thee drop into the bottomleſs Lake of Fire and Brimſtone, if thou offer to deviate the leaſt from the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Ac-

According to the Command of that Oath that thou haſt taken, tell us who employ'd you, when you were employ'd, and where; who caus'd you to go on this Meſſage, and what the Meſſage was. For I tell thee God is not to be mock'd, and thou can'ſt not deceive him, tho' thou may'ſt us. But I aſſure you, if I catch you prevaricating in any the leaſt tittle (and perhaps I know more than you think I do; no, none of your Saints can ſave your Soul, nor ſhall they ſave your Body neither) I will be ſure to puniſh every variation from the Truth that you are guilty of. Now come and tell us how you came to be employ'd upon ſuch a Meſſage, what your Errand was, and what was the Iſſue and Reſult of it.

Dunne. My Lord, there came a Man to my Houſe, and deſired me to go of a Meſſage to my Lady Liſle's.

L. C. J. Prithee tell me when it was, and what Hour of the Day?

Dunne. What, when the Man came to my Houſe?

L. C. J. Yes.

Dunne. That I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Be ſure you do, and do not ſpeak one word, but what is true, and let the Truth come out o' God's Name.

Dunne. It was Friday Night.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was it?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot exactly tell that.

L. C. J. Was it after the Fight at Weſton, or before?

Dunne. It was after the Battle, my Lord.

L. C. J. How many Days after was it?

Dunne. I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. Was it the Friday Seven-night after the Fight?

Dunne. No, it was not.

L. C. J. What was deſired of thee at that time?

Dunne. He deſired me to go of a Meſſage to my Lady Liſle's.

L. C. J. Doſt thou know what Man it was that came to thee, and deſired thee to go on this Meſſage?

Dunne. My Lord, I can tell what manner of Man he was.

L. C. J. Give me a Deſcription of the Man.

Dunne. He was a ſhort black Man.

L. C. J. You ſay he was a ſhort Man.

Dunne. Yes, he was ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was he a ſwarthy, or a ruddy complectioned Man?

Dunne. He was not ruddy, but ſwarthy.

L. C. J. And what did he ſay to thee?

Dunne. He deſired me to go to my Lady Liſle's for him, for one Mr. Hicks; and I went accordingly.

L. C. J. What were you to ſay when you came there?

Mr. Poſſexfen. What Reward were you to have?

Dunne. That Man that came to me, promis'd me that I ſhould be well rewarded for my pains.

L. C. J. Where do you live? (by the way.)

Dunne. In Warminſter Pariſh.

L. C. J. How far is it from my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. Six and twenty Miles, or thereabouts?

L. C. J. You did go, you ſay. When?

Dunne. Upon the Saturday.

L. C. J. Well, we are got thus far; you went to my Lady Liſle's upon the Saturday, and from one Mr. Hicks: What was your Errand?

Dunne. To know of my Lady Liſle, whether ſhe would entertain Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Well, now go on.

Dunne. When I came to my Lady Liſle's Houſe, I went to the Bailiff that belong'd to my Lady Liſle.

L. C. J. Ay, who was that Bailiff? Tell us his Name? I love to know Mens Names.

Dunne. His Name is Carpenter, I think.

L. C. J. Well, and what did you ſay to him?

Dunne. I aſk'd him, whether my Lady would entertain one Hicks, or no: He told me he'd have nothing to do with it, but ſent me to my Lady, and to my Lady I went; and when I came, I aſk'd my Lady, whether ſhe would entertain one Mr. Hicks, or no? She ſaid, ſhe did not know but ſhe might.

L. C. J. Well, what then?

Dunne. My Lord, I'll tell you.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee take time to recollect thyſelf; but be ſure thou ſpeak nothing but the Truth. What ſaid my Lady to thee?

Dunne. My Lady ſaid, they might come to her Houſe: And upon thoſe Terms I went away home again, and return'd that Anſwer to the Meſſenger that came to me. I came home on the Sunday Night, and that Meſſage I deliver'd unto him, and told him, that upon Tueſday Night they might come to my Lady's.

L. C. J. You told him, you ſay, they might come on Tueſday.

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Therefore I would fain know from you, how you came to tell him, they might come upon Tueſday? For you ſaid juſt now, my Lady's Anſwer was, that ſhe did not know but ſhe might entertain him. Had you any ſuch Direction from Carpenter, or any one elſe, to tell him, that they might come on Tueſday?

Dunne. I had ſuch Directions from my Lady.

L. C. J. Very well; then let us know what were the particular Directions ſhe gave; tell us what further Directions you had from her?

Dunne. I will, my Lord, preſently, when I have recollected my ſelf.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee compoſe thy ſelf, recollect thy ſelf. [Then he pauſed for a good while.

L. C. J. Come now, tell us, did ſhe give you any Directions what time of the Day they might come thither; remember your ſelf well, and tell us what ſhe ſaid to you?

Dunne. My Lord, I will, as near as I can, ſpeak the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name let's have the Truth, whatſoever comes on it?

Dunne. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Come then, what time did ſhe give Directions that they ſhould come?

Dunne. On Tueſday in the Evening.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, did ſhe ſay Tueſday in the Evening?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, ſhe did.

L. C. J. What time in the Evening, early or late?

Dunne. She did not give any Directions at all about that, but only in the Evening.

L. C. J. What elſe did ſhe ſay to you, tell us all the Diſcourſe that paſſed between you?

Dunne. She ſaid nothing elſe that I remember, my Lord,

L. C. J. Prithee, how did ſhe ſay ſhe would receive him, tell us what Words ſhe uſed, for thou muſt

muſt needs imagine, we do ſuppoſe there muſt needs be ſome longer Diſcourſe between you, than what you talk of.

Dunne. All that ſhe ſaid was, ſhe would entertain him.

L. C. J. Him! Who?

Dunne. Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Juſt now you talked of them, and, they: Did you mention no body to her but Mr. Hicks?

Dunne. My Lord, I was ſent to ſee whether ſhe would receive Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Prithee, Friend, mind what thou haſt ſaid, and recollect thy ſelf, I'll repeat it to thee, becauſe thou ſhalt ſee that I remember it all very well. It ſeems that a Man, a ſhort black Man came to your Houſe in Warminſter Pariſh to get you to go for a Meſſage to Mrs. Liſle's, to know whether ſhe would entertain one Hicks, and that you went upon the Saturday, and firſt you met with Carpenter, and aſk'd him that Queſtion, whether his Lady would entertain one Mr. Hicks, and he told you he would have nothing to do with it; and thereupon you went to Mrs. Liſle and aſked her the Queſtion, and ſhe told you that you ſhould tell the Man that they ſhould come the Tueſday following, and come in the Evening, and ſhe would entertain him: Is not this what you have ſaid?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Well then, now let us know what other Diſcourſe you had with her?

Dunne. My Lord, I do not remember any thing more.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Dunne, did ſhe aſk you any Queſtions whether you knew Mr. Hicks or no?

Dunne. Nothing at all of that, that I remember.

Mr. Coriton. Did ſhe believe that you knew Mr. Hicks?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Coriton. Do you believe that ſhe knew him before?

Dunne. I cannot tell truly.

L. C. J. Why, doſt thou think ſhe would entertain any one that ſhe had no Knowledge of meerly upon thy Meſſage? Mr. Dunne, Mr. Dunne, have a care, it may be more is known of this matter than you think for.

Dunne. My Lord, I tell you the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, be ſure you do, do not let me take you prevaricating?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Well, I only bid you have a care, Truth never wants a Subterfuge, it always loves to appear naked, it needs no Enamel, nor any Covering; but Lying and Sniveling, and Canting, and Hickſing, always appear in Maſquerade. Come, go on with your Evidence.

Dunne. My Lord, I ſay I went back again and returned my Anſwer to the ſame Man that brought the Meſſage to me.

L. C. J. Pray let me aſk you one Queſtion; Were you got to your Houſe before you found him, or was he waiting there for you?

Dunne. He came to my Houſe after I came home.

L. C. J. It was the ſame Man, you ſay?

Dunne. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Had he no Company with him neither time?

Dunne. No.

L. C. J. Well, and what Anſwer did you return him?

Dunne. I told him, my Lady ſaid ſhe would entertain Mr. Hicks; he aſked when he might come up, I told him upon Tueſday, and upon Tueſday they came to my Houſe.

L. C. J. What time did they come to your Houſe?

Dunne. About ſeven of the Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was it?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot readily tell what Day of the Month it was?

L. C. J. Was it one or two that came to thy Houſe?

Dunne. My Lord, there were three in all.

L. C. J. Who were thoſe three, prithee?

Dunne. My Lord, there was the little black Man that brought the Meſſage, and two other People.

L. C. J. Prithee deſcribe what two other People theſe were?

Dunne. One was a full fat black Man, and the other was a thin black Man.

L. C. J. Who was that thin black Man?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not know him.

L. C. J. Did you not fancy which was Hicks?

Dunne. My Lord, I never knew any of their Names.

L. C. J. How long did they ſtay at your Houſe?

Dunne. About three Hours.

L. C. J. When did you go away from thence?

Dunne. About eleven of the Clock.

L. C. J. Which way did you go then?

Dunne. We went through Deverel, and from Deverel to Chilmark, and from Chilmark to Sutton, and from Sutton to the Plain, and then one Barter met me; I knew the Way no further, and he was to ſhew me the Way from thence.

L. C. J. Prithee hold, before thou goeſt any further, I deſire to be ſatisfied about a Queſtion or two: Doſt thou ſay thou didſt not know the Way?

Dunne. No, my Lord, after I came to the Plain.

L. C. J. How didſt thou find the way when thou wenteſt on thy Meſſage firſt?

Dunne. My Lord, after I came to Salisbury-Plain, I met with one Barter, and he ſhewed me the way.

L. C. J. Where is that Barter?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we have him here; we ſhall examine him by and by, there he ſtands.

[Being a very luſty Man.

L. C. J. Sure that was not the little Man thou ſpokeſt of?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee let me underſtand thee then, if I can. Thou didſt ſay at firſt there was only a little Man with a black Beard, that was concerned with thee about that Meſſage; now thou talkeſt of ſome Guide that thou hadſt, prithee who did guide thee, let us know?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſay I went ſo far as Fovant, and ſo to Chalk, but when I came upon the Plain, I did not know my way to my Lady Liſle's Houſe at Moyle's Court; I aſked twenty People in the Street which was my way, but no body would tell me; at laſt I ſpoke to one John Barter to go with me to my Lady Liſle's, and he and I did agree to go together, and he ſhewed me the way and carried me to the Houſe.

L. C. J. Thou ſhould have told us this before, Man, that we might have underſtood it. Where did you lie upon the Saturday Night?

Dunne.

Dunne. At Fovant.

L. C. J. I thought you had ſaid, you had come to Mrs. Liſle's on Saturday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I did ſo, and came back to Fovant that Night.

L. C. J. And where did you lie on Sunday Night?

Dunne. I lay at my own Houſe on Sunday Night.

L. C. J. And Barter came along with you when you came on Tueſday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And did you go the ſame way upon the Tueſday that you went upon the Saturday?

Dunne. Do you mean, my Lord, the ſame way I came at firſt?

L. C. J. Ay.

Dunne. No, my Lord, we came to Sutton, not to Fovant.

L. C. J. Why did not you go the ſame way upon the Tueſday that you went upon the Saturday?

Dunne. Becauſe I had appointed to meet him at ſuch a Place.

L. C. J. Come, prithee anſwer me freely, and according to Truth: Who did deſire thee, or order thee to go another way than that thou went'ſt at firſt? How came it to paſs? Let us know the Truth?

Dunne. My Lord, I did count that to be the nearer way, and therefore I went that way.

L. C. J. That cannot be the Reaſon, for thou wouldſt have gone the neareſt way at firſt, I believe; come, tell us truly?

Dunne. My, Lord, I know no other Reaſon.

L. C. J. Come, tell us what Towns and Villages you did go through then upon Saturday.

Dunne. My Lord, I went through ſeveral, Chilmark and Fovant.

L. C. J. And what Villages did you go through upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. I went through moſt of the ſame Towns.

L. C. J. What, and at Noon-day too?

Dunne. Yes.

L. C. J. And how chanc'd when you went that way, that you appointed Barter to meet you in another Place at Fovant?

Dunne. Becauſe I did not know the way afterwards.

L. C. J. Then let me aſk you another Queſtion: Did you go the ſame way from Fovant to my Lady Liſle's as you went before?

Dunne, No, we did not.

L. C. J. How came that to paſs?

Dunne. I would have went the ſame way, but they would not.

L. C. J. Which way did you go then?

Dunne. We went through Chalke, and ſo thro' Rocksborne, and from Rocksborne to Fording-Bridge, and ſo to Moyle's Court.

L. C. J. How far is this about now?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot readily tell.

L. C. J. How many Miles is it from Fovant to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. My Lord, it is about fourteen or fifteen.

L. C. J. How many Miles was it the way that you went upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. It might be twenty, my Lord, for ought I know.

L. C. J. What was the Reaſon that Barter went that way.

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Pray let me aſk you another Queſtion then; what Diſcourſe had your with Barter? Or what Bargain did you make with him for ſhewing you the way? For you would not aſk him to go with you without promiſing him ſome Reward.

Dunne. My Lord, I aſked him to ſhew me the way to my Lady Liſle's Houſe, and told him I was going for one Hicks; and ſo he took his Horſe and went with me.

L. C. J. What Reward did you promiſe him?

Dunne. Half a Crown, my Lord, and half a Crown I gave him.

L. C. J. Well, that was the firſt time; and what did you promiſe him the ſecond time?

Dunne. The ſecond time one of the two Men gave him five Shillings.

L. C. J. What Man was it?

Dunne. It was the black Man.

L. C. J. What was his Name? It was not the little black Man that came firſt to deſire you to go on the Meſſage, was it?

Dunne. No, my Lord, it was not he that ſpoke to me firſt.

L. C. J. Did not that little Man that ſpoke to you firſt, promiſe you a Reward for your Pains?

Dunne. No, my Lord, that Man never promiſed me any thing.

L. C. J. Did he go along with you?

Dunne. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C. J. Who were the two Men that went with you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. Which of them two was it that gave Barter five Shillings?

Dunne. It was Nelthorp that gave him five Shillings.

L. C. J. How do you know his Name was Nelthorp?

Dunne. At my Lady Liſle's, after he was taken I knew his Name to be Nelthorp.

L. C. J. What Name did he go by before?

Dunne. Were I to die preſently, my Lord, I cannot tell it.

L. C. J. Well, you went ſo much about: What time did you get to my Lady Liſle's upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. About nine or ten of the Clock at Night, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let us conſider a little; you ſay you went from your Houſe about eleven a Cock: What time did you get to Fovant?

Dunne. About two or three of the Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you ſtay by the way?

Dunne. No where, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ride on ſtill?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it before nine, or after nine that you came to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. I believe it was rather after nine, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who came firſt to my Lady Liſle's, prithee tell us frankly?

Dunne. My Lord, we came all three together to the Gate.

L. C. J. Who knocked at the Gate, you or Barter, or who elſe?

Dunne. Barter, my Lord, was diſcharg'd before we came near the Houſe, about eight Miles from it.

L. C. J. Say'ſt thou ſo; How came you then to know the way without him?

Dunne. My Lord, I'll tell you; they loſt their way, and they ſent me down to Marton, and there I went

I went to a Man, my Lord, and told him one Hicks deſired to ſpeak with him.

L. C. J. Thou ſay'ſt well, now muſt I know that Man's Name.

Dunne. The Man's Name that I went to at Marton, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, and look to it, you tell me right, for it may be I know the Man already, and can tell at what end of the Town the Man lives too.

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell his Name preſently.

L. C. J. Oh! pray now, do not ſay ſo, you muſt tell us, indeed you muſt think of his Name a little.

Dunne. My Lord, if I can mind it I will.

L. C. J. Prithee do.

Dunne. His Name, truly, my Lord, I cannot rightly tell for the preſent.

L. C. J. Prithee recollect thy ſelf; indeed thou canſt tell us if thou wilt.

Dunne. My Lord, I can go to the Houſe again if I were at liberty.

L. C. J. I believe it, and ſo could I; but really neither you nor I can be ſpared at preſent, therefore prithee do us the kindneſs now to tell us his Name?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot mind his Name at preſent.

L. C. J. Alack-a-day, we muſt needs have it; come, refreſh your Memory a little.

Dunne. My Lord, I think his Name was Fane.

L. C. J. Thou ſay'ſt right, his Name was Fane truly, thou ſeeſt I know ſomething of the matter: Well, what didſt thou ſay to him?

Dunne. I told him I came from one Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. And what didſt thou deſire of him?

Dunne. I told him that one Mr. Hicks deſired to ſpeak with him; and when he came out to Mr. Hicks, Mr. Hicks did deſire him to ſhew him the way to Mrs. Liſle's.

L. C. J. Now tell us what kind of Man that was, that did deſire this of Mr. Fane?

Dunne. My Lord, it was the full fat black Man.

L. C. J. Now we have got him out, now we know which was Hicks: Now go on.

Dunne. My Lord, this Man went and rid along with them as far as the new Houſe that is built there, within a Mile of that Houſe Fane went along with us; and afterwards, whether Hicks or Nelthorp, or who knew the way, I cannot tell, but to my Lady Liſle's we went.

L. C. J. Who directed you the way when Fane left you?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell, for my part I did not know the way.

L. C. J. Who went with you?

Dunne. None but Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. How far from my Lady's Houſe was that place where Fane left you?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot directly tell.

L. C. J. Then Hicks knew the way, it ſeems, from thence?

Dunne. So he might, my Lord, for ought I know, for I did not.

L. C. J. Thou art ſtrangely ſtiff; but now we are come thus far with you, tell me what Entertainment you had at my Lady Liſle's, and look to it that you be ſure to tell me Truth, for I know it to a tittle, I can aſſure you that.

Dunne. They went in before me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who went in before you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. But the Door was ſhut when you came, was it not?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell truly.

L. C. J. Then tell me what Entertainment you had there?

Dunne. For my own part, my Lord, I carry'd a bit of Cake and Cheeſe from my own Houſe, and that I eat.

L. C. J. What became of your Companions Hicks and Nelthorp, I pray you?

Dunne. I never ſaw them again till after they were taken.

L. C. J. How is that, prithee recollect thy ſelf?

Dunne. Sure, my Lord, I did not ſee them till then.

L. C. J. Who came to the Door to you?

Dunne. A young Girl, my Lord, I knew not who nor what ſhe was.

L. C. J. Did they go directly into the Houſe?

Dunne. It was dark, my Lord, I did not ſee what they did.

L. C. J. Was there never a Candle there?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. It was dark, very dark, was it not?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it was ſo.

L. C. J. Was my Lady ſtirring then?

Dunne. I did not ſee her.

L. C. J. And this is as much as you know of the Buſineſs?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, this is all that I remember.

L. C. J. Well; and what hadſt thou for all thy pains?

Dunne. Nothing but a Month's Impriſonment, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou ſeemeſt to be a Man of a great deal of Kindneſs and Good-nature; for by this Story, there was a Man that thou never ſaweſt before, (for I would fain have all People obſerve what Leather ſome Mens Conſciences are made of) and becauſe he only had a black Beard, and came to thy Houſe, that black Beard of his ſhould perſuade thee to go 26 Miles, and give a Man half a Crown out of thy Pocket to ſhew thee thy way, and all to carry a Meſſage from a Man thou never knewſt in thy Life, to a Woman whom thou never ſaweſt in thy Life neither; that thou ſhould'ſt lie out by the way two Nights, and upon the Sunday get home, and there meet with this ſame black-bearded little Gentleman, and appoint theſe People to come to thy Houſe upon the Tueſday; and when they came, entertain them three or four Hours at thy own Houſe, and go back again ſo many Miles with them, and have no Entertainment but a piece of Cake and Cheeſe that thou broughteſt thy ſelf from home, and have no Reward, nor ſo much as know any of the Perſons thou didſt all this for, is very ſtrange.

Dunne. My Lord, the Man that came to deſire me to go on this Meſſage, ſaid that Hicks ſhould reward me, and pay me for my pains.

L. C. J. But why wouldſt thou take the word of a Man thou didſt not know?

Dunne. I was forced to take his word at that time, my Lord.

L. C. J. There was no neceſſity for that neither; no body could force thee to do it. Alack-a-day! Thou ſeemeſt to be a Man of ſome conſideration: I mightily wonder thou ſhould'ſt be ſo kind to People thou didſt not know, without any proſpect of Recompence whatſoever.

Dunne.

Dunne. All the Reaſon that induced me to it was, they ſaid they were Men in Debt, and deſired to be concealed for a while.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe that any one here believes thee: Prithee what Trade art thou?

Dunne. My Lord, I am a Baker by Trade.

L. C. J. And wilt thou bake thy Bread at ſuch eaſy Rates? Upon my Word then, thou art very kind: Prithee tell me, I believe thou doſt uſe to bake on Sundays, doſt thou not?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. Alack-a-day, thou art preciſe in that; but thou canſt travel on Sundays to lead Rogues into Lurking-holes: It ſeemeth thou haſt a particular Kindneſs for a black Beard, that's all thy Reaſon for undertaking all this Trouble. Thou haſt told me all the Truth, haſt thou?

Dunne. I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. But I aſſure thee, thy Bread is very light Weight, it will ſcarce paſs the Ballance here.

Dunne. I tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. No Doubt of that; but prithee tell me, whoſe Horſe didſt thou ride when thou wenteſt firſt?

Dunne. The Man's Horſe that came to me to deſire me to go on the Meſſage.

L. C. J. How came he to truſt thee with his Horſe?

Dunne. The Lord knows, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou ſay'ſt right, the Lord only knows, for by the little I know of thee, I would not truſt thee with Two-pence: Whoſe Horſe did thou ride the ſecond time?

Dunne. My own, my Lord.

L. C. J. And where didſt thou put thy Horſe when thou cameſt to my Lady Liſle's.

Dunne. In the Stable, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did they put their Horſes?

Dunne. They left them without the Gate, I think, my Lord; I did not ſee them take them in.

L. C. J. No, thou ſaid'ſt it was ſo dark thou could'ſt not ſee any thing: Pray were you with the two Men when they did alight;

Dunne. We did all three come together.

L. C. J. What did you give Fane for his Pains in ſhewing you the way?

Dunne. He had nothing that I know of.

L. C. J. Well, you are the beſt-natur'd and kindeſt-hearted People that ever I knew: Whereabouts do you live?

Dunne. At Warminſter, near my Lord Weymouth's.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, Mr. Dunne, will you anſwer me one Queſtion: Was not there ſearching at that time up and down the Country for Rebels that were fled from the Battle?

Dunne. I did hear there was, ſome were taken.

Mr. Pollexfen. But did you hear there was ſearching at that time for other of the Rebels?

Dunne. I did not hear of any near me, but there were in other Places.

L. C. J. Then it being ſuch a ſuſpicious Time, when that little Man with the black Beard came to thee, didſt thou not aſk what that Hicks was?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. And when Mr. Hicks and the other Man that is call'd by the Name of Mr. Nelthorp came to thy Houſe, didſt not thou aſk their Names?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Nor didſt not thou aſk upon what Occaſion they were to be conducted to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. No, my Lord: Hicks, the fat Man, told me they were in Debt.

L. C. J. Did not the Man that firſt came to you, and employ'd you to go on this Meſſage; did not he know Hicks?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did not he tell you, Hicks deſired you to go, and that he was in Debt, and therefore deſired to be concealed?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. How came you to be ſo impudent then, as to tell me ſuch a Lye?

Dunne. I beg your Pardon, my Lord.

L. C. J. You beg my Pardon! That is not becauſe you told me a Lye, but becauſe I have found you in a Lye. Come Sirrah, tell me the Truth; What did Hicks and Nelthorp with their Horſes, when they came to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Why you impudent Raſcal, did not you tell me juſt now that they left them at the Door?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſaid I believ'd they might, but cannot directly tell what they did with them; I know not but one or other might have them away, but I did not ſee it.

Mr. Pollexfen. Prithee, Friend, tell the Truth; what did become of the Horſes?

Dunne. I cannot tell truly, my Lord; if any body had them away, I did not ſee them.

L. C. J. Where didſt thou lie that Night?

Dunne. In one of the Chambers.

L. C. J. Who ſhewed thee the Way to thy Lodging?

Dunne. The Girl.

L. C. J. Who elſe didſt thou ſee in the Houſe?

Dunne. I ſaw no body at all.

L. C. J. Then who ſhewed thee the Way to the Stable, and help'd thee with Horſe-meat?

Dunne. No body help'd me to Horſe-meat.

L. C. J. Why, thy Horſe did not feed on thy Cake and Cheeſe, did he?

Dunne. There was Hay in the Rack, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Stable-Door lock'd or open?

Dunne. The Stable-Door was latch'd, and I pluck'd up the Latch.

L. C. J. How came you to know the Way to the Stable then?

Dunne. Becauſe I had been there before, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou had'ſt need to know it very well, for it ſeems thou wenteſt without a Candle or any thing in the World, and put in thy Horſe. Did'ſt thou ſee that Man Carpenter the Bailiff that thou ſpokeſt of?

Dunne. Mr. Carpenter gave my Horſe Hay.

L. C. J. Was there any Light in the Stable?

Dunne. Not when I put in my Horſe firſt.

L. C. J. Who brought the Light thither?

Dunne. Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. Did not he give thy Horſe Hay?

Dunne. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. And did he not give him Oats too?

Dunne. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C. J. Did not he conduct you into the Houſe?

Dunne. Who, my Lord?

L. C. J. That ſame Goodman Carpenter.

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ſee any body elſe but that Girl you ſpeak of?

Dunne. My Lord, I did ſee the Girl there.

L. C. J. But, you Blockhead, I aſk you whether you did ſee any body elſe?

Dunne. I do not know but I might ſee Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. Why, thou ſaid'ſt he brought the Light, and gave thy Horſe Hay; but I ſee thou art ſet upon nothing but Prevarication: Sirrah, tell me plainly, did you ſee no body elſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Not any body?

Dunne. No, my Lord, not any one.

L. C. J. Did you not drink in the Houſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord, not a Drop.

L. C. J. Did not you call for Drink?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not, I had nothing but my Cake and Cheeſe that I brought thither my ſelf.

L. C. J. Who went up to the Chamber with you?

Dunne. The Girl, my Lord.

L. C. J. And no body elſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Bed made?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. You eat nothing in the Houſe, you ſay?

Dunne. Nothing but my own Cake and Cheeſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you did not drink in the Houſe at all?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you drink at Marton, where you did call upon Fane?

Dunne. Yes, I did, but not afterwards.

L. C. J. Did you ſee any body there the next Morning before they were taken?

Dunne. No, my Lord; but after the Houſe was beſet, I ſaw my Lady and Mr. Hicks, and I think I ſaw Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. They and you were taken there together, were not you?

Dunne. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Carpenter's Wife, upon your Oath, that Night?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Nor no Woman-kind beſides the Girl you ſpeak of?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Nor no Man beſides Carpenter?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are ſure of this?

Dunne. I am ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are ſure you did not drink there?

Dunne. I am, my Lord.

L. C. J. And you ſay he brought the Light into the Stable, and gave your Horſe Hay?

Dunne. He did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now prithee tell me truly, where came Carpenter unto you? I muſt know the Truth of that; remember that I gave you fair Warning, do not tell me a Lye, for I will be ſure to treaſure up every Lye that thou telleſt me, and thou may'ſt be certain it will not be for thy Advantage: I would not terrify thee to make thee ſay any thing but the Truth; but aſſure thyſelf, I never met with a lying, ſneaking, canting Fellow, but I always treaſur'd up Vengeance for him: and therefore look to it, that thou doſt not prevaricate with me, for to be ſure thou wilt come to the worſt of it in the End.

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell the Truth as near as I can.

L. C. J. Then tell me where Carpenter met thee?

Dunne. In the Court, my Lord.

L. C. J. Before you came to the Gate, or after?

Dunne. It was after we came to the Gate, in the Court.

L. C. J. Then tell me, and I charge you tell me true, who was with you when Carpenter met you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. Was there any body elſe beſides them two in the Court?

Dunne. There was no body but Hicks and Nelthorp, and I and Mr. Carpenter.

L. C. J. You are ſure of that?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Conſider of it, are you ſure there was no body elſe?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I did not mind that there was any body elſe.

L. C. J. Recollect your ſelf, and conſider well of it.

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I do not know of any body elſe.

L. C. J. Now upon your Oath tell me truly, who it was that opened the Stable-door, was it Carpenter or you?

Dunne. It was Carpenter, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why, thou vile Wretch, didſt not thou tell me juſt now, that thou pluck'd up the Latch? Doſt thou take the God of Heaven not to be a God of Truth, and that he is not a Witneſs of all thou ſay'ſt? Doſt thou think becauſe thou prevaricateſt with the Court here, thou can'ſt do ſo with God above, who knows thy Thoughts; and it is infinite Mercy, that, for thoſe Falſhoods of thine, he does not immediately ſtrike thee into Hell? Jeſus God! there is no ſort of Converſation nor human Society to be kept with ſuch People as theſe are, who have no other Religion but only in Pretence, and no way to uphold themſelves but by countenancing Lying and Villainy: Did not you tell me that you opened the Latch your ſelf, and that you ſaw no body elſe but a Girl? How durſt you offer to tell ſuch horrid Lyes in the Preſence of God and of a Court of Juſtice? Anſwer me one Queſtion more: Did he pull down the Hay, or you?

Dunne. I did not pull down any Hay at all.

L. C. J. Was there any Hay pull'd down before the Candle was brought?

Dunne. No, there was not.

L. C. J. Who brought the Candle?

Dunne. Mr. Carpenter brought the Candle and Lanthorn.

L. C. J. It ſeems the Saints have a certain Charter for Lying; they may lye and cant, and deceive, and rebel, and think God Almighty takes no Notice of it, nor will reckon with them for it: You ſee, Gentlemen, what a precious Fellow this is, a very pretty Tool to be employ'd upon ſuch an Errand, a Knave that no body would truſt for half a Crown between Man and Man, but he is the fitter to be employ'd about ſuch Works; what Pains is a Man at to get the Truth out of theſe Fellows! and it is with a great deal of Labour, that we can ſqueeze one Drop out of them? A Turk has more Title to an Eternity of Bliſs than theſe Pretenders to Chriſtianity, for he has more Morality and Honeſty in him. Sirrah, I charge you in the Preſence of God, tell me true, What other Perſons did you ſee that Night?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not ſee any than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Then they went out and brought Word that thou wert come, and ſo he came out to meet thee. Very well: I would have every body that has but the leaſt Tang of Saintſhip to obſerve the Carriage of this Fellow, and ſee how they can cant and ſnivel, and lye, and forſwear themſelves, and all for the

the Good Old Cauſe: They will ſtick at nothing, if they think they can but preſerve a Brother or Siſter Saint forſooth; they can do any thing in the world but ſpeak Truth, and do their Duty to God and their Governors: I aſk you again, Did not Carpenter meet you before you left Hicks and Nelthorp?

Dunne. No, he did not.

L. C. J. Then I aſk you again once more, did not Carpenter aſk you to drink?

Dunne. No, he did not.

L. C. J. Did not he light you with a Lanthorn and Candle into the Houſe?

Dunne. I went into the Houſe.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe we think any body thruſt thee in: Did he light thee in, I aſk thee?

Dunne. I went in along with Mr. Carpenter.

L. C. J. What Room did he carry you into?

Dunne. My Lord, he carried me into no Room, the young Woman ſhew'd me into a Room.

L. C. J. What Room was it?

Dunne. Into the Chamber.

L. C. J. Was not thou in the Hall or Kitchen?

Dunne. No, my Lord,

L. C. J. It is hard thou hadſt not one Cup of Drink to thy Cake and Cheeſe.

Dunne. My Lord, I had never a Drop.

L. C. J. No, nor did nobody aſk you to eat or drink?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou art the beſt-natur'd Fellow that ever I met with, but the worſt rewarded. Come, I will aſk thee another Queſtion: When was the firſt time thou heard'ſt Nelthorp's Name?

Dunne. Not till he was taken.

L. C. J. What Name did the Fellow with the black Beard tell thee he had?

Dunne. My Lord, he never told me any Name?

L. C. J. Didſt thou never aſk him his Name?

Dunne. No, my Lord, that Man that was afterwards found to be Nelthorp, I did not know to be Nelthorp till he was taken, nor what his Name was, nor any Name he had.

L. C. J. No, prithee tell the Truth, did not Nelthorp go by the Name of Crofts?

Dunne. He did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then prithee, when did he firſt go by that Name in thy Hearing?

Dunne. My Lord, I only heard Hicks ſay he went by the Name of Crofts.

L. C. J. When was that?

Dunne. When they were taken.

L. C. J. Did you not hear him call'd by that Name any time of the Journey?

Dunne. I cannot recollect, my Lord, that I ever did.

L. C. J. Thou can'ſt recollect nothing of Truth: Is this as much as you can ſay?

Dunne. It is, my Lord.

Mr. Jennings. You ſay Carpenter met you very civilly, and took care of your Horſe: Did he make no Proviſion for Hicks and Nelthorp's Horſes? What became of them?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Rumſey. Did you ſee their Horſes afterwards?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Rumſey. When they alighted from them, were they ty'd faſt to the Gate, or how?

Dunne. They were not ty'd at all, as I know of.

Mr. Jennings. Did you tell Carpenter that their Horſes were there?

Dunne. I did not tell him any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Thou art a ſtrange prevaricating, ſhuffling, ſniveling, lying Raſcal.

Mr. Pollexfen. We will ſet him by for the preſent, and call Barter, that is the other Fellow.

L. C. J. Will the Priſoner aſk this Perſon any Queſtions?

Liſle. No.

L. C. J. Perhaps her Queſtions might endanger the coming out of all the Truth, and it may be ſhe is well enough pleaſed to have him ſwear as he does; but it carries a very foul Face, upon my Word.

[Then Barter was ſworn.

L. C. J. Is this Barter?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, my Lord, for his part we have his Examination before two Juſtices of Peace; but we hope he is an honeſt Fellow, and will tell the Truth.

L. C. J. That is all one whether you have his Examination or not; I expect he ſhould tell me the Truth, and the whole Truth here. Friend, you know your Soul is at pawn for the Truth of what you teſtify to us; the other Fellow thou ſeeſt has been prevaricating with us all this while, and ſwearing off and on, and ſcarce told one Word of Truth, I know very well: Now I know as much of thee as I do of him, therefore look to thy ſelf, and let the Truth, and nothing but the Truth come out.

Barter. May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, this Man Dunne came to my Houſe upon the Saturday, and ſpoke to me to ride along with him to Moyle's-Court, where my Lady Liſle liv'd; and I having no other Buſineſs at that time, did go along with him: He had a Letter in his Pocket, and I ſaw him produce the Lerter to my Lady's Baliff, Mr. Carpenter, but he would not meddle with it, ſo I ſuppoſe he went in with it to my Lady; and while I was in the Kitchen, my Lady came thither, and aſked me, ſaith ſhe, What Countryman art thou? Said I, Madam, I am a Wiltſhire Man. Saith ſhe, Do'ſt thou make Bricks? No, ſaid I, Madam, I cannot, I can help in Huſbandry-work. Saith ſhe, If thou could'ſt make Bricks, I will give the ten Acres of Ground in ſuch a Place. I told her no, I could not: And then ſhe goes to this Man Dunne, and there ſhe was laughing with him, and look'd upon me; and afterwards when we were going along, I aſked him what ſhe laughed at?

L. C. J. Ay, and now tell me what he ſaid to thee about it?

Barter. He told me, my Lord, my Lady aſked whether I knew any thing of the Concern, and that he anſwered her, no; this the Fellow told me was that ſhe laugh'd at. After this, I could not eat, nor drink, nor ſleep for trouble of mind, till I had diſcovered this to ſome Juſtice of the Peace; and I reſolved at laſt to go to Colonel Penruddock, and conſult him about it, ſo I went over and told him of it.

L. C. J. What did you tell Colonel Penruddock, let us hear?

Barter. Where I had been the Saturday before, and where I ſhould meet them again upon Salisbury-Plain upon the Tueſday, for I did expect to meet them there according to appointment, and we did agree he ſhould come and take them there; but afterwards miſſing them there, or for ſome other reaſon, I do not know what, his Mind altered, and he came to take them in the Houſe: So when I met them, we rode on about ten Miles, and they would have had me to have led them a private way over the fording Bridge towards Moyle's-Court, but I told them, in caſe they intended to have me for their Guide, they muſt go the way that I could tell; but they would go that private way, and ſo loſe their way; then they ſent back this Dunne to Marton to one Fane, that was the fat Man that ſent him: but I finding that I was of no more value then, rode away from them, and having a Relation that liv'd on that ſide of the Country, I went to let Colonel Penruddock know that they were at the Houſe. But before I went away from them, Nelthorp gave me five Shilling, half a Crown, and two Shillings and a Six-pence.

L. C. J. Now thou ſay'ſt Nelthorp did: Didſt thou hear his Name named?

Barter. I never could find any of their Names till they were taken.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, Barter, what Diſcourſe had you with Dunne the firſt time you were going to and from my Lady Liſle's, concerning the Men that he was to bring thither, and what Eſtates they had?

Barter. My Lord, he ſaid they had half a Score of Thouſands of Pounds a Year a-piece.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did he tell you they were to come to my Lady's.

Barter. Yes, he told me they were to come upon the Tueſday, and they were to come ſuch a Way, and were to come to my Lady's in the Evening.

L. C. J. What wer't thou to have for thy pains?

Barter. I made no Bargain, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are all very free, kind-hearted People, I ſay that for you.

Mr. Pollexfen. What did Dunne ſay about his Gains?

Barter. He told me he had a very fine Booty for his part, and that he ſhould never want Money again, and that I ſhould be very well paid, and gave me half a Crown.

L. C. J. Then let my honeſt Man, Mr. Dunne, ſtand forward a little. Come, Friend, you have had ſome time to recollect your ſelf; let us ſee whether we can have the Truth out of you now: You talked of carrying a Meſſage from Hicks to my Lady Liſle; Did not you carry a Letter?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did not you ſhew a Letter to the Bailiff, Carpenter?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Barter, to that?

Barter. My Lord, I did ſee him produce the Letter to the Bailiff,

L. C. J. Then I will aſk you another Queſtion: Did you not tell Barter that you ſhould be at Salisbury-Plain, with two People, upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I ſaid between Compton and Fovant.

L. C. J. Did not you tell him, that they were brave Fellows, and had God knows how many Thouſand Pounds a year a-piece?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Then one thing more: Did not you tell him, that you told my Lady, when ſhe aſked whether he was acquainted with the Concern, that he knew nothing of the Buſineſs?

Dunne. My Lord, I did tell him ſo.

L. C. J. Did you ſo? Then you and I muſt have a little further Diſcourſe: Come now, and tell us, what Buſineſs was that? and tell it us ſo, that a Man may underſtand and believe that thou doſt ſpeak Truth.

Dunne. Does your Lordſhip aſk what that Buſineſs was?

L. C. J. Yes, it is a plain Queſtion; What was that Buſineſs that my Lady aſked thee, whether the other Man knew; and then you anſwered her, that he did know nothing of it?

[Then he pauſed a while.

L. C. J. Remember, Friend, thou art upon thy Oath; and remember withal, that it is not thy Life, but thy Soul that now in danger: therefore I require from thee a plain Anſwer to a very plain Queſtion; What was that Buſineſs my Lady enquired after, whether the other Fellow knew, and thou told'ſt her, he did not?

[Dunne made no Anſwer, but ſtood muſing a while.

L. C. J. He is ſtudying and muſing how he ſhall prevaricate; but thou had'ſt better tell the Truth, Friend: remember what thou haſt ſaid already; thou haſt ſaid, That thou didſt tell that Man, that the Lady aſked you, whether he knew any thing of the Buſineſs, and thou told'ſt her, he did not. Now I would know what that Buſineſs was.

Still he made no Anſwer, but ſeemed to muſe.

L. C. J. Look thee, if thou canſt not comprehend what I mean, I will repeat it to thee again; for thou ſhalt ſee what Countryman I am, by my telling my Story over twice: Therefore I aſk thee once again. Thou ſaid'ſt thy Lady aſked thee, whether he knew of the Buſineſs; and thou told'ſt her, he did not. Now let us know what that Buſineſs was.

Dunne. I cannot mind it, my Lord, what it was.

L. C. J. But mind me prithee: Thou did'ſt tell that honeſt Man there, that my Lady Liſle aſked thee, whether he knew any thing of the Buſineſs, and thou ſaid'ſt, no. What was that Buſineſs?

Dunne. That Buſineſs that Barter did not know of?

L. C. J. Yes, that is the Buſineſs; be ingenuous, tell the Truth: Oh! how hard the Truth is to come out of a lying Preſbyterian Knave. Prithee, Friend, conſider the Oath that thou haſt taken, and that thou art in the preſence of a God that cannot endure a Lye, nor whoſe Holineſs will not admit him to diſpenſe with a Lye: Conſider that that God is an infinite being of Purity, Holineſs, and Truth; and it would be inconſiſtent with his Being to diſpenſe with the leaſt Untruth; and thou haſt called him to witneſs, that thou would'ſt teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. I charge thee, therefore, as thou wilt anſwer it to that God of Truth, and that thou may'ſt be called to do, for ought I know, the very next Minute, and there thou wilt not be able to palliate the Truth; what was that Buſineſs you and my Lady ſpoke of?

[Then he pauſed for half a quarter of an Hour, and at laſt ſaid:

Dunne. I cannot give an Account of it, my Lord.

L. C. J. Oh bleſſed God! Was there ever ſuch a Villain upon the Face of the Earth; to what Times are we reſerved? Doſt thou believe that there is a God?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe, that that God can endure a Lye?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I know he cannot.

L. C. J. And doſt thou believe then, that he is a God of Truth?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Doſt thou think, that that God of Truth may immediately ſink thee into Hell-Fire if thou telleſt a Lye?

Dunne. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe, that he does obſerve every thing that thou thinkeſt, ſayeſt, or doeſt; knows the Secrets of thy Heart, and knows whether thou telleſt a Lye or not, tho' perhaps it may be hid from us, and knows whether thou doſt prevaricate or not?

Dunne. I know, the Lord does know all things.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe, that he knows the Buſineſs that you and my Lady the Priſoner were talking of, as well as you do; that he hath an almighty Power over all his Creatures, an all-piercing Eye, that looks into the Hearts of every one of them, and from which nothing can be concealed? Doſt thou believe it poſſible to conceal that very Diſcourſe of your's from the knowledge of that infinite Being?

Dunne. My Lord, I do believe that there is a God above.

L. C. J. I aſk thee then again; doſt thou believe, that that God above, who is a God of Truth himſelf, is omniſcient, omnipreſent, to whom all Truth is naked and open, that he knows every thing that is either thought, ſaid, or done by any of his Creatures, ſees and knows the Hearts of all Men; Doſt thou believe all this?

[He ſtood ſilent for a good while.

L. C. J. Friend, deceive not thy ſelf; the great God does obſerve and know the ſecret workings of thy Thoughts now, and how Truth ſtruggles to get out, but Baſeneſs and Villany keep it in: All the private Imaginations of thy Heart are not only known to him, but regiſtred by him, and thy Conſcience will bear witneſs to thy Accuſation when thou art called to anſwer for them, and anſwer for them thou muſt; for the Scripture, that is the Word of God, tells us, That every vain Thought we muſt account for. Doſt thou then believe, that any Diſcourſe between you, tho' never ſo private, is private from the Almighty, All-knowing God?

Dunne. My Lord, I know it is not, nor can be.

L. C. J. I therefore once more adjure thee, as thou wilt anſwer it to that God, that is the Searcher of the Hearts and Trier of the Reins, to whom all Hearts are open, and from whom no Secrets are hid, that thou make me a plain Anſwer to my Queſtion; and as thou haſt called God to bear Witneſs to the Truth of the Evidence thou giveſt here in this Court, ſo I charge thee, in his Name, to declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth. Now tell us what was the Buſineſs you ſpoke of?

But he made no Anſwer.

William Montague Eſq; L. C. Baron. Friend, mind what my Lord ſays to you, and conſider, how eaſy a thing it is for a Man to ſpeak Truth, and give a plain Anſwer to a plain Queſtion. You cannot but underſtand what my Lord aſks of you; you ſaid even now, that you did tell the other Witneſs, Barter, that my Lady aſk'd you, whether he knew any thing of the Buſineſs; and you told her, he did not. Now my Lord would have you tell us, what that Buſineſs was?

[He ſeemed to turn his Head on one ſide, but return'd no Anſwer.

L. C. J. He is going to aſk that Man there, whether he ſhall tell the Truth.

Dunne. No, my Lord, I aſk no Man any ſuch Queſtion.

L. C. J. Prithee tell us the Truth then now: Thou art to know, that thou ſtandeſt in the Preſence of the God of Truth, and haſt called him to witneſs, that thou would'ſt tell the Truth.

Dunne. My Lord, I do tell the Truth, as far as I can remember.

L. C. J. Then what was that you told my Lady Liſle, Barter did not know?

Dunne. What Barter did not know, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, is not that a plain Queſtion? Of all the Witneſſes that ever I met with, I never ſaw thy fellow.

[He ſtood a good while, and made no Anſwer.

L. C. J. I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you take notice of the ſtrange and horrible Carriage of this Fellow; and withal, you cannot but obſerve the Spirit of that ſort of People, what a villanous and deviliſh one it is: Good God! that ever the thing called Religion (a Word that People have ſo much abuſed) ſhould ever wind up Perſons to ſuch a height of Impiety, that it ſhould make them loſe the Belief that there is a God of Truth in Heaven; that ſees and knows, obſerves and regiſters, and will puniſh and take vengeance of Falſhood and Perjury. It may well make the reſt of Mankind, that have any ſort of Faith in a Deity and a future Life, to abhor and deteſt both the Men and their Religion, if ſuch abominable Principles may be called ſo. A Turk is a Saint to ſuch a Fellow as this, nay a Pagan would be aſhamed to be thought to have no more Truth in him. O bleſſed Jeſus! What an Age do we live in, and what a Generation of Vipers do we live among? Sirs, is this that you call the Proteſtant Religion? Shall ſo glorious a Name be applied to ſo much Villany and Hypocriſy? Is this the Perſuaſion you hope to live, and die, and find Salvation in? Will any of you all, Gentlemen, be contented to die with a Lye in your Mouth? Do not you all expect, according to the Orthodox Doctrine of the true Church of England, that eternal Damnation will be the Portion of Lyars? And thou wicked Wretch, how durſt thou appear to give Teſtimony before even an earthly Tribunal with ſo much Impudence and Falſhood, when every Lye will coſt thee ſo dear, except a ſincere and hearty Repentance, and the infinite Mercy of the great God interpoſe? I charge you once more, as you will anſwer it at the Bar of the great Judge of all the World, that you tell me what that Buſineſs was, you and the Priſoner talked about: do you conſider what a Condition thou bringeſt thy ſelf into by all this Shuffling and Prevarication, even as to any thing of Mercy in this Life; for indeed it is not fit thou ſhould'ſt have the leaſt Hopes of Mercy on this ſide Eternity, and truly there is no Man can imagine leſs than infinite Mercy can pardon ſo flagitious a Sin, one that ſo impudently tells and ſtands in a Lye.

[Still he would make no Anſwer.

L. C. J. Jeſus God! Was there ever ſuch a Fellow in the World as thou art? Prithee let me aſk thee once again, Doſt thou believe that there is a God, that this God is ſpotleſs Truth and Purity it ſelf? Doſt thou believe thou haſt a precious and immortal Soul, that is to live in everlaſting Bliſs or eternal Miſery after this Life accordingly as thou carrieſt it here; if thou doſt believe it, ought not the Concerns of that precious and immortal Soul of thine to be much dearer to thee than ten thouſand Worlds? Does not the bleſſed

bleſſed Word of Truth tell thee, What will it profit a Man to gain the whole World, and loſe his own Soul? or what ſhall a Man give in exchange for his Soul? Is not this the Voice of Scripture itſelf? And wilt thou hazard ſo dear and precious a thing for a Lye, and an unprofitable Lye too? Thou Wretch! all the Mountains and Hills in the World heaped upon one another, will not cover thee from the Vengeance of the great God for this Tranſgreſſion of falſe Witneſs-bearing: What hopes can there be for ſo profligate a Villain as thou art, that ſo impudently ſtands in open defiance of the Omnipreſence, Omniſcience, and Juſtice of God, by perſiſting in ſo palpable a Lye? I therefore require it of you, in his Name, to tell me the Truth.

Dunne. I cannot tell what to ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. Good God! Was there ever ſuch an impudent Raſcal? Well, I will try once more, and tell thee what I mean; you ſaid you told that honeſt Man (for truly he ſeems ſo to be) that my Lady aſked you whether he knew of the Buſineſs, and you told her, he did not: Prithee be ſo free as to tell us what that Buſineſs was.

[Dunne paused but would make no Anſwer.

L. C. J. Prithee what didſt thou mean, or thy Lady mean, by that Buſineſs?

[He paused again, but would make no Anſwer.

L. C. J. Why, prithee doſt thou think thou doſt her a Kindneſs by this way of proceeding? Sure thou can'ſt not think ſo; for ſuch a ſort of Carriage were enough to convict her, if there were nothing elſe.

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I do not think to do her any Kindneſs at all.

L. C. J. Then prithee let me perſuade thee to have ſome kindneſs for thyſelf; look to thy own Soul that is in great peril of everlaſting Ruin and Deſtruction by theſe means; doſt thou call this Religion? It is a prodigious piece of Religion: Come, pray tell me what Buſineſs it was you talked of: You ſhould not have aſked me a Queſtion ſo often, but I would have given you a plain Anſwer, though I were not under the Obligation of an Oath, as you are.

Dunne. My Lord, pray aſk the Queſtion over again once more, and I will tell you.

L. C. J. I will ſo, and I will aſk it you with all the Calmneſs, and Seriouſneſs, and Candour, that I can; if I know my own Heart, it is not in my Nature to deſire the Hurt of any body, much leſs to delight in their eternal Perdition; no, it is out of tender compaſſion to you that I uſe all theſe Words: I would have thee to have ſome regard to thy precious and immortal Soul, which is more valuable than the whole World; reflect upon that Scripture again which I mention'd before, which muſt be true, becauſe it is the Words of him that is Truth itſelf: What ſhall it profit a Man to gain the whole World, and loſe his own Soul? or what ſhall a Man give in exchange for his Soul? If that Soul of thine be taken away, what is the Body fit for, but, like a putrid Carcaſe, to be thruſt into and covered with the Duſt with which it was made: Therefore I aſk you, with a great Deſire that thou may'ſt free thyſelf from ſo great a Load of Falſhood and Perjury, tell me what the Buſineſs was you told the Priſoner, the other Man Barker did not know?

Dunne. My Lord, I told her, he knew nothing of our coming there.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, that can never be it, for he came along with thee.

Dunne. He did not know any thing of my coming there till I met him on the way.

L. C. J. Prithee mind my Queſtion; ſure enough thou hadſt told him whither thou wert going, or elſe he could not have been thy Guide; ſo that he muſt needs know of thy coming there: but what was the Buſineſs that thou told'ſt her, he did not know.

Dunne. She aſked me, whether I did not know that Hicks was a Nonconformiſt.

L. C. J. Did my Lady Liſle aſk you that Queſtion?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I told her I did not.

L. C. J. But that is not my Queſtion: What was that Buſineſs that he did not know?

Dunne. It was the ſame thing; whether Mr. Hicks was a Nonconformiſt.

L. C. J. That cannot be all; there muſt be ſomething more in it.

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it is all; I know nothing more.

L. C. J. What did ſhe ſay to you when you told her, he did not know it?

Dunne. She did not ſay any thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why doſt thou think, that after all this pains that I have been at to get an Anſwer to my Queſtion, that thou can'ſt banter me with ſuch ſham Stuff as this? Hold the Candle to his Face, that we may ſee his brazen Face.

Dunne. My Lord, I tell you the Truth.

L. C. J. Did ſhe aſk thee whether that Man knew any thing of a Queſtion ſhe had aſked thee, and that was only of being a Nonconformiſt.

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, that was all.

L. C. J. That is all Nonſenſe; doſt thou imagine that any Man hereabouts is ſo weak as to believe thee?

Dunne. My Lord, I am ſo baulked, I do not know what I ſay my ſelf; tell me what you would have me to ſay, for I am clutter'd out of my Senſes.

L. C. J. Why, prithee Man, there's no body baulks thee but thy own ſelf; thou art aſked Queſtions that are as plain as any thing in the World can be: it is only thy own depraved naughty Heart that baulks both thy Honeſty and Underſtanding, if thou haſt any; it is thy ſtudying how to prevaricate, that puzzles and confounds thy Intellect: but I ſee all the pains in the World, and all Compaſſion and Charity is loſt upon thee, and therefore I will ſay no more to thee.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, becauſe he pretends to Ignorance what Hicks was, I deſire to aſk Barter one Queſtion: Pray, what did he tell you concerning his Carriage towards theſe People?

Barter. My Lord, he told me that he had concealed them in his Houſe ten Days before.

Dunne. That I never did in my Life.

Barter. I know not whether you did or no, but you told me ſo; and I made anſwer to him again, my Lord, I wonder how he were able to keep them without being diſcovered, there being ſuch ſearch; and he anſwered, He did keep them in a Chamber all day, and then they walked out at night; for the Searches of the Houſes were uſually at night.

Dunne. My Lord, I can bring teſtimony to the contrary.

L. C. J. But really I believe it will be no ſtrange thing for me to ſay, I do believe him rather than thee; I would I had half as much reaſon to believe thee, as I have to believe him: I would fain have thee

thee ſpeak truth, if I could. What ſay you to the Queſtion I aſked you?

Dunne. I cannot tell what to ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. Say the Truth, Man.

Dunne. I do, as I hope for mercy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do'ſt thou hope for mercy? Thou haſt very little reaſon for it, I aſſure thee. Well, I will try thee with another Queſtion: Didſt thou tell that Man, that it was the beſt Jobb thou ever hadſt in thy Life?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Nor nothing to that purpoſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Barter, did not he tell you ſo?

Barter. Yes, my Lord, he did; and that he ſhould never lack Money again as long as he liv'd.

L. C. J. Then I aſk you one Queſtion more, Barter; did you tell this to Col. Penruddock?

Barter. Yes, I did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then that will fortify his Teſtimony; therefore ſwear him, becauſe I would make theſe concealed Wretches (for in my conſcience I know there are ſome ſuch in the bottom of this Buſineſs) know, that the Truth will out one way or other. And as for this Fellow, I expect it from all you Gentlemen of the King's Counſel, and others that are concerned, that you take notice and remember what has paſſed here, and that an Information of Perjury be preferred againſt this Fellow.

[Then Col. Penruddock was ſworn.

L. C. J. Col. Penruddock, upon the Oath you have taken, did that Man, Barter, come to you; and what did he ſay to you?

Col. Penruddock. My Lord, that Man, Barter, came to my Houſe in the Morning, upon Monday, and told me, he had been with one Dunne, upon a Journey to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe, to get Entertainment for ſome People; and that they had appointed to meet him the Tueſday following, between nine and eleven, upon Salisbury-Plain, and there, if I pleaſed, I might take them. I ordered him to go according to the Appointment, and withal, I ſent a Servant of my own to watch when they came by; but it happen'd, I ſuppoſe, by their taking another way, that he miſſed of them: but Barter left word, that in caſe he did not find them there, we muſt conclude, that he was gone with them to my Lady Liſle's Houſe; and he told me withal, ſays he, I believe they are Rebels, becauſe he that deſired me to be their Guide, ſaid the ſame to me. So early the next Morning I took ſome Soldiers with me, and beſet my Lady Liſle's Houſe; it was a pretty while before I could get any body in the Houſe to hear: at length that Man that they ſay was the Baliff, Carpenter, came out; and I ſaid to him, Friend, you had beſt be free and ingenuous, and diſcover who are in your Lady's Houſe, for I am ſure there were ſome Strangers came hither laſt Night; let me know who they are, and ſhew me what part of the Houſe they are in. He did confeſs to me there were Strangers in the Houſe, and pointed to ſuch part of the Houſe; but pray, ſays he, do not tell my Miſtreſs of it. Accordingly we went in, and immediately we took Mr. Hicks and this ſame Dunne in the Malt-houſe.

L. C. J. Was Dunne taken in the Malt-houſe?

Col. Penruddock. Yes, he had covered himſelf with ſome ſort of Stuff there.

L. C. J. Well, what did you do then?

Col. Penruddock. My Lady afterwards coming to us, I told her, Madam, you have done very ill in harbouring Rebels, and giving Entertainment to the King's Enemies. Saith ſhe, I know nothing of them; I am a Stranger to it. Pray, ſaid I, Madam, be ſo free and ingenuous with me, and ſo kind to yourſelf, as if there be any other Perſon that is concealed in any part of your Houſe, (for I am ſure there is ſome body elſe) as to deliver him up, and you ſhall come to no further trouble. She denied it, and ſaid, I know nothing of them: But we went on, and ſearched, and at laſt diſcovered the other Man Nelthorp, hid in a Hole by the Chimney.

L. C. J. Dunne, how came you to hide yourſelf in the Malt-houſe?

Dunne. When I heard the ſtir and buſtle, I went thro' the Chamber where I lay, and came into that Room where I was taken.

L. C. J. When thou heard'ſt a ſtir and a buſtle, why wert thou afraid of any thing.

Dunne. My Lord, I was frighted at the noiſe.

L. C. J. Prithee, what need'ſt thou be afraid, for thou did'ſt not know Hicks, nor Nelthorp; and my Lady only aſked thee, whether Hicks were a Nonconformiſt Parſon: Thou art a very innocent Soul, and ſurely needeſt no occaſion to be afraid. I doubt there was ſomething of that Buſineſs in the Caſe that we were talking of before, if we could but get out of thee what it was.

Dunne. My Lord, I heard a great noiſe in the Houſe, and I did not know what it meant; and ſo I went and hid myſelf.

L. C. J. Alack-a-day! That is very ſtrange, that thou ſhould'ſt hide thyſelf for a little noiſe, when thou kneweſt nothing of the Buſineſs, nor wert acquainted with any thing of the matter at all. But Col. Penruddock, I would aſk you one Queſtion more: did that honeſt Man tell you, that Dunne had told him, that it was the beſt Jobb that ever he had in his life, and that he ſhould want no Money?

Col. Penruddock. I cannot tell that truly, my Lord; I do not remember that: but he ſaid, he apprehended them to be Rebels, and that Dunne told him as much.

L. C. J. What do you ſay to that, Dunne? It ſeems you told Barter, that you apprehended them to be Rebels?

Dunne. I apprehend them for Rebels, my Lord!

L. C. J. No, no, you did not apprehend them for Rebels, but you hid them for Rebels. But did you ſay to Barter, that you took them to be Rebels?

Dunne. I take them to be Rebels!

L. C. J. You Blockhead, I aſk you, did you tell him ſo?

Dunne. I tell Barter ſo!

L. C. J. Ay, is not that a plain Queſtion?

Dunne. I am quite cluttered out of my ſenſes; I do not know what I ſay.

A Candle being ſtill held nearer his Noſe.

L. C. J. But to tell the Truth, would rob thee of none of thy Senſes, if ever thou had'ſt any; but it ſhould ſeem that neither thou, nor thy Miſtreſs the Priſoner had any, for ſhe knew nothing of it neither, though ſhe had ſent for them thither.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, Col. Penruddock, did you tell her you came to ſearch for Rebels?

Col. Penruddock. Yes, Sir, I told her as ſoon as I ſaw her; but we had a good while beſet the Houſe before any body anſwered us; at length, there were ſome Ladies, or Gentlewomen, I imagined them to be her Daughters, that upon our noiſe looked out at the Window; and I told them there were Rebels in the Houſe, and I required them in the King's Name to be deliver'd to me; but I ſaw not my Lady till after I had brought out Hicks and Dunne.

L. C. J. What ſaid ſhe to you?

Col. Penruddock. She ſaid, ſhe knew nothing of their being in the Houſe; but I told her there was ſome body elſe beſides, and ſhe would do well to deliver him without trouble: but ſhe denying of it, we ſearch further, and found Nelthorp, as I told you.

L. C. J. But ſhe denied it at firſt, it ſeems?

Liſle. My Lord, I hope I ſhall not be condemned without being heard.

L. C. J. No, God forbid, Mrs. Liſle; that was a ſort of practice in your Huſband's time; you know very well what I mean: But God be thanked, it is not ſo now; the King's Courts of Law never condemn without hearing. Col. Penruddock, have you any more to ſay?

Col. Penruddock. No, my Lord; but here is one Mr. Dowding, that was with me when I ſearched the Houſe.

L. C. J. Swear him. [Which was done.

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Dowding, pray did you go with Col. Penruddock to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe?

Mr. Dowding. Yes, my Lord: We came to the Houſe, and beſet the Houſe round, ſome to the back Gate, and ſome to the fore Gate; we called almoſt half an hour before we got in; and had found two, and we came to my Lady; ſhe ſaid, ſhe knew nothing of any body being in the Houſe——

Liſle. My Lord, this Fellow that now ſpeaks againſt me, broke open my Trunk, and ſtole away a great part of my beſt Linnen; and ſure, my Lord, thoſe Perſons that rob me, are not fit to be Evidences againſt me, becauſe it behoves them that I be convicted, to prevent their being indicted for Felony.

L. C. J. Look you, Friend, you ſay you went with Col. Penruddock to ſearch the Houſe, did you find any body there?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, I found this ſame Dunne in a little hole in the Malt-houſe.

L. C. J. Was he covered, or not?

Dowding. He had taken ſome ſtuff or other to cover him.

L. C. J. Did you find Hicks there?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, we did find one that ſaid his Name was Hicks.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame Hicks that is in Salisbury Goal?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, it is; I ſaw him yeſterday at the George in Salisbury, when he had that Diſcourſe with thoſe other Gentlemen.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Carpenter and his Wife. [Which was done.

Dowding. My Lord, Hicks acknowledged before me, that he was at Keinſham, in the Duke of Monmouth's Army.

Mr. Pollexfen. Come, Mrs. Carpenter, tell my Lord and the Jury, did you know the Time when theſe Men came to your Lady's Houſe?

L. C. J. Is this the Bailiff's Wife?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Well then, what ſay you to the Queſtion: Do you know the Time when they came?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord, they came at night.

L. C. J. Did you ſee them there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes.

L. C. J. Were they lodged there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes; but I never made the Bed.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Had they any Supper or Victuals there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes, they had.

L. C. J. Who dreſs'd it?

Mrs. Carpenter. I did.

L. C. J. By whoſe Order did you dreſs it?

Mrs. Carpenter. By my Lady's Order.

L. C. J. Prithee where did they eat their Meat?

Mrs. Carpenter. In the Chamber, my Lord, where they lay.

L. C. J. Who was with them?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I cannot tell, for I did not ſtay in the Room.

L. C. J. Didſt thou ſee them when they came into the Room?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I dreſs'd the Meat, and carried it within the Door, and my Huſband ſet it upon the Table.

L. C. J. Prithee tell me who was with them: Was thy Lady there?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lady was in preſence there then.

L. C. J. How long did they ſtay below ſtairs before they went up?

Mrs. Carpenter. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Did your Lady uſe to ſup below ſtairs or above?

Mrs. Carpenter. She uſed to ſup below, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, this Woman and her Huſband are both unwilling Witneſſes; but we will examine the Huſband, and ſee what we can get out of him. Hark you, Carpenter, did you meet with this Fellow, Dunne, at his firſt coming to your Lady's Houſe?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee him there on the Saturday.

L. C. J. Well then, let me aſk you a Queſtion; and beſure you tell me the Truth, for it may be I know it already; did he offer you a Letter to be deliver'd to your Lady?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you ſay, Barter?

Barter. I ſaw him produce it to Mr. Carpenter, but he refuſed to meddle with it.

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, he aſked me, if my Lady would give Entertainment to one Hicks, and another Perſon, but he did not know who that Perſon was.

L. C. J. Did he ſpeak of another Perſon?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Who was that other Perſon?

Mr. Carpenter. I did aſk his Name, but he ſaid, he did not know him.

L. C. J. Well then, when they came there on the Tueſday-night, how did you receive them?

Mr. Carpenter. I did not receive them.

L. C. J. Did not you light the Candle, and bring it in a Lanthorn, to light him into the Stable?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, that was afterwards.

L. C. J. Did not you bring the Men into the Houſe?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord, indeed I did not

L. C. J. Did not you ſee them all night?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then where did you ſee them firſt?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room where they ſupp'd and lay.

L. C. J. Did not you meet them in the Court-yard?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who gave you Directions to light Dunne into the Stable?

Mr. Carpenter. They told me his Horſe was out in the Yard.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo?

Mr. Carpenter. The Men did.

L. C. J. Where did they ſup?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room above ſtairs.

L. C. J. Who ſupp'd along with them?

Mr. Carpenter. I cannot ſay any body ſupp'd with them.

L. C. J. Was not my Lady there?

Mr. Carpenter. She was in the Room, but I did not ſee her eat any thing.

L. C. J. What time of the night did they come?

Mr. Carpenter. About Ten of the Clock.

L. C. J. And where did they lie?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room where they ſupped.

L. C. J. Who lay there?

Mr. Carpenter. Hicks and Nelthorp lay there.

L. C. J. Was Nelthorp named there?

Mr. Carpenter. No, I never heard of his Name till after he was taken.

L. C. J. What kind of Man was he?

Mr. Carpenter. A tall, thin, black Man.

L. C. J. Well, what can you ſay more?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, this Perſon has ſwore, that a Letter was offered me, but I refuſed it: but I aſſure your Lordſhip I never ſaw any Letter.

Barter. I am ſure he met you, and, as I remember, there was a Letter produced.

L. C. J. Thou ſhould'ſt not be angry with him, for he ſpoke very kindly of thee, that thou refuſed'ſt to meddle in it, and thereupon Dunne went in to thy Lady, and deliver'd his Meſſage to her.

Mr. Carpenter. That, my Lord, I acknowledge.

L. C. J. Then, prithee let me aſk thee another Queſtion: Did you carry any Beer up into the Room?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lady gave order for the Proviſion.

L. C. J. Did you make Dunne drink?

Mr. Carpenter. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you offer him any Drink?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, I did not ſee him drink at all.

L. C. J. What ſay you, good Woman; Did not your Lady ſup there?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, my Wife was little there at all.

Mr. Rumſey. Now, my Lord, Dunne ſays he will tell all, whether it make for him or againſt him.

L. C. J. Let him but tell the Truth, and I am ſatisfied.

Dunne. Sure, my Lord, I never entertained theſe Men a night in my Houſe in my Life; but this Hicks ſent that Man to me, to go to my Lady Liſle's, to know whether ſhe would pleaſe to entertain him: And when I came, my Lady aſked me, whether he had been in the Army or no? I told her, I could not tell, I did not know that he was. She then aſk'd me, if he had no body elſe with him? I told her, I believed there was: This is the very Truth of it, my Lord. I aſked her, might the Men be entertain'd? She ſaid they might. So when we came to my Lady Liſle's, on the Tueſday night, ſomebody took the two Horſes, I cannot tell who, if I were to die; the two went in; and after I had ſet up my Horſe, I went in along with Carpenter up into the Chamber to my Lady, and to this Hicks and Nelthorp; and when I came there, I heard my Lady bid them welcome to her Houſe; and Mr. Carpenter, or the Maid, I cannot tell which, brought in the Supper, and ſet it on the Table.

L. C. J. And did'ſt thou eat or drink with them in the Room, or not?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell every thing that I know; I confeſs I did both eat and drink there in the Room.

L. C. J. I pity thee with all my Soul, and pray to God Almighty for thee to forgive thee, and to the bleſſed Jeſus to mediate for thee; and I pray for thee with as much earneſtneſs, as I would for my own Soul; and I beg of thee once more, as thou regardeſt thy own eternal Welfare, to tell all the Truth.

Dunne. My Lord, I did never know theſe Men were in the Army when I carried the Meſſage to my Lady Liſle's, nor never did entertain them in my Houſe in my life-time, ſo much as one Night.

L. C. J. Prithee, I do not aſk thee what thou did'ſt not, but what thou did'ſt?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell all I know.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you that Night at the Table in the Room?

Dunne. I cannot tell what Diſcourſe truly, my Lord, there was.

L. C. J. Was there nothing of coming from beyond Seas, who came from thence, and how they came? Come, I would have it rather the Effect of thy own Ingenuity, than lead thee by any Queſtions that I can propound; come, tell us what was the Diſcourſe.

Dunne. I do not remember all the Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. Prithee, let me aſk thee one Queſtion, and anſwer me it fairly; Did'ſt thou hear Nelthorp's Name named in the Room?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell whether he were called Nelthorp, but it was either Crofts or Nelthorp, I am ſure one of them.

L. C. J. Prithee be ingenuous, and let's have the Truth on't?

Dunne. My Lord, I am ingenuous, and will be ſo.

L. C. J. I will aſſure you, Nelthorp told me all the Story before I came out of Town?

Dunne. I think my Lord, he was called Nelthorp in the Room, and there was ſome Diſcourſe about him.

L. C. J. Ay, there was unqueſtionably, and I know thou wert by, and that made me the more concern'd to preſs upon thee the Danger of forſwearing thy ſelf.

Dunne. My Lady aſk'd Hicks who that Gentleman was, and he ſaid it was Nelthorp, as I remember.

L. C. J. Very well, and upon that Diſcourſe with Nelthorp, which I had in Town, did I give particular Direction, that the Outlawry of Nelthorp ſhould be brought down hither, for he told me particularly of all the Paſſages and Diſcourſes of his being beyond Sea, and coming from beyond Sea*: I would not mention any ſuch thing as any piece of Evidence to influence this caſe, but I could not but tremble to think, after what I knew, that any one ſhould dare ſo much to prevaricate with God and Man, as to tell ſuch horrid Lyes in the Face of a Court.

Dunne. What does your Lordſhip aſk me?

L. C. J. Come I will aſk thee a plain Queſtion; Was there no Diſcourſe there about the Battle, and of their being the Army?

Dunne. There was ſome ſuch Diſcourſe, my Lord.

* This was very unfair dealing, to ſit as Judge and yet to give Evidence himſelf againſt the Priſoner, for ſo in truth it was, and would have the ſame Influence, tho' in Words he diſclaimed it.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee now tell us what that Diſcourſe was?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell you when I have recollected it, if you will give me time till to-morrow Morning.

L. C. J. Nay, but we cannot ſtay ſo long, our Buſineſs muſt be diſpatched now; but I would have all People conſider what a Reaſon there is, that they ſhould be preſſed to join with me in hearty Prayers to Almighty God, that this Sin of Lying and Perjury may never be laid at thy door. What ſay'ſt thou? Prithee tell us what the Diſcourſe was?

Dunne. My Lord, they did talk of Fighting, but I cannot exactly tell what the Diſcourſe was?

L. C. J. And thou ſaid'ſt thou did'ſt eat and drink with them in the ſame Room?

Dunne. I did ſo my Lord, I confeſs it.

L. C. J. And it was not a little Girl that lighted thee to Bed, or conducted thee in?

Dunne. It was not a little Girl.

L. C. J. Who was it then?

Dunne. It was Mr. Carpenter, my Lord.

L. C. J. And why did'ſt thou tell ſo many Lyes then? Jeſu God! that we ſhould live to ſee any ſuch Creatures among Mankind, nay, and among us too, to the Shame and Reproach be it ſpoken of our Nation and Religion: Is this that that is called the Proteſtant Religion, a thing ſo much boaſted of, and pretended to? We have heard a great deal of Clamour againſt Popery and Diſpenſations, what Diſpenſations pray does the Proteſtant Religion give for ſuch Practices as theſe? I pity thee with all my Soul, and pray for thee, but it cannot but make all Mankind to tremble and be filled with Horror, that ſuch a wretched Creature ſhould live upon the Earth: Prithee be free, and tell us what Diſcourſe there was?

Dunne. My Lord, they did talk of Fighting, but I cannot remember what it was.

L. C. J. Did you lie with them?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Well, I ſee thou wilt anſwer nothing ingenuouſly, therefore I will trouble my ſelf no more with thee: Go on with your Evidence, Gentlemen.

Mr. Jennings. My Lord, we have done, we have no more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then you that are for the Priſoner at the Bar, now is your time to make your Defence; you hear what is charged upon you, and you what a kind of Shuffling here has been to ſtifle the Truth, and I am ſorry to find the Occaſion to ſpeak it, that under the Figure and Form of Religion ſuch Practices ſhould be carried on. What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Liſle. My Lord, that which I have to ſay to it, is this: I knew of no body's coming to my Houſe but Mr. Hicks, and for him I was inform'd that he did abſcond, by reaſon of Warrants that were out againſt him for preaching in private Meetings, but I never heard that he was in the Army, nor that Nelthorp was to come with him; and for that Reaſon it was, that I ſent to him to come by night: but for the other Man Nelthorp, I never knew it was Nelthorp, I could die upon it, nor did not know what Name he had, till after he came into my Houſe; but as for Mr. Hicks, I did not in the leaſt ſuſpect him to have been in the Army, being a Preſbyterian Miniſter, that uſed to preach, and not to fight.

L. C. J. But I will tell you, there is not one of thoſe lying, ſniveling, canting, Preſbyterian Raſcals, but one way or other had a hand in the late horrid Conſpiracy and Rebellion; upon my Conſcience I believe it, and would have been as deep in the actual Rebellion, had it had any little Succeſs, as that other Fellow Hicks; their Principles carry them to it; Preſbytery has all manner of Villany in it, nothing but Preſbytery could lead that Fellow Dunne to tell ſo many Lyes as he has here told; for ſhew me a Preſbyterian, and I will engage to ſhew a lying Knave.

Liſle. My Lord, I abhorred both the Principles and Practices of the late Rebellion.

L. C. J. I am ſure you had great reaſon for it.

Liſle. Beſides, my Lord, I ſhould have been the moſt ungrateful Perſon living, ſhould I have been diſloyal, or acted any thing againſt the preſent King, conſidering how much I was obliged to him for my Eſtate.

L. C. J. Oh then! Ungrateful, ungrateful adds to the Load which was between Man and Man, and is the baſeſt Crime that any one can be guilty of.

Liſle. My Lord, had I been try'd in London, I could have had my Lady Abergavenny, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, that could have teſtified how much I was againſt this Rebellion, and with what Deteſtation I ſpoke againſt it, during the time of it; for I was all that time at London, and ſtaid there till after the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded; and if I had certainly known the time of my Trial in the Country, I could have had the Teſtimony of thoſe Perſons of Honour for me. But, my Lord, I am told, and ſo I thought it would have been, that I ſhould not have been try'd as a Traitor for harbouring him, till he was Convict for a Traitor. My Lord, I would take my Death of it, that I never knew of Nelthorp's coming, nor any thing of his being Nelthorp; I never aſk'd his Name, and if he had told it me, I had then remember'd the Proclamation. I do aſſure you, my Lord, for my own part, I did abhor thoſe that were in that horrid Plot and Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life; I know my Duty to my King better, and have always exerciſed it, I defy any body in the world that ever knew the contrary, to come and give Teſtimony.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay?

Liſle. As to what they ſay of my denying Nelthorp to be in my Houſe, I was in great Conſternation and Fear of the Soldiers, who were very rude and violent, and could not be reſtrained by their Officers from Robbery, and plundering my Houſe. And I beſeech your Lordſhip to make that Conſtruction of it; and I humbly beg of your Lordſhip not to harbour an ill Opinion of me, becauſe of thoſe falſe Reports that go about of me, relating to my Carriage towards the old King, that I was any ways conſenting to the Death of King Charles I. for, my Lord, that is as falſe as God is true; my Lord, I was not out of my Chamber all the day, in which that King was beheaded, and I believe I ſhed more Tears for him, then any Woman then living did; and this the late Counteſs of Monmouth, and my Lady Marlborough, and my Lord Chancellor Hyde, if they were alive, and twenty Perſons of the moſt eminent Quality, could bear witneſs for me. And I do repeat it my Lord, as I hope to attain Salvation, I never did know Nelthorp, nor never did ſee him before in my Life, nor did I know of any body's coming, but Mr. Hicks, and him I did know to be a Nonconformiſt Miniſter; and there being, as is well known, Warrants out to apprehend all Nonconformiſt Miniſters, I was willing to give him ſhelter from theſe Warrants. I was

was come down but that Week into the Country, when this Man came to me from Mr. Hicks, to know if he might be receiv'd at my House; and I told him, if Mr. Hicks pleas'd, he might come upon Tuesday in the Evening, and should be welcome; but withal I told him, I must go away the Monday following from that place, but while I staid I would entertain him. And I beseech your Lordship to believe, I had no intention to harbour him but as a Nonconformist, and that I knew was no Treason: It cannot be imagined, that I would venture the hazard of my own Life, and the Ruin both of myself and Children, to conceal one that I never knew in my Life, as I did not know Mr. Nelthorp, but had heard of him in the Proclamation. And for that white-headed Man that speaks of my denying them, as I said before, he was one of them that rifled and plunder'd my House, and tore open my Trunk; and if I should not be convicted, he and the rest of them may be call'd to an account for what they did, for they ought not to have meddled with my Goods: Besides, my Lord, I have a Witness that can testify what Mr. Nelthorp said, when he was examined before———

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Lisle, that will signify little; but if you have any Witnesses, call them, we will hear what they say: Who is that Man you speak of?

Lisle. George Creed his Name is; there he is.

L. C. J. Well, what do you know?

Creed. I heard Nelthorp say, that my Lady Lisle did not know of his coming, nor did not know his Name; nor had he ever told his Name, till he named himself to Col. Penruddock when he was taken.

L. C. J. Well, this is nothing; she is not indicted for harbouring Nelthorp, but Hicks: Have you any more Witnesses?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say for yourself?

Lisle. My Lord, I came but five days before this into the Country——

L. C. J. Nay, I cannot tell when you came into the Country, nor I do not care; it seems you came time enough to harbour Rebels.

Lisle. I staid in London till all the Rebellion was past and over; and I never uttered a good Word for the Rebels, nor ever harbour'd so much as a good Wish for them in my Mind: I know the King is my Sovereign, and I know my Duty to him, and if I would have ventured my Life for any thing, it should have been to serve him, I know it is his due, and I owed all I had in the World to him: But tho' I could not fight for him my self, my Son did; he was actually in Arms on the King's side in this Business; I instructed him always in Loyalty, and sent him thither; it was I that bred him up to fight for the King.

L. C. J. Well, have you done?

Lisle. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you a mind to say any thing more?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then command Silence.

[Which was done by Proclamation.

Lisle. My Lord, may I speak one word more? My Lord, I beseech you afford me your Patience and your Advice; Keinsham, where Mr. Hicks is said to be in Arms, does not lie in this County.

L. C. J. That is nothing: But the Treason you committed was in this County.

Lisle. But I assure your Lordship I never knew he was in the Army; and for any Talk or Discourse in private about his or Nelthorp's being there, I never heard any: indeed one of them asked me, whether the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded; and I told them, yes, for so he was before I came out of Town: And that is all the Discourse that I can remember, wherein he is concerned.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to say now?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury: * This is a Case of very great Example, and withal, of very great Weight and Moment; wherein the Interest of the Publick, and the Life of a Person of Quality and Fortune are put into your Hands. And the great Business which has detained both us and you so long, has been an endeavour (if it were possible) to find out the Truth; which indeed is the Business of all Enquiries of this nature: We sit not here, nor are you there upon any other Errand; nor is any thing desired by the Court, or required of you, but that the Truth may be made manifest. 'Tis that you are bound to, by the Oaths you have taken in this Service; and in that Inquiry you are to be guided by the Evidence that has here been given forth unto you; for your Oath is, That you shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to your Evidence, as you shall answer it to God. So that, Gentlemen, this Oath of yours being your Direction what is your Duty, and you being all Persons of Quality and Reputation in your Country, Men of great Uunderstanding and known Integrity, it is to be hoped, that not any thing can move you, either to Compassion of the Prisoner on the one hand, or her Allegations and Protestations of Innocence; nor on the other hand, to be influenced by any thing that comes from the Court, or is insinuated by the learned Counsel at the Bar: but that you will entirely consider what Evidence has been given to you, and being guided by that Evidence alone, you that are Judges of the Fact, will let us know the Truth of that Fact by a sincere and upright Verdict.

And inasmuch, Gentlemen, as the Evidence has been long in giving (tho' the substantial part of it, perhaps, be in a narrow compass) I will repeat it to you, as near as I can, with all Faithfulness and Integrity, as I shall answer it to the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, before whom you, and we, and all must stand to be judged; without any Aggravation or Alteration on the one side, and without any Omission on the other: And I shall do it, purely to help your Memories who are to determine the Fact; and I do pray and adjure, that you would do equally, according to the Trust reposed in you, and according to the Oath that you have taken. And I would repeat it once more, that you are not to be led by any Insinuations of the Prisoner, nor by any Allegations from the Learned Counsel, whose Business it is to open the Fact; but that Fact so opened is no further to guide you in your Enquiry, than as it is proved.

Gentlemen, before I come to the particular Evidence of this Fact, I must crave leave to say something of a Matter in general that is very well known. It was very well observed by that Learned Gentleman that opened the Cause at the beginning, that we are all of us here unspeakably oblig'd to bless the great God of Heaven, the Father of Mercies, and praised for ever be his holy Name, for his infinite Goodneſs in preſerving and protecting us from the imminent Ruin which the late horrid and deteſtable Rebellion would (had it ſucceeded) have inevitably brought upon us; had not he of his own infinite Mercy and gracious Goodneſs protected and delivered us from our Enemies, they had undoubtedly ſwallowed us up quick: But as the Attempts of our Enemies were very malicious, ſo the Preſervation and Deliverance of our good God was very great and ſignal.

* The Lady Lisle, who was then past Seventy, was so little moved, that she slept during great part of this Charge.

And we have reaſon to bleſs that great God for many Deliverances he has been pleaſed to give us; we are by no means to forget his Mercy towards our late Sovereign of bleſſed Memory, and with him towards us, when he brought him out of Exile and Bondage, and us out of that State of Confuſion and Miſery, which our Country had for many Years groaned under: When all Religion as well as Sovereignty, and all Obedience, Duty and Deference to Superiors were quite loſt, God of his infinite Mercy, and of his own moſt gracious bountiful Diſpoſition brought our bleſſed Sovereign (now in Heaven) and his gracious Majeſty that now reigns, and all the Royal Family after a long and tedious Rebellion, into a quiet and peaceable Poſſeſſion of their undoubted Rights and Inheritances, and with him reſtored to us our Religion, the beſt of Religions, the true Proteſtant Reformed Religion, the Religion eſtabliſhed by Law, which now is, and I hope will ever remain eſtabliſhed among us, as now profeſſed and practiſed in the Church of England: and when we reflect on that Deliverance, we are to this Circumſtance to heighten both our Admiration and our Gratitude, that it was brought about without the leaſt drop of Blood ſhed, by a miraculous Providence, and by the Strength of an Almighty Arm.

Beſides, Gentlemen, we cannot be ſufficiently thankful to our God, for the Mercies we enjoy'd under that bleſſed King; for we are to conſider we liv'd in all the Affluence of Peace and Plenty, we ſafely and uninterruptedly enjoy'd our Religion, the greateſt Bleſſing on this ſide Immortality, our Lives, Liberties, and Properties inviolably were ſecured; every Man ſafe under the Shadow of his own Vine, and eat the Fruit of his own Labour; and while our Neighbours ſuffered the Calamities of War, we were ſurrounded with all the Bleſſings of Peace, and ſlept ſecurely under the Government of a gracious and merciful King: Every one of us had even what our own Hearts could deſire, and if we wanted any thing, it could be only thankful and dutiful Hearts to our God and our Prince, during whoſe Life we continued in a happy State and Condition.

But it having pleaſed God, the King of Kings, the great Ruler both of Heaven and Earth, to take that bleſſed Prince to himſelf, what Thanks ought we to pay him for his gracious Goodneſs, in leaving ſo great and ſo glorious a Succeſſor as his Royal Brother, our preſent Sovereign, whom I pray Almighty God may long live and happily reign among us! This gracious Prince, as ſoon as ever he came to the Poſſeſſion of his undoubted Right and Inheritance, upon his Brother's Death, in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, to entitle himſelf to the good Opinion of his People, and to engage them to the Expreſſion of that Duty which the Chriſtian Religion, and I am ſure particularly the Religion of the true Church of England does oblige all its Followers to; what does he? Even before he was aſk'd, in the very firſt Minutes of his Reign, he begins with Bounty to his Subjects, and declares his Reſolution to preſerve them ſafe in their deareſt and moſt precious Enjoyments, in their Religion; and not only in that, but in the Laws, Liberties, Rights and Properties, with the moſt inviolable Security to their Lives, and all that is dear unto them: And this gracious Declaration came from his Royal Mouth without any Solicitation or any Inducement, ſave only the generous and gracious Inclination of his own Royal Heart; and to give it the greater Edge, to the Honour of the Church of England's Religion be it ſpoken, he was pleas'd to tell what Opinion he had of our Religion and its true Profeſſors, that they were the true Friends and faithful Supporters of the Government; an Opinion which I hope every honeſt Church-of-England-Man will endeavour to cheriſh by a ſuitable Practice of what is certainly the Doctrine of that Religion, Loyalty and Obedience.

But alas! without Horror and Confuſion, we cannot but remember, that inſtead of making good Returns of Reſpect and Duty to ſo gracious a Sovereign for his great Bounty, Faction and Sedition, Hypocriſy and Malice had beſotted and bewitched a great Part of his Subjects, and corrupted, blinded, and bigotted them to ſuch an height of Impiety, that a Rebellion muſt begin his Reign, and all the poiſonous Arts of Diſobedience are made uſe of to inſtigate the King's Subjects, with all the Rancour and Vengeance in the world to riſe againſt him.

Bleſſed God! What is the way that this Devil of Sedition comes to bewitch People to ſuch a height, when Almighty God had ſo lately delivered us from the Miſery and Confuſion of a Civil War? It is that way ſurely, we find it but too plain, which he had always found very ſucceſsful, the Pretence of Saintſhip, Conſcience, and that glorious Name, Religion. What Religion can it be? The Chriſtian Religion had this Form of its great Ruler; Render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, and to God the things that are God's. But theſe Men act as though that were not Scripture, when yet pronounced by our bleſſed Lord himſelf, and both joined in one Sentence as indiſpenſible Duties; and they will hardly be brought to believe that Rebellion is the Sin of Witchcraft, though the Scriptures have directly given it that Character. Good God! that we ſhould live to ſuch an Age; when Men can call God to aſſiſt and protect them in a Rebellion: for not to reflect upon what was done in former times, it is late enough for us to remember, but not without Horror, that Men have been ty'd by all the Bonds and Contracts Hell could invent, in a Combination and Confederacy to murder both the late King and his preſent Majeſty, and all this while this muſt be ſanctified with the Name of Religion. So that a Man that is a Murderer by the Law of God, and an Offender againſt the firſt Precept that God Almighty enjoined, not to ſhed innocent Blood, ſhall yet be a Saint for an Aſſaſſination upon the account of Religion, and this ſhall be accounted a pious Cauſe to obtain Heaven.

Who did theſe Miſcreants, that were juſtly by Law condemned for that barbarous Conſpiracy, when they came to die, invocate? The great God, to teſtify for them, that they died for the ſake of Religion. When they come to ſuffer for Treaſon, they can bleſs God Almighty for the Honour he does them in dying in his Cauſe, and call themſelves Martyrs for it.

Nay, is it not yet more ſtrange and horrid, that ſome Men who call themſelves Miniſters of the Goſpel, ſhall come to be Bell-wethers of Rebellion, and cry out, they are fighting the Lord's Battle, when they are attempting to kill the Lord's Anointed?

Jesus God! that ever we should have such a Generation of Vipers among us, that can plunge themselves into the most horrid Impieties, and yet think to escape Confusion here, and purchase a Crown of Glory hereafter!

When we consider, Gentlemen, the Ring-leader of this late Rebellion, the Center of all our Trouble, the Arch-Rebel and Traitor, Monmouth I mean, should arrive to such a Height of Impudence and Villany, as to bless God that he could with Satisfaction reflect upon a two Years Life very regularly spent; but how? In manifest Adultery and Uncleanness, nor can it be spoke or thought of without inexpressible Horror.

Alack! Gentlemen, when we find Religion made use of as a Subterfuge and Cloak for such impious Practices, it gives too much occasion for our Enemies to think us Atheists: the very Turks will hate us, and Pagans detest us, as the most irreligious prophane People in the World; when we, who profess Love and Duty to Jesus Christ as our Holy and Blessed Redeemer, do these things, and even boast of them, whom they that deny him blush at the very thoughts of, and never so much as name, much less act without Horror and Confusion.

Gentlemen, I do not speak this for the sake of speaking, but I would fain deliver my own Soul and yours from having any hand in such horrible Impieties, and that, by testifying our Abhorrence of them, by publickly declaring our selves to be Enemies to those Hypocrites the Nonconformist Parsons; I mean, that pretend indeed pure Religion to be their great Aim and End, and through a Scrupulosity of Conscience, cannot conform to that Decency and Duty which is required of them in the Church; but yet, without remorse, can kill, or be the occasion of the Death of ten thousand People, as in the Consequence of this late Rebellion perhaps it may prove. For do but consider how many Families by this means are utterly ruined, how many innocent Babes starved, or exposed to the utmost Penury and Want; how many Widows left in a distressed desolate Condition, destitute of all manner of Provision and Maintenance; and all this by the Instigation of these Villains that have preached and prayed them into it, gilding the Bait that has drawn them into it, by the specious Pretence of Religion and Conscience?

Consider, Gentlemen, this is that which has brought this poor unfortunate Gentlewoman, the Prisoner at the Bar, into this deplorable Condition: What could prevail upon her to run such a hazard as this, but only her Affection and deluded Zeal for that Wretch, that had nothing but the name of Religion, for his Soul is blacker in the Eyes of God, and the Thoughts of all honest Men, than ever his Coat was? You see by the Proofs what an impudent unsanctified Villain he was; for when these Gentlemen that have given Evidence, were in the Custody, and under the Power of the Rebels, he must tempt and provoke them to leave off and forsake their Duty to their natural Lord and lawful Sovereign the King, whom God had set over them, and submit to an Usurper, a King of their own making; and such a King too, that I dare boldly affirm, the meanest Subject within the Kingdom that is legitimate, has a better Title to the Crown, than he had; and this all under the pretence of Religion, and the Protestant Religion too: and that same Prince of their's must have the Title of a Protestant Prince; and an excellent Protestant he lived and died, living in the open Violation of the Law of God, and in manifest Rebellion against his lawful Sovereign: and he died without any Remorse for either, boasting of his own Wickedness beyond the bounds of common Modesty and Humanity.

Gentlemen, Let us all join in hearty Prayers to our God, the God of infinite Mercy, that as he has yet once more delivered our Sovereign, and us with him, out of the Jaws of these Lions and ravenous Wolves; so he would still please to preserve him and us from the hands of all our Enemies: and I pray God it may have that good effect upon all of us, as to make us more careful and conscientious in our Duty to him, and his Vicegerent the King. To him alone must all the Glory be ascribed; it was not our Hand, or Arms of the King, that could have saved or protected us, had not the special Interposition of the Divine Power and Goodness wrought this Deliverance for us.

But now, Gentlemen, to come to the particular Case here before you; and the Fact, upon the Evidence, stands thus: It is very notorious this Fellow Hicks was actually in this Rebellion; you have it sworn by three several Persons that saw him; and they particularized to you such Tokens of their Knowledge and Remembrance, that sure, if any thing can, must make him blush at the Repetition of them; for they tell you, when they were in Prison he would have corrupted them from their Duty; and yesterday they saw him in Prison, and upon discourse of some Circumstances, he could not deny but he was there.

This Person, Mrs. Lisle the Prisoner at the Bar, she is accused for receiving and harbouring this Person: And, Gentlemen, I must tell you for Law, of which we are the Judges, and not you, That if any Person be in actual Rebellion against the King, and another Person (who really and actually was not in Rebellion) does receive, harbour, comfort, and conceal him that was such, a Receiver is as much a Traitor, as he who indeed bore Arms: We are bound by our Oaths and Consciences, to deliver and declare to you what is Law; and you are bound, by your Oaths and Consciences, to deliver and declare to us, by your Verdict, the Truth of the Fact.

Gentlemen, that he was there in Rebellion, is undeniably and unquestionably proved: That there are sufficient Testimonies to satisfy you, that this Woman did receive and harbour him, is that which is left to your Consideration; and for that, the Proofs lie thus: And truly I am sorry to have occasion for repeating the Circumstances of the Proof; I mean, the great Art that has been used to conceal it: how difficult a thing it was to come at it; what time has been spent in endeavouring to find out Truth in a Fellow, that in defiance of all Admonition, Threats and Persuasion, would prevaricate and shuffle to conceal that Truth; nay, lye and forswear himself to contradict it. But out of true christian Charity, as I told him, so I tell you, I do heartily pray (and all good Christians I hope will join with me in it) to the God of infinite Mercy that he would have mercy upon his Soul, upon which he hath contracted so great a Guilt by the Impudence of his Behaviour, and pertinacious Obstinacy in those Falshoods which he hath made use of in this Case.

Gentlemen, I would willingly forget all his Prevarications, but I must take notice of them in short, to come to the Truth. First, he says, he came upon an Errand from a Man he knows not whom, to my Lady Liſle's Houſe; and thither he is brought by one Barter; and when he comes there, he tells her, he comes in the Name of one Hicks, who deſired to be entertained there. Then ſhe aſks the Queſtion, whether Hicks had been in the Army; and he told her he did not know; and he ſwears now he did not: But at laſt it came out, that it was to entertain Hicks and another Perſon; but it ſhould ſeem that other Perſon was not named; and Barter tells you, that Hicks and another Perſon (who afterwards proved to be Nelthorp) are promiſed to be entertained, and ordered to come in the Evening. But not to go backward and forward, as he has done in his Evidence, denying what he afterwards acknowledged, that he ſaw any body beſides a little Girl; that he pulled down the Hay out of the Rack for his Horſe; that he eat any thing but Cake and Cheeſe that he brought with him from home; that he was ever made to drink, or to eat or drink in the Houſe, or ever meddled or made with any body in the Houſe: At laſt we are told that Carpenter met with him, and came out with a Lanthorn and Candle, took care of his Horſe, carried him into the Room where Hicks and Nelthorp were, and the Priſoner at the Bar Mrs. Liſle; there they all ſupp'd together; there they fell into Diſcourſe; there Nelthorp's Name was named, and they talked of being in the Army, and of the Fight: and ſo it is all come out, and makes a full and poſitive Evidence.

to

But then, ſuppoſe there was no more than the other Evidence, and that the Fellow remain in an hard-hearted Obſtinacy, then you are to conſider the Circumſtances even from his firſt Evidence, that this was after the Rebellion was all over; for it ſeems during the Rebellion ſhe was in London, and it was notoriouſly known the King's Forces were in purſuit of the Rebels, and this without any poſitive Proof would be in itſelf a ſufficient Teſtimony to convince any conſiderate Perſon, that ſhe was to conceal thoſe ſhe ought not to conceal; becauſe ſhe directed the particular time wherein they ſhould come, and that was at Night; and no prudent Perſon would receive Strangers in the Night, and give ſuch Directions in ſuch a Seaſon, without ſome extraordinary ground for it. When they came there, ſhe provided a Supper for them; and you ſee what care is taken, that the Woman only is permitted to bring that Supper to the Door, and the Huſband muſt ſet it on the Table; no body is permitted to attend there but he. Works of Darkneſs always deſire to be in the Dark: Works of Rebellion and ſuch like are never done in the Light.

But then comes that honeſt Fellow Barter (I call him ſo, becauſe he appears ſo to be, and he ought to be remembred with a great Remark for his Honeſty) he tells you, he conducted him to the Houſe, and what Diſcourſe paſs'd there in his hearing: The Priſoner aſked him, what Countryman he was, and whether he was a Brick-maker, and promiſed him ſo many Acres of Land in Carolina. The Fellow, upon Obſervation and Conſideration, found himſelf under a great Load, could not ſleep nor eat quietly, as Men that have honeſt Minds are uneaſy under ſuch things; Falſhood, and Treaſon, and Hypocriſy are a heavy Load; and, bleſſed be God, things were by this means diſcovered: for he goes and tells Col. Penruddock; and withal, Dunne ſwears to Barter, it was the braveſt Job that ever he had in his Life; whereas in the beginning of his Story, he would have told you a ſtrange Story of a black Beard, and I do not know what, and that he got not one Groat by it; that he gave the Man Half a Crown out of his own Pocket, and was ſo induſtrious, as when he knew the Way no farther, then he would hire one himſelf to ſhew him the Way, and all for nothing, but only for the kindneſs he had for a black Beard.

Beſides, Gentlemen, I am ſorry to remember ſomething that dropped even from the Gentlewoman herſelf, ſhe pretends to Religion and Loyalty very much, how greatly ſhe wept at the Death of King Charles the Martyr, and owns her great Obligations to the late King and his Royal Brother; that ſhe had not had a Being, nor any thing to maintain it for twenty Years laſt paſt but from their Bounty, and yet no ſooner is one in the Grave, but ſhe forgets all Gratitude, and entertains thoſe that were Rebels againſt his Royal Succeſſor. I will not ſay what Hand her Huſband had in the Death of that bleſſed Martyr *, ſhe has enough to anſwer for of her own Guilt; and I muſt confeſs it ought not one way or other to make any Ingredient into this Caſe what ſhe was in former Times: And I told a Relation of her's, Mr. Tipping by Name, that came to me laſt Night to deſire that ſhe might not lie under ſome Imputations that were gone abroad of her, that ſhe rejoic'd at the Death of King Charles I. nor that any falſe Report of that Nature might influence the Court or Jury againſt her, that it ſhould not: Be the thing true or falſe, it is to be of no weight one way or other in the Trial of this Caſe, nor is ſhe to be accountable for it.

But I muſt remember you of one Particular, that is plain upon this Evidence, and is of very great moment in this Caſe; That after all theſe private Meſſages and Directions given to come by Night, and the kind Reception they met with when they came, and after all this Care to lodge them and feed them, when Colonel Penruddock, after the Diſcovery made by Barter, came to ſearch her Houſe, then ſhe had no body in it truly, which is an Aggravation of the Offence teſtify'd by Colonel Penruddock himſelf, whoſe Father likewiſe was a Martyr, and died for his Fidelity to the Crown; and who was the Judge of that Father, we all very well know. God Almighty is a juſt God, and it may be worth conſidering (eſpecially by her) how God has been pleaſed to make uſe of him as the Inſtrument in this Buſineſs; and ſhe would likewiſe do well to conſider the Finger of God in working upon the Heart of that Man Barter, who was imploy'd in all this Affair, and that all the Truth has been told by Nelthorp, that blackeſt of Villains Nelthorp, that would have murdered the late King and his royal Brother; that he that was one of thoſe barbarous, malicious Aſſaſſinates in that black Conſpiracy, and outlaw'd, ſhould be harbour'd by one that pretends a Love for the Royal Family, and entertained and diſcourſed with at Night about being in the Army; yet that he and that other Villain Hicks, who pretends to Religion and to be a Preacher of the Goſpel, but is found in Rebellion and in the Company of Traitors, ſhould be deny'd the next Morning.

I hope they themſelves are all by this time ſatisfy'd Truth will come out, and I hope you will not be deceived by any ſpecious Pretences. Our Fore-

* This was an unjuſt Inſinuation, only to prejudice the Jury, being, as the Chief Juſtice own'd, nothing to the Purpoſe; for which Reaſon it ſhould have been let alone, and tho' he ſaid, it ought not to influence the Caſe, yet he knew it was very likely to do ſo.

Fore-fathers have been deluded, but the Deception, I hope, is now at an End; and I must needs say, if all these Witnesses that have freely discovered their Knowledge, joined to that Truth which is at length drawn from that Dunne, be worthy of any Credit, it is as plain a Proof as can be given, and as evident as the Sun at Noon-day.

Gentlemen, upon your Consciences be it: The Preservation of the Government, the Life of the King, the Safety and Honour of our Religion, and the Discharge of our Consciences as loyal Men, good Christians, and faithful Subjects, are at stake; neither her Age nor her Sex are to move you, who have nothing else to consider but the Evidence of the Fact you are to try. I charge you therefore, as you will answer it at the Bar of the last Judgment, were you and we must all appear, deliver your Verdict according to Conscience and Truth. With that great God, the impartial Judge, there is no such thing as Respect of Persons, and in our Discharge of our Duty in Courts of Justice, he has enjoined us his Creatures, that we must have no such thing as a Friend in the Administration of Justice, all our Friendship must be to Truth, and our Care to preserve that inviolate.

Lisle. My Lord, if your Lordship please——

L. C. J. Mistress, you have had your Turn, you cannot now be heard any more after the Jury is charged.

Lisle. My Lord, I did not know Nelthorp, I declare it, before he was taken.

L. C. J. You are not indicted for Nelthorp, but we are not to enter into Dialogues now, the Jury must consider of it.

Jury-man. Pray, my Lord, some of us desire to know of your Lordship, in point of Law, whether it be the same thing, and equally Treason, in receiving him before he was convicted of Treason, as if it had been after.

L. C. J. It is all the same, that certainly can be no Doubt; for, if in case this Hicks had been wounded in the Rebels Army, and had come to her House and there been entertained, but had died there of his Wounds, and so could never have been convicted, she had been nevertheless a Traitor.

Then the Jury withdrew, and staying out a while, the Lord Jefferies expressed a great deal of Impatience, and said, he wonder'd that in so plain a Case they would go from the Bar, and would have sent for them with an Intimation, that if they did not come quickly, he would adjourn, and let them lie by it all Night; but after about half an Hour's stay the Jury returned, and the Foreman addressed himself to the Court thus: *

Foreman. My Lord, we have one thing to beg of your Lordship some Directions in, before we can give our Verdict in this Case: We have some Doubt upon us, whether there be sufficient Proof that she knew Hicks to have been in the Army.

L. C. J. There is as full Proof as Proof can be; but you are Judges of the Proof, for my part I thought there was no Difficulty in it.

Foreman. My Lord, we are in some doubt of it.

L. C. J. I cannot help your Doubts: Was there not proved a Discourse of the Battle and of the Army at Supper-time?

Foreman. But, my Lord, we are not satisfy'd that she had Notice that Hicks was in the Army.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what would satisfy you; Did she not enquire of Dunne, whether Hicks had been in the Army? And when he told her he did not know, she did not say she would refuse him if he had been there, but order'd him to come by Night, by which it is evident she suspected it; and when he and Nelthorp came, discoursed with them about the Battle and the Army. Come, come, Gentlemen, it is a plain Proof.

Foreman. My Lord, we do not remember that it was proved that she did ask any such Question when they were there.

L. C. J. Sure you do not remember any thing that has passed? Did not Dunne tell you there was such Discourse, and she was by, and Nelthorp's Name was named? But if there were no such Proof, the Circumstances and Management of the Thing is as full a Proof as can be, I wonder what it is you doubt of?

Lisle. My Lord, I hope——

L. C. J. You must not speak now.

Then the Jury laid their Heads together for near a Quarter of an Hour, and at length agreed; and being call'd over, deliver'd in this Verdict by the Foreman.

Cl. of Arraignments. Alice Lisle, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner: How say ye? Is she guilty of the Treason whereof she stands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements had she?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl. of Ar. Look to her Jaylor, she is found guilty of High Treason; and prepare your self to die.

Then the Verdict was recorded.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I did not think I should have had any Occasion to speak after your Verdict, but finding some Hesitancy and Doubt among you, I cannot but say, I wonder it should come about; for I think in my Conscience, the Evidence was as full and plain as could be, and if I had been among you, and she had been my own Mother, I should have found her Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till the next Morning.

Dies Veneris 28 Augusti, 1685.

THIS Day Alice Lisle was brought to the Bar, and being asked what she had to say for her self, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon her, being convicted of High-Treason; but offering nothing, she was, with the rest of the Prisoners that were to receive the Sentence of Death, condemn'd by the Lord Jefferies, who passed Sentence thus:

L. C. J. Alice Lisle, and you the several Prisoners now at the Bar, you have been severally Indicted, Arraigned, and now stand severally Convicted of Crimes that by the Laws of the Land are to be punished with Death; you stand convicted by your Equals, by a Jury of your Country, against whom you might have had, and were allow'd to make (and one of you did make) what Challenges

* Bishop Burnet says, the Jury at first brought her in Not Guilty. Hist. of his Own Times, p. 650. The Truth was, she knew not Nelthorp at all, only Hicks whom she entertained without knowing of his having been in the Army; but Hicks telling where he had been, she immediately left the Room, and order'd her Servant to send Information to the next Justice, and in the mean time to let them escape, but was prevented by a Party of Soldiers investing the House.

lenges you could: but upon full Evidence, by that Jury of your own Country-men, you have bee found guilty of thoſe Crimes for which you are to die; and there remains now no more with the Court but to perform their Duty, which is to pronounce that Sentence, that diſmal Sentence of Death, which the Law has provided for ſuch Offenders.

And ſure I am, it cannot but be thought uneaſy, and far from pleaſant, not only to me, but to every body elſe that ſees ſuch a lamentable Object, ſuch a Number of Perſons that might have acquired to themſelves an honeſt Livelihood by Diligence in their lawful Callings, being dutiful to God, and obedient to their Sovereign and the Laws of the Land, who yet in defiance of all theſe have brought themſelves to a ſhameful untimely End by their own wicked Courſes.

Particularly, I cannot but lament the deplorable Condition of you, Mrs. Liſle, a Gentlewoman of Quality and of Fortune, ſo far ſtricken in Years, therefore ought to have had more Diſcretion: One, who all your Life-time have been a great Pretender to, and Profeſſor of, Religion, and of that Religion which bears a very good Name, the Proteſtant Religion; but that Name has been perverted to very ill Purpoſes by ſome People, who have had nothing but the Name to protect themſelves under.

There is no Religion whatſoever (except that hypocritical Profeſſion of theirs which deſerves not the Name of Religion, I mean the canting, whining, Preſbyterian, Phanatical Profeſſion) that gives the leaſt Countenance to Rebellion or Faction; and I cannot but lament to find you involved in that Herd.

And I cannot but deplore it withal, as a moſt ſad and diſmal thing, that in this little Caſe ſo many Perjuries ſhould be added to the Crime of Treaſon, ſuch, as for my part I cannot but tremble to remember; Perjuries in defiance of all the Inſtruction and Admonition that true chriſtian Charity could expreſs, and in defiance of the Omniſcience and Juſtice of the All-ſeeing God of Truth: You ought to reflect upon whoſe Account thoſe Perjuries were committed, and to lay them ſeriouſly to Heart, for e'er long, in a few Hours (deceive not your ſelf) you are to give an Account at a greater Bar for all your Thoughts, Words, and Actions.

You would likewiſe do well to bethink your ſelf with all Serioufneſs and Remorſe, of your own falſe Aſſeverations and Proteſtations, that you upon your Salvation ſhould pretend Ignorance in the Buſineſs, when ſince that Time, even ſince the laſt Night, there has been but too much diſcover'd how far you were concern'd; no, 'tis not unknown who were ſent for upon the Monday Night, in order to have that rebellious, ſeditious Fellow to preach to them, what Directions were given to come thro' the Orchard the back and private Way, what Orders were given for Proviſion, and how the Horſes were appointed to be diſpoſed of. I only ſpeak this, that you ſhould bethink your ſelf in this ſhort time that you have left here upon Earth, to get theſe Sins of your's duly repented of, and truly pardoned; and not only ſo, but conſider you have it now in your Power to make ſome Recompence to the publick Juſtice of the Nation, by diſcovering the Truth in this Matter, and all Religion enjoins you to do what you can: For without the infinite Mercy of the great God you are in a deplorable Condition, and without true Contrition and Repentance, of which all the Recompence you can make, both for publick and private Injuries, is a part, you can never hope for the Mercy of that God to be extended to you.

Sirs; It is not in my Province to adviſe you in your Preparation for that Eternity you are all ſuddenly to enter into: but out of pure Charity, and hearty Compaſſion to you, and the miſerable Condition you have brought yourſelves into, and out of a tender Regard to your precious immortal Souls, I cannot but aſſure you of my own, and recommend you to the earneſt and fervent Prayers of all good Chriſtians, to the God of infinite Mercy, that he would be merciful unto you all.

And the great God of his gracious Goodneſs grant, that all we that are here may learn ſuch Leſſons, as are proper from ſuch Examples: From that Woman the ſad and diſmal Effects of Diſloyalty and Treaſon; and from all the reſt, the deplorable Miſchiefs that attend Licentiouſneſs and Debauchery: For by the Courſe of Nature, moſt of theſe might have lived a much longer Time, and that with Comfort to themſelves and their Relations; but now, to the Anguiſh of their own Hearts, and the unſpeakable Grief of all their Friends, they have ſhortened their own Days, and brought a diſmal Sentence upon themſelves.

And I recommend them not only to my ſelf and others, but chiefly and eſpecially to the Pious, Orthodox and Learned Miniſtry, to give the beſt Aſſiſtance they can, during the ſhort Remainder of their Time; for their Abode here upon Earth is but ſhort, and God grant they may meet with a bleſſed Immortality.

There remains no more for me to do, I ſay, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law, which is this; and the Court does award,

That you, Mrs. Liſle, be conveyed from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn on a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where your Body is to be burnt alive till you be dead. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

The reſt of the Priſoners had the uſual Judgment as in Caſes of Felony.

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Liſle, when I left his Majeſty, he was pleaſed to remit the Time of all Executions to me; that where-ever I found any Obſtinacy or Impenitence, I might Order the Executions with what ſpeed I ſhould think beſt: Therefore, Mr. Sheriff, take notice, you are to prepare for the Execution of this Gentlewoman this Afternoon. But withal, I give you, the Priſoner, this Intimation: We that are the Judges, ſhall ſtay in Town an Hour or two; you ſhall have Pen, Ink, and Paper brought you, and if in the mean time you employ that Pen, Ink, and Paper, and this Hour or two well, (you underſtand what I mean) it may be you may hear further from us, in a deferring the Execution.

Then the Priſoner was taken away.

But afterwards, upon the Interceſſion of ſome Divines of the Church of Wincheſter, ſhe was reprieved till Wedneſday the Second of September.

On

On Sunday the Thirtieth of Auguſt, the following Letter was ſent to the Right Honourable the Earl of Clarendon, Lord Privy-Seal, at Windſor; [which the Earl did then read to the King] who anſwered, That he would do nothing in it, having left all to the Lord Chief Juſtice *.

My Lord,

" UNderſtanding that Mrs. Liſle is condemned, " and that many falſe things are reported " of her, that may hinder the King from ſhewing " her Mercy; particularly, that ſhe was an Enemy " to the King's Friends in the time of the late " Wars: As to that, we can aſſure your Lordſhip, " that ſhe was a Favourer of them in their greateſt " Extremities; and particularly of us, and of ſome " others that are ſince dead: And for theſe late " Years we have often been in her Company, and " never heard her ſay any thing but what became " a loyal Subject. This we deſire your Lordſhip " would be pleaſed to repreſent to the King, and " to interceed for her Reprieve; which will be a " great Obligation to your Lordſhip's humble Ser- " vants,

M. St. John.
E. Abergavenny.

On Monday the Thirty-Firſt of Auguſt the following Petition was preſented to the King.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty,

The Humble Petition of Alicia Liſle;

Humbly Sheweth,

' THAT your Petitioner lieth under a Sen- ' tence of Death for harbouring one John ' Hicks; and is ſentenced to be burnt on Wedneſday ' next.

' That ſhe is the Daughter of Sir White Becon- ' ſaw, deſcended of an antient and honourable Fa- ' mily, and related to ſeveral of the beſt Families ' of the Nobility of this Kingdom.

' Wherefore your Petitioner humbly begs your ' Majeſty, that Execution may be altered from ' Burning to Beheading, and may be reſpited for ' four Days:

And your Petitioner ſhall ever pray, &c.

To which his Majeſty anſwered: That he would not reprieve her one Day; but for altering the Sentence, he would do it, if there were any Precedents for it.

Thereupon the following Precedents, for the altering of the Sentence, were offered to the King.

That Execution may vary from the Judgment, ſee the Regiſter, Fol. 165. in Felony, Parl. 8. E. 3. where the Judgment always is Suſpendatur per collum; yet the Party may be beheaded, which is no part of the Sentence. So was the Duke of Somerſet in the Time of Edw. VI. for Felony: So was the Lord Audley, 7 Car. I. for Felony (Rape).

Queen Katherine Howard for Treaſon, Hen. VIII. and Jane Gray, primo Mariæ. The Counteſs of Saliſbury, being attainted for Treaſon, Anno 1541. was beheaded 32 Hen. VIII. See 3 Co. Inſt. p. 211, 212.

Whereupon his Majeſty was pleaſed to ſign the following Warrant.

JAMES R.

WHereas we are informed that Alicia Liſle has received Sentence of Death for High Treaſon at the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery, held at our City of Wincheſter, for harbouring of John Hicks a Rebel, and that the Sentence is to be executed upon her the ſecond of September next, by burning her alive: And whereas the ſaid Alicia Liſle has humbly petitioned Us to alter the Manner of the ſaid Execution, by cauſing her Head to be ſever'd from her Body: We being graciouſly pleaſed to condeſcend to her Requeſt, have thought fit hereby to ſignify Our Will and Pleaſure accordingly. And our further Will and Pleaſure is, that you deliver the Head and Body to her Relations to be privately and decently interred: And for ſo doing, this ſhall be your Warrant.

Given at our Court at Windſor, the Thirty-Firſt Day of Auguſt, 1685. in the firſt Year of our Reign.

SUNDERLAND.

To our Truſty and Well-beloved the High-Sheriff of our County of Hants, and to all others whom it may concern.

Which Warrant being delivered to the Sheriff, ſhe was, on Wedneſday the ſecond of September, in the Afternoon, brought to execution; which was perform'd upon a Scaffold erected in the Market-place of the City of Wincheſter, where ſhe behaved herſelf with a great deal of Chriſtian Reſolution. She then deliver'd a Paper to the Sheriff, a Copy of which follows; and after ſome little time was executed, having her Head ſever'd from her Body.

A Copy of the Paper deliver'd to the Sheriff.

Gentlemen, Friends, and Neighbours,

' IT may be expected that I ſhould ſay ſome- ' thing at my Death, my Birth and Education ' being near this Place. My Parents inſtructed ' me in the Fear of God, and I now die of the Re- ' formed Religion, always being inſtructed in that ' Belief, That if Popery ſhould return into this ' Nation, it would be a great Judgment. I die in ' the Expectation of Pardon of my Sins, and Ac- ' ceptation with the Father, by the imputed Righ- ' teouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, he being the End of the ' Law for Righteouſneſs to every one that believes. ' I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt, I depart un- ' der the Blood of Sprinkling, which ſpeaketh better ' things than the Blood of Abel, God having made ' this Chaſtiſement an Ordinance to my Soul.

' I did as little expect to come to this Place on ' this Occaſion as any Perſon in this Nation; there- ' fore let us learn not to be high-minded, but fear ' the Lord: The Lord is a Sovereign, and will ' take what way he ſees beſt to glorify himſelf by ' his poor Creatures; therefore do humbly deſire ' to ſubmit to his Will, praying him, that in pa- ' tience I may poſſeſs my Soul.

' My Crime was entertaining a Nonconformiſt ' Miniſter, who is ſince ſworn to have been in the

* The Earl of Feverſham having been offered a thouſand Pounds to obtain her Pardon, ſollicited the King to grant it; but the King told him, he had promiſed the Chief Juſtice that he would not pardon her.

‘ late Duke of Monmouth’s Army. I am told, if I ‘ had not denied them, it would not have affected ‘ me. I have no Excuſe but Surprize and Fear; ‘ which I believe my Jury muſt make uſe of to ex- ‘ cuſe their Verdict to the World.

‘ I have been told, the Court ought to be Counſel, ‘ for the Priſoner, inſtead of which, there was Evi- ‘ dence given from thence; which, though it were but ‘ Hear-ſay, might poſſibly affect my Jury. My De- ‘ fence was ſuch as might be expected from a weak ‘ Woman; but ſuch as it was, I did not hear it re- ‘ peated again to the Jury. But I forgive all Per- ‘ ſons that have done me wrong, and I deſire that ‘ God will do ſo likewiſe.

‘ I forgive Col. Penruddock, though he told me he ‘ could have taken thoſe Men before they came to my ‘ Houſe.

‘ As to what may be objected, that I gave it un- ‘ der my Hand that I had diſcourſed with Nelthorp, ‘ that could be no Evidence to the Court, or Jury, ‘ it being after my Conviction and Sentence.

‘ I acknowledge his Majeſty’s Favour in altering ‘ my Sentence; and I pray God to preſerve him, ‘ that he may long reign in peace, and the true Re- ‘ ligion flouriſh under him.

‘ Two things I have omitted to ſay, which is, ‘ that I forgive him that deſired to be taken from the ‘ Grand Jury to the Petty Jury, that he might be the ‘ more nearly concerned in my Death.

‘ Alſo I return humble Thanks to Almighty ‘ God, and the Reverend Clergy that aſſiſted me ‘ in my Impriſonment.

Sept. 2. 1685. ALICE LISLE.

Her Attainder was afterwards reverſed 1ſt of William and Mary.

Primo Gulielmi & Mariæ, Anno 1689.

An ACT for annulling and making void the Attainder of Alicia Liſle, Widow.

WHereas Alicia Liſle, Widow, in the Month of Auguſt, in the firſt Year of the Reign of the late King James the Second, at a Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery, holden for the County of Southampton, at the City of Wincheſter in the ſaid County, by an irregular and undue Proſecution, was indicted for entertaining, concealing and comforting John Hicks, Clerk, a falſe Traitor knowing him to be ſuch; Though the ſaid John Hicks was not, at the Trial of the ſaid Alicia Liſle, Attainted or Convicted of any ſuch Crime: And, by a Verdict injuriouſly extorted and procured by the Menaces and Violences, and other illegal Practices of George Lord Jefferies, Baron of Wem, then Lord Chief Juſtice of the King’s Bench, and Chief Commiſſioner of Oyer and Terminer and Goal-Delivery, within the ſaid County, was convicted, attainted, and executed for High-Treaſon: May it therefore pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſties, at the humble Petition of Triphena Lloyd and Bridget Uſher, Daughters of the ſaid Alicia Liſle, That it be declared and enacted by the Authority of this preſent Parliament: And be it Enacted by the King and Queen’s moſt excellent Majeſties, by and with the Advice and Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, That the ſaid Conviction, Judgment and Attainder of the ſaid Alicia Liſle be, and are hereby repealed, reverſed, made and declared null and void to all Intents, Conſtructions and Purpoſes whatſoever, as if no ſuch Conviction, Judgment or Attainder had ever been had or made; And that no Corruption of Blood, or other Penalty or Forfeiture of Honours, Dignities, Lands, Goods or Chattels, be by the ſaid Conviction or Attainder incurred: any Law, Uſage or Cuſtom to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Middlesex. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King upon their Oaths do present, That John Fernley, of the Parish of St. Mary Matsellon, otherwise White-Chapel, in the County of Middlesex, Barber, as a false Rebel and Traitor against the most illustrious and most excellent Prince King James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, and his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor his due Obedience any wise regarding, but being mov'd and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil; and his faithful Duty and natural Obedience which a true and loyal Subject ought to have towards his said Lord the King, and by Law ought to observe, utterly withdrawing; and intending with all his Endeavours the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to incite and move, and the Government of our said Lord the King in this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour, and regal and imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and utter Destruction to bring; the 20th Day of August in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the first, and divers other Days as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Mary Matsellon, otherwise called White-Chapel, in the County of Middlesex, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, with divers Rebels and Traitors to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, did conspire, imagine and intend, our said Sovereign Lord the King, now his supreme and natural Lord, not only of his royal State, Title, Power, and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and depose, but also the same Lord the King to kill and murder, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter, and totally subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our Lord the King throughout all this his Kingdom of England to cause and procure; and an Insurrection and Rebellion against our Lord the King to procure, promote, and assist: And the same his most wicked, most inhuman, and most devilish Treasons and Conspiracies, Purposes and traitorous Imaginations to fulfil and to effect, he the said John Fernley, as a false Traitor, then and there, viz. on the said 20th Day of August, in the Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, the first as aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, well knowing one James Burton to be a false Traitor, and as a false Traitor traitorously to have conspired and imagined the Death and utter Destruction of our said Lord the King, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England traitorously (with divers other Rebels to the Jury unknown) to have levied and stirr'd up; he the said John Fernley afterwards, viz. on the said 20th Day of August, in the Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, now the first aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, the said James Burton in the Mansion-House of him the said John Fernley, situate in the Parish and County aforesaid, knowingly, secretly, wickedly, devilishly, and traitorously, did harbour, conceal, comfort, sustain, and keep; and then and there, for the Comforting, Sustentation, and Maintenance of the said James Burton, the said John Fernley Meat and Drink to the said James Burton, maliciously and traitorously did give and deliver, and did cause to be given and delivered, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in the like Case made and provided, &c.

Clerk. How sayest thou John Fernley, art thou guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Fernley. Not guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Fernley. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Set William Ring to the Bar. [Which was done.

William Ring, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.

Thou standest indicted by the Name of William Ring, of the Parish of St. Clement's Danes, in the County of Middlesex, Taylor.

Middlesex. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do present upon their Oaths, That William Ring, late of the Parish of St. Clement's Danes, in the County of Middlesex, Taylor, as a false Traitor against the most illustrious and excellent Prince James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, and his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor the Duty of his Allegiance any ways weighing, but being mov'd and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and the true, due, and natural Obedience which true and faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King towards our said Lord the King should and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with his whole Streng h intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest, and disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King within this his Kingdom of England to incite and stir up, and the Government of our said Lord the King in this his Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour, and regal Name of his Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put; the 20th Day of July, in the first Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, and divers other days and times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement's-Danes in the County of Middlesex, falsely and maliciously, devilishly and traitorously, with divers other Rebels and Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did conspire, imagine, and intend, our said Lord the King, our supreme and natural Lord, not only from his State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England to deprive and depose, but also our said Lord the King to kill and put to death, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom of England to change and alter, and wholly to subvert; and a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Lord the King throughout this whole Kingdom of England to cause and procure; and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to procure, move, and assist: And his said most wicked and devilish Treasons and traitorous Conspiracies, Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil, effect, and perfect, he the said William Ring, as a false Traitor, then and there, to wit, the said 20th day of July, in the said first Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King that now is, aforesaid, at the Parish and County aforesaid, well knowing Joseph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence to be falſe Traitors, and as falſe Traitors traitorouſly to have conſpired and imagined the Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Lord the King, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King within this his Kingdom of England, traitorouſly, with divers other Traitors to the Jurors unknown, to have levied, and raiſed, and ſtirred up. And he the ſaid William Ring afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 20th Day of July, in the firſt Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, the ſaid Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, in the Dwelling-Houſe of him the ſaid William Ring ſituated in the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, knowingly, ſecretly, wickedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, did harbour, conceal, comfort, ſuſtain, and maintain; and then and there, for the comforting, ſuſtaining, and maintaining of the ſaid Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, he the ſaid William Ring Meat and Drink to the ſaid Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence maliciouſly and traitorouſly did give and deliver, and did cauſe to be given and delivered, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided, &c.

How ſayeſt thou William Ring, art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Ring. Not guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Ring. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Set Henry Corniſh to the Bar.

Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have been confined without any notice given me until Saturday about Noon of my Trial. My Lord, I do hope, ſeeing I appear before your Lordſhips and this honourable Bench who have known ſomething of my Converſation, that you will pleaſed to conſider me, and grant me what is cuſtomary, and commonly done to Perſons in my Circumſtances.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Corniſh, if you pleaſe you ſhall have your time of ſpeaking hereafter, but now you are only to plead without any more ado.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I beſeech you hear me a little; I have been ſo confined——

Lord Mayor. Mr. Corniſh, you muſt obſerve the Rules of the Court.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope I ſhall be allowed what is cuſtomary in ſuch Caſes.

Lord Mayor. What is it you would have?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do deſire, if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to conſider me——

Mr. Jones. Wou'd you not be arraigned, Mr. Corniſh? After you are arraigned and have pleaded, you may ſpeak.

Mr. Corniſh. Let me tell your Lordſhip what my Caſe is: Is it reaſonable not to have above half a day's time for Preparation for my Trial, and no Counſel allowed me?

Sir Thomas Jenner. Mr. Recorder. Nor ought, without Leave of the Court, or by Majeſty's ſpecial Appointment.

Mr. Corniſh. I have not had a Friend to come to me, but in the preſence of Major Richardſon.

Mr. Recorder. None have in your Circumſtances.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, ought not I to have a Copy of the Pannel? It is a thing never denied.

Recorder. It hath been denied very often *.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, it is a matter wherein my Life is concern'd; and therefore I hope your Lordſhip will hear me.

Mr. Jones. After you are arraign'd you may ſpeak, and put off your Trial if you can.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord I cannot go from this before I poſſeſs your Lordſhip with a right Underſtanding of it; it is beyond Precedent: no ſuch Precedent, that any Man ſhould be kept with that Strictneſs I have been.

Recorder. Mr. Corniſh, I wonder you will ſay ſo: I tell you there is no Man accuſed of your Crime but is ſo kept.

Mr. Corniſh. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to allow me a little time, I do not queſtion but I can very well ſatisfy your Lordſhip, and this honourable Court, that I am a very innocent Perſon.

Mr. Recorder. You will have your proper time for that, but now you muſt plead, that you may hear the Particulars of your Charge, and have an Opportunity to make out your Innocence; for we muſt keep the ſame Method with you we do with all other Perſons in your Circumſtances; and therefore you muſt plead as other Perſons do.

Mr. Jones. Will you, or will you not, Sir, without any more ado? The Law gives you Advantage, you may challenge any body; there are fourſcore returned, honeſt Men, and you may challenge who you pleaſe.

Mr. Corniſh. Alas! my Lord, what can I do?

Counſel. He diſputes out of time; he is to be arraign'd.

Recorder. Come, Mr. Corniſh, you muſt plead.

Mr. Corniſh. I did underſtand laſt Night his Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to refer theſe matters, as to my Trial, to my Lords the Judges; and my Lord, I do hope that the Judges, when they hear this matter, that I ſhall have ſome time allow'd.

Recorder. Pray, Mr. Corniſh, take the Rule of the Court, your Buſineſs is now to plead; when you have pleaded, what you have to offer for the putting off your Trial may be heard then.

Clerk. Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I would do nothing that ſhould be a diſhonour to your Lordſhip and the Court.

Sir James Smith. You know the way of the Court, Mr. Corniſh; you muſt plead.

Mr. Jones. If you will not plead, I will move the Court to record your ſtanding mute.

Mr. Corniſh. I have known that this Court hath heard what the Priſoner hath to ſay at the Bar; and I have more to ſay, perhaps, than any Man that ever ſtood at this Bar.

Recorder. Mr. Corniſh, when you have pleaded, you have time to ſpeak for your ſelf.

Clerk. Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand.

[Which he did.

Thou ſtandeſt indicted by the Name of Henry Corniſh.

THAT Henry Corniſh, late of the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, London, Merchant, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt illuſtrious Prince Charles the Second, late King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, then his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our late Sovereign Lord the King towards our late Sovereign Lord the King ſhould and of right ought

* It was indeed denied to Stephen Colledge, but it was allow'd Lord Ruſſel.

ought to bear, altogether withdrawing; and minding, and with all his Strength intending, the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to ſtir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, change, and alter, and our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and kingly Name of the Crown Imperial of this Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive; and our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put: the 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, London, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, with divers falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did conſpire, compaſs, imagine, and intend, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, his ſupreme and natural Lord, not only of his kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but alſo the ſaid late King to kill and put to death, and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter, and altogether ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our late Lord the King thorough this Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Lord the King to procure, promote, and aſſiſt: And the ſame moſt wicked and deviliſh Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, he the ſaid Henry Corniſh, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, to wit, the ſaid 30th Day of May, in the Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, and traitorouſly, knowing James the late Duke of Monmouth, William Ruſſel, Eſquire, and Thomas Armſtrong, Knight, and divers other Rebels and Traitors, then lately before in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid within the ſaid City of London, falſely, unlawfully, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, to have conſpired the Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King; he the ſaid Henry Corniſh, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, to wit, the ſaid 30th Day of May in the Year aforeſaid, within the Pariſh and Ward in the ſaid City of London, falſely, unlawfully, wickedly and traitorouſly, did promiſe to the ſaid divers falſe Traitors and Rebels, then and there preſent, That he the ſaid Henry Corniſh would be aiding and aſſiſting in the Treaſons aforeſaid, to be done, perfected, and brought to effect, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace, and againſt the Form of the Statute, &c.

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou, Henry Corniſh, art thou guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Mr. Corniſh. This is an heinous Charge.

Counſel. Anſwer; you know you muſt anſwer.

Mr. Corniſh. I am perfectly innocent.

Council. Are you guilty or not guilty? You muſt take the Words.

Mr. Corniſh. Not Guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be try'd?

Mr. Corniſh. By the Great God of Heaven, and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

L. C. J. Jones. I don't know in what State things are here in the Court; I can't tell whether there be a Jury return'd or not.

Clerk. He is arraign'd.

L. C. J. Jones. Why don't you go on with the Jury?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly pray your Lordſhip: I have ſome ground for it—

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall be heard in good time, Sir.

Mr. Corniſh. My poor Children laſt Night prefer'd a Petition to his Majeſty, and he was pleaſed to refer it moſt graciouſly to my Lords the Judges; and I now make my Application to your Lordſhips.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any Anſwer to the Petition, from the King?

Mr. Corniſh. It was referr'd to your Lordſhips the Judges, to conſider my Caſe.

L. C. J. Jones. We may hear more of your Buſineſs anon, when Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor do come: we will ſtay here till they come, to know whether there be any Order from the King to them concerning you.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope it will not be offenſive if I ſhould acquaint your Lordſhips what Uſage I have met with ſince I have been under Confinement. I have been under very cloſe Confinement, I had no notice of my Trial till about twelve a-clock on Saturday; no Friend came to me till eight a clock at Night; and I had no time for Preparation for my Trial. My Lord, theſe are hard things; but tho' I am denied Counſel, I truſt in God I ſhall not need Counſel, for I hope, if your Lordſhip pleaſes to allow me time, to clear my ſelf of all Matters; and I hope with ſuch Satisfaction to your Lordſhips, that you will acquieſce in whatſoever I ſhall lay before your Lordſhips. I do not come to make an Harangue and Talk; my Caſe was ſuch, that I had neither Pen, Ink, nor Paper.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor will come, we muſt hear them.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall be heard in your proper time; it is a ſtrange thing you won't be ſatisfied; you ſhall be heard, I tell you, in your proper time.

Mr. North. We have arraigned one Fernley, if you pleaſe to try him, who (with Ring) was brought to the Bar.

Clerk. You the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe Perſons you ſhall hear call'd, and appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your ſeveral Lives and Deaths: if you will challenge them or any of them, your time is to challenge them when they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Cryer. O-Yes! All manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence upon pain of Impriſonment.

The Middleſex Jury.

Nehemiah Arnold,	William Thompſon,
Francis Stevens,	William Read,
Richard Fiſher,	Samuel Peacock,
John Howlet,	Richard Fitz-gerrard,
John Vigures,	Richard Bromfield,
Samuel Birch,	John Haynes.

Cryer. O-Yes! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King and John Fernley and William Ring, the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance:

rance: and all Perſons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt either of the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance, and all Jury-men of Middleſex that have appear'd and are not ſworn, let them depart.

Clerk. Set William Ring to the Bar, and ſet by the other.

William Ring, hold up thy Hand. You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge; he ſtands indicted by the Name of William Ring, &c. (prout ante.) Your Charge is, to enquire whether he be guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. You, the Gentlemen that are ſworn, the Priſoner at the Bar is indicted for that knowing one Joſeph Kelloway, and one Henry Lawrence, to be falſe Traitors, and to have levied War againſt the King; on the 20th of July did harbour, conceal, and relieve thoſe Traitors, againſt the Duty, &c. Upon this he hath pleaded, Not Guilty, &c.

Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. At. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Courſe of our Evidence will be thus: Kelloway and Lawrence were in the late Rebellion in the Weſt, in the late Duke of Monmouth's Army; and after that Battle when they were overthrown, they came up to London, and the Priſoner at the Bar receiv'd and comforted them, and not only provided a Lodging, and Meat and Drink for them, but afterwards provides another Lodging for them: and this he knew, for they were very merry, telling the whole Story of the Fight; and notwithſtanding this he entertains them. We will firſt ſhew you the Record of the Conviction of Kelloway and Lawrence, and then call Witneſſes to prove the other things upon the Priſoner. (The Record produced) Mr. Harcourt ſworn.

L. C. J. Jones. Is that a true Copy of the Record?

Mr. Harcourt anſwered yes: whereupon the Clerk reads;

Joſeph Kelloway ſtands indicted by the Name of Joſeph Kelloway of Taunton, in the County of Somerſet, Yeoman; and Henry Lawrence of the ſame Pariſh and County, Yeoman; with a great many others.

L. C. J. Jones. See what they have done.

Clerk. They are indicted of Treaſon for levying War againſt the King, and they have confeſſed the Indictment upon their Arraignment; and the Judgment upon the Indictment, is, That the ſaid Kelloway, and the reſt of them there, ſhould be led to the Priſon from whence they came, and from thence to be drawn to the Place of Execution, and upon the Gallows there to be hang'd, every one of them in the ſaid Indictment, and living to be cut down, and their Entrails to be taken out of their Bodies, their Heads to be taken off from their Bodies, and their Bodies divided into four Quarters.

Mr. At. Gen. This ſhews they were Traitors. Now we will ſhew you, that in the mean time between their Treaſon and Conviction, this Priſoner did receive them. Call Mr. Barrington.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Barrington, what do you know concerning Mr. Ring?

Mr. Barrington. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, on the 11th of July laſt I was abroad about my Maſter's Buſineſs, and in the mean time when I was abſent, as I was inform'd, there came Mr. Ring, who lives in Wych-ſtreet at the Sign of the Bible; and when I return'd, I was told, that Mr. Ring was at our Houſe to ſpeak with me, and that there was one Mr. Lawrence there at Mr. Ring's at the Bible in Wych-ſtreet; and when I came there, there was Mr. Lawrence at Mr. Ring's Houſe; and when I came to the Houſe on the right hand, there was his Wife, as I take it: I aſked for Mr. Lawrence, and ſhe was a little at a Stand. Said I, I underſtand Mr. Ring was in ſuch a Place to inform me Mr. Lawrence deſired to ſpeak with me. Upon that he ſhew'd me where he was: I went up to him, and he was lying upon the Bed very weary and tired; and when I had been there a while, there came in one Kelloway, and they ſaid they came both out of the Weſt Country, and came on Friday Night, and I ſaw them on Saturday. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I called there after, and knocked at Mr. Ring's Door, and there came a Woman and made anſwer, That they were gone from thence both of them, and that they were to go on Ship-board to ſee ſome Friends; and I called there on Wedneſday the 15th Day at Night, to ſee Mr. Lawrence at Mr. Ring's Houſe, and Mr. Lawrence told me he was going from thence to the Pewter-Platter in St. John's; and when Mr. Common Serjeant came to examine me about theſe Men, I made a true Confeſſion, that they were at Mr. Ring's, and removed to the Pewter-Platter: and when we came to ſearch at the Pewter-Platter, at firſt they did not know any ſuch Men, till we deſcribed them. Then they confeſſed there were ſuch Men there on Tueſday and Wedneſday Night, but not the Night before, which was Thurſday Night. From thence we went without Temple Bar to Mr. Ring's, where they were at firſt; and Mr. Criſp and I went together to enquire for theſe Men, and there was a Woman, which I think is Mr. Ring's Wife, I can't tell. I enquired for theſe Men, and ſhe made anſwer, That they were not there at preſent, and ſaid ſhe could not tell at preſent, but that they lay there the laſt Night, which was Thurſday Night; that was Ring's Wife, I take it, ſhould ſay they were there the Night before, ſo after that ſhe had owned they lay there on the Thurſday Night, ſhe aſked me what this Gentleman was; ſo I told her, a Friend of mine. So afterwards we were at the Caſtle-Tavern without Temple-Bar by St. Clement's Church, and Mr. Common Serjeant was pleaſed to ſend for Mr. Ring to examine him about theſe Men, what Lodgers he had in his Houſe on Friday Night, Saturday Night, Sunday Night, and Monday Night. Mr. Ring knew nothing of any Men that came out of the Country; ſo upon that, he denying it, Mr. Common Serjeant order'd his Houſe to be ſearch'd, and in ſearching, they found a Paper upon the Chamber-Window, that was brought to the Caſtle-Tavern, where Mr. Ring was, and the Paper was produced, and Mr. Ring would confeſs nothing till ſuch time as they found that Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. See, is that the Paper you ſpeak of?

Mr. Barrington. That is all I have to ſay, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you ſee them in the Company of Ring?

Mr. Barrington. I did not ſee him when I was at the Houſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay Mr. Ring would confeſs nothing till ſuch time as the Paper was found; what did he ſay after the Paper was found? Mr. Finch.

Mr. Jones. Ring was by, what did he ſay upon producing that Paper?

L. C. J. Jones. Was the Paper ſhew'd to him?

Mr. Barrington. I think not; he would have ſeen it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You ſay he would confeſs nothing till that Paper was produced.

Mr. Barrington. Truly, I can ſay no more of it.

Mr. Jones. When the Paper was produced at the Caſtle-Tavern, what did he ſay then?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What did Ring ſay at the Caſtle-Tavern?

Mr. Barrington. I can't remember, but that he denied every thing.

Clerk. Call Mr. Barrow. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. Barrow. Sir, I heard Ring confeſs to my Lord Mayor in July laſt, that he lodg'd Lawrence and Kelloway, and that Lawrence and Kelloway did tell him, that they had been both in the late Weſtern Rebellion in Monmouth's Army; and that after that, he had lodg'd them two or three Nights, this I heard him confeſs.

Counſel. Pray ſpeak it again.

Mr. Barrow. That Lawrence and Kelloway had told Mr. Ring, they had been in the late Weſtern Rebellion in Monmouth's Army, and that he had lodg'd them two or three Nights in his own Houſe.

Mr. Common Serjeant. What did you hear him ſay concerning Mr. Herle?

Mr. Barrow. There was ſome talk concerning Mr. Herle or Hurle.

L. C. J. Jones. Did he ſay he lodg'd them, after they had told him that?

Mr. Barrow. After that. That is all I can ſay.

Clerk. Call Mr. Criſp. [Who was ſworn.

Counſel. Give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know concerning Mr. Ring.

Mr. Criſp. I went to ſearch Mr. Ring's Houſe, my Lord, and in the Window there was that Letter under Mr. Lawrence's own Hand, ſealed up and directed to Newberry for a Horſe which he had ſtole from his Maſter, and left at Newberry, which Letter I brought to the Tavern; and when we came to the Tavern, we examin'd him, and he denied every thing; but at laſt we ſhew'd him the Letter, and he own'd he had ſuch a Couſin, and another that he did not know, but that he did not lodge there then. And when he came to the Seſſions-Houſe, Lawrence and Kelloway were produced before him, and were examined what Account they had given to him, when they came to his Houſe; they told him after the Duke of Monmouth was beaten, they ran away to London, and Kelloway being his Couſin, brought Lawrence with him; they told him the Duke was beaten, and lay there Friday Night, Saturday Night, Sunday Night, and Monday Night.

Mr. Jones. He own'd he knew Mr. Kelloway.

Mr. Criſp. Yes.

L. C. J. And that Kelloway had been in the Duke's Army, and that he was beaten.

Mr. Criſp. Yes.

L. C. J. What did Ring ſay upon it?

Mr. Criſp. Ring ſaid nothing there to it; he confeſs'd he lodg'd them two or three Nights.

Counſel. Swear Mr. Hardiſty. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Hardiſty, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of his Examination?

Mr. Hardiſty. I was directed to attend my Lord Mayor at the Examination of Mr. Ring, the Priſoner at the Bar, above here in the Room, and did accordingly; and upon Examination, my Lord, he did make this Confeſſion. This is the Examination, and it is as he gave it in himſelf, and ſigned by himſelf.

L. C. J. Jones. And read to him?

Mr. Hardiſty. Yes, half a dozen times, I believe.

Mr. Common Serjeant. My Lord, upon the appearing of Lawrence and Kelloway before him then, he confeſs'd all.

The Examination of William Ring, of the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middleſex, Taylor, taken before the Right Honourable Sir James Smith, Knight, Lord Mayor of the City of London, this 18*th Day of* July, 1685. who being examined, ſaith as followeth,

THAT Joſeph Kelloway, and one Henry Lawrence, the ſaid Kelloway's Acquaintance, came to this Examinant's Houſe on Friday or Saturday laſt; that this Examinant did aſk of Kelloway (being this Examinant's Kinſman) what did drive them to Town? That they told this Examinant, that they went to Monmouth, that he was routed, and that brought them to Town, or to that purpoſe: that they were in Monmouth's Army. That the Night they came, he this Examinant told them, he was unwilling to lodge them; that he this Examinant did lodge them after this Diſcourſe, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday Nights, and they dined twice with this Examinant; that they were at his Houſe on Friday Morning; but where they lay on Wedneſday and Thurſday, ſaith he knows not. Saith, that Lawrence ſent this Examinant to a Glover in St. Bartholomew's Cloſe, who was a Journeyman in the Houſe, as this Examinant ſuppoſeth, and told the Maſter of the Houſe, that there was a Kinſman of his Journey-man's would ſpeak with his Journeyman. Saith, Kelloway and his Acquaintance told this Examinant, that they left their Horſes at Newberry. That a Note being produced, directed to this Examinant, to deliver ſeveral Goods therein mentioned, and being examined upon the ſaid Note, this Examinant ſaith, that he this Examinant was ſent for to the Caſtle-Tavern near Shoe-lane in Fleet-ſtreet, and one Bond brought this Examinant the Note above-mentioned, and now produced to him; believes the Note to be the hand-writing of James Hooper. That this Examinant was there to enquire of one Hearne, but expected to meet James Hooper, who formerly told this Examinant that he went by the Name of Hearne. That being in Diſcourſe with James Hooper about the time of the late Duke of Monmouth's Landing, James Hooper told this Examinant, that his the ſaid Hooper's Brother was with the Duke of Monmouth, and that he the ſaid James Hooper would go to him the ſaid Duke, or to that purpoſe. Further, this Examinant ſaith, that about a Fortnight ago he carried, according to a Note from Hooper to that purpoſe, to a Joiner's Houſe in Ivy-lane, London, a Cravat and a Pair of Cuffs, and then enquired for Hooper of a Woman of the ſaid Houſe; and ſaith, that then he this Examinant did ſpeak with James Hooper who lay private there, becauſe, as this Examinant believes, the ſaid Hooper was concerned in the Rebellion. Saith, he hath not ſeen him the ſaid Hooper this Fortnight, nor heard from him otherwiſe than by the Note now produced. Will. Ring.

Taken before me Sir James Smith, Lord-Mayor.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Richardſon, to prove that theſe were the ſame Men that were carried down. [Who was ſworn.] Mr. Richardſon, pray give an Account, whether theſe were the Men you carried down into the Weſt.

Mr. Richardſon. My Lord, thoſe two Perſons, that is, Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, that were committed for being in the late Rebellion, I carried them both down into the Weſt, where they were both convicted; one is executed, and the other has a Reprieve.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Henry Lawrence was Captain Hunt's Man.

Mr. Richardſon. The ſame, he ran away with his Horſe and Arms.

L. C. J. Jones. Can you tell theſe were the ſame Men that were preſent at his Examination?

Mr. Richardſon. The very ſame Men; they were committed at the ſame time; he was examined before them, for they were all committed at the ſame time together.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you ſay, Sir; you the Priſoner at the Bar, what do you ſay for yourſelf?

Mr. Ring. I did not underſtand what they were.

L. C. J. You knew the Priſoners, one of them was your Kinſman?

Mr. Ring. I did know him, but the other I did not know; I did not know what Deſign they had been upon.

L. C. J. Jones. Your own Examination ſays, you did.

Mr. Ring. Then my Examination is wrong.

L. C. J. Jones. Hear, hear again: You did receive them, and then they told you that they were in Monmouth's Army, and that Monmouth was beaten; and afterwards you continued to harbour them in your Houſe three Nights.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. And dined twice with them.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I never heard of it.

L. C. Baron. That Gentleman heard you ſay, they had told you they had been in Monmouth's Army, and you lodged them after.

Mr. Criſp. Yes, my Lord; and when we were there, the Woman would not own them.

L. C. J. Jones. Why did you hide them in your Houſe, and not confeſs it?

Mr. Ring. At firſt I did deny it.

Counſel. Yes, and did deny it, till Lawrence and the other Man were brought before you.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, what I did was ignorantly done.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you hear your Examination now read?

Mr. Ring. I heard moſt of it, I believe.

L. C. J. Jones. Pray let it be read again.

Counſel. It was read over and over four or five times.

Mr. Hardiſty. He was upon it, I believe, an hour together: it was taken firſt in parts, and as he recollected himſelf it was compared, and afterwards my Lord-Mayor deſired him to conſider with himſelf: and then the Examination was written fair over, and he ſigned it, and it was read ſeveral times, ſix or ſeven times.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I do acknowledge I did lodge them, but I did not undeſtand what Deſign they had been upon.

L. C. J. Jones. But you ſee here you have acknowledged they ſaid they were in the Army, and you did lodge them afterwards; they were of Monmouth's Party, they had told you ſo. Read that part again.

Mr. Hardiſty. Joſeph Kelloway, and one Lawrence the ſaid Kelloway's Acquaintance, came to this Examinant's Houſe on Friday or Saturday laſt; that this Examinant did aſk Kelloway, being this Examinant's Kinſman, what did drive them to Town? That they told this Examinant, that they went to Monmouth, that he was routed, and that that brought them to Town.

Mr. Ring. I never ſaid that Word.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is under your Hand.

Mr. Ring. If it be under my Hand, I never ſaid it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that part read to him?

Mr. Hardiſty. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. Read on.

Mr. Hardiſty. That they were in Monmouth's Army; that the Night they came, this Examinant told them, he was unwilling to lodge them, and that this Examinant did lodge them after this Diſcovery, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday Night, and they dined twice at this Examinant's Houſe.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you ſay now to this? Can there be any thing more plain?

Mr. Ring. I do acknowledge, my Lord, I did lodge them, but I was not ſenſible what the Iſſue of this Buſineſs would be.

L. C. J. Jones. You did not know, that to harbour known Traitors was High-Treaſon.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I don't know whether they came from Monmouth or no.

L. C. J. Jones. It is no great matter whether you do or no; they told you ſo.

Mr. Ring. I never heard ſuch a Word from them.

L. C. J. Jones. How came it to be put in your Examination?

Mr. Ring. I don't know, my Lord, when it was taken I was in amaze. I think the Pariſh knew well enough, that I never kept any ſuch Company, nor had any ſuch Deſign.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He confeſſes it over Night, cauſes it to be writ down next Day, and ſets his Hand to it too: Nothing can be more plain.

L. C. J. That is a great Argument you were not in ſuch ſurprize, that you had not the uſe of your Underſtanding; for you confeſſed the ſame thing over Night, and you had time to conſider of it all Night, and you came the next Morning, and then confeſſed as now it is written, and put your Hand to it.

Mr. Ring. I was ordered to put my Hand to it.

L. C. J. Jones. That is, if you acknowledged it to be true.

Mr. Ring. I did not know what was put down.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. The matter is ſo plain, that nothing can be more. When they came to you, they inform'd you where they had been, and afterwards you were unwilling to lodge them; you knew therefore they had been in the Rebels Army, and ſo the matter is plain: and for ought I can hear, this is not the firſt time you have harbour'd ſuch Men.

L. C. J. Jones. There is another thing touching one Hurle; but you are not charged with it in the Indictment, and ſo we don't trouble the Jury with any Evidence concerning that. Have you any more to ſay?

Mr. Ring. I do acknowledge, my Lord, that I lodg'd them; but I did not underſtand any thing elſe.

L. C. J. Jones. Why! did not you confeſs it?

Mr. Ring. I did not confeſs it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. And you ſhifted Lodging for them after they were known to you.

Mr. Ring. I did not,

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon for receiving Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, who were Traitors, and known to him to be Traitors, and harbouring them in his Houſe, and giving them Entertainment and Comfort: This, Gentlemen, is clearly High-Treaſon by Law; and tho' this Man himſelf were not in actual Rebellion, yet if he do receive any that he knows to have been ſo, he is equally guilty; he is a principal Traitor by the Judgment of the Law, and however he would now pretend his Ignorance, that he did not know that they were in the Army, or, if he did know they were in the Army, that he had incurr'd ſo great a Danger as the Forfeiture of his Life, which now he ſtands as well as he can to defend; yet it does appear plainly to you, not only by his own Confeſſion taken upon his Examination but likewiſe by the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes, who were preſent at the time when he did confeſs that theſe Men had diſcourſed with him, and acknowledged that they were in Monmouth's Army, and that he was routed, and that yet he did entertain and receive them. The firſt Witneſs indeed does not ſay the very thing, but it is very much inducing to the Evidence that is given more expreſs by the other Witneſs: for he ſays that he was at his Houſe, and he enquir'd for them there, tho' he did not ſee him at all, but his People; and they not only did confeſs that they had lodged there, but that there was a Lodging provided for them elſewhere: But however, if that were quite laid aſide, and not taken at all into Conſideration, yet what is teſtified by the other Witneſſes, and upon his own Examination, makes it as clear and plain as can be, that he did receive theſe Perſons into his Houſe, and comfort them, and entertain them, knowing them to have been guilty of High-Treaſon, that is, to have been in the Army of Monmouth, of that Party, and that they came to London, and went away from the Weſt becauſe he was beaten; and there is an Expreſſion in the Examination to that purpoſe: ſo that I take the Indictment to be very full and clearly prov'd upon him; and it is not his Ignorance of the Law that will excuſe him, that is, his Ignorance of the Danger that he hath incurr'd by entertaining theſe People; altho' you cannot but take notice, that he was in ſome dread and fear that it was an Offence to do ſo: for at firſt he ſays by his Examination, that he did refuſe to entertain them, which ſhews that he had ſome Conſideration of the Danger that he might incur by receiving them: and yet after this plain Diſcourſe of theirs, that they were in the Army, he entertains them. That they were the ſame Men that were in the Army, appears plainly: for though at firſt he did deny it, and did ſtand in it, before he was confronted by the Men, they being preſent; yet afterwards he did confeſs, that they were the Men that were entertain'd by him; and that they were the ſame Men, doth appear by the Teſtimony of Captain Richardſon, who ſaw them, and afterwards cauſed them to be brought down to the Weſt, where one of them was executed for Treaſon. So I muſt leave it to you, Gentlemen. I think it is a very plain Caſe.

Mr. Ring. Here is abundance of theſe things that I know nothing of.

Counſel. Set John Fernley to the Bar.

[Which was done.

Clerk. John Fernley, hold up thy Hand. You that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge: He ſtands indicted by the Name of John Fernley, &c. (prout ante.)

Mr. Phipps. This is an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt John Fernley, the Priſoner at the Bar: It ſets forth, that the ſaid John Fernley knowing one James Burton to be a Traitor, and to have conſpir'd againſt the Life of the King, did traitorouſly conceal the ſaid Burton two Days and two Nights, and gave him Meat and Drink againſt the Duty, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner ſtands indicted of Treaſon for receiving and harbouring one James Burton who was guilty of Treaſon, he knowing him to have been guilty of Treaſon. And the courſe of our Evidence will be this: We will prove that this James Burton ſtood outlawed for Treaſon before he committed a new Treaſon, when he went into the Weſt, and was there with Monmouth in the late Rebellion; and tho', Gentlemen, the very Outlawry againſt the ſaid Burton is enough to ſatisfy any Man, that this Man could not be ignorant that he was a Traitor, for no Man can imagine, when a Man ſtands out a Proceſs till he become out-lawed for High-Treaſon, that any ſhould be ignorant that he is guilty of Treaſon, and that it would be very dangerous to receive a Man after that, without any more Evidence: But this Burton, after he was outlawed and fled, came again, and was in Arms with Monmouth in the Rebellion; and after their Defeat he came up to Town: And Fernley knowing he had been then in the Weſt with Monmouth, he received him, and harboured him; and this we will prove by Witneſſes. Firſt, we will ſhew the Record of the Outlawry.

Clerk.——An Indictment preferr'd againſt James Burton, and divers others for High-Treaſon, for which the ſaid Burton and divers others ſtand outlawed, by the Return of Samuel Daſhwood Eſq; and Sir Peter Daniel, Sheriffs. This is the Record it ſelf, my Lord.

Counſel. Swear Mr. Ward. [Which was done.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Look upon it, Mr. Ward; is that the Record?

Mr. Ward. Yes, it is, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray ſee when the Outlawry was.

Mr. Hardiſty. Upon Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Martin, Biſhop, the ſaid Richard Rumbold, Richard Goodenough, Francis Goodenough: [Here are the Names of a great many Men.]

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Is James Burton among them?

Mr. Hardiſty. On Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Michael, the ſaid Richard Rumbold, James Burton, Richard Nelthorp, are outlawed, and every one of them is outlawed——It is November was Twelve-month.

Call James Burton. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. North. James Burton, ſtand up there: Do you give my Lord and the Jury an account concerning your being in the Weſt, and your being entertain'd here at Mr. Fernley's Houſe, with all the Circumſtances.

Mr. Burton. I came out of the Weſt into London, on Wedneſday Night from Monmouth's Army.

L. C. J. Jones. What Wedneſday Night?

Mr. Burton. Truly I have forgot the Day of the Month, but it was about three Weeks after the Rout, and I came home to my Wife and ſtaid two Nights, and ſhe was not ſatisfied I ſhould be there, and went to endeavour to get a Lodging for me for two or three Nights, and ſhe went to get leave at Mr. Fernley's for me to be there two or three Nights; and I went thither on Friday Night, and on Sabbath-day in the Evening I was taken there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Speak aloud, ſay that again.

Mr. Burton. On Wedneſday Night I came out of the Country, after I had been in the Army; I came home to my Wife, and ſtaid till Friday Night, and on Friday Night ſhe got me a Lodging at Mr. Fernley's; there I went about ten a-clock at Night, and ſtaid there till Sunday Night, and I was taken.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did you ſee Mr. Fernley?

Mr. Burton. I ſaw him at Dinner on Sunday, and not before.

L. C. J. Jones. What Acquaintance had you before? He does not keep a publick Houſe, does he?

Mr. Burton. I had been gone two Years, or very nigh.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the Occaſion of your going?

Mr. Burton. My Wife was acquainted there.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the Occaſion of your going away, and your Abſence for two Years?

Mr. Burton. The Occaſion of my going then, was, I was in the Proclamation for being with Rumbold at the Mitre-Tavern within Aldgate.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Fernley knew you before, did not he?

Mr. Burton. He knew me by Sight.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Had you any Acquaintance with him?

Mr. Burton. I lived pretty near to him for a while.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. How near?

Mr. Burton. I lived within two or three Doors of him.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Did he know you?

Mr. Burton. Yes, yes, he did know me.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. You came to lodge at his Houſe on Friday Night?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe you.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Had you no Diſcourſe till Sunday you dined together?

Mr. Burton. No, not till Sunday at Dinner.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Tell your Diſcourſe at Dinner.

Mr. Burton. My Lord, I have forgot what altogether the Diſcourſe was; I had ſome Diſcourſe of the Army; he knew I was in the Army.

L. C. J. Jones. I would have you ſpeak the Senſe, ſo far as you remember of the Diſcourſe at that Time with him.

Mr. Burton. The Senſe, as far as I remember, was, that the Army was routed.

L. C. J. Jones. And that you were there?

Mr. Burton. He knew I was there.

L. C. J. Jones. How came he to know you were there?

Mr. Burton. I believe I told him ſo my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. —— Upon your Oath, did he know you fled upon the Account of the Proclamation before?

Mr. Burton. It is like he might know it by others, but not by me.

L. C. J. Jones. When were you taken; What Day?

Mr. Burton. I was taken on Sunday in the Evening: I had been four Days in London; two Days at Home, and two Days at his Houſe.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you not ſee him before Sunday at Dinner?

Mr. Burton. My Lord, he was in the Shop all Saturday; he is a Barber.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You lay privately at his Houſe all Saturday?

Mr. Burton. Yes, my Lord, privately.

Counſel. Call Mary Burton.

[Who was ſworn.]

Mr. North. How came this Man to lodge at Mr. Fernley's Houſe, can you give an Account? and why it was?

Mrs. Burton. Becauſe I thought he was not ſafe at home; and having Acquaintance with Mrs. Fernley, lodging pretty near, and ſhe being a young Woman, and having Children, I had Acquaintance, going to and fro; and we having a cloſe Houſe and no Yard, I had the Privilege of going to dry Linnen there, ſo that we had Acquaintance, and a little Familiarity; and being acquainted, I thought I might have Entertainment there; that is all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Jones. Were you at Dinner upon Sunday?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, I was at Dinner.

L. C. J. Jones. What Diſcourſe had they at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Indeed I can't ſay they had any Diſcourſe, I was very ill and laid me down upon the Bed, and fell aſleep.

L. C. J. Jones. You are upon your Oath.

Mrs. Burton. I know I am, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. What Diſcourſe was at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Whilſt I was eating, I did not mind.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. You liv'd cloſe by, why did you aſk for a Lodging there?

Mrs. Burton. We do not live cloſe by now, I live with my Daughter, I have no Houſe now.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. She knew he was your Huſband, why ſhould you lodge your Huſband at another Houſe, than where you lodged your ſelf?

Mrs. Burton. What was it you ſaid, My Lord?

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Sure you would give the Woman ſome Account, why you lodged your Huſband at another Houſe than where you lodged your ſelf.

Mrs. Burton. She was not altogether a Stranger, and upon the Account of the Proclamation there were none of them Strangers.

L. C. J. Jones. For whom did you aſk a Lodging?

Mrs. Burton. For my Huſband.

Mr. North. Did you ſpeak with Mr. Fernley himſelf?

Mrs. Burton. I did not ſpeak with Mr. Fernley himſelf.

Mr. North. On Sunday you ſaw him at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, I ſaw him at Dinner.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Had you any Diſcourſe with them about the Proclamation?

Mr. At. Gen. About your Huſband's going away upon that Proclamation;

Mrs. Burton. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, my Diſtreſs was ſo great, that I was hardly in my Senſes to diſcourſe with any body; but, I thank God, I am now in my Senſes between whiles.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you any Diſcourſe with your Neighbours about that Proclamation your Huſband went away upon?

Mrs. Burton. I had not, indeed.

Then Mr. Reynolds was ſworn.

Mr. North. Mr. Reynolds, what do you know concerning Mr. Burton's being lodged at Mr. Fernley's Houſe?

Mr. Reynolds. Towards the Beginning of Auguſt laſt, hearing that there were ſeveral that were in the Weſt lurk'd about Wapping, I took the Lieutenant

of

of the Tower's Warrant, and we had ſome Intimation, that a ſuſpected Perſon lay at Mr. Fernley's Houſe; I went on Sunday about eight a-clock at Night, and took Mr. Burton in Mr. Fernley's Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You took him there, did you;

Mr. Reynolds. I took him there, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſpeak with Fernley before you took Burton?

Mr. Reynolds. I took Burton; and Mr. Fernley being Maſter of the Houſe, I wiſhed the Conſtable to ſecure him for harbouring him.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Fernley ſay?

Mr. Reynolds. Says I, Mr. Fernley, how come you to harbour Mr. Burton that is in the King's Proclamation; he is a Traitor, you know. Says he, I did not know it was Mr. Burton, but my Wife deſired me to lie out of the Chamber where I lay before, that a Friend of her's might lie there for two or three Days.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you find him?

Mr. Reynolds. He was in a Room up one pair of Stairs, up the Chimney; and while we were there, he fell down the Chimney, with all the Soot about him: Mr. Fernley was then one pair of Stairs higher; and I deſired the Conſtable to go up to ſee for him.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you no Diſcourſe with him about the Buſineſs of being in the Army? With Fernley, I mean.

Mr. Reynolds. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you hear no Diſcourſe between Burton and him?

Mr. Reynolds. No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He was very friendly, to lie out of his own Chamber for him.

Mr. Reynolds. They were put in two ſeparate Chambers, by the King's Direction, till they were ſent to Newgate.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you on Sunday Night that he did not know it was Burton.

Mr. Reynolds. To the beſt of my Remembrance, he did ſo, when I brought him to the Tower.

Mr. At. Gen. And yet he dined with him on Sunday.

Mr. Reynolds. I looked upon it as an Excuſe.

Mr. North. What Day was Burton taken?

Mr. Reynolds. It was Sunday.

Mr. North. What time on Sunday?

Mr. Reynolds. Sunday about eight a-clock at Night. He had been in Bed, my Lord, I believe; and before we could get open the Door, I believe he got out of Bed, and went to get up the Chimney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, you obſerve in the courſe of the Evidence, that the firſt Evidence we produce is James Burton; now James Burton ſtood outlawed for Treaſon, and as he ſtands outlawed he is not a competent Witneſs: but now to take off that Objection which the Priſoner ought to make, but we make it for him, we ſhew you here a Pardon whereby that Outlawry is diſcharg'd, ſo that he ſtands now a very legal Witneſs.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You underſtand, Gentlemen, what Mr. Sollicitor mentions.

[The Pardon produced and read.]

L. C. J. Jones. What ſay you?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I am charged for entertaining Burton. My Lord, I knew nothing of him when he came into my Houſe till Sabbath-day at Dinner. I aſked my Wife what time Burton came in; ſhe told me he came on Friday Night. Saturday was a buſy Day with me, my Lord; on Sunday Morning I got up and went to Church; when I came from Church, I went up to Dinner; and when I came in and ſaw him, I aſked him, what in the Name of God brought him there? It hath pleaſed God, ſaid he, to preſerve me hitherto; and my Wife interceded ſo far, as to procure me a Night's Lodging, which I hope may be no Detriment to you. I wiſh it may not, ſaid I; and at Dinner I aſked him, how he made his Eſcape, and he told me how he did eſcape. Says I, what do you mean to do? Says he, ſome Friends will procure me a Paſſage beyond Sea. Upon this I conſidered with my ſelf, and diſcours'd with him about the Weſt, and his Eſcape out of it; and about half an hour after we had dined, one knocked at the Door.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. What Day was this?

Mr. Fernley. Sabbath-day at Noon, ſome body knocked at the Door, and they told me there was one would ſpeak with me, and I came down, and there was one Gaunt in the Shop; ſays he, is Mr. Burton within? May I ſpeak with him? Yes, ſaid I: up I went, and Gaunt with me; and when we came into the Room they embraced one another, and were very glad to ſee one another, and Burton gave Mr. Gaunt Thanks for a Guinea he had ſent him. Says Gaunt, Mr. Burton, I am glad to ſee you; I hope in a little Time I ſhall have a Paſſage for you beyond Sea: ſays he, if you had been here a while ſooner, you might have gone; there are ſome Gentlemen went away a while ago. Says I to Mr. Gaunt, who were they? He told me it was Major——and his Son, and another: ſays I to Mr. Gaunt, do you hear of Ferguſon? No, ſays he, I hear nothing of him as yet, but in a little Time I may hear from him; and Burton aſked, when he thought he might be going? In a Day or two's time, ſaid he. Says Burton, I have no Money nor no Clothes; ſays he, take no care for that, ſo he named ſome Gentlemen that were to go: he told him of Colonel Danvers and Major Wildman. Upon this Diſcourſe, within my ſelf I did conſider what way I might do his Majeſty a Piece of Service: I thought it better to forbear, and not to ſeize him preſently, till I had acquainted ſome Magiſtrate; and I did think in the Morning to have gone to a Juſtice of Peace, and have had him apprehended: Burton, my Lord, I knew was ſecure, for he could not eſcape my Hands. I had no Deſign of concealing him; I have ſeveral eminent Gentlemen to teſtify for my Loyalty. I thank God, I never had an ill Thought againſt his Majeſty in my Life, only this Misfortune hath befallen me upon the Account of my Wife. I am as innocent as a Child unborn, as to any Thing againſt the King.

L. C. J. Jones. But he plainly told you, he came from the Army.

Mr. Fernley. He did acquaint me, my Lord, he did ſo; as ſoon as I ſaw him, I was ſtartled; I did look upon it as a Thing ſent from God Almighty; for I knew, my Lord, that there was 100 l. for him; I knew there was a Proclamation out againſt him; but as for the Outlawry, I knew nothing of that: a Proclamation I knew there was againſt him, and being a poor Man, there was no Obligation upon me to conceal him, and ruin my ſelf and Family.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the Reaſon, you were ſo kind as to part with your own Lodging to entertain him?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I had quitted my Chamber before he came to the Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is proved you did it upon his Account.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, no body will offer to ſay that.

L. C. J. Jones. That you quitted your Lodging, and that he came into the ſame Lodging, is clearly proved.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, my Chamber was fitted above a Week before he came, not knowing of him, for I had no Thoughts of him.

L. C. J. Jones. Pray what Servants have you?

Mr. Fernley. Only a Boy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Could not you have ſent out your Boy when he dad diſcourſed thus treaſonably with you, but keep him in your Houſe ſeven or eight Hours after you had entertain'd him at Dinner?

Counſel. Are you a Conſtable?

Mr. Fernley. I am a Conſtable my ſelf, and upon the Account of my Office I was the more ſecure. I was certain he could not eſcape my Hands, and I thought to do his Majeſty more Service.

L. C. J. Jones. How could you do his Majeſty more Service?

Mr. Fernley. Gaunt told him, he would come again to him.

L. C. J. Jones. When did he come to you?

Mr. Fernley. About half an Hour after Dinner.

L. C. J. Jones. But you ſhould have ſeized him immediately after Dinner. How came this Man to take ſo much Freedom before you that were an Officer, as to talk High-Treaſon?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I thank God, if I were to die this Minute, I never harbour'd a Thought againſt the King.

* William Montague, Eſq; L. C. * Baron. If you had had a loyal Heart, you ſhould have kept Gaunt, if you had any Thoughts to have done it.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I will tell you why I let Gaunt go, becauſe he promiſed to come again the next Day.

L. C. J. Jones. Would you, being a Conſtable, let a Man go upon his Word, that had confeſſed himſelf guilty of Treaſon?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, if I did any Thing, it was ignorantly. My Lord, as for Gaunt, when I knew there was a Proclamation out againſt Danvers and Wildman, I hearing Gaunt diſcourſing about their Deſign, I thought (promiſing to come the next Day) to know how they were to go.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. For God's ſake, would you truſt all this to your own Breaſt! If you had had an honeſt Intention, you would have gone to ſome Officers, and acquainted them with it; ſome of the King's Juſtices of the Peace, or ſome of the Privy-Council, that ſuch Perſons would be at your Houſe the next Day.

L. C. Baron. By your own Diſcourſe, after you had heard all this Diſcourſe, and after Burton had told you this, you could let him go quietly to his own Chamber: If you had ſuch a Deſign as you ſay, you ſhould have firſt ſeized Burton.

Mr. Fernley. Another Chamber; no, he dined in his Chamber, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You went into another Chamber from him. Have you any Witneſſes?

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. They had a Confidence in you, otherwiſe Burton and Gaunt would not have talk'd ſo freely before you.

L. C. J. Jones. There was a great Confidence in lodging him in your Houſe, being a Conſtable; no body would ſearch a Conſtable's Houſe. Have you any Witneſſes to call?

Mr. Fernley. Mr. William Ruſh, Captain Haddock. [Who were call'd.]

L. C. J. Jones. Did Burton's Wife dine with you and him?

Mr. Fernley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Where did you dine?

Mr. Fernley. In the Chamber, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. And was this Diſcourſe concerning Monmouth's being beaten in the Weſt, at the time of Dinner?

Mr. Fernley. The Diſcourſe of it? Yes, my Lord, what Diſcourſe was, was at Dinner.

Mr. Juſt. —— Was Burton's Wife at Dinner, or was ſhe upon the Bed?

Mr. Fernley. She din'd at the Table, my Lord. My Lord, ſhe went to ſleep when Gaunt came in.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Where did ſhe go to ſleep, in the ſame Room?

Mr. Fernley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Where do you uſe to dine at other times?

Mr. Fernley. In the Kitchen, my Lord. My Lord, when I came from Church, the Dinner was ſent up thither.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, you are upon your Oath, remember that you are oblig'd by your Oath to confeſs the Truth, let it concern whom it will: The Diſcourſe between your Huſband and this Man, you could not but be privy to; there was only you three at Dinner, your Huſband, you, and Fernley, the Priſoner at the Bar: All this Diſcourſe was at Dinner-time, how is it poſſible that you ſhould not hear it?

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Fernley himſelf owns he did diſcourſe with your Huſband at Dinner, that he came from the Rebels in the Weſt.

Mrs. Burton. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, I did not hear. As I ſaid before, I muſt ſay again, I did not hear.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Nothing about Monmouth?

Mrs. Burton. No, not one Word, if I were to die as I ſtand here.

Mr. Juſt. ——— You were at Dinner?

Mrs Burton. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. ——— And this Diſcourſe was at Dinner-time?

Mrs. Burton. I did not hear it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What would you aſk him, Sir?

Mr. Fernley. What Account can he give of my Life and Converſation, how I have behaved my ſelf, and carried my ſelf.

L. C. J Jones. What are you, Sir? What is your Quality?

Mr. Ruſh. I am a Diſtiller, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Where do you dwell?

Mr. Ruſh. I did dwell two Years ago in Wapping, but not now: I live now at Waltham-Stow.

Officer. He is a very great Whig.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If he be a Whig, he can't be a little one.

L. C. J. Jones. How long have you liv'd at Waltham-Stow?

Mr. Ruſh. Two Years and upwards, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. That is long before any Thing that this Man is charged withal.

Mr. Ruſh. I formerly knew the Man, he was a Barber, and us'd to trim me: I always looked upon him to be a good ſober Man.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. A Wapping-Man, a ſober Wapping-Man!

Mr. Ruſh. I hope there is a great many there.

L. C. J. Jones. That is all you ſay for him.

Mr. Ruſh. I have nothing to ſay to his Fact: He demeaned himſelf always well among his Neighbours; I know nothing of the Fact for which he is here.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Burton?

Mr. Rush. Yes, Sir,

Mr. At. Gen. What was Burton? was he reputed an honest Man?

Mr. Rush. I never knew him otherwise; I never was in his Company; I know he dwelt close by where I liv'd.

L. C. J. Jones. And you took him to be a very honest Man?

Mr. Rush. Before this: He has not been so lately, it seems. He is a Person I never had any Company or Conversation with in my Life.

Cryer. Captain Haddock.

Officer. He won't come in, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Well, well, let him stay there.

Cryer. Mr. Dove.

Officer. He won't come in, I can't make him come in.

L. C. J. Jones. Here are none that give any Testimony for you, at least will —— What are you?

Mr. Whittal. I dwell in Wapping, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levinz. What Trade are you?

Mr. Whittal. A Plumber.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Who knows you?

Mr. Whittal. I am well known there, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Do you go to Church?

Mr. Whittal. Here's Mr. Tanner knows me, the Clerk of the Peace.

Mr. Tanner. Yes, Sir, I know him.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Do you go to Church?

Mr. Whittal. Always went to Church.

Mr. Just. Withins. There were a Parcel of them that went constantly to Church trimmingly.

L. C. J. Jones. Prisoner, what would you ask him?

Mr. Fernley. Only to give an Account how I behaved my self.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, Sir, what do you say?

Mr. Whittal. All I know is, he behav'd himself very well, and went to Church as other Neighbours did; and I never heard him speak against the Government.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did you know Burton?

Mr. Whittal. No, Sir; he was gone before I came to live there.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any more to say?

Mr. Fernley. This, my Lord, may give some Account, that I had no Design against the Government. I am a poor Man, my Lord, and upon that Account I owe a great deal of Money: I knew there was 100 l. for securing Burton, there was no Gain by concealing him; he was not a Person could requite me, that I should harbour him, and lose 100 l. which was certain for taking him; which, my Lord, shews I had no Design.

L. C. J. Jones. No, this argues you to be a stronger Confederate; and that you were so firm to your Party, you would not gain 100 l. though you might have it for doing your Duty.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I look'd upon it as sure as if I had it in my Pocket. I knew nothing of him till Sabbath-day at Noon, and I did not design to conceal him afterwards, any farther than to serve the King.

L. C. J. Jones. You tell us a Story of your self, it is to no Purpose to try any Prisoner, if his Saying must be taken for Evidence: We will hear what Witnesses you have to produce, or if you can object to the Evidence that's against you.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I own it to be true, I have declared more than the Witnesses have said against me; but, my Lord, I am innocent in it, God knows my Heart, I had no Design in it. It was but six hours I knew of him.

Mr. Just. Withins. You lay out of your Bed before?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, not upon his account; I was a Week before out of that Bed, to prepare it for my Wife to lie-in.

L. C. J. Jones. Is your Wife delivered?

Mr. Fernley. No.

L. C. J. Jones. You made great haste.

Mr. Fernley. It was my Wife's Fault.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Prisoner stands indicted for harbouring and relieving one James Burton, knowing him to have committed Treason. Gentlemen, you are to be acquainted, that this James Burton was not only guilty of the late Rebellion in the West, but he was likewise charg'd by Process with being guilty of the Plot at the Rye-house, and thereupon there were such Proceedings by Law, that he was outlawed, the Record of which Outlawry hath been produced to you: so that if there were no more, if you be persuaded that he is the Person guilty, whether he were in the Rebellion in the West or no, that may induce you to find this Indictment, for the Prisoner receiving him after the Rebellion in the West, and knowing him to have committed Treason, whereupon he was outlawed, it equally makes him liable to the Offence wherewith he is charg'd. But, Gentlemen, that is not all; you have express Testimony from Burton himself, who it seems was acquainted with him, and who had fled from his Neighbourhood, by the space of two Years almost, and yet he receives this Burton into his House: I will not say, at the first time that he came into his House, it doth appear by any Evidence, that he knew him to have been in the Rebellion in the West; but when he came thither upon Friday, he was so kind to him as to leave his own Chamber, and to let him have that for his Lodging, although now he gives you another Excuse plainly frivolous and false, that is, a Pretence of making way for his Wife to lie-in, who yet is not delivered. He lies there upon Saturday Night, and dines with him upon Sunday. Saturday perhaps might be a busy Day, and there is no Testimony at all given by any Evidence of any Discourse that was between them upon that Day; but upon Sunday, when they dined together, Burton swears, that he did tell him that he had been in the West in the Rebellion there, and he came thither for Shelter. This Man being acquainted with this, allowed him to dine with him, and harboured him in his House for the space of seven or eight Hours more, without bringing him before any Justice of Peace, or any Magistrate who had Authority to commit him, although he had a particular Authority of his own (as he was Constable) for the Conservation of the Peace, yet he forgets his Oath as well as his Duty and Allegiance, and suffers him still to remain there. It is true, the Wife of Burton dined with them, as Burton himself says, and the Woman confesses; but she was so busy at her Victuals, that she can remember nothing, she did not hear that there was any Discourse concerning Monmouth. But lest you should want another Witness, for Burton is but one Witness to that particular, you have him plainly confessing it himself, which is above thousand Witnesses; you have him confessing that Burton did acknowledge he had been in the West, and that Monmouth was routed, and yet he continues him in his House, nay more, this Man doth appear to be a Perſon in whom there was that great Confidence, that another Perſon, Gaunt came, and he bids him come into his Houſe, and there he diſcours'd of ſome Traitors, and the means of conveying away Burton, though he had confeſſed it himſelf. Gentlemen, what he tells you, is, that he did mean to diſcover; when did he intend to diſcover? He did not diſcover to any body, before the Man was apprehended by an Officer: he lets Gaunt, who plainly appears to be as errant a Traitor as could be in the world, to go away meerly upon his own Parole, without taking any courſe to apprehend him. He pretends he is a poor Man, and he might have gain'd 100 l. if he had diſcover'd him, and ſurely he would have diſcover'd him, to gain 100 l. But this is a ſtrong Argument, that he was deep in the Rebellion himſelf, and one in great Eſteem with them, that being a poor Man, he would not do his Duty, for which he might have had a Reward of 100 l. but ſuffers him to eſcape. This is the Caſe, Gentlemen, that is before you; if you believe he did knowingly, as he himſelf upon the matter doth confeſs, give any comfort or relief to Burton, knowing him to be a Rebel, you ought to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider the Evidence.

Clerk. Set Elizabeth Gaunt to the Bar, [which was done.] Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand, [which ſhe did.]

THou ſtandeſt indicted by the Name of Elizabeth Gaunt, Wife of William Gaunt, of the Pariſh of St. Mary White-Chappel, in the County of Middleſex, Yeoman; as a falſe Traitor againſt our late Serene Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God her then natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in her Heart, nor weighing the Duty of her Allegiance, but moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and the true and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King towards our ſaid late Lord the King of right ought to bear withdrawing, and with all her Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to ſtir up and move, and the Government of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King in this his Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the Crown Imperial of this Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, and our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put: The 24th Day of September, in the 36th Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, within the Pariſh, &c. falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, with divers Rebels and Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, ſhe did conſpire, imagine, and intend our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, her then ſupreme and natural Lord, not only from his Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government of this Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but alſo our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to kill and put to death, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom of England to alter and wholly ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King throughout this Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to procure and aſſiſt. And the ſaid moſt wicked and deviliſh Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to paſs, the ſaid Elizabeth Gaunt, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, to wit, the ſaid 24th Day of September, in the Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, well knowing one James Burton to be a falſe Traitor, and as a falſe Traitor traitorouſly to have compaſſed and imagined the Death and Deſtruction of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King within this Kingdom of England, together with other Traitors (to the Jurors unknown) to have intended to be raiſed; ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Gaunt afterwards, to wit, the ſaid 24th Day of September, in the Year aforeſaid, within the City of London aforeſaid, the ſaid James Burton, in a certain Houſe of a Perſon to the Jurors unknown, knowingly, ſecretly, wickedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, did entertain, conceal, comfort, ſuſtain, and maintain, and then and there, for the comforting, ſuſtenance, and maintenance of him the ſaid James Burton, Meat, Drink, and 5 l. in Money for the maintenance and ſuſtenance of him the ſaid James Burton, unto the ſaid James Burton, maliciouſly, and traitorouſly, ſhe did give and deliver, and cauſe to be given and delivered, againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, and againſt the Peace, &c. and againſt the Form of the Statute, &c.

Clerk. How ſay'ſt thou, art thou guilty or not guilty?

Mrs. Gaunt. I deſire to have more time to conſider of it.

L. C. J. Jones. You know whether you be guilty of this Offence; what need you have any time of Conſideration for that?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't know, Sir; I am ignorant in the Law, and in things of that nature.

L. C. J. Jones. But this is not Matter of Law; it is, whether you did receive theſe Traitors or no knowingly; this James Burton, knowing him to have committed Treaſon: Can't you tell whether you did or no?

Mrs. Gaunt. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Mrs. Gaunt. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Then the Middleſex Jury returning, Mrs. Gaunt was ſet aſide, and Ring and Fernley brought to the Bar, who were both brought in guilty by the Jury.

Clerk. Set Henry Corniſh to the Bar, and Elizabeth Gaunt, [Which was done.]——You the Priſoners at the Bar, theſe Men that have been now called, and here appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your ſeveral Lives or Deaths: If you challenge any of them, you muſt ſpeak as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I muſt humbly beg leave of your Lordſhip and this honourable Court, that I may renew my Requeſt. The time of notice given me for my Trial being ſo ſhort, it hath no Precedent, I think: I humbly pray your Lordſhip I may have time allowed for my Trial; I have had no Counſel, no Pannel, no Help in the world; I had not Pen, Ink, nor Paper, my Lord, theſe are very hard things. My Lord, his Majeſty was petition'd laſt Night by my Children, and he was graciouſly ciously pleased to say, that he would refer it to my Lords the Judges. I only pray your Lordships, that you would be pleased to allow me Time: Though here is a grievous Indictment brought against me, yet I doubt not but to clear my self of what is alledged against me, if I have but Time to prepare my self for it: therefore I humbly pray I may have Time allotted.

L. C. J. Jones. You told us so before, that you had exhibited a Petition to the King, and that the King did refer it to the Judges; you shew us nothing of that.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I can but only signify to your Lordship what I hear; my Children were with me, and told me they had petitioned the King, and his Majesty was pleased graciously to receive it.

Mr. At. Gen. The King left you to the Course of the Law.

Mr. Cornish. It is very hard Measure; I have no Preparation at all, no more than at the first Moment; but I bless God, I hope I shall in time satisfy you of my Innocency.

L. C. J. Jones. You were apprehended and seized upon Tuesday last, this is almost a Week; you knew what you were charged withal.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I did not know what I was charged withal, I had no Liberty of Friends to come to me; my Wife at length obtained Leave, but it was in the Presence of Major Richardson; I had no Friend with my Wife, no Pen, Ink, nor Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. Was Pen, Ink, and Paper deny'd you? Did you ask it?

Mr. At. Gen. As soon as he petition'd for it, he had it.

Capt. Richardson. He had Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. When was that?

Capt. Richardson. On Saturday.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, it was eight a-clock at night.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Mr. Cornish, I would not have you think you are used otherwise than other Men are; for I must tell you, it is not usual to have Pen, Ink, and Paper, without Leave.

Mr. Cornish. I know it hath been allowed in the like Case.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, upon Petition, never else.

Mr. Just. Levinz. There are many Men, and of as good Quality as you, tried for killing Men: does any body give them Notice? Is there any more Necessity of Notice in Point of Treason, than in Point of Murder?

Mr. Just. Withins. I told you what your Offence was, when you were committed.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I remember in my Lord Russel's Case, he had at least seven or eight Days allowed him.

Mr. Just. Levinz. It may be so; but it is not necessary. Prisoners that are tried here generally have no Notice at all; if one Man hath a singular Favour, another Man cannot claim it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have a material Witness above a hundred and forty Miles off.

L. C. J. Jones. My Lord's Trial, I think, was put off but till the Afternoon.

Mr. Cornish. With Submission to your Lordship, I think he had eight Days assign'd him. But my Lord, I humbly conceive I have a Witness that is very material in my Case, that is 140 Miles out of Town, in Lancashire; I humbly pray I may have Time allotted me to send for him.

L. C. J. Jones. Why did you not set forth that in your Petition to the King?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I did not understand the Case.

L. C. J. Jones. Were not you committed for High-Treason?

Mr. Just. Withins. I told you so my self: I shew'd you the Commitment; therefore you can't pretend you were ignorant of it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, it did not mention this King or the last: And I am not a Lawyer, I am not skill'd in these Things; I am very ignorant, and hope your Lordship will consider me; my Innocence will appear as bright as any Man's that ever stood at this Bar.

L. C. J. Jones. I don't believe you want that Evidence a hundred and forty Miles off. Is he the only Man that can make your Innocence appear?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, by what I apprehend he will be the most material Witness I have. My Lord, I shall desire nothing but with Submission to your Lordship and the Bench; but I humbly conceive it is very reasonable I should have Time, I humbly pray your Lordship to consider it.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Attorney, have you any Directions?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

Mr. Cornish. I do not doubt, if I might have a little Time, to make my Defence.

Mr. Just. Withins. You should have applied your self to the King, it does not lie in our Power.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I humbly pray you to consider my Case.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Bridgman here on the Bench says, there was a Petition before the King, for putting it off; and the King absolutely refused it.

Mr. Just. Levinz. We have nothing to do, Sir; we are here by Commission to try you.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have been denied a Copy of the Pannel; I hope that is reasonable, I must desire a Copy of the Pannel.

Mr. At. Gen. That is none of your Right, Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Attorney, with Submission, I hope I ought to have it.

Mr. At. Gen. No, you ought not to have it; you have your peremptory Challenges, you may challenge thirty-five without Cause.

L. C. J. Jones. You shall have a Copy of the Pannel here.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, here he may.

Mr. Cornish. It is a very hard Case, when I have a material Witness so far out of Town, that I can't have a little Time allotted.

L. C. J. Jones. Can't every Man that comes here to be tried say the very same Thing, that he hath a material Witness in France, Spain, or any where else, and that when that Witness comes, his Innocence will be as clear as the Sun?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, my Witness is in Lancashire, I cannot help it; I beseech your Lordship to consider me: I am apt to believe that he would so much vindicate my Reputation in this Matter, that it would be a very great Satisfaction to your Lordships; and I am sure you are not for oppressing any Man.

L. C. J. Jones. No, Sir, that we are not.

Mr. Cornish. I am sure you are for the just Vindication of the Government, for executing of Justice, and I will desire no other than that.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Attorney, if you pray he may be tried, we can't deny it.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Corniſh, I cannot defer it, I have no Authority; and why you ſhould be in another Condition than other Priſoners, I don't know; you have not deſerved ſo well of the Government.

Mr. Corniſh. I have not the Names of the Wards where theſe Men live, and their Trades.

Mr. North. He hath a Copy of the Pannel, and that is ſufficient.

L. C. J. Jones. You may aſk them where they live.

Mr. Corniſh. I hope I may have Pen and Ink, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Ay, ay.

Then the Jury were called, and after Mr. Corniſh had challenged thirty five of them, the Jury ſworn were as followeth:

Thomas Rawlinſon,	William Clowdeſly,
Thomas Langham,	Richard Holford,
Ambroſe Iſted,	William Longboat,
Thomas Pendleton,	Stephen Coleman,
John Grice,	Robert Clavel,
Thomas Oneby,	William Long.

Proclamation being made, If any one can inform, &c. Mr. Corniſh was ſet aſide, and Elizabeth Gaunt at the Bar.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand. [Which ſhe did.] —— You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to her Cauſe: She ſtands indicted by the Name of, &c. (as before in the Indictment) Upon this Indictment ſhe hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded not guilty, and for her Trial hath put her ſelf upon her Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether ſhe be guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof ſhe ſtands indicted, or not guilty. If you find her guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, Elizabeth Gaunt the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, for that ſhe knowing James Burton, together with other Traitors, traitorouſly to have conſpired the Death of the late King, and to raiſe Rebellion in this Kingdom, did harbour the ſaid James Burton, and gave him Five Pounds in Money.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, the Priſoner ſtands indicted for harbouring of Burton, who was a great Traitor, and for procuring a Way for his Eſcape beyond Sea, and alſo for giving him 5 l. to bear his Charges. In the former Trial you had an Account of her Huſband, and in this you will hear ſhe and her Huſband were the great Brokers for carrying over ſuch Traitors, as my Lord Shaftesbury and others; theſe have taken Care to convey them over at all times. We will produce our Witneſſes. Call Burton and his Wife. [Mr. Burton ſworn.]

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt?

Mr. Burton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account how ſhe harbour'd you, and all the Paſſages that paſt between you and Mrs. Gaunt. Pray tell firſt whether you were engag'd in the Matter of the Rye?

Mr. Burton. How I came concerned I will tell you, if it pleaſe you.

Mr. At. Gen. Speak.

Mr. Burton. The firſt Time I knew any thing of it, Mr. Keeling came to me one Saturday Morning and aſked me if I was to go to London. I ſaid, Yes, I was to go to the Exchange; and he deſir'd me to meet him at the Mitre-Tavern within Aldgate, and aſk for Number Five. I came at the Time, and no body being there, I was going away, and met with a Country-man, with a Stick in his Hand, that had but one Eye; he came and aſk'd for the ſame Number: So the Gentleman ſent his Boy after me, and told me one ſtay'd for me. When I came, he aſk'd me, if I aſk'd for Number Five? and I ſaid, Yes. By whoſe Appointment? By Joſiah Keeling's, ſaid I. So he aſk'd the Man of the Houſe to ſhew a Room: He ſhew'd a Box, but he would have a Room, and went up Stairs, and call'd for Pipes and a Candle, and a Pint of Wine. In a little while Keeling came in, and brought Barber and Thompſon, and no body ſpake almoſt any thing but Rumbold, (that was Rumbold with one Eye, for Keeling when he came in call'd him Captain Rumbold) and Rumbold talk'd about Privileges and ſuch Things at firſt, and he ſaid his Houſe was a convenient Houſe, and there they might do the Buſineſs: but before they had done, I found they deſign'd to kill the King, but nothing troubled him but killing the Poſtillion, to kill a Man in cold Blood. But then ſays we, If you are for killing, we have done, and ſo broke up; that was the End of that. A while after Mr. Keeling went in, and made a Diſcovery: I never came among them afterwards. So after Mr. Keeling had diſcovered, I was in the Proclamation for being there at that Meeting, and abſconded my ſelf, and lay hid. A Matter of two Months after, Mrs. Gaunt came to enquire of my Wife where I was, to ſpeak with me; ſhe brought her to me. She told me, there were ſome Perſons about to make an Eſcape, and would have me go along with them. I told her, with all my Heart: So I aſk'd her which Way and how they intended to go. She told me, they had provided Horſes to ride down to Rochford-Hundred, and there was a Veſſel to carry them over; and, ſays ſhe, be ready by ſuch an Evening, and I will call for you. Accordingly ſhe did, and had me into Biſhopſgate-Street, and in Half-moon-Alley in a little Brew-houſe, up ſtairs in a Chamber, there were both the Rumbolds; one of them did not go, and the other and I lay there all Night: and in the Morning a Man came and called us away, and we went to White-Chapel to take Horſe, to ride down to Rochford-Hundred, and ſtay'd for the Veſſel two Days; and when we met the Veſſel, it was a ſmall Veſſel, and bad Weather, and the Maſter of the Veſſel had but one Hand and two Boys, one a very little one; and we went down the Creek, and I aſked the Man where he did intend to land us; and he told us, at Oſtend. Said I, I underſtood we were to go for Holland to the Brill. Says he, my Veſſel is only able to go to Oſtend or Dunkirk, either of them. Says Rumbold, I don't underſtand the Sea. Says I, this is a very ſmall Veſſel and leaky, and the Man not able to manage it. Says I, I will go back again to London. Says he, I will do as you do; and we both parted at London, and I never ſaw him afterwards till I ſaw him at Amſterdam. I lay by a great many Months after; then Mrs. Gaunt came to me again, and told me there was two other Perſons going, and I might have a Paſſage if I would go: So ſhe bid me be ready by ſuch an Evening, and I was ready; and a Boat being ready at the Water-ſide, carried me to Graveſend, where I went in a Veſſel to Amſterdam.

Mr. At. Gen. Where were you?

Mr. Burton. I was with my Wife at my Daughter's: I had a Daughter married, her Huſband was drown'd.

Mr. At. Gen. How came Mrs. Gaunt to take ſo much care of you? Give the Court an account.

Mr. Burton. She might think I knew ſomething of her Huſband, if I ſhould be taken; I ſuppoſe that might be the chief thing.

Mr. At. Gen. What had her Huſband done?

Mr. Burton. Her Huſband, I ſuppoſe, knew ſomething of the Buſineſs.

Mr. At. Gen. What Buſineſs?

Mr. Burton. About ſeizing the Tower: He came to me, and would have had me gone with him with Capt. Walcot to the Tower, to ſee what Force there was of Soldiers; and Capt. Walcot ſaid he had a deſign to take an Houſe over-againſt the Tower, to put in ſome Men there to break in upon the Tower; and Gaunt was with him.

L. C. J. Jones. What diſcourſe had you with her about the Plot?

Mr. Burton. Nothing with her.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it ſhe would help you away for?

Mr. Burton. I ſuppoſe this was the reaſon, becauſe ſhe knew I knew her Huſband was concern'd.

Mr. North. Did ſhe aſſiſt you with any Money?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. North. How much?

Mr. Burton. She gave me a parcel of Money juſt as I was going away; I put it among other Money.

Mr. North. How much? 30 or 40 s?

Mr. Burton. More than that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you gone from your own Houſe when this Woman came to you?

Mr. Burton. My own Houſe was broke up a great while before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you appear publickly when ſhe came to you?

Mr. Burton. No, an't pleaſe you.

L. C. J. Jones. Had there been any ſearch for you before?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. North. You were in the Proclamation at this time?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe ye, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Did ſhe carry you to Rumbold?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any diſcourſe between Rumbold and her?

Mr. Burton. No; there was an elderly Man in the Houſe, I did not know him, carried me up to Rumbold, there was both of them.

Mr. At. Gen. What Money had you of her.

Mr. Burton. I believe about 5 l. I told her I had lain a great while, and Money was very bare with me; and ſhe told me ſhe would get me a little.

Mr. At. Gen. Did ſhe know what you were conceal'd for?

Mr. Burton. Every body knew that, becauſe I was in the Proclamation.

Mr. North. What Directions did ſhe give you, how you ſhould behave yourſelf when ſhe went with you to Biſhopſgate-ſtreet? how did ſhe ſay you muſt carry yourſelf?

Mr. Burton. Nothing there, ſhe gave no order about that.

L. C. J. Jones. Did ſhe tell you you were concern'd in the Plot with her Huſband?

Mr. Burton. She did not tell me ſo, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you tell her you were concern'd in the Plot with her Huſband?

Mr. Burton. I did not tell her ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were the two Men that were prepared to go with you that time?

Mr. Burton. One Patchil.

Mr. At. Gen. He was kill'd in the Fight. Was Patchil in the Fight?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe you, he was kill'd.

Mr. At. Gen. And who was the other?

Mr. Burton. T'other was a Man liv'd in Southwark; I never ſaw him before.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Directions did ſhe give you about your own Name, or any others when you went into the Boat?

Mr. Burton. If I knew any body, that I ſhould not take notice I knew them.

L. C. J. Jones. You were not to take any Acquaintance of any body in the Boat?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Heark you, Sir, you looked upon all thoſe to be engaged in the Plot. All that ſhe endeavour'd to ſave, were of the ſame Level.

Mr. Burton. Rumbold was; Rumbold was in the Proclamation.

L. C. J. Jones. Did ſhe tell you, that you were in the Proclamation?

Mr. Burton. No, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip, ſhe did not tell me ſo.

Mr. North. Did ſhe never diſcourſe of your being in the Proclamation?

Mr. Burton. No, not as I remember; it was a general thing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. But why ſhould ſhe come to you to tranſport you, if it were not for ſuch a thing?

Mr. Burton. Her Huſband was with me about going to the Tower.

Mr. At. Gen. Burton, pray thus; when you came from the Weſt, what Overtures were to help you here from her, or her Huſband?

Mr. Burton. Her Huſband was with me at Fernley's Houſe, and he told me there were two or three Perſons to go in two or three Days, and I ſhould go with them.

Mr. At. Gen. You named your Daughter, what is her Name?

Mr. Burton. Mary Gilbert.

[Then Mary Gilbert was called and ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, I know her, ſhe was our Neighbour.

Mr. At. Gen. Then give an account of her coming to you about your Father.

Mary Gilbert. She came to our Houſe that Night my Father went away. I never heard a word of the Diſcourſe that paſt, for I always went out of the way.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Why did you go out of the way?

Mary Gilbert. Becauſe they were not willing I ſhould hear the Diſcourſe.

Mr. Com. Serj. You are upon your Oath, Miſtreſs, you muſt tell the truth.

Mary Gilbert. I do, Sir; I will tell no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee your Father go away? Who did he go with, in what Company?

Mary Gilbert. I can't tell.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Mrs. Gaunt go with him?

Mary Gilbert. I met my Father and Mrs. Gaunt in Houndſditch, my Mother and I were to meet them in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet.

Mr. Com. Serj. Well, what was the reaſon why you did not meet?

Mary Gilbert. We were to meet at ſeven a-clock, and we went to the Houſe, and they were not come; and we were coming home, and met them in Houndſditch, and my Father had Mrs. Gaunt under the Arm, and went back to a Houſe without Biſhopſgate.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Mrs. Gaunt carry him thither?

L. C. J. Jones. Do you know why your Father was to go away?

Mary Gilbert. He went upon the account of the Proclamation?

L. C. J. Jones. Then you knew of the Proclamation?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, I knew of the Proclamation.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whoſe Acquaintance was the Man in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet?

Mary Gilbert. He was none of mine.

Counſel. When your Father went up ſtairs into a Room, did you ſee any body with him?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, it was a Man that had but one Eye, a full-ſet Man, full of Pock-holes; but I never ſaw him before, nor after.

Counſel. How came you to ſee him?

Mary Gilbert. By going up ſtairs to ſee my Father.

[Mary Burton ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt there?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you tell the Court, how ſhe came to enquire after your Huſband?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, Sir, at my Daughter's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. What diſcourſe happened between you?

Mrs. Burton. No diſcourſe; but ſhe ſaid if I was willing, my Huſband ſhould go away, and ſhe would take care.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But why ſhould he go away?

Mrs. Burton. I don't know why, but only upon the Proclamation.

Counſel. Woman, did ſhe take notice your Huſband was gone from home, and had left his Houſe?

Mrs. Burton. I knew myſelf, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Where did you go?

Mrs. Burton. My Huſband went out of doors by his own ſelf, by Appointment, and we were to meet, my Child and I together without Biſhopſgate, by the Catherine-wheel.

Mr. Com. Serj. Who made that Appointment?

Mrs. Burton. Mrs. Gaunt.

Mr. Com. Serj. Upon what account did ſhe come to you to ſecure your Huſband?

Mrs. Burton. Upon the account he was in the Proclamation, and I thought within myſelf, for fear my Huſband ſhould know any thing againſt her Huſband; but I never ſaid ſo, for I was glad my Huſband ſhould be helped away, willing to ſave his Life, for I knew it was Death.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. And you took that to be the meaning of it in reference to the Proclamation?

Mr. Sol. Gen. How far did you live from her.

Mrs. Burton. Formerly we dwelt pretty near one another, when Mrs. Gaunt kept a Tallow-Chandler's Shop.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, do you verily believe ſhe knew your Huſband was in the Proclamation?

Mr. Juſt. — Did you never ſee the Priſoner at the Bar at any time in Holland?

Mrs. Burton. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Nor her Huſband?

Mrs. Burton. Nor her Huſband.

Mr. At. Gen. I aſk you at this time when your Huſband went away, and his Houſe was ſearch'd, how far did ſhe live from you then?

Mrs. Burton. She had but Lodgings, I don't know where her Dwelling-houſe was.

Mr. At. Gen. Where were her Lodgings?

Mrs. Burton. At the upper end of Old Gravel-Lane, and my Daughter in the middle of Gravel-Lane, in Worceſter-ſtreet, as far as it may be to Newgate, thereabouts.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it taken notice of all over the Street that the Houſe was ſearched, and your Huſband gone? Was that taken notice of in the Neighbourhood?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, yes.

Counſel. Between the time your Huſband went firſt away, and the time ſhe came to take care of him, had you no diſcourſe about the reaſon of his going away, nor of the Proclamation?

Mrs. Burton. No.

L. C. J. Jones. What ſay you Woman to this Evidence, ſeveral Witneſſes ſay you were very buſy in contriving the Eſcape of Burton; what was the reaſon why you would ſend him away?

Mrs. Gaunt. I did not contrive to ſend him away.

L. C. J. Jones. The Woman ſays ſo, Burton ſays ſo, the Daughter ſays the ſame.

Mrs. Gaunt. Where, Sir?

L. C. J. Jones. At Biſhopſgate or Houndſditch.

Mrs. Gaunt. I deny it.

L. C. J. Jones. And you gave him Money afterwards.

Mrs. Gaunt. Who ſaw me give it him?

L. C. J. Jones. He ſwears it.

Mrs. Gaunt. He was the more beholden to me.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you, or did you not?

Captain Richardſon. She ſays ſhe is not come here to tell your Lordſhip what ſhe did.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, did not you hear that Burton's Name was in the Proclamation about Rumbold's Plot?

Mrs. Gaunt. It is like I might.

L. C. J. Jones. You might hear it!

Mrs. Gaunt. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. And yet you would by all means help him to eſcape?

Mrs. Gaunt. I can ſay nothing againſt it, if they ſwear it.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you know what you are charg'd withal? You are accuſed for relieving and comforting Burton, whom you knew to have committed Treaſon.

Mrs. Gaunt. My Lord, he ſays ſo.

L. C. J. Jones. And for helping him to eſcape, and giving him Money in order to it.

Mrs. Gaunt. He ſays ſo.

L. C. J. Jones. He ſwears ſo; what do you ſay?

Mrs. Gaunt. Is that ſufficient?

Mr. Juſt. — Ay, and another ſwears it, that is ſufficient.

Mrs. Gaunt. I have not heard any body elſe ſwear it.

Mr. Juſt. — Yes, his Wife.

Mrs. Gaunt. Not about the Money.

Mr. Juſt. — You came and ſollicited him to go ſeveral times.

Mrs. Gaunt. It is very untrue, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you know his Houſe had been ſearch'd to find him?

Mrs. Gaunt. I did not know it a great while ſince, I might know.

[Here Burton's Pardon was produced again.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is a Pardon for Burton, now he is a good Witneſs *, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any more, Woman, to ſay for yourſelf? If you can tell us any other Cauſe than that he was guilty of Treaſon, wherein your Huſband was concern'd.

Mrs. Gaunt. No, I deny that, that I knew my Huſband was concern'd in any thing of that kind.

L. C. J. Jones. Wherefore then would you take ſo much care to ſend him away?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't tell you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. You don't tell us, but the Witneſſes have ſworn it.

Mrs. Gaunt. I muſt leave it to them.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Woman ſtands indicted for High-Treaſon, for concealing, comforting, and relieving one James Burton, a Perſon that had committed High-Treaſon; and for endeavouring that he might make his eſcape, and giving him 5 l. in Money. Gentlemen, the Evidence that is given is by Burton, his Wife, and his Daughter. Burton ſays, that this Woman was very ſollicitous ſeveral times to help to ſend him beyond Sea. He does tell you, that when there was a Plot againſt the Life of the King, wherein Rumbold was concern'd, and one of the chief Actors, that he himſelf was preſent at one of the Conſultations concerning it, and that afterwards he did withdraw himſelf from the Company, as he ſays; but he ſays, that this Woman's Huſband being likewiſe concern'd in the Plot, and this Woman, as he believes, knowing that he was able to make ſome Diſcovery concerning her Huſband, and knowing alſo his danger in reſpect of his own Guilt, ſhe endeavours to ſend him away firſt to Rochford, and ſo to go beyond Sea. And afterwards, in another place in Houndſditch, and from thence he was to be conveyed beyond Sea. It is true, there is no direct Proof that there was any particular mention that Burton was in the Proclamation for that Treaſon; but the Woman ſays, and Burton himſelf ſays, that they do both verily believe, that the Priſoner at the Bar did know he was in the Proclamation, and therefore there was no particular diſcourſe concerning it; and ſhe herſelf being examined, ſays, ſhe might hear that his Name was in the Proclamation, and ſhe might hear that his Houſe was ſearched, and that he could not be found; and yet notwithſtanding all this, ſhe endeavours to conceal him. What can be the meaning of all this in this Woman, but that ſhe was very zealous to maintain the Conſpiracy, and was a great Aſſiſtant to all Perſons that were concern'd in it? She will not tell you any other Cauſe wherefore ſhe ſhould be concerned to convey this Man beyond Sea, and therefore in all reaſon you ought to conceive it was for this; it was a known Cauſe, made known to all People by the King's Proclamation. If you believe ſhe did know or believe Burton to have been guilty of that Treaſon, and that ſhe did help to convey him away, as the Witneſſes have proved that ſhe did, by giving him Money, and ſolliciting him ſeveral times to be gone, then you ought to find her guilty.

Then the Jury deſiring to ask a Queſtion, Burton was called again; but being gone out of Court, was ſent for, and Mr. Corniſh was ſet to the Bar.

Clerk. Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand; you of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe; he ſtands indicted by the Name of Henry Corniſh, late of the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, in the Ward of Baſſiſhaw, London, Merchant, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and thereunto pleaded Not Guily, &c.

M. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, Henry Corniſh, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted, for that he knowing that the late Duke of Monmouth, William Ruſſel Eſq; the late Lord Grey, and other Traitors, had conſpired the Death of the late King, and to raiſe Rebellion in this Kingdom, did promiſe to aid and aſſiſt them in compaſſing this wicked Imagination, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty, &c.

Mr. Corniſh. I am innocent of the whole matter.

Officer. Burton is come.

L. C. J. Jones. Let us make an end of that firſt. In the Evidence that you gave againſt Elizabeth Gaunt, you ſaid that you did receive Money from her, 5 l. or ſome ſuch Sum.

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Jones. Did ſhe owe you any Money?

Mr. Burton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Upon what account was it you receiv'd that Money?

Mr. Burton. She gave it me.

L. C. J. Jones. Upon what account was it? To aſſiſt you in your Eſcape?

Mr. Burton. She knew I was bare of Money, and gave it me of her free Will.

L. C. J. Jones. And it was at that time you went away?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It was to aſſiſt you in your Eſcape?

Mr. Burton. Yes, I believe ſo.

Mr. Com. Serj. Who paid your Boat-hire?

Mr. Burton. I paid none, I don't know, the Waterman can tell.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Corniſh, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for contriving the Death of the late King, and for raiſing Rebellion in the Kingdom, and is charged that he did conſent to be aſſiſting to that Rebellion that was then deſigned. It is not unknown to you, Gentlemen, for there have been ſeveral Trials of that Conſpiracy, that there was a great Rebellion deſign'd in England by the late Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong; and particularly Gentlemen, there was a Meeting (which already hath appeared in publick,) at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where the Lord Ruſſel, the late Duke of Monmouth, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Rumſey, and the late Lord Grey, met to conſider and adjuſt matters. At that Meeting Mr. Corniſh indeed came in very late, (for he was invited and knew their Deſign then) he came in late, and ſo was not at the whole Diſcourſe; but there was a Declaration framed to be put out when they ſhould riſe, and they did acquaint Mr. Corniſh with it, and they read it to Mr. Corniſh, and Mr. Corniſh did like it very well, and promiſed he would be aſſiſting, as we will prove to you, Gentlemen. Another Inſtance of Mr. Corniſh's Rebellion, for I need not tell you what part he acted when he was Sheriff, and maintain'd that which was the Ground-work of the Rebellion, ſetting the Commonalty againſt the Government of the City: Another Inſtance we will give you is, his Under-

* Tho' it might make him a good Witneſs, yet unleſs he had been attainted, it was not legal to try any for receiving or comforting him, for had he been convict, yet if he had had his Clergy, the other, who is in nature of an Acceſſary, is diſcharged thereby. Hale's Hiſt. P. C. p. 222.

Sheriff that was employed to divide the City, and to raiſe Men within the City, having diſcourſe with Mr. Corniſh about the ſettling that matter, he liked it very well, and promis'd he would be aſſiſting to him, and you may eaſily preſume Mr. Goodenough the Under-Sheriff was very privy to all the Acts of Mr. Corniſh at that time. We will call our Witneſſes. Mr. Rumſey.

Mr. Cor. I deſire the Witneſſes may be kept apart.

Mr. At. Gen. They will prove it upon you at two times.

Mr. Cor. You will find me guilty of neither; I am as innocent as any Perſon in this Court.

Mr. At. Gen. So was my Lord Ruſſel to his Death, Mr. Corniſh: do you remember that?

Mr. Cor. Mr. Attorney General, I ſpeak in the Preſence of the great God, I am as innocent as any Man in this Court.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account of the Inſurrection that was to have been in England, in the late King's Time, and what concern the Priſoner had in that Affair.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, about the latter end of October, or the beginning of November, my Lord Shaftesbury deſired me to go to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where there was a Meeting of thoſe Gentlemen that I did name before, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, my Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, and Mr. Sheppard, and accordingly I went; I came late there my ſelf, for they were juſt going away, when I came in. I told them my Meſſage, and they told me they were diſappointed by Mr. Trenchard. I had not been there a quarter of an hour, but we were going away, and Mr. Sheppard was call'd for by his Man, and he went down Stairs and brought up Mr. Corniſh; and when he came into the Room, he told the Gentlemen there met, that Mr. Alderman Corniſh was come; ſo as ſoon as Mr. Alderman Corniſh came into the Room, he made his Excuſe to the Gentlemen that he did not come ſooner, and that he could not ſtay with them; the Reaſon why he could not ſtay with them, he told them, was, that they were to meet that Night about their Charter, and there was never another Alderman in Town but himſelf, and therefore he could not ſtay, there was a Neceſſity of an Alderman to be there. And upon that Mr. Ferguſon opened his Boſom, and from under his Stomacher pull'd out a Paper; they told him, they had that Paper read, and deſired to read it to him: Mr. Ferguſon read it, and Mr. Sheppard held the Candle all the while that it was reading; and after they had read it, they aſked him how he liked it, and he did ſay he liked it very well.

L. C. J. Jones. What were the Contents of that Paper?

Mr. Rumſey. The firſt part of it was complaining of the Miſgovernment of the late King; there were two Points in it that I do remember very well, that they would declare for: One was Liberty of Conſcience; and t'other was, That all thoſe that would aſſiſt in that Inſurrection, that had any Lands of the Church, or the King's, in the late War, ſhould have them reſtored to them.

L. C. J. Jones. Was there any thing in that Paper that did engage any body to an Inſurrection?

Mr. Rumſey. I did not hear all the Paper, nor did I take great notice of it; but thoſe two Points were in it, to engage them that would aſſiſt.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Effect of the Paper?

Mr. Rumſey. It was to be a Declaration upon the Riſing; when the Riſing was to have been, this was to have been diſperſed abroad.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, was there a Riſing intended at that time?

Mr. Rumſey. Yes, and they met there for that Purpoſe; and Mr. Trenchard was the Man to manage the Buſineſs about Taunton, and he diſappointed them.

Mr. At. Gen. What was your Meſſage from my Lord Shaftesbury to them?

Mr. Rumſey. It was to know what iſſue they had come to about the Riſing, and to preſs them to it, for ſuch a matter as that was not to be long kept a-foot; either let them come to a Reſolution to riſe, or let it fall for good and all.

Mr. At. Gen. After Mr. Corniſh had expreſſed his liking of this Buſineſs and Declaration, what follow'd?

Mr. Rumſey. He did ſay he liked it very well; and that poor Intereſt he had, he would join with it.

Mr. At. Gen. Speak that again.

Mr. Rumſey. Mr. Corniſh did ſay, he did like the Declaration, and with the ſmall Intereſt he had, he would appear to back it, or Words to that Effect.

Mr. Cor. My Lord, ſince he takes the Freedom to charge me with theſe things, I never was at a Conſult in my Days.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. You were not then at Mr. Sheppard's that Night?

Mr. At. Gen. Will you deny you were at Mr. Sheppard's that Night?

Mr. Cor. I do declare, I never was at Mr. Sheppard's in any Conſult in my Life, as he declares; but I have had great dealings with Mr. Sheppard.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall be allowed your Liberty; pray, Sir, be not tranſported with Paſſion. I doubt, before this time, notwithſtanding the Confidence you ſeem to have, there are few believe you to be as innocent as any Perſon preſent.

Mr. At. Gen. You will hear more from his Oracle.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Were you there when my Lord Ruſſel was there?

Mr. Cor. I was not there when my Lord Ruſſel was there, as I remember.

L. C. J. Jones. Were you preſent, hear, hear, Sir: were you preſent at Sheppard's when Furguſon was there?

Mr. Cor. My Lord, I have been at Sheppard's ſeveral times, but I never liked the Man for his Morals, and therefore never liked to be in his Company.

L. C. J. Jones. He pull'd the Paper out of his Boſom.

Mr. Cor. It is as great an Untruth as ever was told in the World; but, my Lord, ſeeing he takes this Freedom to charge me, I deſire to know whether he ſtands here as a lawful Evidence?

L. C. J. Jones. What is your Exception?

Mr. Cor. He ſtands charged guilty of Treaſon.

L. C. J. Jones. That it ſelf does not diſable him to be a Witneſs.

Mr. Cor. Before he hath his Pardon, my Lord?

L. C. J. Jones. I dont know whether he hath his Pardon or not.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. There is no Indictment at all upon him.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. If he were convicted, or outlawed of Treaſon, it were ſomething; an innocent Man may be charged.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, Mr. Corniſh and I have been very well acquainted theſe fourteen Years or thereabouts, and have had great concerns together; for during the time that I managed the King's Cuſtoms at Briſtol, ſix Years I was there Collector, he did return between three and four hundred thouſand Pounds for me; he is a very honeſt Gentleman, and I appeal to himſelf, whether I take delight to appear here to accuſe him.

Mr. Corniſh. But Colonel, what is the reaſon that you have not accuſed me all this while?

Mr. Rumſey. Mr. Corniſh, I hope that is not an Objection, I think I ſuffer for it and not you; it was Compaſſion, and the ſame Compaſſion makes you deny it to ſave others; if you would deal openly, I make no doubt, but you might partake of the King's Favour yet, as well as I have done.

Mr. Corniſh. I do thankfully accept of his Majeſty's Favour at all times, but I thank God I am innocent in this matter, and do not ſtand in need of it.

Mr. Rumſey. And you ſay I accuſe you falſely; then Mr. Corniſh, you don't ſtand there, nor I here.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, will you aſk him any Queſtions?

L. C. J. Jones. But pray don't enter into a long Harangue.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do humbly conceive, that he does not ſtand here as an Evidence.

L. C. J. Jones. You have the Judgment of the Court for that.

Mr. Corniſh. Before he is pardon'd?

L. C. J. Jones. I don't talk of a Pardon; what Record have you againſt him?

Mr. At. Gen. You were preſent and heard that reſolv'd before in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, Mr. Rumſey did upon his Evidence give in, and he was obliged by his Oath to ſpeak the whole Truth ——

L. C. J. Jones. Now you are making your Speech, it is not your proper time; you ſhall urge any thing againſt Mr. Rumſey's Evidence, or the Credibility of it when it is your time.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do here deſign it.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, pray recollect; had you never any Diſcourſe with him at other times?

Mr. Rumſey. We have had a long Acquaintance, fourteen Years; but in my Life, I never heard him ſpeak any thing before or ſince that, to my knowledge.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Corniſh, will you aſk him any more Queſtions?

Mr. Corniſh. I deſire to know ——

Mr. Rumſey. What would you know?

Mr. Corniſh. Whether did you and I diſcourſe of theſe matters at any other time?

Mr. Rumſey. No.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. You muſt not ſtand to dialogue between one another, but ſpeak as we may hear you.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall argue if you will, when you come to make your Defence in the proper time, the Improbability of any thing that he hath ſaid, or the Impoſſibility, or Repugnancy to any Truth, or any Evidence that you can give to the contrary; but I ſay, this is not your time.

Mr. Corniſh. I never was at any Conſult in my Life.

Mr. At. Gen. That is a Name he gives it; was you never at a Meeting about a Riſing?

Mr. Goodenough ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Goodenough, are you acquainted with Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Goodenough. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly conceive he is not a Witneſs, he ſtands indicted upon an Outlawry; I can produce it.

Mr. At. Gen. We do admit it.

L. C. J. Jones. They admit your Exception, and will anſwer it by producing a Pardon.

Mr. Corniſh. I need not ſay any thing againſt him, he is known well enough.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He was your Under-Sheriff, Mr. Corniſh.

Mr. Corniſh. Much againſt my Will; I oppos'd him to the utmoſt; and this is nothing but Malice againſt me.

[Mr. Goodenough's Pardon read.]

Mr. Corniſh. I do humbly conceive this can't be done, but by a Writ of Error, or an Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. Jones. Can't the King pardon an Outlawry?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That is no piece of Law, I am ſure of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Goodenough, pray what do you know of a Riſing intended againſt the late King?

Mr. Goodenough. All that I have to give an account of, is a Diſcourſe ——

Mr. At. Gen. Anſwer what I aſk you; what do you know of a Riſing by others?

Mr. Goodenough. I know nothing of that Buſineſs of my Lord Ruſſel's; but there was a Deſign to riſe, Sir, in London; we deſign'd to divide it into twenty parts, and out of each part to raiſe five hundred Men, if it might be done, to make an Inſurrection.

L. C. J. Jones. What were theſe Men to do when they were raiſed?

Mr. Goodenough. They were to take the Tower, and drive the Guards out of Town.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, acquaint my Lord and the Jury what Diſcourſe you had with Mr. Corniſh.

Mr. Goodenough. Before this was agreed on by us, I chanced to be at Alderman Corniſh's; Sir, ſaid I, now the Law won't defend us, tho' we be never ſo innocent; but ſome other way is to be thought on. Upon this, ſaid he, I wonder the City is ſo unready, and the Country ſo ready. I ſaid to him again, Sir, there is ſomething thought of to be done here; but, ſays I, in the firſt place, the Tower ought to be ſeized, where the Magazine is: upon this he made a little Pauſe, and ſaid, I will do what I can, or what good I can. To this purpoſe he anſwered me; and about ſome time after, he met me upon the Exchange, and aſked me how Affairs went? which I underſtood to be relating to what we diſcours'd; this is all that I can ſay. I never met after this, but only upon the Exchange, he aſk'd how matters went.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe about ſeizing the Guards?

Mr. Goodenough. I have told you the whole Diſcourſe.

M. At. Gen. Pray, repeat it.

Mr. Goodenough. I told him, ſays I, Sir, now it is plain, the Law will not defend us, though we are never ſo innocent, or to this purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon what occaſion was that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Goodenough. Every thing going againſt us.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How?

Mr. Goodenough. This was in Eaſter Term, as near as I can remember, 83.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay 83.

Mr. Goodenough. Therefore, ſays I, ſomething elſe is to be thought on, ſome Courſe elſe is to be taken: to this purpoſe he anſwer'd me, I wonder the City is ſo unready, and the Country ſo ready.

L. C. Baron. What Country?

Mr. Goodenough. He had been in the Country, as I underſtood before, that I don't know.

Mr. Corniſh. What time was this, Sir?

Mr. Goodenough. In Eaſter Term, or thereabouts, 83. I told him then, Sir, there is ſomething thought of to be done here in London, to this purpoſe; but ſays I, in the firſt place, the Tower is to be ſeized, where the Magazine is; ſo he anſwered me, after ſome Pauſe (he pauſed upon it) ſays he, I will do what good I can, or what I can, to this purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ſeem to diſlike ſeizing the Tower at all?

Mr. Goodenough. Not at all, Sir, it did not appear ſo to me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Diſcourſes had you any other time?

Mr. Goodenough. I never had any Diſcourſe of this matter, or any thing relating to it at any other time, but only when I came upon the Exchange, how things went.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And did you give him an account?

Mr. Goodenough. I ſaid, well. I gave him a general Anſwer, for that was not a place to talk in, and that I apprehended of this Diſcourſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any other matters?

Mr. Goodenough. I had ſome other matters of managing the Riot, that was brought againſt him, and ſeveral others, and my ſelf alſo.

L. C. J. Jones. Will you aſk him any Queſtions, Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Corniſh. Whether his Pardon be allowed?

L. C. J. Jones. We heard it read.

Mr. Corniſh. This being a Court inferiour to the King's Bench ——

L. C. J. Jones. Here is a Pardon under the Great Seal, Sir, and here is a Pardon of that Offence which you charge him with, and which you take to be a ſufficient Exception againſt his being a Witneſs, we are ſatisfied it is ſufficient.

Mr. Corniſh. Pray, my Lord, is not this Pardon ſpecial?

L. C. J. Jones. What do you mean by that?

Mr. Corniſh. Becauſe, my Lord, he hath been in an Act of Treaſon ſince; therefore, my Lord, if he be not pardoned of that ——

L. C. J. Jones. No, no, he is not indicted for it; we can't try him now for any Treaſon of that nature.

Mr. Corniſh. I humbly conceive he hath not had a Pardon for his laſt Treaſon.

L. C. J. Jones. I muſt tell you, if he be guilty of Treaſon, till he is tried and convicted, it doth not take off his Teſtimony.

Mr. Corn. Pray, Mr. Goodenough, remember all your Tricks, whether or no, was there any body preſent when this Diſcourſe paſt between you and I?

Mr. Goodenough. No body but you and I.

Mr. Corn. You were not ſo converſant in my Houſe, I know.

Mr. Goodenough. Sir, I came to you about the Buſineſs of the Riot.

Mr. Corn. How many times might you be at my Houſe? Not three times, I believe.

L. C. J. Jones. You aſk a Queſton, and anſwer it your ſelf.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I deſire to know, where it was theſe Words were ſpoke.

Mr. Goodenough. Sir, in your lower Room.

Mr. Corn. In my own Houſe?

Mr. Goodenough. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Corn. And no Company there?

Mr. Goodenough. And no Company.

Mr. Corn. That is very ſtrange, and that afterwards you ſhould meet me, and diſcourſe this matter again.

Mr. Goodenough. No, Sir, all I ſay, it this, you met me upon the Exchange, and aſked me how things went.

Mr. Corn. That might be in reference to the Suit you were managing for the Rioters; I know of nothing elſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. And I tell you, Mr. Corniſh, that was a Branch of the Plot; take that from me.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, he was Attorney in that Cauſe, and I might aſk, how matters went in reference to that Trial; but I take God to witneſs, nothing elſe, as I remember.

L. C. J. Jones. But here you ſay, it was a ſtrange thing that Mr. Goodenough and you ſhould be in a Room alone, when you acknowledge him to have been the Attorney in a Cauſe of mighty Conſequence among you.

Mr. Corn. He was concern'd for all, and I ſtedfaſtly believe he was never with me twice about that Suit; but he hath been at Sir Thomas Player's; there he often went about that Affair; and I do not believe that ever he came to me about that Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Jones. Is that all you have to ſay to him, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Will you aſk him any more Queſtions? if not, go on, we have done.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, Colonel Rumſey is a Perſon that hath acquainted the Court, that there was a long acquaintance between him and me. I have ſerved his Majeſty in my Place, and do it to this day. My Lord, it is a very improbable thing, that I ſhould meet him at Mr. Sheppard's, where I ſaw ſuch wicked horrible Doings; and that he ſhould never afterwards ſpeak to me about that Affair. He came to my Houſe, I remember, about the return of ſome Monies for his own private Uſe; for he was then out of his Majeſty's Employment. He does declare here, he never ſaid a Word to me, never ſpake to me any thing of it but there. My Lord, it is a very ſtrange thing, that there ſhould be ſuch a Contrivance to ruin the King and Kingdom, and that I ſhould be one in this Buſineſs, this Villany, and not be conſulted how to carry it on; it is very ſtrange, they ſhould ſee me, and never ſay a Word of it afterwards to me. My Lord, I hope, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, that you will conſider the Improbability of it; it is as improbable as any thing in the World. I hope it doth appear to your Lordſhip and this Bench, that there is no probability in it; he owns we had a great deal of Freedom; he owns we were acquainted for fourteen Years together, and that I ſhould be at ſuch a wicked villainous place once, and ſee him ſo often afterwards, and never ſpeak of it, and never ſay any thing of it, the Great God of Heaven and Earth, before whom I ſtand, knows that I know nothing of all that he hath ſworn againſt me: He muſt ſwear theſe things to ſave his own Life; if he will take away my Life, he will take away many others, without queſtion, if he can ſave his own. I ſhould not urge this, but God is my Witneſs, I never heard any thing of a Contrivance or Plot, till my Lord Ruſſel's Trial: Theſe are very ſtrange things, if ſo be ſo good a Government as we have, ſhall not protect ſuch innocent Men; truly, my Lord, I am as innocent as any Man in this Court, if I were to appear before the Great God in Judgment this Moment.

L. C. J. Jones. Look you, Mr. Corniſh, I would with all my heart allow you all the Liberty imaginable, to ſpeak pertinently to your Defence, but to oppoſe Confidence, and very great Aſſurance, upon your being in the Preſence of Almighty God, againſt expreſs Teſtimony, is the weakeſt Defence that can be; if you have any Witneſſes, if you have any thing to urge againſt the Teſtimony of any of theſe Perſons, beſides the Improbability of it, which you have often mentioned over and over again, you ſhall be heard with all Patience: if you have Witneſſes that you will call, we will hear them likewiſe.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I think his Treaſon being confeſſed, and not being pardoned———

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Is that all you will ſay, Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Corn. I hope you will bear a little with me, I am highly concerned.

L. C. J. Jones. You are ſo.

Mr. Corn. I have had no help, and it is well known, I am not ſkilful in the Law. I don't underſtand what to ſay, nor how to plead my Cauſe, having no help, nor no aſſiſtance allowed me. My Lord, it is a moſt improbable thing that I ſhould be at this place, where this horrible Wickedneſs was, and that it ſhould lie all this time never mention'd: I have been, my Lord, ſeveral times in Priſon this Year, and I think my Virtue will be ſo much the greater, to be again and again purged, as I have been; that which hath pleaſed me very much, hath been my Innocency: Would any Man in my Circumſtances have ſtaid and continued in this Nation, if he had not known himſelf perfectly innocent? Others have gone away, and I could as freely have gone, after I have been taken up four times.

L. C. J. Jones. I doubt there are a great many are not gone, Mr. Rumſey hath told you plainly, it was Compaſſion to you, though Injury to himſelf, that he did not accuſe you ſooner.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Here is Gaunt ſtaid here till within this Week or Fortnight, and never ſtirr'd.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, my Lord hath put you in the right Way for your Defence, if you can invalidate the Teſtimony, or call any Witneſſes, do it; but to talk at this rate, you may do it this Month (for ought I know) and 'twill ſignify no more than it hath done already.

Mr. Corn. The Improbability is ſo manifeſt.

L. C. J. Jones. Is it enough to ſay, Improbability, Improbability, Improbability? Is that enough? Have you ſaid any more?

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I have ſaid this, that this Gentleman that ſhould be ſo converſant in the Town, I in his Company, and he in mine; is it not improbable?———

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Look you, Mr. Corniſh, I will tell you what the Method is, to give Evidence firſt, and then apply it in ſumming up the Evidence; if you were ſumming it up, the Court hath all the reaſon in the World to hear you; if you have Evidence, the Way is to give your Evidence, and apply it if you can.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Have you any Witneſſes?

Mr. Corn. Againſt Mr. Rumſey?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Againſt any body, Mr. Rumſey if you will.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I humbly conceive that this Witneſs, Mr. Rumſey, ought not to ſtand; if your Lordſhip ſatisfies me, I ſhall be very much obliged to your Lordſhip: He declared upon his Oath, when he ſwore againſt my Lord Ruſſel, that he had nothing elſe to ſwear againſt any Man.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. How does it appear?

Mr. Corn. I will produce it, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me time.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. But afterwards he diſcover'd a great deal more.

L. C. J. Jones. Look you, Sir, if you have any Exception againſt Mr. Rumſey's Teſtimony, we will hear you, propound a legal Exception.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I humbly conceive, he not producing his Pardon, his Evidence is not good.

L. C. J. Jones. You have had the Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Corn. If your Lordſhip over-rule me.

L. C. J. Jones. We muſt over-rule you.

Mr. Corn. If that will not be granted me.

L. C. J. Jones. Then you have no more to ſay?

Mr. Corn. But for my Innocency, for that (I know) I have enough to ſay.

L. C. J. Jones. That is in your own Breaſt, the Jury can't ſee that; will you call any Witneſſes?

Mr. Corn. I have ſome Witneſſes to call here, as to Mr. Goodenough, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. What is your Exception againſt Mr. Goodenough?

Mr. Corn. My Lord, it was my moſt great Unhappineſs and Misfortune, that this Goodenough was admitted into the Office of Under-Sheriff; and my Lord, that I might fully convince your Lordſhip and this Court, all that I deſire is, ſome few Men may be call'd; beſides, I think there are a thouſand, I may ſay, that will bear me witneſs, I did oppoſe him.

L. C. J. Jones. But pray, Mr. Corniſh, is that an Exception that he does not ſwear true, becauſe you would not let him be your Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Corn. It looks like Malice.

L. C. J. Jones. You did admit him to be Under-Sheriff, all the World knows that.

Mr. Corn. But I can ſet forth that I did oppoſe him, and the Reaſons why I did oppoſe him.

L. C. J. Jones. You may, if you will, give Evidence, what an Inſtrument he was to you, and how he ſerved you in your Office, when you were Sheriff: is this to the purpoſe?

Mr. Corn. Yes.

L. C. J. It is not at all the purpoſe.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I was impoſed upon by my Partner.

L. C. J. Jones. You could not be impoſed upon, you had equal Power with your Partner.

Mr. Corn. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to conſider the Temper of that Man.

L. C. J. What Man?

Mr. Corn. Bethel, I mean, what an obſtinate Man he was. My Lord, I hope I can purge my ſelf greatly in theſe matters.

L. C. J. Jones. If you will, tell to what you will call them.

Mr. Corn. The great Averſion that I had.

Mr. At. Gen. We will admit that he did oppoſe him, becauſe he would have had more Money.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You have heard the Opinion of the Court.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt.—It is not material whether he came in with or without your Conſent.

Mr. Corn. Mr. Gosfright, will you be pleas'd to declare to my Lord, how I was impos'd upon by ſuffering Goodenough to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Gosfright. My Lord, after that Bethel and Corniſh were choſen Sheriffs, they had ſome Meetings together concerning an Under-Sheriff; Mr. Bethel he named Goodenough, Mr. Corniſh he named another; they could not agree, the Difference did ariſe in three or four, or more Days Debate, as I remember, and Mr. Corniſh did tell Sheriff Bethel, he was reſolved if Goodenough were Under-Sheriff he would fine, and not hold, and told him the reaſon why: He ſaid he was a Man that he would not truſt a Hair of his Head with, and he had no Knowledge he believ'd of the Buſineſs; but withal, he told him, he was a Man obnoxious to the Government, and he was an ill Man, and had done ill things, and he would not truſt his Eſtate and his Reputation in the hands of ſuch an Under-Sheriff. Bethel he inſiſted upon it, and he was reſolved he would have Goodenough, and Corniſh's Man ſhould not be.

L. C. J. Jones. Who was Corniſh's Man?

Mr. Gosfright. I know the Man, but forget his Name. ——Millman.

L. C. J. Jones. Can you tell what Goodenough was to give for the Under-Sheriffwick?

Mr. Gosfright. No, indeed.

L. C. J. Jones. Was there no Diſcourſe?

Mr. Gosfright. Not in my hearing.

L. C. J. Jones. Was Goodenough Under-Sheriff to Corniſh at laſt?

Mr. Gosfright. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. How did they agree?

Mr. Gosfright. I believe the Animoſities were ſo great, that they were never reconciled; for Corniſh had ſo beſpatter'd Goodenough, that he was ſo ill a Man, that Goodenough, I believe, could never digeſt it well.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you hear any angry Words, after he was admitted to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Gosfright. Truly, I never was at Alderman Corniſh's while he was Sheriff: But I heard that Character of him.

L. C. J. Jones. And what was the Reaſon you did not go to Mr. Corniſh's?

Mr. Gosfright. No, I believe Goodenough never came there, but I was at neither of their Houſes.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Pray, how many Juries did you help him in?

Mr. Gosfright. Truly I was ſo little acquainted, I could not help him.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. I hear other People ſay the contrary.

Mr. Gosfright. I was but newly come into England, and could know no Man.

Mr. Corn. Alderman Love.

L. C. J. Jones. To what purpoſe do you call him, Sir? To the ſame?

Mr. Corn. It is evidently to declare how much I was impoſed upon.

L. C. J. Jones. Pſha! I will tell the Jury, I will do this for you, upon this Man's Teſtimony, that you were unwilling that Goodenough ſhould be Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, there is a great deal more in it.

L. C. J. Jones. What is there more? he never heard an angry Word between you, during the time, he ſays, afterwards you admitted him to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Corn. Mr. Love, will you pleaſe to declare to the Court, what averſion I had to Mr. Goodenough being the Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I did receive a Subpœna laſt Night, and I wonder'd at it, I confeſs; ever ſince I was ſo happy to get out of publick Employment, having apply'd my ſelf to my private Affairs, I never came to Guild-Hall. But all I can ſay, is this, that when it was publickly talk'd upon the Exchange, meeting Mr. Corniſh upon the Exchange, I did hear him inclined to have another Man (one I don't know,) to be his Under-Sheriff, and that he did not like Mr. Goodenough, but was inclin'd to another Man: but it is ſo long ago, I believe I might perſwade him, having been Sheriff above twenty years ago, to Mr. Haſtings, an honeſt Man; I got my Quietus eſt, without trouble: But I muſt ſay this for the Gentleman, I did hear him complain, that he was impoſed upon to take this Man.

L. C. J. Jones. How long was it after the time?

Mr. Love. It was before they had pitched upon a Man, and he was much inclined to one Mr. Milbourne or Millman, or ſome ſuch name, that is all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you think we ſit here to hear Impertinencies? God forbid, Sir, I ſhould hinder you from giving any Evidence; but this is not at all material.

Mr. Corn. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to let Mr. Jekyl come, he will tell you what this Man did declare, why I was againſt him.

L. C. J. Jones. If you had not entertain'd Mr. Goodenough, then there might be ſomething of Malice in it, but you did receive him.

Mr. Corn. I had private Covenants with Bethel, before I would let him come into the Office. Mr. Jekyl, pray will you declare to my Lord, and the Jury, what averſion I had againſt Mr. Goodenough's being Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Jekyl. Truly, my Lord, Alderman Corniſh and I, living near together, I had occaſion to go to him, ſeveral times, about Bills of Exchange; and he told me, when he was Sheriff, how he was troubled with Bethel, becauſe he would put Goodenough upon him, for I don't intend to have him, ſays he, for I know he is obnoxious to the King and Government, and deſired me to ſpeak to Mr. Bethel about it, but I had no acquaintance with him till he was Sheriff: And ſome came to me, to deſire me to ſpeak to Alderman Corniſh to receive Goodenough. Truly, ſays I, I find him ſo averſe againſt him, that it is not for me to perſuade him, to take a Servant he muſt put ſuch truſt and confidence in; for I ſaw Alderman Corniſh was ſo averſe to it, that I would not do it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you think in your Conſcience, he was more obnoxious to the Government than his Partner, Sheriff Bethel, was?

Mr. Jekyl. I muſt confeſs, I have heard much of Sheriff Bethel, but I never heard that Corniſh was any diſſaffected Man to the Government.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But which was the moſt diſſaffected Man to the Government, Bethel, or Goodenough?

Mr. Jekyl. Truly, as I remember, he ſaid, he would not have him, becauſe he was obnoxious to the King and Government.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. This Gentleman was in a Limb of the Plot himſelf, as great a Rioter, and as hot as any of them, this Evidence that they call: I remember you, Mr. Jekyl, I'll aſſure you.

Mr. Corn. If Sir William Turner be upon the Bench, I deſire him to ſpeak.

L. C. J. Jones. We will hear Sir William Turner any thing.

Mr. Corn. I desire he would declare how I was used.

Sir William Turner. I don't remember that ever I saw Mr. Goodenough's Face before this time, so I have nothing at all to say against him, nor can I say any thing, but what Mr. Cornish told me; and that was, he once came to my House some time after he was chosen Sheriff, and told me, that Mr. Bethel pressed very much for taking Goodenough to be his Under-Sheriff; that he had no mind to accept him, and he would propose another, and it caused a great Difference, but it was at last composed, but how, I can't tell.

L. C. J. Jones. Now, Mr. Cornish, by my consent, if you will, call all the Aldermen upon the Bench; whether they will, or will not, say the same thing, for my part, I will agree, that they have given Evidence (if they will be contented themselves) to the same purpose.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I shall not give your Lordship unnecessary trouble, but I think it is convenient to call some Witnesses, to prove the Manner of my Life and Conversation.

L. C. J. Jones. Your Life hath not been in the dark.

Mr. Cornish. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Tillotson. (who did not appear.)

L. C. J. Jones. Will any Man attest your Loyalty in London?

Mr. Cornish. The Dean of Norwich, Dr. Sharp. Is the Dean of Norwich here?

Officer. No, Sir.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, here is Mr. Lane, I desire he may be asked what he knows.

Mr. Lane. Upon the Trial of my Lord Russel, according as Mr. Cornish desires I may be heard, it is with respect to Colonel Rumsey's Evidence; Colonel Rumsey says, in my Lord's Russel's Trial, he did not hear the Declaration read, because it was read before he came there.

Mr. North. Were you present at my Lord Russel's Trial?

Mr. Lane. No, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levinz. Sir, that signifies nothing.

Mr. Cornish. That is a very material thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. What is? it is no proof at all.

Mr. Cornish. Not the printed Trial?

L. C. J. Jones. No.

Mr. Cornish. It is by Authority.

L. C. J. Jones. Any body that was present may swear it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I desire I may have the Minister of the Parish, Dr. Calamy, for my constancy at my Parish-Church, and receiving the Sacrament, according to the Rites of the Church of England, that I am, to all appearance, a Person that does as well affect the Government as any Man.

L. C. J. Jones. I doubt you are all Appearance.

Dr. Calamy. My Knowledge of Mr. Cornish hath been since I came to be Minister of the Parish, which is about two Years, a little above two Years; whenever he was in Town he did use to come to Church as constantly as any one, and come with his Family to Prayers, and did come to the Sacrament, and he did not only come at Easter, to save himself from a Presentment, but at our monthly Communion; and since I have been Minister of the place, I have often conversed with him: All that I can say, is, that I never heard him say a disrespectful Word of the Government.

L. C. J. Jones. I hope he took you to be a Man of another Kidney.

Dr. Calamy. I marked his words, because of the Character I had heard of him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what was the Character he had before those two Years.

Dr. Calamy. That was, what was publick.

Mr. Cornish Joseph Reeve, Esq;

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, I received a Subpœna, from the Prisoner at the Bar, yesterday. I have been acquainted with him about fourteen or fifteen years, and had a considerable trade with him, and sometimes we had some Conversation, and drank a Glass of Wine together; I thought he was always very Loyal, and drank the late King's Health, and this King's Health, and all the Royal Family. I have no more to say.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. John Cook.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you examine this Witness to?

Mr. Cook. My Lord, I have dealt with him for these twenty Years last past, I always found him a very honest Man, and a just Man, and very upright in his dealing, I always reckon'd him a very honest just Man: I have dealt with him for great Sums, and always knew him very just and upright.

L. C. J. Jones. Your Observation of him, as to the Government.

Mr. Cook. I never knew any thing to the contrary, but that he was always very Loyal.

Mr. Cornish. Mr John Knap.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Cornish, it is not impossible for you to produce Men enough, that shall say, they know nothing against you, concerning the Government, and that you have been a Loyal Man, sure those you chuse, will say so, you have chosen them; and, perhaps, if it were the Business of the King's Counsel, they could do contrary: you are not accused touching your general Conversation, but concerning a particular Fact.

Mr. Cor. It is improbable I should be a Person ever concern'd in these matters; if you consider, you find Cornish mentioned only about being there.

L. C. J. Jones. Does not Mr. Rumsey tell you the meaning why?

Mr. Cor. It is very strange a Man should be at such an Hellish Meeting, and I see him over and over so many times, and never speak of it again.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Cornish, do not you know that Goodenough could not be produced, till the Rebellion in the West?

Mr. Cor. Is it probable that I should entertain any Treasonable Discourse with Mr. Goodenough, when I had so much opposed him in coming into the Office?

L. C. J. Jones. But you let him in.

Mr. Cor. It is known to hundreds in this Town, that I was imposed upon by an unreasonable Man; my Innocency is as great as any Man's and my Virtue should be considered, when I have been under these Impositions: I have been Loyal and Dutiful to my Prince, and Faithful to the Government in all respects; I have opposed all manner of Heats, as much as any Man whatsoever; I can bring hundreds to shew, that where I heard Heats I allay'd them, and it is strange I should be such a Man as I am represented here.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you done, Sir?

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I have thus much further to ſay, that I do think there is no probability that I could be at this Meeting; though a man ſhould have a care how he takes God's Name in vain, I have ſaid it, and I do in the preſence of the great God of Heaven declare it, I was never at the Debate about theſe Affairs; I take the great God to Witneſs, I would not do it for a whole World, if I were not innocent. My Lord, it is moſt improbable what Mr. Rumſey ſays.

L. C. J. Jones. It is a probable thing that Rumſey ſhould forſwear himſelf, it is a probable thing that Goodenough ſhould forſwear himſelf, who have taken the great God to Witneſs to the Truth of what they ſwear againſt you; but it is improbable that Mr. Corniſh ſhould not ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Corn. I will call ſome other Friends, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, to prove my Loyalty.

Mr. Knap. I ever found him a fair, good Pay-maſter.

Mr. At. Gen. He calls you for his Loyalty. Did you never hear him ſpeak any thing againſt the Government?

Mr. Knap. I have not been in his Company but now and then.

Mr. Corn. Did you ever know me ſpeak any thing againſt the Government?

Mr. Knap. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. I marvel that you who have been an Alderman a great while, don't call ſome of the Aldermen; you have call'd Sir William Turner, a very worthy Alderman, I wonder you don't call ſome others of your Brethren, that are known Perſons.

Mr. Corn. Mr. Carleton.

Mr. Carleton. I have been acquainted with my Couſin Corniſh ever ſince the Year 61, when, being a Merchant, trading in Cloth, I began my acquaintance with him, and afterwards, he recommended me to the Party I married, and being Relations, we had great intimacy together; I have been ſeveral times at his Houſe, he did always aſſure me of his Loyalty: I have told him what I have heard People ſay abroad, but he did aſſure me he was Loyal, and I do hope the very ſame of him.

L. C. J. Jones. But you remember you have heard that he was not a Perſon of ſuch eminent Loyalty.

Mr. Carleton. That was upon the account, my Lord, of his being in with Bethel; but he did always aſſure me of it.

Mr. Corn. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will conſider what temper the Man was of that I was to be with, and how obſtinate he was; and I hope I ſhall not anſwer for his Crimes.

Mr. Juſt.——Mr. Corn. why did you qualify yourſelf to ſerve with him? for you were not at firſt qualified.

Mr. Corn. I had been travelling up and down in the Country.

Mr. Juſt.—At that time to qualify your ſelf to be an Officer, then you could lay aſide all your Scruples, and receive the Sacrament.

Mr. Corn. Joſeph Smart, Eſq;

Mr. Smart. I have known Mr. Corniſh above theſe twenty Years, and dealt with him conſiderably, I never knew him but a very fair Dealer.

Mr. Corn. Mr. William Crouch.

Mr. Crouch. I have had acquaintance a great while with Mr. Corniſh, and have had ſeveral Dealings; I found him a very honeſt Dealer, and a good Pay-maſter.

L. C. J. Jones. What know you of his Loyalty?

Mr. Crouch. For his Loyalty, I took it as the Town did, though I never knew any Diſloyalty from him.

Mr. Corn. Mr. James Weſt.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you think you profit your ſelf with this Teſtimony?

Mr. Corn. I would not offend you.

L. C. J. Jones. No, no, you don't offend, I would gladly hear you, if there were any thing pertinent to your Defence.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, you have this Happineſs, that you will be tried by your Fellow-Citizens, of very good Quality and Underſtanding, I muſt needs tell you.

Mr. Corn. I am ſatisfied I have appeared here with all the Care and Caution that becomes an honeſt Man; I have ſpoke nothing but what I have conſider'd as I have been in preſence of the great God; I never was at any Meeting, nor never heard any thing of this till the Trial about my Lord Ruſſel, never heard one Word.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Corniſh, is indicted, that knowing that there was an Inſurrection intended to be againſt the late King, of bleſſed Memory, he did promiſe to be aiding and aſſiſting in it; this is the Subſtance of the Indictment. There have been two Witneſſes produced, Mr. Rumſey, and Mr. Goodenough: Rumſey's Teſtimony (ſo far as I am able to remember, after ſo long a Diſcourſe and ſo much time that hath been ſpent) was to this purpoſe; That the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, Ferguſon, and others, being in Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, there came at length Mr. Corniſh, and excus'd himſelf for coming late, and ſaid, That he was to depart from them very ſpeedily, becauſe he was to go to attend the Buſineſs (as I take it) of the Charter, where the Preſence of an Alderman was neceſſary, and none like to be there but himſelf; That Ferguſon pull'd a Paper out of his Boſom, ſo ſays Mr. Rumſey, and upon the deſire of the Company, it was read to Mr. Corniſh, and Sheppard held the Candle; there were theſe two Points, Rumſey ſays, they had agreed on in that Paper, when the Riſing ſhould be, they would declare for Liberty of Conſcience, and for the Reſtitution of thoſe Lands, Biſhops Lands, and King's Lands, to thoſe Perſons from whom they had been taken after the King's Reſtauration. This Paper being read to Mr. Corniſh, he ſaid, He did like it very well, (theſe were the very words of Rumſey) and with that poor Intereſt that he had in the World, he would join in the Aſſiſtance of them, for thoſe Ends and Purpoſes that were mentioned in that Declaration. Then comes Goodenough, and he tells you, that he came to him in his Parlour, when he was Sheriff, ſaid, Now there was no Safety, no Defence at all by Law, all was gone, there muſt be ſome other Courſe taken, for the Law would not ſufficiently protect them: Why, ſays Mr. Corniſh, 'I marvel they are ſo ſlow in the City, when they are ſo ready in the Country. Ay, but ſays Goodenough again to him, there hath been ſomething done in the City; this was after the time that the City had been put into

into ſeveral Diviſions. I don't ſee there is any Teſtimony from Mr. Goodenough, that Mr. Corniſh knew any thing of that; but ſays he, there is ſomething done here, the Tower is to be ſeiz'd, there is the Magazine, and that is to be ſeiz'd upon, and then we ſhall be able to do ſomething: ſays he, I will do what good I can; or, ſays he, what I can; he is not confident whether of theſe Expreſſions he did uſe, I will do what good I can, or I will do what I can. Afterwards he meets Mr. Corniſh upon the Exchange: here, I confeſs, it is not ſo expreſsly to be applied to this Purpoſe, that it doth faſten directly upon the point in the Indictment; but ſays he, How do Affairs go? How do our Affairs go? ſays he, very well: This is the Teſtimony given againſt him. If this be true, notwithſtanding Mr. Corniſh's Proteſtations of his Innocency, ſure there is nothing doth more plainly prove this Indictment, than this Teſtimony. He ſays it is improbable, very improbable that I in my Circumſtances, that I ſhould ſay ſo; it is improbable, becauſe Mr. Rumſey had Acquaintance with me for fourteen Years together, that I have dealt with him for vaſt Sums, and that I ſhould ſay it in his preſence never but once; and that Rumſey does ſay, He never heard him ſpeak any thing to that purpoſe, but that one time; and therefore it is mighty improbable I ſhould ſay ſo. But what is the Reaſon, ſays he, that this was not diſcover'd before? To this Rumſey gives a poſitive Anſwer, Truly ſays he, Mr. Corniſh, I had more Compaſſion for you, than for my ſelf, I have ſuffer'd for it, you have not ſuffer'd for my ſilence. Then Goodenough ought not to be allowed to be a competent Witneſs, becauſe when Mr. Corniſh and Bethel were choſen Sheriffs of the City, Mr. Corniſh was much againſt receiving Goodenough to be his Deputy, and Goodenough muſt ſay all this maliciouſly againſt him, becauſe he ſo much oppoſed his being Under-Sheriff to him and Bethel. He hath produced ſeveral Witneſſes to that Purpoſe, and they ſay there was ſome reluctancy in him to the receiving Goodenough to be his Under-Sheriff; but it is plain and clear to you all, Gentlemen, and every body in the City knows that Goodenough was his Under-Sheriff, and how well he ſerv'd him, and to what purpoſes, I believe many of you very well know. Another Improbability is, that he ſhould admit Goodenough to come into his Parlour alone, a Man that he had ſo much diſpleas'd; but if ſo be he was once againſt him, he did afterwards take him not only to be his Under-Sheriff, but employ'd him to be his Attorney, and then he might very well admit him into his Parlour alone, to diſcourſe of his Buſineſs as an Attorney, and this might fall in among other Diſcourſe. Gentlemen, there are ſeveral other Witneſſes produced concerning the Honeſty of his Dealing, and the Honeſty of his Converſation, that they have nothing at all to ſay againſt; but Gentlemen in a popular City, where he is, and hath been ſo well known, it is a very eaſy matter to bring millions of Men to give the very ſame Teſtimony, and certainly he will bring none, having the choice of them, but ſuch as ſhall ſpeak in his Favour; but he ſpeaks in the Preſence of God, he ſpeaks from the bottom of his Heart, that he never had any ſuch diſloyal Thought enter'd into his Mind. Gentlemen, hath no body any Senſe of the Preſence of God but Mr. Corniſh? Hath not Rumſey call'd God to be a Witneſs to his Oath? and Goodenough hath done the like? Why is it maliciouſly againſt the Life of Mr. Corniſh? for I don't know he does, in the leaſt, object any thing againſt Rumſey, that there was ever any Diſpleaſure between them two: Why ſhould he deliver this Teſtimony, if it were not the Teſtimony of his Heart? and that which he ſays himſelf, he had too long concealed out of the Compaſſion he had for him. Gentlemen, if a great many Proteſtations and Aſſeverations ſhould make a Man as innocent as confident, no Man ſhould die by the Sentence of the Law; it is an eaſy Matter for any Man to take up the ſame Aſſurance and Confidence that he hath done: And for his being ſuch a Church-man, as he now pretends himſelf to be, for that is one thing by which he would argue the Improbability of the thing, and he would have you believe very much of his Loyalty from it; Gentlemen, all the Evidence he hath given, is but of two Years ſtanding, and ſince the Trial of my Lord Ruſſel: and ſuch a Man as he, and many Men that were conſcious to themſelves of their Guilt, did think it very fit to purge themſelves that way, to gain themſelves a good Opinion that they were loyal to the Government. But it is not deny'd by Mr. Corniſh, that before that time he did not frequent the Church, nor receive the Sacrament.

Mr. Corniſh. Theſe ſeven Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Who did ſay ſo? Sure no body ſaid ſo yet. I repeat the Evidence truly, all you ſaid of that was out of the mouth of Dr. Calamy.

Mr. Corniſh. Dr. Calamy came in but lately, and his Predeceſſor Dr. Whitchcot is dead.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Sir, you were not qualified for your Office if you had not took the Sacrament.

L. C. J. Jones. You did lay aſide all your Scruples to qualify your ſelf to be Sheriff by receiving the Sacrament, which otherwiſe you could not have been. Others that have ſpoken of your Converſation likewiſe ſay, that the Report was abroad, that you were not ſo loyal and firm to the Government as you ought to have been. Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence; I have done my endeavour to repeat it faithfully: If you believe that he did promiſe to aid or join, or agree with that Rebellion or Inſurrection, then you ought to find him guilty of this Indictment.

Mr. Corniſh. I am as innocent as any mortal Man.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a conſiderable time return'd.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope I may have one Word.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. No, not till your Verdict.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. No, no, Mr. Corniſh, we can't.

Mr. Corniſh. I had a Witneſs more that was very material, but I would not offend your Lordſhip: Mr. Rumſey ſaid Mr. Sheppard held the Candle.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Why did not you call him? You call'd a great many impertinent Witneſſes.

Mr. Corniſh. I was not come to him, I would have call'd them in Order.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Why did not you produce him then?

Mr. Corniſh. Becauſe your Lordſhip ſeemed to be angry.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. No, not at all.

Mr. Corniſh. I did forbear purely upon that Account. I pray, my Lord, let him be call'd.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Here were eight Judges and my Lord Chief Juſtice, and now here is only two: Do you think we will defer things of this Nature? It is never aſked. Apply your ſelf to the Judges: It is a ſtrange thing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. This is only to delay Time.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. If he does ſo, the Jury muſt go out again.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. After the Jury hath been out an Hour, we muſt have new Allegations.

Mr. Corniſh. I was tender of offending.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That is a Reflection upon the Court; under favour, Mr. Corniſh, I told you my ſelf over and over to call your Witneſſes.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand.

Mrs. Gaunt. My Lord, I beſeech you, hear me, you won't take Advantage I hope of me.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I declare my Opinion freely, it ought not to be done.

Recorder. I think ſhe ought to have it as well as t'other.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. You call never a Witneſs.

Mrs. Gaunt. No, Sir, I could not tell, I have ſome to call.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I am of that Opinion you ought to take the Verdict.

The Judges came again upon the Bench, and the Jury found Mrs. Gaunt guilty.

L. C. J. Jones. Is Rumſey come in?

Captain Richardſon. I have ſent for him, he will be here preſently.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I muſt pray your Lordſhip, to conſider my Tenderneſs in offending you, which made me omit calling Mr. Sheppard; I had him in my Paper, he is in my Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. Don't you begin your Preface ſomething untowardly, as though the Court would not do you all the Kindneſs poſſible; half a dozen Times you were admoniſh'd to call for pertinent Witneſſes. You did call, I am ſure, a great many impertinent Witneſſes. Had you Mr. Sheppard's Name in your Paper?

Mr. Corniſh. Yes my Lord, but I was tender of offending; pray my Lord, be pleaſed to remember Mr. Rumſey's Evidence.

L. C. J. Jones. Is Mr. Rumſey here? Sir, pray hold your Tongue.

Mr. At. Gen. I would acquaint you, my Lord, I ſent a Subpœna for Mr. Sheppard, but could not find him, but I underſtand that Mr. Corniſh's Son was with him yeſterday, and he has abſconded; this I will give an Account of upon Oath: This my Lord, is a dangerous Practice after Examination, and after the Jury is withdrawn.

Mr. Corniſh. I pray do not aggravate the Matter.

Mr. At. Gen. I muſt do my Duty for the King.

Mr. Corniſh. My Son went to him, and found him at Church.

Mr. At. Gen. Now Mr. Atterbury is gone. I deſire you ſhould have all your right, but not have Tricks put upon the King's Evidence.

Mr. Corniſh. His Evidence was, Mr. Sheppard's holding the Candle.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. For God's ſake, could you examine ſo many to your Reputation, and forget an Evidence that was material? but I muſt tell you, if you will bring Mr. Sheppard to be examined, ſure it is repuiſite, that the Witneſs that ſwears what you did there, ſhould be face to face with him; therefore Mr. Rumſey ſhould be here certainly.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is fit to have Atterbury here, to enquire if he did abſcond; if Mr. Corniſh's Son was with him, and he abſconded upon that Account, it is very material. This is a meer Trick put upon the King's Evidence.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Corniſh, if you intend to produce Mr. Sheppard for that, to contradict Rumſey's Teſtimony, I wonder that you ſhould miſs him, without you have had ſome Notice ſince.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I was not come to him: my Lord, though I have ſuch a vile Charge, I am perfectly innocent.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Now you may ſee what we have got.

Mr. Corniſh. I beſeech you, my Lord, conſider me, it is as improbable a thing as any in the World.

L. C. J. Jones. This is running over the ſame thing twenty Times. Where is Sheppard?

Mr. Corniſh. He was here within this quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, is this fairly done, when you ſaid he was upon the Spot?

Mr. At. Gen. He was ſubpœna'd by you, he would not be found to be ſubpœna'd by the King.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. To make the Court come down, and then to have no Notice of the Perſon at all; ſure you may give the Court leave to take Notice, that they are not civilly dealt with.

L. C. J. Jones. Who told you he was here?

Mr. Corniſh. This Gentleman ſays, he ſaw him. Pray, my Lord, don't be offended.

L. C. J. Jones. I never ſaw ſuch a thing, the Time was, you and your Partner would not have allowed it.

Mr. At. Gen. If he comes, I will give him his Oath.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, here is Major Richardſon can bear Witneſs, I ſaid I muſt ſubpœna Mr. Sheppard; I named him before Major Richardſon again and again, and ſaid, I muſt not omit him.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Sir, I tell you what; you han't ſhewed ſo little Skill to-day here, but that you could maintain ſo long a Diſcourſe with Mr. Rumſey as you were allow'd to do, and ſhould not offer to call Sheppard to contradict him; you dwelt half an hour upon it.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. And relied only upon the Improbability of the thing.

Mr. Rumſey. There is another Gentleman in the Tower, the late Lord Grey, that was in Company when the Declaration was read.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Have you been in Company at Sheppard's?

Mr. Corniſh. I have been at Sheppard's very often. Pray, my Lords, don't be offended, my Life will do you no good, I don't know but here is a Gentleman that hath been in my Company forty Times over ſince that Buſineſs.

Mr. Rumſey. Pardon me, Mr. Corniſh, not above three Times ſince, and then there was other Company.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is impoſſible for any, but thoſe that were Complices with you, to give ſuch Evidence; and, becauſe they were your Complices, now you won't believe them.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Jones. Are you ſubpœna'd by Mr Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. I have a ſubpœna from the King.

L. C. J. Jones. But were you ſubpœna'd by Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. When?

Mr. Sheppard. Laſt Night; this Morning I was not at home.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Corniſh's Son with you yeſterday in the Afternoon?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. And what Diſcourſe had you with his Son?

Mr. Sheppard. He was very preſſing and urgent with me to be here to-day, and I told him, I could not tell whether I could or not.

Mr. At. Gen. Is there any Account between you and Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. To what Sum?

Mr. Sheppard. We were always Trading.

Mr. At. Gen. That is very true, you were Trading——To what Value?

Mr. Sheppard. About one or two hundred Pounds.

Mr. At. Gen. Who is Debtor?

Mr. Sheppard. I am Debtor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, ſince when did you contract that Debt?

Mr. Sheppard. Since when, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay.

Mr. Sheppard. I believe it was ſome ſix or eight Months ago.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what was it? Upon what Account?

Mr. Sheppard. For Cloth, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there no Money lent?

Mr. Sheppard. Money lent me?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, Sir.

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. Is the Debt due to Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, the Debt is due to him.

L. C. J. Jones. Or ſome body for whom he is a Factor?

Mr. Sheppard. I am indebted to Mr Corniſh, for whom it is I can't tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you leave Word, whither you went, when you went out yeſterday?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Which Subpœna was ſerved firſt upon you?

Mr. Sheppard. Mr Corniſh's yeſterday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was it ſerved upon you?

Mr. Sheppard. Preſently after I came out of Church in the Afternoon, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. What have you to ſay?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, Mr. Rumſey was pleaſed to give in his Evidence, that I had been at a Conſult or Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where Mr. Ferguſon ſhould pluck out a Declaration out of his Boſom, and ſhould read it by the Candle, and Mr. Sheppard ſhould hold the Candle to him while he read it.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you remember Mr. Corniſh was ever at your Houſe?

Mr. Sheppard. At one of thoſe Meetings that was at my Houſe, Mr. Corniſh came into the Houſe to ſpeak a few Words with the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other, I can't be poſitive in that, it is ſo many Years ago, and did not ſtay half a quarter of an Hour in the Houſe; I came up Stairs, and went out with him, and there was not one Word read, and no Paper ſeen while he was there.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Was Mr. Corniſh in the Room with the Duke of Monmouth and thoſe others?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, do you remember that the late Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong were there together, and the Declaration read?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember there was a Declaration read, Ferguſon pull'd out a Declaration out of his Shoe, he pull'd off his Shoe, and pull'd it out there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Corniſh was by, any Time that Night?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly I can't ſay whether it was that Night when the Paper was read, but I do poſitively ſay, that there was no Paper read, for he was not looked upon to be of the Company: Mr. Ferguſon told me poſitively, there is the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Col. Rumſey, my ſelf, and you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did Mr. Corniſh come to ſpeak with, when he came to your Houſe?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly I don't know whether it was with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came Mr Corniſh to know the Duke of Monmouth was there?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly my Memory will not call it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did his Coach ſtand publickly at your Door?

Mr. Sheppard. Whoſe Coach?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The late Duke of Monmouth's.

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, they all came private, there was no Coaches at the Door as I ſaw, I let none of them in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Corniſh but once there, when the Duke of Monmouth was there?

Mr. Sheppard. But once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he call the Duke of Monmouth out to him.

Mr. Juſt. Street. How came you to carry him up to the Duke of Monmouth, if he were none of the Company?

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Corniſh did go up into the Room and ſpake to the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other Perſon, but I think the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember he was there in Company, when Col. Rumſey was there?

Mr. Sheppard. No, I can't remember that.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, when I came to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, Mr. Sheppard came down and fetch'd me up, and I deliver'd my Meſſage I had to the Duke of Monmouth, and to the Company, and indeed I was not a quarter of an Hour there, I believe; but by that Time I had ſpoke my Words, ſome-body knock'd at the Door, and Mr. Sheppard went down, and immediately brought up Mr. Corniſh into the Room, without aſking a Queſtion of any body: and when he was come into the Room, Mr. Corniſh ſaid, he could not come ſooner, becauſe he had Buſineſs; and could not ſtay, becauſe there was a Committee for the Management of the Charter, to meet that Night, and there was a Neceſſity of his being there, becauſe there was never another Alderman in Town, and there muſt be an Alderman there.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, do you remember any thing of that?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, I do not remember it, I'll aſſure you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you let him in at the Door?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, I had Word brought me up Stairs, that Alderman Corniſh was below; and I went down, and brought him up.

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you aſk for Mr. Corniſh to come up?

Mr. Sheppard. I don't remember I did: When Mr. Corniſh was there, there was not above three Perſons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were they?

Mr. Sheppard. There was the Duke of Monmouth, and there was Mr. Ferguſon, and truly I can't tell whether t'other was my Lord Ruſſel or my Lord Grey.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. You acknowledge now, Sir, you did carry the Priſoner up to the Duke of Monmouth and thoſe Perſons: Did you uſe to carry all Perſons up there?

L. C. J. Jones. There was a Cabal of Rebels met together, and you go and bring up this Man to them, without any leave or licence from them; which is incredible certainly, unleſs you knew him to be one of the Company, and equally engaged with them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, you ſay, when Mr. Corniſh came up, there was not half the Company there. Had they been there, or were not they yet come?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Look you, Sir, it is marvellous how Mr. Corniſh, if he were none of the Parties, ſhould have notice that the Duke of Monmouth was there, who came in privately at the Back-Door, and came to ſpeak with him there.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I have no Back-Door.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He came in privately.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Mr. Sheppard, I think I heard you ſay, they came privately without their Coaches.

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, they had no Coaches.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. They came privately, I ſuppoſe, that no body ſhould know they were there.

Mr. Sheppard. I ſuppoſe ſo, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. Why then did you carry Mr. Corniſh up? If you were below in the Houſe, he might come about your own Buſineſs; but to be carried into the Chamber where they were, looks as if it were about their Buſineſs.

Mr. Corniſh. I never heard any thing of the Buſineſs, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. So far, Gentlemen, you remember he confirms what Mr. Rumſey ſays; that Gentleman denied he was there with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Corniſh. Pray Mr. Attorney don't ſtrain, I have Dealings with Mr. Sheppard, and have often been there, but never at any Meeting.

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays, you ſpake with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Corniſh. I never ſaw the Declaration, he declares it.

L. C. J. Jones. Had you any Dealings upon account with the Duke of Monmouth?

Mr. Corniſh. Never for a Farthing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What Buſineſs had you with him then?

Mr. Corniſh. I don't know but I might enquire for him in other Places.

L. C. J. Jones. Your own Witneſs carried you up.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, if he did, I did not ſtay; he ſays Mr. Sheppard held the Candle.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, he confirms great part of what Mr. Rumſey ſays.

Mr. Corniſh. Not one Tittle, for he declares I was not of the Company.

L. C. J. Jones. He ſays no ſuch thing.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, to my Knowledge, I can ſafely ſay, he knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. Jones. And yet you could bring him up among them.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I declare I never ſpake any thing to him in my Life about the Buſineſs, nor never in any Company.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is plain, Mr. Rumſey ſays he was the Man that brought you up: How ſhould Mr. Rumſey know that?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, I will aſk you this Queſtion: Had you order from that Company not to bring up any Perſon? Do you remember you ſwore ſo at a former Trial?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember when I was there, they deſired I would let none of my Servants up, and that I would go down and fetch up what they wanted, and I fetch'd up Wine and what they wanted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, why were none of your Servants to come up?

Mr. Sheppard. Becauſe they were in private, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were Strangers to come up therefore?

Mr. Sheppard. It is ſo long ago, I cannot remember.

Mr. Juſt. Levinz. They came privately, without Coaches, becauſe none ſhould know they were there, and you carry Mr. Corniſh up to them.

Mr. Corniſh. I think this Witneſs is confronted.

L. C. J. Jones. Hold your tongue, Sir, he hath not done yet.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, as ſoon as Mr. Corniſh had made his excuſe for his not coming ſooner, and that he could not ſtay, I could not make that, and Mr. Corniſh can't ſay I would do any thing maliciouſly or ſpitefully againſt him; my Lord, as ſoon as he had done, all the Company went about him, and ſome-body did tell him, They would tell him what they had done: they told him the Declaration had been read; that Mr. Ferguſon had prepared it, and they ſaid, Look you, Mr. Corniſh, you ſhall hear it read; and with that, this Gentleman, though he denies it, did take the Candle, and held it: they did not come to the Table, but the Company ſtood round while Mr. Ferguſon pull'd it out of his Boſom.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Sheppard, you are very forward.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I would aſk Mr. Sheppard a Queſtion.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, the Declaration was read, and Mr. Corniſh did approve of it, and did ſay, with that ſmall Intereſt, or little Intereſt, or Words to that effect, that he had, he would aſſiſt.

Mr. At. Gen. I wonder why you did not give me notice when you came in the Morning. Why did not you give notice?

Mr. Sheppard. I was here attending from eleven a-clock till half an hour after three.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſend in any Word?

Mr. Sheppard. I could not tell who to ſend in: I was here expecting to be call'd.

Mr. Juſt. Street. You have had a favour that no Man ever had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, there hath been a very great Indulgence given to the Priſoner, and it is to ſhew you what Tenderneſs a Court of Juſtice hath, and always will have, of the Lives of the King's Subjects: After a full Evidence, though he had neglected his Defence, yet you were again ſent for into Court, to hear what further Evidence he had to offer to you. I cannot but obſerve, ſerve, this looks like a ſubtile Contrivance on the Priſoner's Part; you ſee what Endeavours have been made by Mr. Attorney-General, to have had him here a Witneſs for the King; you have obſerved he told you he had a Subpœna for him, but he was abſent; in what Company he was abſent yeſterday he hath told you, with Mr. Corniſh's Son: this Morning he was not to be found, after he had received this Subpœna, and a Subpœna from Mr. Corniſh; he ſtays without, and gives no notice, but when you are withdrawn, can ſend Intelligence to Mr. Corniſh, that he hath ſomething to ſay, that he hopes will excuſe him: now what that is, I muſt beg you a little to obſerve. Truly I am very glad for the Satisfaction of all Men, that Mr. Sheppard hath now been here, and he is ſo far from invalidating any one part of the Teſtimony, that by all the Circumſtances you can collect from this Evidence that is given, it is a Corroboration of it. Mr. Corniſh was accuſed of being preſent at Conſultations that have been held againſt the Life of the King, and for raiſing Rebellion at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe; his excuſing his not coming there is a ſufficient Argument to prove he was privy to their Meeting; he hath gone on further, and proved to you the reading the Declaration. Now what ſays Sheppard to this Witneſs? Mr. Corniſh, by the way, I muſt obſerve to you, before did deny his being there; he had been ſometimes in company with Ferguſon, but he did not like the Man, he ſays, becauſe of his Morals: now the Witneſs he hath produced hath given you this Teſtimony, that Mr. Corniſh hath been there in that Company, that he came in ſuch a Manner, that no Man but muſt be ſatisfied he was privy to their Deſigns, and did know of their Meeting, for he comes when the Duke of Monmouth, and the reſt of the Conſpirators were there met in private, with a direct charge to Mr. Sheppard, that is the Witneſs, that they ſhould be ſo private, that no one Servant ſhould come up into the Room: yet Mr. Sheppard tells you, that when Mr. Corniſh came he carried him up into the Room, without ſo much as acquainting any one of the Company that Mr. Corniſh had a deſire to come, but brings him up as if he were (and I make no doubt but you will imagine, he was) one of the Company. When he comes there, he ſays his Buſineſs is with the Duke of Monmouth, the Head of that Conſpiracy, and he himſelf tells you he never had any Dealings with the Duke of Monmouth in his Life. What can a Man imagine of that Man that had no Dealings with the Duke of Monmouth, to find him out in a place, where no Mortal could know, and none was to know, and coming to him at that Time and at that Place, under thoſe Circumſtances of Concealment, no Man almoſt but out of his own Mouth muſt believe that he was privy to that Conſpiracy: therefore though this Witneſs doth ſeem to forget ſome Part of the Evidence, the reading the Declaration, and holding the Candle; yet theſe are ſuch Circumſtances that in themſelves do carry a Proof of the Charge, and do confirm all the reſt that the Witneſs hath ſaid; and this muſt be a great Satisfaction to you, that he was there preſent and privy to that Deſign. And ſo I leave it to your Conſideration.

Then the Jury withdrew for a ſhort time, and returning, brought Mr. Corniſh in guilty, and found One Hundred and Forty Pounds for the King in Mr. Sheppard*'s Hands.*

Clerk. Set Elizabeth Gaunt to the Bar.

[Which was done.

Cryer. O-Yes, all Manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence, whilſt Judgment is giving, upon Pain of Impriſonment.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand, thou ſtandeſt guilty of High-Treaſon, &c.

Recorder. You Elizabeth Gaunt, you have here been indicted for that great Crime of High-Treaſon, and that particular Part of it, for harbouring, and comforting, and aſſiſting, and cheriſhing of Traitors, more eſpecially of one Burton; you have had your Trial, and a very fair Trial, and upon that, the Jury have found you Guilty: It is the Duty of my Place to pronounce the Sentence the Law hath provided for ſuch high Crimes as theſe are, and that is no other but this:

That you are to be carried back to the Place from whence you came, from thence you are to be drawn upon a Hurdle, to the Place of Execution, and there you are to be burnt to death; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Mrs. Gaunt. I ſay that this Woman did tell ſeveral Untruths of me.

Recorder. Is that all you have to ſay?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't underſtand the Law.

Clerk. Bring Henry Corniſh to the Bar. Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, now the Law hath paſt upon me, I do humbly pray your Lordſhip, and this honourable Bench, that you will be pleaſed to intercede for me with his Majeſty, I ſhall lead a peaceable, quiet, and dutiful Life: and I hope, when you come to reflect upon what hath been ſaid to-day, that perhaps you will be of another Mind, and have more Charity for me than you had upon my Trial; for in the Simplicity of my Heart, and in the Preſence of God, I do declare, I am innocent: and if your Lordſhip, and this honourable Bench, intercede with his Majeſty, it will be an eternal Obligation upon me, and I ſhall live faithfully, peaceably, and loyally as long as I live. I preſume to beg this, and I promiſe myſelf, and hope it will ſtir up the Hearts of ſome Perſons, that they will not leave me deſtitute of Friends in ſuch a Caſe as this; having a Wife and ſeveral Children, it will be an Act of Charity.

Recorder. The Court does give you your Requeſt, and if there be any Miſery brought upon your Family, it is done by yourſelf *.

Clerk. William Ring, hold upon thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Ring. I had no notice given me, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Recorder. Where is the Executioner, is he here?

Executioner. Yes.

Recorder. Why don't you do your Duty to Mr. Corniſh?

Clerk. John Fernley, hold up thy Hand; thou ſtandeſt convicted of High-Treaſon, for traitorouſly harbouring one James Burton; what canſt thou ſay for thyſelf? &c.

Mr. Fernley. It is very hard meaſure I have had, I have nothing to ſay, but the King's Mercy.

Recorder. Is that all you have to ſay?

Mr. Fernley. I have nothing but the King's Mercy.

Recorder.

* See State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 457.

Recorder. Tie him up then, tie him up.

Cryer. O-Yes, all manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence, whilſt Judgment is giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Recorder. You, the ſeveral Priſoners at the Bar, you have been ſeverally indicted here of the high Crime of Treaſon. For you, Mr. Corniſh, I apply myſelf firſt to you, your Crime is for Treaſon that was committed in his late Majeſty's Lifetime, being one of thoſe notorious Conſpirators that deſigned to raiſe Rebellion, and others ſome of them immediately deſigned the Life of his Majeſty that then was, and his preſent Majeſty, that was the Deſign of ſome of them; and others, they had another part, that was to raiſe Rebellion, and particularly ſome of them in and about this City, and it was carried on ſome time before it was diſcover'd, may be a Year or more, under Colour and Pretence of Law: For ſo did they invade the Government firſt of all by packing of Juries, there was the Foundation laid whereby to bring on that Buſineſs, which they had at laſt deſign'd, when they could bring it to a ripe Head. Too many Perſons in that buſineſs, I believe, were very buſy, meddling with that they had not to do with; clubbing and caballing how to bring their Deſigns about, in oppoſition to the Government, not to ſupport it in the leaſt, but to overthrow it if it were poſſible: But then, at laſt, they muſt take another Courſe, for no longer could they carry it on by pretence of Law, as you have heard today: Now we muſt take other Meaſures, and take down-right Blows. This is the Buſineſs, Mr. Corniſh, that you have been indicted for; and, I muſt tell you, whatever Apprehenſions you have to the contrary, and may pleaſe yourſelf in, I am ſorry to ſee ſuch a ſort of Pleaſure in your Countenance, as if you had had no Favour ſhewed you. I believe the Court hath ſhewed you more Favour, and had more Patience with you, than ever any Man that ſtood in your Place had; for calling a Witneſs after the Jury hath been out, is a thing I never ſaw a Precedent for: And I am glad it was done, for I think it hath clear'd the thing beyond all manner of Contradiction; before it looked ſomething dark for want of Sheppard, and ſo it is a Happineſs that that Man was called to convince you of many things that you proteſted ſo ſolemnly againſt, which I am ſorry to ſee in you, in this Condition that you are, to make ſuch ſolemn Proteſtations, and afterwards call a Witneſs to confront you in them. For the other two, here is Mr. Ring, is very notorious for harbouring a couple of Traitors, knowing from whence they came; and if it were not for ſuch Perſons as theſe are, that do harbour them when they fly, it may be there would not be ſo many bold Attempts to commit ſuch Crimes as theſe are: To provide for them, and nouriſh them, and comfort them, after they have committed their Villanies, this does encourage them to commit their Villanies as they do, and ſo I reckon Harbourers to be worſe than Traitors themſelves, they are like Receivers to Thieves; there would not be ſo many Traitors, if there were no Harbourers: You have been convicted of theſe great Crimes; it is too late, and not fitting to ſpend time any longer, but to pronounce the ſeveral Sentences againſt you, which is this:

You muſt, every one of you, be had back to the Place from whence you came, from thence you muſt be drawn to the Place of Execution, and there you muſt ſeverally be hanged by the Necks, every one of you by the Neck till you are almoſt dead; and then you muſt be cut down, your Intrails muſt be taken out and burnt before your Faces, your ſeveral Heads to be cut off, and your Bodies divided into four Parts, and thoſe to be diſpoſed of at the Pleaſure of the King; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

*Fernley and Ring were reprieved, but Corniſh and Gaunt were ordered for Execution; accordingly four days after, viz. October 23. Henry Corniſh was drawn on a Sledge to King's-ſtreet end in Cheapſide, where a Gibbet was erected on purpoſe, at which Place he ſpoke as follows:

"I Am come here this Day, condemn'd to die; "but God is my Witneſs, the Crimes laid to "my charge were falſely and maliciouſly ſworn "againſt me by the Witneſſes; for I never was at "any Conſult, nor any Meeting, where Matters "againſt the Government were diſcours'd of: I ne"ver heard nor read any Declaration, nor ever act"ed wilfully any thing againſt the Government. I "confeſs, through the Juſtice of God, my private "Sins have brought me to this infamous End; yea, "it were juſt with God, not only to deprive me "eternally of his Preſence, but to condemn me to "eternal Torments; but thro' Chriſt, I hope to be "eternally bleſs'd: Yet, as to the Crimes for which "I ſuffer, on the Word of a dying Man, I am al"together innocent. I bleſs God I was from my "younger Years brought up in, and have for ſome "Years continu'd a Proteſtant, in the Communion "of the Church of England; in which Communion "I now die. I have often partaken in the Ordi"nances, the bleſſed Effects and Comfort thereof "I now feel in this my Agony. I bleſs God I was "born under a Government, in the Conſtitution of "which I did ever acquieſce, and in which I was "once a Member; at which time I did, according "to the beſt of my Underſtanding—[Here he was "interrupted by the Sheriff.]—I bleſs God I was "born in a Land of Light, where the Goſpel hath "been preach'd in Power and Purity; he might "have brought me forth in a Land of Darkneſs and "Ignorance; but bleſſed be God for Jeſus Chriſt.— "Then he intreated the Sheriff to intercede with his "Majeſty to be kind to his poor Wife and Children: "The Sheriff promiſed him to wait on his Majeſty the "next Day about it. He reply'd, Mr. Sheriff, I "thank you, the Lord reward you a thouſand fold; "the Lord put it into the Hearts of you to be kind to "the Widows and Fatherleſs; it is your Duty: The "Lord put it into the Hearts of all good People to "pray for me."

More could not be taken, by Reaſon of the Noiſe of the People, and Interruption of one of the Sheriffs.

When he had made an end of Speaking, the Executioner did his Office; his Head was afterwards fix'd upon the Guild-Hall. His Attainder was reverſed by Act of Parliam. firſt of Will. & Mar. † and the Witneſſes lodg'd in remote Priſons.

The ſame Day Elizabeth Gaunt was executed according to her Sentence. She left the following Paper.

Newgate, 22 October, 1685.

"NOT knowing whether I ſhould be ſuffered "or able, becauſe of Weakneſſes that are "upon me, through my hard and cloſe Impriſon"ment, to ſpeak at the place of Execution, I write "theſe few Lines, to ſignify I am well reconciled "to the Way of my God towards me, though it "be in Ways I looked not for, and by terrible "things,

* Fernley was afterwards executed at Tyburn.

" things, yet in Righteousness; for having given " me Life, he ought to have the Disposing of it, " when, and how he pleaseth to call for it; and I " desire to offer up my All to him, it being but my " reasonable Service; and also the first Terms that " Christ offers, that he that will be his Disciple, must " forsake all and follow him. And therefore, let " none think it hard, or be discouraged, at what " hath happened unto me; for he doth nothing " without Cause, in all that he hath done unto us; " he being Holy in all his Ways, and Righteous " in all his Works; and it is but my lot in com- " mon with poor desolate Sion at this day: neither " do I find in my Heart, the least Regret of any " thing that I have done, in the Service of my Lord " and Master Jesus Christ, in favouring and suc- " couring any of his poor Sufferers, that have shew- " ed favour to his righteous Cause; which Cause, " though it be now fallen and trampled on, as if " it had not been anointed, yet it shall revive, " and God will plead it at another rate, than yet " he hath done, with all its Opposers and malicious " Haters: and therefore let all that love and fear " him, not omit the least Duty that comes to hand, " or lieth before them, knowing that Christ hath " need of them, and expects that they should serve " him. And I desire to bless him that he hath made " me useful in my Generation, to the comfort and " relief of many distressed ones, that the Blessing of " those that have been ready to perish, hath come " upon me, and I have been helped to make the " Heart of the Widow to sing; and I bless his holy " Name, that in all this, together with what I was " charged with, I can approve my Heart to him, " that I have done his Will, though I have crossed " Man's Will; and the Scripture that satisfied me " in it, is the 16th of Isa. 3, 4. Hide the Out-casts, " betray not him that wandereth; let my Out-casts " dwell with thee. Obadiah ver. 13, 14. Thou shouldst " not have given up him that escaped, in the Day of " Distress. But Man saith, You shall give them up, " or you shall die for it. Now whom to obey, " judge ye. So that I have cause to rejoice and be " exceeding glad, in that I suffer for Righteousness " sake, and that I am accounted worthy to suffer " for well-doing, and that God hath accepted any " Service from me, that hath been done in Since- " rity, though mixed with manifold Weaknesses " and Infirmities, which he hath been pleased for " Christ's sake to cover and forgive. And now, " as concerning my Fact, as 'tis called, alas, it is " but a little one, and might well become a Prince " to forgive; but, He that sheweth no Mercy, shall " find none: and I may say of it, in the Language " of Jonathan, I did but taste a little Honey, and " lo, I must die for it; I did but relieve a poor, " unworthy and distressed Family, and lo, I must " die for it. I desire in the Lamb-like Will, to " forgive all that are concerned; and to say, Lord " lay it not to their Charge; but I fear and be- " lieve, that when he comes to make Inquisition " for Blood, mine will be found at the door of the " furious * Judge, who, because I " could not remember things, through " my Dauntedness at Burton's Wife and Daughter's " Witness, and my Ignorance; took advantage " thereat, and would not hear me, when I had " called to mind, that which I am sure would have " invalidated their Evidence; and tho' he granted " some things of the same nature to another, yet " he granted it not to me. My Blood will be " also found at the door of the unrighteous Jury, " who found me guilty upon the single Oath of an " outlawed Men; for there was none but his Oath " about the Money, who is no legal Witness, tho' " he be pardoned, his Outlawry not being recall'd: " and also the Law requires two Witnesses in point " of Life; and then, about my going with him " to the Place mentioned, it was, by his own " Words, before he could be outlawed, for it was " two Months after his absconding; and though " in a Proclamation, yet not High-Treason, as I " have heard: so that I am clearly murdered by " you. And also bloody Mr. Atterbury, who so " insatiately hunted after my Life; and tho' it is " no Profit to him, yet through the Ill-will he " bore me, left no Stone unturned, as I have " ground to believe, until he brought me to this; " and shewed favour to Burton, who ought to " have died for his own Fault, and not to have " bought his Life with mine. And lastly, Richard- " son, who is cruel and severe to all under my Cir- " cumstances, and did at that time, without all " Mercy or Pity, hasten my Sentence, and held up " my Hand that it might be pronounced; all which " together with the * Great one of all, " by whose Power all these, and mul- " titudes of more Cruelties are done, I do heartily " and freely forgive, as done against me: But as 'tis " done in an implacable Mind against the Lord " Christ, his righteous Cause and Followers, I leave " it to him who is the Avenger of all such Wrongs, " and hath said, I have raised up one from the " North, and he shall come upon Princes as upon Mor- " tar, and as the Potter treadeth Clay, Isa. xli. 25. " He shall cut off the Spirit of Princes, and be ter- " rible to the Kings of the Earth, Psal. lxxvi. 12. " And know this also, that tho' you are seemingly " fixed, and because of the Power in your hands, " and a weighing out your Violence, and dealing " with despiteful Hand, because of the old and " new Hatred, by impoverishing, and by every " way distressing those you have got under you; " yet unless you secure Jesus Christ, and his holy " Angels, you shall never do your business, nor " your hands accomplish your Enterprizes; for " he will come upon you e'er you are aware, and " therefore, O that you will be wise, instructed, " and learn, is the Desire of her that finds no " Mercy from you,

Elizabeth Gaunt.

POSTSCRIPT.

" SUCH as it is, you have it from her, who " hath done as she could, and is sorry she can " do no better; hopes you will pity and cover " weakness, shortness, and any thing that is want- " ing, and begs that none may be weakned or " humbled at the lowliness of my Spirit; for God's " Design is to humble and abase us, that he alone " may be exalted in this Day: and I hope he will " appear in the needful time, and it may be re- " serves the best Wine till last, and he hath done " for some before me; none goeth to Warfare at " his own Charge, and the Spirit bloweth, not " only where, but when it listeth; and it becomes " me, who have so often grieved, quenched, and " resisted it, to wait for and upon the Motions of " the Spirit, and not to murmur: but I may " mourn, because through want of it, I honour " not my God, nor his blessed Cause, which I have " so long loved and delighted to love; and repent " of nothing about it, but that I served him and " it no better.

CXXXVII. The Trial of Charles Bateman, Surgeon, at the Old-Bailey, for High-Treason, December 9. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

THE Seſſions of Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery of Newgate, for the City of London and County of Middleſex, beginning at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, on the 9th of December, 1685. Charles Bateman, againſt whom an Indictment of High-Treaſon had been found, for conſpiring the Death of the late King, &c. was brought in the Cuſtody of the Keeper of Newgate in order to his Arraignment; and being ordered to hold up his Hand, he deſired that he might firſt ſay ſomething for himſelf, in order to put off his Trial, but was told by * Mr. Recorder, he muſt plead before he could be heard. Whereupon deſiring to know whether he might have the ſame advantage after his Pleading as before, as to gain longer time for his Trial; and being anſwered he might, he held up his Hand, and then the Indictment was read.

* Sir Thomas Jenner.

Mr. Bateman pleaded not guilty, and deſired his Trial might be put off, ſaying, He was not prepared to make his Defence, and therefore prayed a longer time, ſaying, He had been cloſe Priſoner for the ſpace of ten Weeks, and was over and above very much indiſpoſed; and further alledged, he had had no Notice nor Pannel of the Jury. As for Notice of Trial, he was anſwered, that it was not uſual to give any in that Court, but that he ought to have expected it, and prepared for it accordingly; and as for the Pannel, it was not deny'd him. Then he pray'd a Copy of the Indictment, but was told it could not be allowed; and upon his further alledging his unpreparedneſs and no notice of Trial, and the like, the King's Counſel urged that he had Opportunity enough to take notice of his Trial, for that it was upon an Indictment of the precedent Seſſions. Then he aſked what time he might have between his Arraignment and Trial; and was anſwered, as much as would ſtand with the conveniency of the Court: and after ſeveral Hours reſpite, he a ſecond time was brought to the Bar, and then upon his humble Requeſt, Pen, Ink, and Paper was allowed him, and his Son to aſſiſt him; and then were ſworn to try the Iſſue,

And he making no Exceptions to them, then the Indictment was read.

The Jurors, &c.

THAT Charles Bateman, late of the Pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt, in the Ward of Faringdon Without, London, Surgeon, as a falſe Traitor, againſt the moſt illuſtrious and excellent Prince, Charles the Second, late King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and his natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our late Lord the King, towards him ſhould, and of right ought to bear, altogether withdrawing and practiſing, and with all his Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom to diſquiet and diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our late Lord the King, within this Kingdom to ſtir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our late Lord the King, of this Kingdom to ſubvert, and our ſaid late Lord the King, from the Stile, Title, Honour, and Kingly Name, of the imperial Crown of this Kingdom to depoſe and deprive, and our ſaid late Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put; the 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year of his Reign, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterwards, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, with divers other Rebels and Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did conſpire, compaſs, imagine, and intend our ſaid late Lord the King, then his ſupreme and natural Lord; not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England, to deprive and depoſe, but alſo our ſaid late Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom to change, alter, and ſubvert; and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid late Lord the King to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Lord the King to procure and aſſiſt. And the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and traitorous Conſpiracies, Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to effect, and bring to paſs; he the ſaid Charles Bateman, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, (to wit) the ſaid 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterwards, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſely, unlawfully moſt wickedly, and traitorouſly, did promiſe and undertake to the ſaid other falſe Rebels and Traitors then and there being preſent, That he the ſaid Charles Bateman would be aſſiſting and aiding, in the taking and apprehending the Perſon of our ſaid late Lord the King, and in taking and ſeizing the City of London, and the Tower of London, the Savoy, and the Royal Palace of White-Hall, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace, &c. and againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided, &c.

Mr. Phipps. Counſel for the King, opened the Nature of it, and was ſeconded by Mr. Serjeant Selby and Mr. Charles Moloy; after which, Mr. Joſias Keeling was ſworn, whoſe Evidence was, that he he had been at divers Meetings and Conſults, where the Methods had been propoſed for the Purpoſes aforeſaid; and more particularly one time with Rumbold the Maliſter, ſince executed for High-Treaſon, and that then, three Papers were produced by Rumbold and opened, containing the Model of the Deſign, to divide the City into twenty Parts, and to raiſe five hundred Men in each Part, to be under one Chief, and nine or ten Subordinates whom he ſhould appoint, the Names of the Lanes and Streets of each Diviſion being likewiſe inſerted therein; and at that time Rumbold propoſed the buſineſs of the Rye-Houſe, ſaying, He had a Houſe very convenient to plant Men in, to ſeize the King in his return from New-Market, but that he ſomewhat boggled about the killing of the Poſtillion, which had been propoſed the better to ſtop the Coach, becauſe it looked too much like an Exploit in cold Blood. He further depoſed, that he had been at divers other places where it had been diſcourſed to the ſame Effect, and that Mr. Bateman was looked upon as a Perſon fitting to manage one Diviſion in order to an Inſurrection, to ſeize the Tower, City, &c. This being the Sum of Mr. Keeling's Evidence; Mr. Bateman ſaid, that what he had ſworn, did not affect or charge any Treaſon upon him; and was anſwered by the Court that it did not, and bid the Jury take notice, that what Mr. Keeling had ſworn, was only to the Conſpiracy in general, and did not affect the Priſoner in particular.

Then Thomas Lee was ſworn, and gave Evidence, That he being made acquainted with the Deſign by Mr. Goodenough, &c. and how the City was to be divided into twenty Parts and managed; and being aſked who was a fit Man to manage one part, he nominated Mr. Bateman, and thereupon was deſired to go to him, and ſpeak with him about it as from Mr. Goodenough; and when he came to diſcourſe him about that Affair, he apprehended very plainly, and that he was no Stranger to it, nor boggled to give his Aſſent, and ſeem'd much deſirous to ſpeak with Mr. Goodenough about it: That he likewiſe went one day to the late Duke of Monmouth's Houſe with Mr. Bateman; and Mr. Bateman, after he had had ſome Diſcourſe with one of the Duke's Servants, came to him and told him, the Duke was willing to engage in the Buſineſs, and aſſur'd him, that he had divers Horſes kept in the Country, to be in a readineſs when matters ſhould come to Extremity; and from thence he went with him to the King's-Head Tavern, and there had diſcourſe to the ſame effect: and from thence they came to the Devil-Tavern within Temple-Bar, where Mr. Bateman propoſed the ſeizing the City, Tower, Savoy, White-hall, and the Perſon of the late King, and promiſed not to be wanting therein. At another time, he met him at the Half-Moon-Tavern in Alderſgate-ſtreet, where diſcourſing about the Condition the Conſpirators were in, as to the intended Inſurrection, he ſaid, If he could but ſee a Cloud as big as a Man's Hand, he would not be wanting to employ his Intereſt: and that there were other Diſcourſes tending to the Inſurrection, but were broke off by the coming in of one John Almeger, before whom Mr. Bateman would not diſcourſe, becauſe he knew not of his coming.

Mr. Lee being aſked the Deſign of that Meeting, reply'd it was upon the account of carrying on the Conſpiracy, and that Mr. Bateman had told him, that he intended to take a Houſe near the Tower, to place Men in, in order to ſurprize it, and that he had held divers Conferences with ſome Sea-Captains on that Affair; and that he had been with them at Coffee-Houſes, &c. at ſundry other times; but there, to prevent diſcovery, they ſpoke of the Deſign at a great diſtance.

To this Evidence, Mr. Bateman objected, that if he had been conſcious of what was laid to his Charge, he was fit for Bedlam; ſaying, He wonder'd if he had heard him ſpeak ſuch words, he had not accuſed him ſooner: but was anſwered that Mr. Goodenough was not to be had till after the Rebellion in the Weſt; and that Lee's ſingle Teſtimony in Caſe of High-Treaſon in ſo high a nature, was not ſufficient.

Then Mr. Richard Goodenough was called, who being ſworn, depoſed, that being in Company with Mr. Bateman (to the beſt of his Remembrance) at the King's-Head Tavern in St. Swithin's-Alley near the Royal-Exchange, and having ſome Diſcourſe about the intended Inſurrection, and of Wade and others that had engaged to promote it; Mr. Bateman not only approv'd of the Deſign, but promiſed to uſe his Intereſt in raiſing Men; and not only to be aſſiſting in the Diviſion allotted him, but in ſurprizing the City, Savoy, &c. and in driving the Guards out of Town. To this he objected, that he was not at the King's-Head, with Goodenough; to which Mr. Goodenough reply'd, He had not ſworn poſitive to the place, though he verily believed that was the place; but however, as to the Diſcourſe and Words then ſpoken by Mr. Bateman, he was poſitive.

The Evidence being thus full againſt Mr. Bateman, and Liberty granted him to make what Defence he could, he deſired that Sir Robert Adams might be heard, in relation to a falſe Report the ſaid Mr. Lee had raiſed of Sir Robert and others; and Sir Robert being in Court, gave Evidence that there had been a Report abroad, ſaid to be raiſed by Mr. Lee, that he (viz. Mr. Lee) had beaten three Knights, and that Mr. Lee came to him and asked his pardon, acknowledging the thing in it ſelf was altogether falſe.

To the ſame purpoſe Sir Simon Lewis was called, but appeared not.

Amos Child being called by Mr. Bateman, to teſtify his Knowledge of Mr. Lee, and being aſked what he could ſay againſt him, declared, That he knew nothing to the contrary, but Mr. Lee was an honeſt Man.

One Baker being called by Mr. Bateman, to teſtify that Mr. Lee would have ſuborned him againſt him to his Prejudice, ſome Years ſince, of which he had made an Affidavit before Sir William Turner, and the ſaid Baker not then appearing in Court, he deſired Sir William Turner to give ſome account of Baker's Examination, which the ſaid Sir William had taken; but it being about two Years ſince, Sir William declared, He could not charge his Memory with any of the Particulars contained therein.

Mr. Tompkins, Sir William Turner's Clerk, being called, and aſked what he could ſay concerning any Examination of Baker's taken before Sir William, that related to Lee; he ſaid there was an Examination taken Anno 1683, wherein Mr. Lee was mentioned; but to the beſt of his Remembrance it was returned before the King and Council, and he could not give any account of the Particulars.

Then Mr. Bateman desired to know upon what Statute he was indicted, and was informed by the Court, That the Treason wherewith he stood charged, was comprehended within the 25*th* of Edward the III, and the 13*th of* Car. II. by Overt-Act; and having little more to say in his own Defence, after a favourable hearing of all he had materially to offer, and his Son having been allowed by the Court to assist him, in looking over his Notes, and calling his Witnesses, by reason he through sickness pretended himself incapable: Then the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench summ'd up the Evidence at large, and omitted nothing that might be for the advantage of the Prisoner, whereby the matter was fairly, fully, and clearly left to the Jury; and thereupon Mr. Bateman was taken from the Bar. After which the other Prisoners being called and tried, and the Jury ready to go forth to consider of their Verdict, Mr. Bateman's Daughter come in and besought the Court, that Baker, whom she said she had found out, might be heard against Mr. Lee; but Mr. Lee being gone and the Trial already over, the King's Counsel opposed it, unless Mr. Lee could be found (which he could not be at that time) and the Court having deliver'd their Opinion that it was not convenient to examine any Witness after the Jury had received their Charge, it being a very ill Precedent and of dangerous Consequence; yet some of the Jury desiring it, the Court, to prevent any Objections that might be made, consented, and Baker had leave to speak: whose Evidence was, that being in Company with Mr. Lee, some time in the Year 1683, and discoursing about divers matters, he bid him go to the Sign of the Peacock, and to the Angel and Crown, to a Surgeon and a Linnen-Draper whom he named, the former of which he remembred to be the Prisoner, and to insinuate himself into their Company and discourse them; and when he demanded of Mr. Lee to what end he should do it, or about what he should discourse them, he told him it might be about State-Affairs, and by that means he would find a way to make him a great Man; and when he excused his attempting to intrude into such Company as was above him, he being but a Shoe-maker, Mr. Lee told him he knew that he kept Company with such and such Men, and why could he not as well do it with those he had mentioned. And of this he said his Examination was taken before Sir William Turner; but this being nothing to the purpose, but was rather looked upon as a Design Mr. Lee had to make a discovery of the Conspiracy, if he could have procured further Evidence to have corroborated his own, and Baker being looked upon as a broken Fellow, and that he lodged near the Sessions-House, and yet came not in before, though often called; the Consideration of the whole matter was left to the Jury, and an Officer being sworn to attend them went out, and after about half an Hour's debating that, and what else was before them, gave in their Verdict, that Charles Bateman then at the Bar, was Guilty of the High-Treason as laid in the Indictment; which Verdict was accordingly recorded, and the Prisoner re-conveyed to Newgate: And being again brought to Justice-Hall, on Friday the 11th of December, in order to receive Sentence; and upon holding up his Hand, being asked What he could say for himself, why the Court should not give Judgment against him according to the Law; he desired to know whether Mr. Goodenough was fully pardoned, and was told, that as for the Out-lawry he was pardoned, and that his Pardon hath been allowed and approved of in that Court, and in the Court of King's-Bench, and for any thing else he was not prosecuted. Then he said his Opinion was altogether for Monarchy, and that he hoped he should have an Advocate with the King; but had nothing more material to offer.

Then Mr. Recorder, after having spoke several things in aggravation of that great Crime, whereof, after a fair and favourable Trial, he was convicted, advised him not to flatter himself with hopes of Life, and thereby delay his Repentance necessary for his future Happiness; pronounced the Sentence, which was, That he should return to the place from whence he came, from thence be drawn to the Place of Execution, there to be hang'd by the Neck, and whilst alive be cut down and his Bowels to be taken out and burnt; his Head to be sever'd from his Body, and his Body divided into four Parts, and that his Head and Quarters be disposed at the Pleasure of the King.

Upon this he prayed a Divine might have leave to come to him, as likewise his Relations; which being allowed, he departed the Court, and was on Friday the 18th of December, executed at Tyburn according to the Sentence.

Remarks

Remarks upon the Trials of Edward Fitzharris, Stephen Colledge, Count Coningſmark, the Lord Ruſſel, Col. Sidney, Henry Corniſh, and Charles Bateman; as alſo on the Earl of Shafteſbury's Grand Jury, Wilmer's Homine Replegiando, and the Award of Execution againſt Sir Thomas Armſtrong. By Sir John Hawles, afterwards Sollicitor-General.

THE ſtrange Revolution which hath of late happen'd in our Nation, naturally leads one into the Conſideration of the Cauſes of it. The Danger of ſubverting the eſtabliſh'd Religion, and invading Property, alone could not be the Cauſes. For if it be true, that the ſame Cauſes have generally the ſame Effect; it is plain, that in the Reign of a precedent Monarch, the Subverſion of the eſtabliſh'd Religion was as much deſign'd, or at leaſt was believ'd to be ſo, as of late; and it is not material whether what was ſuſpected was true, or not; and Property was as much invaded as of late, by impoſing Ship-Money, and other Taxes in the Nation, but more eſpecially Ship-Money; which at firſt was light and eaſy, but in Progreſs of Time was increas'd, according as it was found the Nation would bear it. And at length it was feared, as there was juſt Reaſon ſo to do, that it would become as burdenſom as what is now impoſed on the French Nation by the French King; and yet, when the War broke out, if the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, or the Perſons who lived about thoſe Times, are to be believ'd, the Majority of the Nation took part with the King. There was therefore ſome other Reaſons for the Diſaffection of the Nation to the late Government, and they may be rank'd under theſe ſix Heads.

Exorbitant Fines; cruel and illegal Proſecutions; outrageous Damages; ſeizing the Charters; diſpenſing with the Teſt and Penal Laws; and undue Proſecutions in criminal, but more eſpecially in capital Matters.

For the Firſt, I ſhall only obſerve, that when the Houſe of Commons, in the Parliament 1680, took that Matter into Conſideration, and intended to impeach ſeveral Perſons for the ſame, the higheſt Fine, at that Time complain'd of, was but 1000 l. and yet in few Years they were heighten'd to 10,000 l. 20,000 l. 30,000 l. and 40,000 l.

For the Second, the Puniſhment of Oates, Dangerfield, and Mr. Johnſon; and the cloſe Impriſonment of Mr. Hampden, Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, and of ſeveral other Perſons, as they were againſt the Law, ſo they were without Precedent.

For the Third, tho' the Damages given to Bolſworth were the firſt outrageous Damages given, which were taken Notice of, and in Truth were ſuch; yet in little Time Damages for Matters of like Kind were quickly improved to 10,000 l. 20,000 l. 40,000 l. nay 100,000 l. the Truth of which a great many living Witneſſes, to their Sorrow, can teſtify.

For the Fourth, the ſeizing the City, and other Charters, upon the Pretences on which they were queſtion'd, was without Example.

For the Fifth, the diſpenſing with the Teſt and Penal Laws, was as miſchievous as it was illegal; it making Perſons capable, who were incapacitated by Law of being in Places, of exerciſing Offices, for whom the Perſons who had Power to confer or beſtow the ſame, had more Affection, than for the Perſons who at that preſent enjoy'd them: The Conſequences of which were quickly ſeen, in turning out the preſent Poſſeſſors, to make Room for others; which was the Thing, which, as a Scotch Biſhop ſaid of another Matter, ſet the Kiln a-fire.

Of theſe five Particulars ſomething hereafter may be ſaid; at preſent, this Treatiſe is only to conſider how far the Proceedings in capital Matters, of late Years, have been regular or irregular: And as to that, I ſhall not at all conſider how far the Perſons hereafter mention'd were guilty of the Crimes of which they were accus'd, but how far the Evidence againſt them was convincing to prove them guilty, and what Crimes the Facts prov'd againſt them in Law were.

Remarks on Fitzharris's Trial.

THE firſt Perſon I ſhall begin withal ſhall be Fitzharris; and that it may not be wonder'd, that the Trial and Condemnation of a Perſon who was confeſſedly an Iriſh Papiſt, ſhould be complain'd of; and one whoſe Crimes were ſuch, that if the Law declar'd had not made Capital, it had been juſt, in reſpect of the Malefactor, for the Legiſlative Power to have enacted, that he ſhould ſuffer the ſevereſt Puniſhment uſually inflicted for the higheſt Crime: yet, in reſpect of the common Good, it had been juſt and fit to have pardon'd him, if he would have confeſs'd who were his Conſpirators and Setters on; for I am apt to think, that if that Matter had been thoroughly look'd into, ſome Perſons, afterwards Witneſſes in the Lord Ruſſel's, Colonel Sidney's, and Mr. Hampden's Trials, had either never been produc'd, or had not been credited if produc'd; nor would my Lord of Eſſex's Throat have been cut; and my Lord Ruſſel, and Colonel Sidney might have worn their Heads on their Shoulders to this Day.

All will agree, that there was a great Struggle between the Whigs and Tories, as they were then call'd, for hanging or ſaving that Man: Both agreed he deſerv'd to be hang'd; the firſt thought it their Advantage to ſave him if he would confeſs, the laſt thought it was fit to hang him for fear he would confeſs. And to explain the Matter, it is fit to go a little higher: It cannot but be remembred, that before the breaking out of the Popiſh Plot, Mr. Claypole was impriſon'd in the Tower for deſigning to kill the King, in ſuch Place and Manner as Oates afterwards diſcover'd the Papiſts intended to do it. In Trinity Term, 1678, he had an Habeas Corpus to the King's Bench, and was brought thither in order to be bail'd, and produced Perſons of Worth to bail him; but the Penalty of the Bail ſet by the Court was ſo high, and the Court ſo aggravated the Crime for which he was committed, and the Likelihood of the Truth of it, that the Bail refus'd to ſtand, and Claypole was remanded to the Tower. But the Term after, when the Matter, of which he was accus'd, appear'd bare-fac'd to be the Deſign of other People, he was let go, for fear the Examination of it ſhould go further in proving the Popiſh Plot, than any thing at that time diſcover'd. And if it were now diſcover'd, upon whoſe and what Evidence he was committed, it would go a great way in diſcovering the Truth of many Matters, as yet in the Dark, (but that Deſign miſcarry'd, becauſe the Intrigue was diſcover'd before it took Effect; and yet a like Deſign was ſtill carried on, and many of the Clergy of the Church of England had been prevail'd with to cry the Popiſh up as a Fanatick Plot.) The Papiſts and the Clergy of the Church of England being in the late Times equally Sufferers, and oppreſs'd by the Fanaticks, they naturally grew to have a Kindneſs for each other, and both join'd in hating the Fanaticks; and therefore pretended, at leaſt, that they did not believe any thing of the Popiſh Plot, but that Report was given out by the Fanaticks, whilſt they themſelves were deſigning ſomething againſt the Church of England. The Papiſts having ſo great a Part of the Clergy of the Church of England, ready to believe any thing of a Fanatick Plot, which they ſhould forge, and obſerving that that which gave Credit to the Popiſh Plot, was Writings concurring with Oral Teſtimony, which it did; for very little of the Truth of the Popiſh Plot depended on the Credit of Oates, Bedloe, or any other Perſon, moſt of the Facts of that Deſign, when diſcover'd, proving themſelves: To inſtance in one; Oates diſcover'd Coleman had Intelligence with Le Chaiſe, of a Deſign on England, and that Coleman had Papers teſtifying as much; when thoſe Papers were ſeiz'd, and own'd by Coleman, and the Purport of them was what Oates ſaid they were, it was not material, whether Oates was a Man of Truth or not, the Papers, without Oates's further Evidence, ſufficiently prov'd the Deſign: I ſay, the Papiſts, having obſerv'd what the Evidence was which gave Credit to that Plot, reſolv'd to purſue the ſame Steps, and therefore Dangerfield was made uſe of to leave Papers in Colonel Manſel's Lodging, who was an Acquaintance of my Lord Shaftesbury's importing a † Plot; but that was ſo fooliſhly carried on, and the then * Attorney-General, who had the Examination of that Matter, not being qualify'd with the Aſſurance his Succeſſor had, to carry on a Thing that had neither Senſe nor Honeſty in it, made ſuch a ſcurvy Report of the Matter to the King and Council, that they were enforc'd to vote Manſel Innocent, Dangerfield Guilty, and that it was a Deſign of the Papiſts to lay a Plot to the Diſſenters Charge, and a further Proof of the Popiſh Plot. But that Attorney-General being remov'd to a Place of more Honour, though of leſs Profit, and * another put in his Place, the Papiſts reſolv'd to carry on the ſame Deſign; and no Perſon a fitter Inſtrument than Fitzharris, in reſpect of his Religion and his Acquaintance; but before his Deſign came to Perfection, it was diſcover'd.

* Sir Creſwel Levinz.

* Sir Robert Sawyer.

He was firſt impriſon'd in Newgate, where ſome Perſons (amongſt whom Mr. Corniſh, as I remember, then Sheriff, was believed to be one, and it was not the leaſt of his Crime, that he endeavour'd to look into that Arcanum) went to examine him as to the Particulars of that Deſign; which was quickly taken Notice of, and the Priſoner, in Breach of the Habeas Corpus Act, remov'd from thence to the Tower, where he was kept cloſe Priſoner.

The Parliament at Oxford meeting ſoon after Fitzharris's Apprehenſion, and the Houſe of Commons being inform'd of as much of his Deſign as was then diſcovered, they thought themſelves highly concern'd to examine him; but how to do it they knew not: only they reſolv'd (upon a Report which one of their Members made them of one Hubert, who confeſſed himſelf guilty of firing the City of London, upon which it was reſolv'd to examine him in the Houſe of Commons the next Morning, but before the Houſe ſat Hubert was hang'd) that Fitzharris ſhould not be hang'd without their Knowledge and Conſent; and to effect it, they remember'd a Deſign to try the five Popiſh Lords in the Tower upon Indictments; whereupon, if they ſhould be acquitted, it was thought that thoſe Acquittals might be pleadable to Impeachments. To prevent which, the Houſe had exhibited general Impeachments of High-Treaſon againſt them in the Houſe of Lords; which had ſuch Succeſs, that the Lords were never, and the Judges gave their Opinion, that they could not be tried on the Indictments, as long as the Impeachments were in Being; for which Reaſon, the Houſe of Commons exhibited a general Impeachment of High-Treaſon in the Houſe of Lords againſt Fitzharris, which was receiv'd; after which the Houſe of Lords made an Order, that Fitzharris might or ſhould be try'd in the King's Bench for the ſame Treaſon: ſuddenly after which, that Parliament was diſſolv'd. Whether Fitzharris's Buſineſs was the Break-neck of that Parliament, I know not, but it was ſhrewdly ſuſpected it was.

There was at that Time a * Chief Juſtice in the King's Bench, who was himſelf under an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, and had not, for that Reaſon, ſat in Court for ſome Terms preceding; and the Trial of Fitzharris being generally look'd upon to be as illegal as it was odious, it was thought convenient to carry it on by a Perſon of better Credit; whereupon * one who had had been a Puiſne Judge of that Court, and had behaved himſelf very plauſibly, and had gained Credit by being turn'd out, was thought to be the fitteſt Perſon to undertake it; and accordingly the then preſent Chief Juſtice was remov'd, and the other was preferred to his place.

It being reſolv'd that Fitzharris ſhould be try'd, the Buſineſs was how to get Witneſſes to give Evidence to a Jury, and how to get Juries to find the Bill, and to convict the Priſoner, which were difficult Preliminaries.

* Sir William Waller.

A * Perſon who had been one of the Houſe of Commons, which had exhibited the Impeachment, was a principal Witneſs; but if he ſhould give Evidence on the Indictment, he knew not how far he might be hereafter queſtionable and puniſhable for it, when a Parliament ſhould ſit again; but at laſt that Perſon was prevail'd upon to give Evidence, but by what means is beſt known to himſelf. And as for the Juries, Grand and Petty, they were ſatisfy'd with the Direction of the Court, that they not only might, but ought to find the Bill, and Verdict, according to their Evidence. And I think the Court was ſo far in the right.

That Matter being adjuſted, a Bill of High-Treaſon was found againſt the Priſoner; whereupon he was preſently arraigned, and after much Conteſt and Declaration of the Court, that they could hear nothing till he had pleaded in chief (which if he had done, the Plea he afterwards pleaded, which was the Juriſdiction of the Court, had come too late) he had Leave given him to plead the ſpecial Matter of the Impeachment; and accordingly Counſel were aſſign'd him to draw up and argue his Plea put in to the Juriſdiction of the Court; which was, That he was impeached in a ſuperior Court for the ſame Treaſon.

Great Endeavours were uſed to have the Plea over-ruled, without ſo much as hearing the Priſoner's Counſel for the maintaining it. The Pretences were, that the Priſoner on his Plea ought to have produced the Record of his Impeachment, and that the Plea of the Impeachment for High-Treaſon in general was naught, without ſpecifying what the High-Treaſon was, for which he was impeach'd; for an Impeachment, or an Indictment of High-Treaſon in general was naught; that the King had power to proceed on an Impeachment or Indictment for the ſame thing, at his Election: That the Allegation, that Fitzharris was impeach'd, which Impeachment ſtood in full force, not having mention'd an Impeachment before, was naught. But afterwards the Attorney-General demurred, and the Priſoner join'd in the Demurrer. And then a Day was given to argue the Plea till Saturday the 7th of May, at which time the Attorney added to the Exceptions he took to the Plea, Whether a Suit in a ſuperior Court can take away the Juriſdiction of another inferior Court, who had an original Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, of the Perſon, and of the Fact, at the time of the Fact committed?

To maintain the Plea, the Counſel for the Priſoner alledged, that an Impeachment differ'd from an Indictment; the firſt was at the Suit of the Commons of England, and was like an Appeal, or rather an Appeal reſembled an Impeachment; that the Proceedings were different in the Trials: In the firſt, the Trial is by the Houſe of Lords; in the laſt, of a Commoner, by a Jury of Commons. In the laſt, but little time was allowed for giving or conſidering of the Evidence; in the firſt, a much longer time. That this Matter was never practiſed before; that the King may pardon a Criminal proſecuted by an Indictment, but not by an Impeachment, no more than if proſecuted by an Appeal. If he ſhould be acquitted on the Indictment, it might be a Queſtion whether that may be pleaded in Bar to the Impeachment; and if not, the Priſoner ſhould be brought twice in jeopardy of his Life for the ſame Crime, contrary to the Rule of Law.

To the Objection, that the Plea was not certain; it being pleaded as an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, not ſetting forth the High-Treaſon in particular; it was anſwer'd, that an Impeachment differ'd from an Indictment: For by the Cuſtom of Parliament, which is the Law of the Land, ſuch a general Impeachment is good; but by the Law, a general Indictment of High-Treaſon, without ſpecifying what, when, where, or how, is not good; and therefore the Plea of an Indictment and an Impeachment is variant.

To the Objection, that there was no Impeachment mention'd before the Averment of quæ quidem impetitio, it was frivolous; for it was before mention'd that he was impeach'd, and then by a neceſſary Conſequence there was an Impeachment.

As to the Objection, that the King might, in which Court he would, proſecute for High-Treaſon, it was little to the purpoſe; for the Caſe did not come up to it, the Impeachment being the Suit of the Commons, and not of the King; and that the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall had refus'd to meddle with matters relating to the Parliament. That though the Impeachment was general, yet it was made certain by the Averment; that it was for the ſame Crime for which the Indictment was: That the Attorney-General might have taken Iſſue, that there was no ſuch Impeachment as was pleaded; or elſe he might have ſaid, that the Impeachment was not for the ſame Treaſon for which he was indicted; but having demurr'd, he had confeſs'd both to be true. That at common Law, if an Appeal of Murder had been brought, the King could not proceed on the Indictment, till the Appeal was determin'd; that the Judges, whereof ſome were then in Court, had given their Opinions to the King and Council, concerning the five Popiſh Lords, that they could not be try'd upon Indictments, ſo long as general Impeachments were depending for the ſame Treaſon: and yet their Caſes and this differ'd; there the Indictments were found before the Impeachments preferr'd, and here, after the Impeachment.

In the reply to vitiate the Plea, it was inſiſted, that it did not conclude ſi Curia procedere debeat as well as vult, as was uſual for Pleas of that nature to do; that perhaps this Matter, if the Priſoner had been acquitted upon the Impeachment, might have been pleaded in bar to the Indictment, but it was not pleadable to the Juriſdiction of the Court; that in the Caſe of the five Lords, the Indictments were removed into the Houſe of Lords; that Appeals in Treaſons are taken away by the Firſt of Henry the IVth; that in the Plea it ought to be averr'd, what Lex & Conſuetudo Parl. are; that till Articles carried up, no Man impeach'd is oblig'd to anſwer: that in all Caſes of Appeals, a Man is put twice in jeopardy of his Life, if he be try'd upon an Indictment within a Year.

To take a ſhort Review of what hath been recited, it was thought the King's Counſel run the Court upon a Rock, and it was hard for them to get

get off. The Court had advis'd them to take time to conſider what Courſe they would take; but the King's Counſel were haſty, as they always were when they were reſolved to carry a Matter right or wrong; and having three bad Ways, they choſe the worſt.

If they had taken Iſſue on the Record, or the Averment, that the Impeachment and Indictment were not for the ſame Treaſon, they might have pretended that the Journal of the Houſe of Lords was not a Record, or that the Debates in the Houſe of Commons were not good Evidence; or if they had reply'd, the Order of the Houſe of Lords for trying the Priſoner in the King's-Bench, to the Plea, they might have inſiſted on the Power of the Houſe ſo to do: but having demurr'd, they confeſſed the Truth of all the Matter of the Plea, and wav'd the Benefit of that Order, and ſtood upon Points of Law, either conceded by the Court, or reſolv'd by the Judges before, or ſuch neceſſary Inferences from them as were impoſſible to be deny'd.

It could not be deny'd, but a general Impeachment of High-Treaſon, by the Cuſtom of Parliament, was good; it could not be deny'd, but, by the Reſolution of the Judges in the Caſe of the Lords in the Tower, a general Impeachment of High-Treaſon ſtopt Proceedings upon an Indictment for the ſame Matter. It did not differ the Caſe, that the Indictments in the King's-Bench againſt the Lords were remov'd into the Houſe of Lords; for every one knows new Indictments might have been preferred againſt them for the ſame Crimes. And if that had been the Reaſon of the Judges Reſolution, why did not the Judges then in Court, all, or moſt part of whom were Judges at the giving that Opinion, deny the Opinion, or the Reaſon alledg'd, which they did not? It was not a Reaſon to diſallow the Plea, becauſe particular Articles uſe to follow general Impeachments, and the Impeach'd are not bound to anſwer till the particular Articles were exhibited, which is true; for by the ſame Reaſon, a Defendant cannot plead an Action depending againſt him for the ſame Matter in a ſuperior Court, unleſs the Plantiff hath declar'd againſt him in the ſuperior Court, which is not true. It was not a Reaſon that all Records in inferior Courts muſt be pleaded particularly, as Indictments, and the like; becauſe ſuch Records muſt be certain and particular, or elſe they are erroneous, and cannot be pleaded; but an Impeachment may be general.

Where the Matter of a Plea is naught, no Form can make it good; though where the Matter of a Plea is good, an ill Form may ſpoil it. If therefore a general Indictment or Record is naught, as in all the Caſes cited againſt the Plea, it was no ſpecial Averment to reduce it to a certainty, or any Form can make it a good Plea: But a general Impeachment is good, and therefore it may and muſt be pleaded generally; and pleading it ſpecially, would make it falſe, if there were no ſubſequent Articles, as in this Caſe there were not, to aſcertain it.

It is to no purpoſe to run through all the Ramble of the Counſel or Court againſt the Plea, when they all ſaid the Matter of the Plea was not in queſtion, but the Form; and yet when ſo often aſk'd in what of the Form it was defective? they were not able to anſwer. If it be agreed that the Matter of a Plea is good, but it is defective in Form, they always ſhew how it ought or might have been mended, which in this Caſe was never done. And as this Caſe was new in ſeveral Particulars, ſo it is in this, that in reading all the Arguments of this Plea, no Man knows, by what was diſcours'd, what was the Point in queſtion.

After the Arguments, the Chief Juſtice, in ſhew at leaſt, very favourably offers the Priſoner's Counſel liberty to amend the Plea, if they could; which they (apprehending as they had Reaſon, for I think none can ſhew how it might have been mended, rather a Catch than a Favour) refus'd to do; whereupon the Court took time to conſider of it, and on the 11th of May, there being a great Auditory, rather to hear how the Judges would bring themſelves off, than to know what the Law of the Plea was, the Chief Juſtice, without any Reaſons, deliver'd the Opinion of the Court, upon Conference had with other Judges, that his Brothers, Jones, Raymond, and himſelf, were of Opinion that the Plea was inſufficient; his Brother Dolben not reſolv'd, but doubting concerning it, and therefore awarded the Priſoner ſhould plead to the Indictment, which he did, Not Guilty; and his Trial order'd to be the next Term.

I think it would puzzle any Perſon to ſhew, if ever a Court of Weſtminſter-Hall thought a Matter to be of ſuch difficulty as fit to be argu'd, that they gave their Judgments afterwards without the Reaſons: 'Tis true, that the Courts of Civil Law allow Debates amongſt the Judges to be private among themſelves; but the Proceedings at Common Law always were, and ought to be, in aperta curia *. Had this Practice taken place heretofore, † as it hath of late (but all ſince this Precedent) no Man could have known what the Law of England was, for the Year-Books and Reports are nothing but a Relation of what is ſaid by the Counſel and Judges in giving Judgment, and contain the Reaſons of the Judgment, which are rarely expreſs'd in the Record of the Judgment; and it is as much the Duty of a Judge to give the Reaſons why he doubts, as it is of him who is ſatisfied in the Judgment. Men ſometimes will be aſham'd to offer thoſe Reaſons in publick, which they may pretend, ſatisfy them, if conceal'd; beſides, we have a Maxim in Law undeniable, and of great uſe, that any Perſon whatever may rectify or inform a Court or Judge publickly or privately, as Amicus Curiæ, a Friend to the Court, or a Friend to Juſtice: But can that be done, if the Standers-by know not the Reaſon upon which the Court pronounce their Judgment? Had the three Judges, who were clear in their Opinion, given their Reaſons of that Opinion, perhaps ſome of the Standers-by might have ſhew'd Reaſons unthought of by them, to have made them ſtagger in, if not alter that Opinion; or if Juſtice Dolben had given the Reaſon of his Doubt, perhaps a Stander-by might have ſhewn him a Reaſon unthought of by him, which would have made him poſitive that the Plea was or was not a good Plea.

If a Man ſwears what is true, not knowing it to be true, though it be logically a Truth as it is diſtinguiſh'd, yet it is morally a Lye; and if a Judge give Judgment according to Law, not knowing it to be ſo, as if he did not know the Reaſon of it at that time, but bethought himſelf of a Reaſon for for it afterwards, though the Judgment be legal, yet the pronouncing of it is unjuſt.

* 2 Co. Inſt. 103. † Of old Time before Edw. III. the Reaſons us'd to be entered on record in caſes of difficulty; but even afterwards were conſtantly pronounc'd by the Court, that they might be publiſh'd in the Books of Caſes and Reports. 4 Co. Inſt. 4.

Judges ought to be bound up by the Reaſons given in publick, and not ſatisfy or make good their Judgment by after-thought of Reaſons. How very ill did it become the Chief Juſtice Popham, a Perſon of Learning and Parts, in the attainting Sir Walter Raleigh, of which Trial all ſince that time have complain'd? when he gave his Opinion, that the Affidavit of the Lord Cobham, taken in the abſence of Sir Walter, might be given in Evidence againſt him, without producing the Lord Cobham Face to Face to Sir Walter (which was deſir'd by him, altho' the Lord Cobham was then forthcoming). When he ſumm'd up the Evidence, he ſaid, * Juſt then it came into his Mind, why the Accuſer ſhould not come Face to Face to the Priſoner, becauſe he might retract his Evidence; and when he ſhould ſee himſelf muſt die, he would think it beſt that his Fellow ſhould live to commit the like Treaſon, and ſo in ſome ſort ſeek Revenge. Which beſides that it is againſt the common Law, and Reaſon, it is againſt the expreſs Statute of Edw. VI. which takes care, that in Treaſon the Witneſs ſhall be brought Face to Face of the Perſon accus'd.

Did it become a juſt Man to give his Opinion, and bethink himſelf of a Reaſon afterwards? And I am miſtaken if it will not herein appear, that many Perſons complained of, have not been guilty of the ſame Weakneſs or Injuſtice, call it which you will; ſo fooliſh are the beſt Lawyers and plauſible Speakers, when they reſolve to carry a Point, whether juſt or not: However they may deceive the Ignorant, yet they talk and argue very abſurdly to the Apprehenſion of the majority of Mankind. And they had been ſooner diſcover'd, but that the Diſcoverers were quickly ſuppreſs'd and cruſhed, as Scandalizers of the Juſtice of the Nation. And I think this may be juſtly called the firſt mute Judgment given in Weſtminſter-Hall.

But to return to Fitzharris's Trial, which came on the 9th of June; and then the King's Counſel made uſe of their Arts in managing the Jury. And firſt, there were a great many Perſons for Jurors to whom Mr. Attorney had no ſtomach; ſome challenged for Cauſe, for that they were no Freeholders, as John Kent, Giles Shute, Nathaniel Grantham, and ſeveral others; and the Challenge allow'd to be a good Challenge by all the Court; for though the Chief Juſtice only ſpoke, yet all the Court aſſent to what one Judge ſays, if they do not ſhew their diſſent. I do not take notice of this, as complaining of it, for I think it is a good Cauſe of Challenge in Treaſon; but then I cannot but wonder at the Aſſurance of the ſame King's Counſel, who denied it to be a good Cauſe of Challenge in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial. It is true, that was a Trial in the City, but that Matter had no Conſideration in the Judgment; for after the Lord Ruſſel's Counſel had been heard, all the Judges deliver'd their Opinions, That at common Law, No Freehold was no Challenge in Treaſon; and that the 1 and 2 Phil. & Mar. had reſtor'd the Trial in Treaſon to be what it was at common Law: Of which Number of Judges, Sir Francis Pemberton and Sir Thomas Jones were two; nay, Sir Francis Pemberton aſk'd Mr. Pollexfen, Whether he found any Reſolution at common Law, that no Freehold was a Challenge in Treaſon. And that Judgment is afterwards cited in Colonel Sidney's Trial, as the Opinion of all the Judges of England, That no Freehold was no Challenge to a Juror in Treaſon at common Law; and Colonel Sidney's Trial was in a County at large.

But if it was not a Challenge at common Law, I would know how it came to be a Challenge in Fitzharris's Caſe? There was no intervening Act of Parliament to alter the Law between the two Trials, that I know of.

Another Art us'd, was to challenge for the King without Cauſe, where no Cauſe could be ſhewn, ſuch Jurors as they did not like.

The Priſoner was troubled at this, and appeals to the Court, whether the Attorney-General was not oblig'd to ſhew his Cauſe of Challenge; but is anſwer'd by the Court, that he need not till all the Pannel was gone through, or the reſt of the Jurors challeng'd, which is true; but had the Priſoner been advis'd to challenge the reſt of the Jury, as he would have been if he had had Counſel, the Attorney muſt have wav'd his Challenge, or put off the Trial. And ſince he was not allowed Counſel, why ſhould not the Court, according to their Duty, as they have ſaid it is, advis'd him ſo to do? I am ſure, in Count Coningſmark's Trial, when Sir Francis Winnington challenged a Juror without Cauſe, for the King, the Court preſently aſk'd the Cauſe; and ſuch Anſwer was made by the Proſecutor's Counſel as was made to Fitzharris: Whereupon the Court told the Count, that the way to make them ſhew their Cauſe of Challenge, was to challenge all the reſt of the Jury; and thereupon the Challenge was waved. They were different Practices, tending to different Ends; and accordingly it ſucceeded, Fitzharris was convicted, and the Count acquitted.

Upon the Trial the Evidence was this; Fitzharris was, the 21ſt Day of February, 1681, with Everard, and gave him Heads by word of Mouth, to write the Pamphlet in the Indictment mentioned, to ſcandalize the King, raiſe Rebellion, alienate the Hearts of the People, and ſet them together by the ears; the Libel was to be preſented to the French Ambaſſador's Confeſſor, and he was to preſent it to the French Ambaſſador; and it was to ſet theſe People together by the ears, and keep them claſhing and miſtruſting one another, whilſt the French ſhould gain Flanders, and then they would make no bones of England: For which Libel Everard was to have forty Guineas, and a monthly Penſion, which ſhould be ſome thouſands of Pounds. Everard was to be brought into the Cabal, where ſeveral Proteſtants and Parliament-Men came, to give an account to the Ambaſſador how things were tranſacted. Everard aſked what would be the uſe of the Libels? Fitzharris ſaid, we ſhall diſperſe them we know how; they were to be drawn in the Name of the Nonconformiſts, and to be put and fathered upon them. This was the Sum of Everard's Evidence.

Mr. Smith prov'd Fitzharris's giving Inſtructions to Everard; and Sir William Waller and others prov'd the Libel, and the Diſcourſe about gaining Flanders and England: Other Witneſſes were examin'd to prove Fitzharris's Hand. For the Priſoner, Dr. Oates ſaid, Everard told him the Libel was to be printed, and to be ſent about by the Penny-Poſt to the proteſting Lords, and leading Men of the Houſe of Commons, who were to be taken up as ſoon as they had it, and ſearched, and to have it found about them. He ſaid the Court had an hand in it, and the King had given Fitzharris Money for it already, and would give him more if it had ſucceſs.

Mr. Corniſh ſaid, when he came from Newgate to the King, to give him an account in what Diſpoſition he found the Priſoner to make a Diſcovery; the King ſaid he had had him often before him and his Secretaries, and could make nothing of what he did diſcover; that he had for near three Months acquainted the King he was in purſuit of a Plot, of a Matter that related much to his Perſon and Government, and that in as much as he made Proteſtations of Zeal for his Service, he did countenance and give him ſome Money; that the King ſaid he came to him three Months before he appeared at the Council-Table.

Colonel Manſel ſaid, that Sir William Waller gave him an account of the Buſineſs in the preſence of Mr. Hunt, and ſeveral others; and ſaid, that when he had acquainted the King with it, the King ſaid he had done him the greateſt piece of ſervice that ever he had done him in his Life, and gave him a great many thanks: But he was no ſooner gone, but two Gentlemen told him, the King ſaid he had broken all his Meaſures, and the King would have him taken off one way or other; and ſaid, that the Deſign was againſt the Proteſtant Lords, and Proteſtant Party. Mr. Hunt confirm'd the ſame thing, and added, that he ſaid the Deſign was to contrive thoſe Papers into the hands of the People, and make them Evidences of Rebellion; and appealed to Sir William Waller who was preſent, whether what he ſaid was not true. Mr. Bethel ſaid, Everard before he had ſeen Bethel, or heard him ſpeak a Word, put in an Information of Treaſon againſt him, at the Inſtigation of Bethel's mortal Enemy; which Information was ſo groundleſs, that tho' it was three Years before, yet he never heard a word of it till the Friday before.

Mrs. Wall ſaid, Fitzharris had 250 l. 200 l. or 150 l. for bringing in the Lord Howard of Eſcrick; ſhe added, that Fitzharris was looked upon to be a Roman Catholick, and upon that account it was ſaid to be dangerous to let him go near the King, that he never was admitted to the King.

The Lord Conway ſaid, that the King had declared in Council, that Fitzharris had been employed by him in ſome trifling Buſineſſes, and that he had got Money of him; but added, as of his own Knowledge, that the King never ſpoke with him till after he was taken, which was the 28th of February laſt.

All the Evidence being over, it was ſumm'd up by the Counſel, That upon all the Circumſtances of it, Fitzharris was the Contriver and Director of the Libel; that it was a treaſonable Libel, and a Jeſuitical Deſign; that the Excuſe he made, as if Everard drew him into it, or trepanned him into it, was vain, nothing of that being prov'd. That Everard could do nothing alone, and therefore Sir William Waller muſt be in the Contrivance; but that was unlikely: That the Priſoner would inſinuate that the King hir'd him to do it, becauſe the King gave him Money, but that was out of Charity; and therefore concluded, with a great many Words, that an Engliſh Proteſtant Jury of twelve ſubſtantial Men, could not but find the Priſoner Guilty.

The Court added, that though Dr. Oates ſaid, Everard ſaid it was a Deſign of the Court, and was to be put on ſome Lords, and into ſome Parliament-Men's Pockets; yet Everard was there upon Oath, and teſtified no ſuch thing in the World; and for the Impeachment in the Lords Houſe, they were not to take notice of it.

After which the Jury inform'd the Court, that they heard there was a Vote in the Houſe of Commons, that the Priſoner ſhould not be try'd in any inferior Court: To which the Chief Juſtice ſaid, That that Vote could not alter the Law, and that the Judges of that Court had Conference with all the other Judges, concerning that matter; and it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, that that Court had a Juriſdiction to try that Man. After which, Juſtice Jones was of Opinion, that if he were acquitted on that Indictment, it might be pleaded in bar to the Impeachment; and Juſtice Raymond deliver'd his Opinion to the ſame purpoſe. It is ſtrange that all the Judges ſhould be of that Opinion; yet before it was ſaid, Juſtice Dolben doubted. It is more ſtrange, that if Juſtice Dolben was not of that Opinion, he would hear it ſaid he was, and not contradict it. It is moſt ſtrange, that if the Judges of that Court were of that Opinion, they had not declar'd ſo, in the arguing or giving Judgment on the Plea; for that was the Matter of it, being pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court, that they had not power to try the Priſoner for that Crime, ſo circumſtanced.

If the Plea had been over-rul'd as to the Matter, none would have been ſo impertinent, as to go about to maintain the Form of it.

Now to ſay truth in behalf of the Publick, and not on behalf of Fitzharris, the Evidence was unfairly ſummed up, for Fitzharris never pretended Everard drew him in, or was to trepan him: It is true, he aſk'd Everard what the Deſign of the Pamphlet was, and whether he was not put upon it to trepan others? who anſwer'd, he was not. But afterwards being too nearly preſt by the Attorney-General, he ſaid, Fitzharris told him the Uſe of the Libels was to diſperſe them he knew how; that they were to be drawn in the Name of the Nonconformiſts, and put upon them. And Oates ſaid, Everard ſaid the Libels were to be printed, and ſent abroad by the Penny-Poſt to the proteſting Lords, and leading Men of the Houſe of Commons, and the Perſons ſeiz'd with them in their Pockets; which is all ſtrong Evidence that the Libel was deſign'd to trepan others, and that was all along the Import of Fitzharris's Queſtions, tho' cunningly not anſwer'd by ſome of the Witneſſes, and as cunningly omitted in ſumming up the Evidence.

It is true, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, Everard ſaid no ſuch thing as Oates had ſaid; but why was not Everard, who was then preſent, aſk'd, Whether he ſaid what Oates had given in Evidence?

There cannot be ſhewn any Precedent where a Witneſs contradicts, or ſays more or leſs than a Witneſs that went before him, by the hear-ſay of that Witneſs; but the firſt Witneſs is aſk'd, what he ſays to it. Why was not Sir William Waller, who was alſo preſent, aſk'd what he ſaid to the Evidence of Mr. Manſel and Mr. Hunt? And who it was that inform'd Sir William what the King ſaid? It was no way in proof, nor pretended by Fitzharris, that any Perſon was concern'd in that matter, but Everard and Fitzharris, though it was ſhrewdly ſuſpected by the Houſe of Commons; and no Man that reads the Trial, but believes there were many more concern'd, not yet diſcover'd: But the the Counſel might have brought in any Judge of the Court by the Head and Shoulders to be a Confederate, as well as Sir William Waller, who was a Jack-a-lent of their own ſetting up, in order to knock him down again.

It was not pretended by Fitzharris that the King gave him any Money to frame that, or any other Libel; there was Evidence, that he had got Money of the King for ſome little matter he was employed in, perhaps, for bringing in Libels diſperſed abroad, or diſcovering Plots.

Upon the whole Evidence, it was plain that Fitzharris was an Iriſh Papiſt; it was plain he was the only viſible Contriver of the Libel; who were behind the Curtain is not plain, and to know them, was the Deſign of the Impeachment.

It was plain it was a deviliſh Jeſuitical Deſign, as the Court and Counſel, in ſumming up the Evidence, agreed it to be; it was plain, that the Libel was ſuch, that if diſpers'd with intention to ſtir up the King's Subjects againſt him, it had been High-Treaſon within the Statute of the 13th of the King: But what the Intention of the contriving of the Libel was, was not very certain; and therefore, conſequently what the Crime of it was, was uncertain.

To take the Evidence all the ways, as to the Deſign of the contriving of the Libel, it is capable of being interpreted; the eaſieſt Conſtruction is to ſay, he fram'd a Libel with intention to pretend to the King, that he had intercepted a Libel privately diſperſed; and to make it more likely, it ſhould be framed in the Nonconformiſts Names, to make his Report the more credible (for of Papiſts or Church-men it could not be believed) to get more Money of the King; and that matter, by all his Queſtions to the Witneſſes, he moſt drove at: and that would at moſt be but a Cheat.

A more criminal, but leſs credible Conſtruction, is to believe he deſign'd to diſperſe them, to excite and prevail upon the Diſcontented to take up Arms.

For what Effect had that Pamphlet, when it was (for it was afterwards) diſperſed, upon the Minds of the People? Or what Effect could any Man of Senſe think it could have? For though it was a virulent, yet it was as fooliſh a contriv'd Libel as ever was writ; yet I own, if it had been writ and diſperſed with that Deſign, it had been High-Treaſon within the Statute of Ed. III.

But the moſt natural Conſtruction of the worſt Deſign of it, was to trepan the Parliament-Men, and make the Libels Evidences of a rebellious Conſpiracy: This Everard confeſſes Fitzharris told him was the Uſe to be made of them; and Everard could not know the Deſign of them, but by what Fitzharris told him. And Oates well explains what Everard meant by the Words, in his Evidence, put the Libel on the Nonconformiſts, by what Everard told him.

But yet even that, though in itſelf the higheſt Crime a Man can be guilty of, next to putting it in execution, is but a Conſpiracy; which was mildly puniſh'd in Lane and Knox their Caſe, though this exceeded that; that being a Deſign only againſt one Perſon, this againſt many.

Yet though this was of no higher Crime by the Law, as now eſtabliſh'd, than a Miſdemeanor, it was fit for the Legiſlative Power to have puniſh'd it in the manner it was puniſh'd; which yet the Legiſlative Power ought to reſent as an Injury, for an inferior Court's ſnatching the Exerciſe of that Power out of their Hands, which only belongs to the ſupreme Authority. That this Crime, upon conſtruction of the Evidence taken in the beſt Senſe, is no Treaſon; though the Libel ſhould in all probability incite the Subject to levy War, which it was not likely to do, or if in Fact it had been the cauſe of a Rebellion, yet if it was not deſigned by the Contriver to that purpoſe, it was not Treaſon by the Statute of Edward the Third, or Charles the Second; for in the laſt Statute, it is deſigning to levy War, and in the Statute of Edward the Third, it is a ſtrained Conſtruction, to make deſigning to levy War, Treaſon; yet none ever pretended to ſtrain the Senſe of that Statute farther than deſigning to do it.

If the ill Effects the Libel did, or might produce, made it Treaſon, then Sir Samuel Aſtrey, who read it in Court at the Trial, and the Printer, that afterwards printed and publiſh'd it, and Sir William Waller, who read it to Mr. Hunt, and others, were guilty of Treaſon; for the Libel carried no Venom or Charm with it the more, for being fram'd by Fitzharris or Everard, or for being publiſh'd by either of them, than if publiſh'd by another Perſon.

The difference is, Aſtrey read it aloud, as his Duty; the Printer printed and publiſhed it for Gain; Sir William Waller publiſh'd it as a Novelty; and if Fitzharris contriv'd it, to put it upon the Nonconformiſts, or Parliament-Men, and not to ſtir up a Rebellion, though it tended to all the ill Conſequences mention'd in his Indictment, yet it was not Treaſon.

But it will be urged, how ſhall Fitzharris's Intention be proved? It was a Queſtion which made a mighty ſputter in arguing the Plea. How ſhall it be proved, that the Impeachment was for the ſame Treaſon for which the Indictment was? But in the Trial of Fitzharris, that Queſtion was fully cleared; for it was proved there, that the very Libel then produced in Court, was the ſame Libel read in the Houſe of Commons, upon which the Impeachment was voted.

And to ſay truth, nothing can be put in Iſſue, but is capable of Trial: Quo animo a thing is done in all Overt-Acts of a Deſign, is one of the main Queſtions; * or to ſpeak in Law Phraſe, whether done proditorie or not, an Adverb of great Uſe and Senſe, though heretofore ſlighted; and under which, I believe, a great many Perſons will be enforc'd to ſhelter themſelves from being puniſhed by the Law eſtabliſh'd.

No Man will pretend that Libel did any Man miſchief but the Contriver; nor in probability could have done, if not uſed to the purpoſe Everard ſaid to Oates. Yet other Perſons have been guilty of as illegal Acts, of worſe Conſequences in proſpect, and much worſe in effect, and it did not amount to Treaſon. I dare ſay, the Allegation, that they diſturb'd the Kingdom by their Acts, and War caus'd to be mov'd againſt the King, is true of them, and they are guilty of all the Aggravations us'd in Indictments of Treaſon.

To inſtance in ſome of many; Did it not make a mighty heart-burning in the City againſt the Government, and rais'd great Jealouſies between the King and People, when the Sheriffs, North and Rich, were impos'd on the City? Did not the taking away the City's Right of electing Sheriffs, and the ſuſpicions for what end it was done, beſides the Illegalities that followed? If what Sir Edward

* See Trial of Woodburne, State Trials Vol. VI. p. 222.

Herbert ſays in his late Vindication, Fol. 16. be Law, as it hath an aſpect as if it were, that Grand-Juries return'd by ſuch as are Sheriffs in fact, but not in right, are illegal, and Convictions on their Preſentments are illegal and void, give great diſturbance: and that Opinion ſeems to be countenanc'd by my Lord Coke's third Inſtit. Fol. 32. in his Comment on the 11th of Henry the IVth, and conſequently my Lord Ruſſel's, and other Attainders void? Did it not add to the heart-burning, the puniſhing thoſe Citizens as Rioters, who were at Guildhall, innocently conteſting their Right of electing? Was it not an increaſe of the Miſchief, the bringing the Quo Warranto againſt the City, whereby the Credit of the City was loſt, and many Orphans ſtarved, and more impoveriſhed, beyond the poſſibility of recovery? And it was yet heighten'd by the Judgment given in the higheſt Caſe that ever came into Weſtminſter-Hall, by two Judges only, and that without one Word of Reaſon given at the pronouncing, according to the Pattern of Fitzharris's Caſe, and was the ſecond mute Judgment. Did it not fright all honeſt Men from being on Criminal Juries, when Wilmer was ſo illegally proſecuted for not giving a Verdict againſt his Conſcience, by an Homine Replegiando, and Information? And did not that make all Merchants, who had Tranſactions beyond Sea, afraid to ſend their Servants thither, for fear they might be laid by the Heels till they fetch'd them back again? Did it not ſtartle the Lords, and the leading Men of the Houſe of Commons, mention'd ſo often in Fitzharris's Trial, when the Earl of Eſſex, Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hampden, and ſeveral others, were clapp'd up cloſe Priſoners in the Tower? Did it not deter an honeſt Man from appearing to witneſs the Truth, when Sir Patience Ward was convicted of Perjury? Did it not provoke two great and noble Families, when the Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney were ſo illegally and unhandſomly dealt withal, as ſhall be hereafter declar'd? Did it not provoke all the Nation, except the Clergy and Soldiery, when all the Charters of England were ſeiz'd, and not re-granted, but at exceſſive Rates, to the ſtarving the Poor, who ſhould have been fed with the Money which went to purchaſe the new Charters, and reſerving the diſpoſition of all the Places of Profit and Power, within the new Corporations, to the King, but which indeed the Confederates ſhar'd among themſelves? Nay, the very Election of Burgeſſes, the freeneſs of which is the great Fundamental of the Government, was monopoliz'd, and put into a few hands. Did not the unreaſonable Fines, and cruel Puniſhments inflicted, oppreſs many, terrify all, and conſequently made the Government odious to the Subject? Did not the Cruelties acted in the Weſt, enrage above a third part of the Nation? Did not the turning out many of the Soldiery and Clergy, without any Reaſon; and for that purpoſe erecting arbitrary Courts, and granting Diſpenſations to Perſons by Law diſabled, to enable them to have and enjoy the Places and Offices of ſuch as were illegally turn'd out, and of all who ſhould be in like manner turn'd out? And was it not ſeen what the Conſequences of thoſe thing would be, by all who did not wink their Eyes, or who were not blinded by the Profit they made of ſuch illegal and cruel Acts? Was not the King at laſt ſenſible, that the Conſequence of what is before recited would be what afterwards happen'd? And did he not in leſs than a Month's time, when too late, throw down all that Babel of Confuſion which had been ſo long a building? and did all in his power, and would have done more if he could, to have ſet things as right as they were before the Parliament of Oxon; for from thence the Extravagancies may be dated. But alas! more Miſchief can be, and was done by weak Brains, than the beſt Wits can retrieve; thoſe that were dead could not be brought to life; the reſtitution of the Cities Charters was but in ſhew a Relief. How ſhall all thoſe defend themſelves who have acted under all the illegal Sheriffs conſtituted, and not elected? How ſhall thoſe defend themſelves, who have acted under Officers appointed by the new Charters, which by the reſtitution are gone as if they never had been? How ſhall Sheriffs, Goalers, and other Officers, who have had, or now have Cuſtody of Priſoners, and having not taken the Teſt, truſt to the Validity of a Diſpenſe, behave themſelves? Shall they continue to keep their Priſoners in cuſtody, or let them go? If the laſt, they are ſubject to Actions of Eſcape; if the firſt, they are liable to falſe Impriſonment. Theſe, and a great many more Miſchiefs, not yet ſeen, are the natural reſults of theſe illegal Actions.

I never reflect on theſe things, but I remember Tully, in his Offices, lays down as a Rule, that nothing is profitable but what is honeſt, and gives many Reaſons for it; but nothing ſo convincing, as the Examples he brings in publick and private Matters. And tho' the Empire was vaſt, and he bore a great Figure in it, and was very knowing, and was well read in the Greek and Roman Hiſtories, yet he was not able to bring a hundredth part of Examples, to prove his Poſition, as have been in this little Iſland in the ſpace of eight Years. And the Perſons, by whoſe Advice theſe things were tranſacted, are the more inexcuſable, if it be true what a certain Nobleman (who bore a conſiderable Character in the two late Kings Council) once ſaid to me was true. He was complaining that the King was miſled by the Advice of his Lawyers. I aſk'd him whether the King put his Judges and Counſel upon doing what was done, without conſidering whether it was legal, as the common Vogue was he did; or that his Lawyers firſt advis'd what to be done, was Law? He anſwer'd me, on his Honour, the King's Counſel at Law firſt advis'd, the King might do by Law what he would have done, before he commanded them to do it.

Yet I agree, none of thoſe matters, though ſo inconvenient and grievous, are Treaſon by the Statutes of Ed. III. or Car. II.

For Profit in ſome Caſes, Revenge in others, the endeavouring means to eſcape Puniſhment, and a natural propenſity to Cruelty in many, were the true ends driven at; and not the bringing their Prince into the hatred of his Subjects, though that was a neceſſary conſequent of all recited, and of many more matters omitted. And let Fitzharris's Crime, and thoſe recited, be but examin'd, his was but a Peccadillo to the leaſt of thoſe; though this was acted by an Iriſh Papiſt, and theſe by Engliſh Proteſtants, Sons of the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd, as they call themſelves; though I doubt, not ſincere Proteſtants, as my Lord Ruſſel ſaid; Words which were matter of Laughter to thoſe who brought him to the Block.

But, though neither Fitzharris's Crime, taken in the laſt Senſe, nor the above Crimes, were High-Treaſon by any Statute; and the Judges have not power to puniſh any other Treaſons: yet in all times the Parliaments have practiſed, and it is neceſſarily ceſſarily incident to all ſupreme Powers, in all Governments, to enact or declare extravagant Crimes to be greater than by the eſtabliſhed Law they are declared to be, not by virtue of the Clauſe in the Statute of Edward the Third, whereby ſome have, by miſtake, thought that a Power was reſerved to the Parliament to declare other matters Treaſon, than what is therein expreſs'd: For admit that Clauſe had been admitted, there are none can doubt, but in Point of Power, the Parliament could (how far in Juſtice they might, is another Queſtion) have declar'd any other matter to be Treaſon; and the Words of that Clauſe are very improper Expreſſions, either to veſt or ſerve a Power in the Parliament; for the Words are only prohibitory to the Judges to adjudge any other matters Treaſon than thoſe expreſs'd in the Act, though they were ſomewhat like thoſe expreſs'd; and therefore might be ſuppos'd Treaſons; and it is a ſort of monition to Offenders, that they ſhould not preſume to be guilty of enormous Crimes, upon preſumption that they were not Treaſons within that Act. For in the Preamble 'tis ſaid, becauſe many other like Caſes of Treaſon (which in Senſe are Caſes like Treaſon declared in that Act) may happen in time to come, which could not be thought of or declared at that preſent; therefore if any ſuch ſhould happen before any Juſtice, the Juſtice ſhould tarry, and not proceed to give judgment of Treaſon on it, till it ſhould be judg'd in Parliament, Treaſon or Felony. How well the Judges, in late days, have obſerved this prohibitory Law, let the World judge; and moſt certainly the Parliament might have declar'd in Fitzharris's Caſe, as they may in thoſe other, that the Crimes were Treaſon, Felony, Miſpriſion of Treaſon, Treſpaſs, or what other Crime known in the Law, and inflict what Puniſhment they thought fit: and it is no injuſtice for the ſupreme Power to puniſh a Fact in a higher manner than by Law eſtabliſhed, if the Fact in its nature is a Crime, and the Circumſtances make it much more heinous than ordinarily ſuch Crimes are. It was not injuſtice in the Parliament of the ſecond and third of Philip and Mary to enact, that Smith, and others, who were ſuppos'd to be guilty, as Acceſſaries, to a barbarous Murder, and were equally, if not more guilty than the Principal, to enact, as they did, that if they ſhould be found guilty as Acceſſaries, they ſhould not have their Clergies, which at the time of committing the Fact Acceſſaries to Murder were allowed to have. It is true, to declare or enact a Fact, after it is committed, to be a Crime, which when committed was in it ſelf none, ſuch as tranſporting Wool beyond Sea, and the like, would be high Injuſtice.

Remarks on Colledge's Trial.

BUT to return whence I have digreſs'd, Fitzharris being executed according to his Sentence, though there was great grumbling amongſt the Proteſtants, that thoſe who ſet him on work were conceal'd, and never like to be diſcover'd now he was dead; yet all was quiet, and the Conſpirators, who reſolv'd, though Fitzharris miſcarried in his Deſign, yet the Plot ſhould go on; but what it ſhould be, or where the Scene of it ſhould be laid, or who the Plotters ſhould be, they were not well reſolv'd.

Great Noiſe of Warrants being iſſu'd out there was, but at laſt all center'd in an inconſiderable Fellow, one Stephen Colledge, a Joyner by Trade, who for his Honour, as a Priſoner of State, was committed to the Tower for High-Treaſon. At firſt it was deſign'd to lay the Scene in London, and accordingly a Bill of Indictment of High-Treaſon was exhibited to the Grand Jury (whereof Wilmer was Foreman) at the Seſſions-Houſe: But the Buſineſs of Fitzharris was ſo new, and ſmelt ſo rank, that the Bill could not be digeſted, but was ſpew'd out with an Ignoramus; for which Wilmer was afterwards forc'd to fly his Country.

Then it was reſolv'd the Scene ſhould be at Oxford, and accordingly the King's Counſel, with Iriſh Witneſſes, at the Aſſizes, poſt thither, and prevail with the Grand-Jury to find the Bill; but by what Arts is not known, for he was privately ſhut up by them: and I ſhould wonder, if he, who frequently, in the hearing of thoſe who underſtood better than himſelf, had Aſſurance enough to impoſe upon the Courts, ſhould ſcruple in private to impoſe any thing on an ignorant Jury.

I know not how long the Practice in that Matter of admitting Counſel to a Grand-Jury hath been; I am ſure it is a very unjuſtifiable and unſufferable one. If the Grand-Jury have a Doubt in point of Law, they ought to have recourſe to the Court, and that publickly, and not privately, and not rely upon the private Opinion of Counſel, eſpecially of the King's Counſel, who are, or at leaſt behave themſelves as if they were Parties.

It is true, it is ſaid they are upon their Oaths; and though it be not expreſs'd in their Oaths, that they ſhould do Right between the King and Subjects, yet that is imply'd in the Oath, I agree. But have they behav'd themſelves as if they were under an Oath? Beſides, all Men are not capable of giving Advice to be rely'd on in ſo great a Matter as Life; but the Manner of doing it being in private, can never be juſtify'd. I know, in Fitzharris's Caſe, the King's Counſel were cajoling the Grand Jury in private for ſome Hours: but I did not think fit to take notice of it in that Trial, becauſe I think both the Grand and Petty-Jury did very well; they acted according to the beſt of their Undeſtanding, which is all that God or Man requir'd of them; they ask'd pertinent Queſtions, they were over-rul'd in ſome, not fully anſwer'd in others; not that I think either of them gave a Verdict according to Law upon the Fact, as it appear'd upon the Evidence; but that was not the Fault of the Jury, but of the King's Counſel, and of the Court, who miſled the Jury. I thought it more proper to take notice of it in this Trial, wherein the firſt Bill was rejected by an underſtanding Jury, and all Men wonder'd how the ſecond came to be found Billa Vera; and for that Reaſon, one of the King's Council boaſted at Court, of his Service and cunning Management in the matter.

The

The Bill being found, the next matter was to bring the Priſoner to his Trial: and as he had more Honour than what uſually is beſtow'd on ſo mean a Man to be committed to the Tower, tho' in truth it was to keep him from all means of Defence; ſo to carry the matter on, he was allow'd to have, by order of the King and Council, a Counſel and Sollicitor to come to him, and adviſe him for his Defence at all Events; a Favour deny'd to Fitzharris, for his Counſel was to adviſe to the matter of the Plea only: but that Favour in ſhew was only to betray him, as ſhall be ſhewn. And a third Favour he had, which no Man of his Quality ever had; there were then three of the King's Counſel ſent from London, and all the Counſel that could be pick'd up upon the Spot, which were three more, and no leſs than four Judges to proſecute and try him; but that was to make ſure work of him.

The 17th of Auguſt, 1681, he came to his Trial: his Indictment, as to part, was in common Form for Treaſon, but particularly for deſigning to ſeize the King's Perſon at Oxford, mixt with Words he ſhould ſay, as, That there was no good to be expected from the King, he minded nothing but Beaſtlineſs, and that he endeavour'd to eſtabliſh Arbitrary Power and Popery. To which being requir'd to plead, he deſir'd a Copy of the Indictment, a Copy of the Jury, to know upon what Statute he was indicted, and Counſel to adviſe him whether he had any thing pleadable in Bar; all which were deny'd him. Then he deſir'd he might have his Papers, which were taken from him after he was brought from the Priſon, and before he came into Court, at an Houſe over-againſt the Court; for ſo it ſeems the King's Counſel had order'd the matter, that the Goaler Murrel, and the Meſſenger Sawel, after they had him out of the Priſon, ſhould run him into an Houſe, and take away all his Papers, which they believ'd were the Inſtructions, as in truth they were, of the Counſel aſſign'd him when in the Tower, and bring the Papers to them; whereby they would not only diſable him of his Defence, but they could be better inſtructed how to proceed in a way for which he had not provided himſelf of any Defence.

Murrel and Sawel did as the King's Counſel directed them. Much wrangle there was whether he ſhould have his Papers or not; all the Court agreed he ſhould not have them till he had pleaded Guilty, or Not Guilty; and afterwards he ſhould have the Uſe of ſome, and not of others, becauſe they did not appear to be written by himſelf, but by ſome Counſel or Sollicitor; and as they ſaid, none is allowed in Treaſon, unleſs aſſigned by the Court. The Chief Juſtice North ſaid, they were not taken away by him; but, ſays Colledge, they were taken away by the Keeper, under pretence of bringing them to his Lordſhip. The Court ſaid they knew not what Papers he meant, and knew nothing of it: he ſaid, the Indictment mention'd ſomething of Miſdemeanor, as well as Treaſon, but he knew not how to make his Exceptions without his Papers. I have thought fit to mention all theſe things, becauſe this Trial was the Inlet to all that followed, and gave Encouragement to ſpill nobler Blood. The Injuſtice of the Violence us'd to the Priſoner, muſt be meaſur'd from the Reaſons given for it, that the Papers were Inſtructions from Counſel and Sollicitors, and none in Law was allow'd in Treaſon. 'Tis true, no Counſel are allow'd for the Priſoner in a Trial upon an Indictment of any Capital Matter; but in an Appeal for Capital Matters, Counſel are allow'd even on the Trial. The Reaſon given, that the Indictment is the Suit of the King, and no Counſel or Witneſs is allowable in a Capital Matter againſt the King, is fooliſh, as ſhall be hereafter ſhown; and as vain is the Reaſon that the Judges are Counſel for the Priſoner, which they ought to be: † but I doubt it will be ſuſpected, that in this Caſe, and many others, they did not make the beſt of their Client's Caſe; nay, generally have betray'd their poor Client, to pleaſe, as they apprehended, their better Client, the King: for ſo they ſay they are to be Counſel likewiſe for the King in Indictments, that is to ſay, they are to be indifferent and upright between both, ſo certainly they are to be in Appeals; therefore that is not the Reaſon why no Counſel is allowed the Priſoner in the Indictment: but the true Reaſon in probability is, that the Priſoners in Indictments are generally ſo very poor that they could not be at the charge of having Counſel, and ſo Non-uſuage gave colour of a Law.

The other Reaſon my Lord Coke gives for it, viz. that much of the Truth may be diſcern'd by the Priſoner's Behaviour, or Anſwers, which would be conceal'd if he ſpoke by another, is not ſatisfactory; for the ſame is to be ſaid in an Appeal. As to the Publick, 'tis not material whether a Man is proſecuted and puniſh'd by an Indictment, or an Appeal; and that Appeals are leſs frequent than Indictments, is only that the firſt is more chargeable than the laſt; for though we hear not of late of any Appeals but in Murder, yet they lie in Robbery, Burglary, Felony, and in all Crimes at Common Law puniſhable by loſs of Life or Member: but though the Rule in Indictments is, That no Counſel is allow'd, yet it is confin'd to the Trial. No Law, Common or Statute, nor any Uſage, ſays, a Priſoner ſhall not have Counſel to adviſe him before or after the Trial; and in Murder, and all other Crimes, it is always admitted; and why not in Treaſon?

In Treaſon, ſay ſome, 'tis criminal for one to adviſe or ſollicite for the Priſoner; and the King's Counſel ſaid, he had known one indicted for being a Sollicitor for one in High-Treaſon; and ſays the Court, it is criminal for one to be Sollicitor or Counſel in Caſes of High-Treaſon, unleſs aſſign'd by the Court: and whether it be ſo or no, is worth Inquiry.

Firſt, No Law-Book as to this Matter makes any difference between Treaſon, and other Crimes; and Adviſing and Solliciting is ſpoken of in general Terms; which being reduc'd to Particulars, will ſhew the Abſurdity of it.

Suppoſe I, obſerving the Indictment on which the Priſoner was arraign'd, was erroneous, and ſhould therefore adviſe him to move and quaſh it for that Error: for, ſay I, if you ſhould be try'd on this Indictment, and found guilty, unleſs you move in Arreſt of Judgment, you will be attainted, and then you can take no advantage of that Error; and if you be acquitted, you may be indicted again, and try'd again, becauſe the firſt Indictment was erroneous.

If this be Law, as none can deny it, is it not lawful to adviſe him; and it is not fit for the Court to quaſh the Indictment faulty, notwithſtanding all the Cant of Dilatories, Subterfuges, and defending himſelf by plain Matter of Fact? Or ſuppoſe I adviſe in Fact, that I hear that ſuch a Wit-a Witneſs is come againſt him, I know he is hired to do the Jobb, and I will prove it on him, if call'd: Or ſuppoſe I tell him, I know ſuch a Witneſs is convict of Perjury, and if he will call me, I will produce the Records of his Conviction; can any Lawyer ſay theſe things are criminal? But if I ſhould adviſe a Priſoner to eſcape out of Priſon, ſhewing him the Way of doing it, it is criminal.

In all Caſes comforting a Traitor is Treaſon *; but it is meant where you do it to keep him from Juſtice †; for elſe feeding a Traitor in Priſon is Treaſon, which none will affirm §. So that reducing general Words to particular Facts, clears the Sophiſtry of them: nor is it criminal to be a Sollicitor in Treaſon, for where there is no poſitive Law, as in this Caſe there is not, natural Reaſon muſt take place; and better Reaſon cannot be given than what the Priſoner in this Caſe gave: If a Man be coop'd up and not ſuffer'd to go about his Buſineſs himſelf, and no Friend muſt be employed to do it for him, how is it poſſible for him to make his Defence? I know it is ſaid his Innocency muſt defend him; but the Folly of that Saying ſhall be ſhewn in another place. But ſay they, The Court ſhall aſſign him a Counſel and Sollicitor; but when, and for what? only for a Point of Law. May not a Priſoner want a Sollicitor for a Matter of Fact? Suppoſe he had occaſion for a Witneſs which he could not readily find, or occaſion for a Copy of a Record, for want of which Mr. Corniſh ſuffer'd; was it not reaſonable for him to have a Sollicitor? And when ſhall the Court aſſign him a Sollicitor? only when the Priſoner comes upon his Trial, and then it is too late to have any uſe of him; as Colledge was arraign'd at twelve, and try'd at two a-clock the ſame Day; and as was Mr. Corniſh's Caſe. But, ſay the King's Counſel, they had known one indicted for High-Treaſon for being a Sollicitor in ſuch a Caſe, though I do not believe it, yet that Authority goes no farther to prove the Matter, than an Indictment I knew againſt a Perſon once, for ſtealing an Acre of Land; and againſt another for wickedly and deviliſhly breaking an Award, whereby two unjuſt Arbitrators directed the Priſoner to convey his Land to a certain Lord, without any Satisfaction or Recompence, prov'd thoſe Matters to be Felonies.

But though a Priſoner may be advis'd, yet that Advice muſt not be reduc'd to writing. Then ſuppoſe one Man's Memory be good, and can bear all the Advice given him, and another's Man's Memory bad, and cannot do it: Is not the laſt hang'd for having a bad Memory, rather than for his Crime? But though it may be reduc'd to writing, yet it muſt be his own Hand writing, and not another's; how ridiculous is the Diſtinction? Suppoſe the Priſoner cannot write, then he is hang'd for his Parents Fault or Misfortune, for not educating him, or for not being able to educate him better.

Which is ſomewhat of kin to the late Practice in the Weſt, where many Men were hang'd for having old Jewiſh Names, as Obadiah, or the like, with a Jeſt, that their Godfathers hang'd them. But, ſuppoſe it is not lawful in general to be a Counſel or Sollicitor, with, or to a Priſoner committed for High-Treaſon; yet the Proſecution being the King's he may give a Privilege which the Law of Courts, doth not allow, and in this Caſe it was ſo done: for, to the Confuſion of thoſe who did this Injury, and of thoſe Judges who would not do the Priſoner Right, they have printed the Orders of the King and Council, which appointed Mr. Weſt and Aaron Smith to be his Counſel and Sollicitor.

If it was lawful for the Priſoner to have Counſel, and to have Advice in writing; it was very unlawful, and as high a Miſdemeanour in the King's Counſel to order his Papers to be taken away, as they were capable of being guilty of; both the Priſoner and the Matters of his Defence being under the Protection of the Court.

It is not an ancient Practice the ſeizing of Papers, though of late us'd; it began, I believe, upon my Lord Coke, whoſe Papers were ſeiz'd and carried to the Secretaries Office, upon the like Pretences as of late, and when return'd, were gelt of many Bonds and other Securities, to a great many thouſand Pounds value, which never came to light. It was afterwards practis'd upon ſome Members of Parliament, and, as I remember, voted Illegal, as undoubtedly it is: for though, ſometimes you may meet with Papers which may be Evidence againſt the Priſoner; yet it is poſſible that other Papers than the Priſoner's may be mix'd with his to make good an Accuſation; nay, which is worſe, ſome of the Papers may be withdrawn, which may be the only Matter of his Defence, and that hath been often practis'd. And I cannot but remember a Story about this Matter: When Sir William Jones died, it was ſaid, that one from Whitehall offer'd Sir William Jones's Servant a great Sum of Money but to let him ſearch his Maſter's Study, to find a Paper which would diſcover great Matters. A certain Perſon diſcourſing with a Privy-Counſellor about it, the Privy-Counſellor ſaid, It was not true; for, ſays he, if we had had a mind to have done it, could we not ſend a Meſſenger on pretence of ſearching for treaſonable Papers, and bring all the Study to Whitehall, and keep what we would of them?

But though that hath been often practis'd, yet this was the firſt time that ever a Priſoner had the Inſtructions for his Defence taken away from him; and the Manner was worſe than the thing, it being done juſt as he was coming to his Trial, relying upon his Writing, not his Memory, for his Defence; beſides the Agony ſo great an Injury put him in, when he had ſo great a Concern upon him, as the Trial for his Life, and he could not but know by all that Preparation, that it was more than ten to one againſt him: all which is well ſeen in his Trial, where he ſo pathetically and ſenſibly preſs'd the Court for Juſtice in this Matter, which they excus'd with ſuch mean Anſwers, that all Mankind muſt ſee they were ſatisfy'd of the Injuſtice, and were reſolv'd not to do him Right: They knew not which way he came by the Papers, they knew not but he may be criminal who brought them him; they knew nothing of his Papers, they knew not what Papers he meant; that his Lordſhip did not take them away, and ſuch like ſtuff: as if it was not the Duty of the Court to relieve the Priſoner againſt the Oppreſſion of any ſuch Perſons but themſelves; elſe why did they not aſk Murrel and Sawel who ſtood by, and were charged with taking them, for the Papers, and have ſatisfy'd themſelves of them? But in truth they knew before what they were. And Colledge was a true Prophet, when finding his Life ſo beſet, he ſaid, This was a horrid Conſpiracy to take his Life: but it would not ſtop there, for it was againſt all the Proteſtants of England. And the Rule the Court made at laſt was as unjuſt, That he ſhould have the uſe of ſome of his Papers after he had pleaded not Guilty, but not not before; for ſuppoſe there was Matter in them which could not be made uſe of after ſuch Plea, as a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, a Pardon, otherwiſe acquitted, and the like, could not be pleaded, or advantage taken of them after not Guilty pleaded; although there was not ſuch, yet there might have been ſuch Pleas for ought the Court knew. How unjuſt then was it for him to plead not Guilty before he ſhould have the uſe of his Papers? But there was Matter in them for quaſhing the Indictment; and he hinted ſo much to the Court, as that the Indictment contain'd Crimes of different Nature, as Treaſon and Miſdemeanour, and I think it was good Cauſe to quaſh the Indictment.

In all Civil Matters, two Matters of different Natures cannot be put into one Action, as Debt and Treſpaſs; two Capital Crimes of dictment Natures cannot be join'd in one Indifferent, as Murder and Robbery: and for the ſame, and another Reaſon, Treaſon and Miſdemeanour cannot be join'd in one Indictment; for the Jury may obſerve that one part of the Indictment, which in it ſelf is but Miſdemeanour, as that he ſaid, The King minded nothing but Beaſtlineſs, &c. though charg'd in the Indictment as Treaſon, was prov'd, and not the material Parts of the Indictment, as deſigning to ſeize the King's Perſon, &c. and finding ſome part of the Indictment prov'd, might find him Guilty generally, which extends to every Article of the Indictment, and ſo the Jury deceiv'd, and the Priſoner in danger; or ſuppoſe he was acquitted of ſuch an Indictment, if it ought to have been quaſh'd, whether the Priſoner ſhew the Error or not, he may be try'd again upon another good Indictment for the ſame Treaſon. If therefore what he offer'd was an Error, or but like an Error in the Indictment, by the Law which favours Life, and the jeopardy on Life, the Court ought not to have try'd him on that Indictment, but have directed another Indictment to have been found. It is a vain Objection to have ſaid, That that would have been troubleſome. Is the Miſchief of that comparable to that of putting a Man twice in jeopardy of his Life for the ſame thing? But it would have been a delay. I ſay none; for there was a Grand Jury in Court, and within the two Hours time the Court adjourn'd (to give the King's Counſel Opportunity of viewing the Priſoner's Papers which were taken from him, and to conſider of the Method of his Proſecution by them, which they did, and alter'd it from what they at firſt deſign'd it) the King's Counſel might have had a new Bill found; but peradventure they could not prevail with that Grand Jury to have found a new Bill; they remembred they had ill luck with the firſt Bill at London, which I believe was the true Reaſon: but I'll do the Court no Injury, in ſuppoſing that to be the Cauſe of the Adjournment which was not; 'tis true, in the printed Trial, 'tis pretended they adjourn'd in order to Dine; yet thoſe that knew the Adjournment was by the Direction of the King's Counſel, and overheard their whiſpering with the Chief Juſtice (which is both an indecent and an unjuſt thing, and is neither better nor worſe than a Plaintiff or Defendant's whiſpering a Judge while his Caſe is before him trying) and I know that the Judges had breakfaſted but a little before, and had no great Stomach to their Dinners, and therefore believe, that that before aſſign'd, and not what was pretended, was the true Cauſe: They might better have put off their Dinner to their Supper, than their Supper to their Breakfaſt, as they did, the Trial laſting till early next Morning.

But becauſe all Irregularities of Court and Counſel, in all theſe Matters, are ſhifted off and excus'd by two Sayings not underſtood generally; the firſt whereof is, That the Court is to act for the King, and the Counſel are for the King, and no Perſon muſt come near the Priſoner, to the Prejudice of the King, as in Fitzharris's Caſe was often ſaid; a Witneſs was permitted to go on in an impertinent Story, of a Tranſaction between him and my Lord Shaftesbury, in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, of which the Priſoner complain'd that it was deſign'd to incenſe the Jury; and though the Chief Juſtice declar'd it was not Evidence, yet a great while afterward he went on in a like manner: nay, the Counſel in ſumming up the Evidence, repeated the ſame Matter, which was permitted becauſe it was for the King; and yet, when the Earl of Angleſea began to ſay what the Lady Chaworth told him, he was ſnubb'd, and cut ſhort; and Mr. Edward Howard was ſerv'd the ſame Sauce, becauſe it was againſt the King: It is fit therefore to know what is meant in Law by thoſe Words. No body doubts what the Courts or King's Counſel of late Days meant, but in Law they are not ſo meat: for though many things are ſaid to be the King's, as the Protector of his People, and more concern'd in their Welfare than any private Perſons; yet they are ſo in Preſervation, and not in Property or Intereſt. The Highways are the King's, in preſervation for the paſſage of his Subjects; and whoever obſtructs them wrongs the King, as he is hurt when his Subjects are hurt; but in Property, the Soil generally belongs to private Perſons. The King is hurt when his Subjects are oppreſs'd by Force, becauſe he has engag'd to defend them; and therefore the Offender is puniſh'd by the King, to deter the Offenders, and others, from committing the ſame Offences; which is for the benefit of the Publick. But as a Man may be oppreſs'd by open Force, ſo he may be oppreſs'd by private Inſinuations, and falſe Accuſations, and the King has engag'd to defend his Subjects from ſuch; not that it is poſſible to prevent them, but by conſequence, that is, by puniſhing ſuch as ſhall be found guilty of thoſe Crimes, which heretofore were puniſh'd with the higheſt arbitrary Puniſhments we read of. The Conſequence is, That it is for the King to puniſh Offenders, to acquit the falſe accus'd, and to puniſh the falſe Accuſers; that is to ſay, in all Caſes to do right according to Law and Truth.

Surely Queen Elizabeth gave the beſt Explanation of the * Words, when the Lord Burleigh, ſeeing Sir Edward Coke, the then Attorney-General, coming towards her, he ſaid, Madam, here is your Attorney-General, Qui pro Domina Regina ſequitur. Nay (ſays ſhe) I'll have the Words alter'd, for it ſhould be, Qui pro Domina Veritate ſequitur.

For the King, and for Truth; they are ſynonymous Words; for the King againſt the Truth is a Contradiction. And the Judges and King's Counſel having taken an Oath to adviſe the King according to the beſt of their cunning, which is according to Law and Truth; if therefore the King's Counſel uſe means, and the Court permit them ſo to do, to ſuppreſs Truth, or to diſable the Priſoner from making his Innocence appear, as in Col.

ledge's Caſe was done, if they urge things as Evidence of the Crime whereof the Priſoner is accus'd, which by Law are not Evidence, as in this Caſe, in the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, Colonel Sidney's Caſe, Mr. Hampden's, and Mr. Corniſh's Caſe, and in many more they did, and as in ſome of them ſhall be hereafter ſhewn. If they inſinuate any Fact as Evidence, which is not prov'd, as in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, that my Lord of Eſſex kill'd himſelf; if they wreſt as Evidence of the Fact, what in Senſe is not ſo, as in Colonel Sidney's Caſe, the writing his Book, (nay, for any thing appear'd, it was writ before King Charles the Second came to the Crown) they are Counſel againſt the King, being againſt Truth, as well as againſt the Priſoner.

I think no Man will deny the Truth of this Propoſition, That it is as much the King's intereſt to have an Innocent accus'd of Treaſon, acquitted, as it is to have a Nocent accus'd of Treaſon, convicted. If that be true, then let any one ſhew me a Reaſon if he can; for there is no Law againſt it, why he may not have the ſame Liberty of clearing his Innocence, as the Proſecutor hath of convicting him; I mean by free and private Acceſs of all Perſons to the Priſoner, as is us'd in all other capital Matters. If it be ſaid he may get ſome to corrupt the Witneſſes againſt him, or ſuborn others for him, the ſame may be ſaid in all other Matters; but in Treaſon that is not a likely Matter, for generally the Priſoner never knows what he is accus'd of, and conſequently cannot know his Accuſer, nor how to provide a Counter-Evidence, till he comes to be arraign'd, and then it is too late: for generally he is preſently tried after his Arraignment, as was the Caſe of Colledge, and my Lord Ruſſel, and Mr. Corniſh; and Perſons committed for Treaſon are ſo much the leſs able to corrupt or ſuborn Witneſſes, than any other Criminals, that they generally, according to the late Practice, have no Accuſer brought Face to Face to them on their Commitment as all other Criminals have, who always are committed upon an Accuſation made upon Oath in their hearing, and their Defence heard before their Mittimus made; and whatever the Pretence may be, yet in Experience, it is found that more Perjuries are committed in Proſecutions for Treaſon by the Accuſers, than by the Witneſſes for the Priſoner.

One reaſon is, A Witneſs in Treaſon is more difficultly convicted than in any other Crime: For Treaſon is an Ignis fatuus, 'tis here and there, as Colledge was firſt in London, then in Oxford; it is not confin'd to place or time, as all other Crimes are; in all other Crimes, as Murder, Robbery, or the like, it muſt be proved to be within the County where laid; it muſt be of the Perſon named in the Indictment, which are Evidences of Fact, which in ſome ſort prove themſelves. And there was but one that I remember (for Oates I do not count one) was ever juſtly convicted of Perjury in Treaſon, and that too was for want of Cunning, for he fooliſhly ſwore to Time as well as Place, which a Witneſs in Mr. Hampden's Trial would never be brought to do: Beſides Malice and Revenge, which in Proſecutors and Accuſers in Treaſon are generally the Motives, go farther than Money or Kindneſs, which if us'd in any Caſe, are the Motives of falſe Witneſſes for the Priſoner.

Now as for the King and for the Truth are the ſame, ſo for the King and for the Law are the ſame. The Laws are the King's, as he is to ſee the Execution and Preſervation of them; ſo for the King againſt the Law is a Contradiction.

Therefore to try a Priſoner upon a vicious Indictment, as was done in Colledge's and Colonel Sidney's Caſes, is againſt the King as it is againſt Law, for by that means he is in danger to be hang'd if convicted; or tried twice, if acquitted, which is againſt Law.

It is no Salvo of the Matter what the Judges ſaid in Colledge's Caſe, that the Evidence of Miſdemeanour is no Evidence of Treaſon; for the ſame may be ſaid in an Indictment of Murder and Robbery; nor that the Judges would take care to inform the Jury which was Evidence of Treaſon, which of Miſdemeanour, which they promis'd to do, but were not as good as their Words, as ſhall be ſhewn: for the Court may forget ſo to do, and the Jury may forget what the Court ſaid to them of that Matter.

But notwithſtanding all this, if the Priſoner was innocent, there could be no harm done to him, for his Innocence would defend him: This was a ſaying, and as mortal it was to Fitzharris, to Colledge, to Colonel Sidney, to Mr. Corniſh, and ſeveral others, as was the Letter Θ amongſt the Greeks. It is true, my Lord Coke us'd the Expreſſion, but in another Senſe than that of late practis'd. I would fain know what they meant by the Expreſſion; Is it, that no Man will or ever did ſwear falſely againſt a Priſoner in Treaſon? If that be true, how came the ſame Perſons to be ſo violent againſt Oates for what he ſwore againſt Ireland? or do they mean, that, let an Accuſer ſwear never ſo violently and Circumſtantially againſt a Priſoner, yet if he be innocent it will do him no harm? If that be true, I would fain know how the Priſoner ſhall eſcape; is it that his Innocence ſhall appear in his Forehead, or an Angel come from Heaven and diſprove the Accuſer? Neither of which we have obſerved, tho' all have ſaid, and I believe, that ſome Perſons have been very innocently executed. Or ſhall the Accuſer be detected by the bare Queſtions of the Priſoner, that I think will not be neither; and therefore to inſtance in the only Perſon who hath of late eſcap'd in a Trial of Treaſon, where there was a Deſign againſt his Life, which was my Lord Delamere, if he had not had Witneſſes to have prov'd the Perſons mention'd to have been with him at the Place and Time ſworn againſt him to be in other places, it was not his Denial had ſerv'd his turn, but he would have run the ſame Fate with my Lord Brandon. Nay, I am apt to think had he been tried by a Jury of Commoners pack'd, as at that time they uſually were, he had not eſcap'd.

The truth is, when I conſider the Practice of late Times, and the manner of Uſage of the Priſoners, it is ſo very much like or rather worſe than the Practice of the Inquiſition, as I have read it, that I ſometimes think it was in order to introduce Popery, and make the Inquiſition, which is the moſt terrible thing in that Religion, and which all Nations dread, ſeem eaſy in reſpect of it. I will therefore recount ſome undeniable Circumſtances of the late Practice: A Man is by a Meſſenger, without any Indictment precedent, which by the common Law ought to precede, or any Accuſer or Accuſation that he knows of, clapt up in cloſe Priſon, and neither Friend or Relation muſt come to him; he muſt have neither Pen, Ink or Paper, or know of what, or by whom he is accus'd; he muſt divine all, and provide himſelf a Counter-Evidence, without knowing what the Evidence is againſt him. If any Perſon adviſe or ſollicite for him, unleſs aſſign'd by the Court by which he is try'd, they are puniſhable: He is try'd as ſoon as he comes into the Court, and therefore of a Sollicitor there is no occaſion or uſe; if the Priſoner deſires Counſel upon a point of Law, as was done in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, the Council nam'd muſt be ready to argue preſently, and the Court deliver their Judgment preſently, without any Conſideration. The Priſoner indeed hath Liberty to except to thirty-five of the Jury peremptorily, and as many more as he hath cauſe to except to, but he muſt not know beforehand who the Jury are; but the King's Counſel muſt have a Copy of them: He muſt hear all the Witneſſes produc'd to prove him guilty together, without anſwering each as he comes, for that is breaking in upon the King's Evidence, as it is call'd; tho' it hold many Hours, as it happen'd in moſt of the Trials: he muſt not have any Perſon to mind him what hath been ſworn againſt him, and forgotten by him to anſwer; for if that were allow'd, the Priſoner perhaps may eſcape hanging, and that is againſt the King: There is a Proclamation to call in all Perſons to ſwear againſt him, none is permitted to ſwear for him; all the impertinent Evidence that can be given is permitted againſt him, none for him; as many Counſel as can be hir'd are allow'd to be againſt him; none for him. Let any Perſon conſider truly theſe Circumſtances, and it is a wonder how any Perſon eſcapes? it is downright tying a Man's Hands behind him, and baiting him to death, as in truth was practis'd in all theſe Caſes. The Trial of Ordeal, of walking between hot Iron Bars blindfold, which was aboliſh'd for the Unreaſonableneſs of it, tho' it had its Saying for it too, that God would lead the Blind ſo as not to be burnt if he were innocent, was a much more advantageous Trial for the Suſpected than what of late was practis'd, where it was ten to one that the Accus'd did not eſcape. If any of theſe things have been legally practis'd, I have nothing to ſay againſt it, but I have never read any thing of Common or Statute-Law for it. And I can with better Aſſurance ſay than any Perſon who hath practis'd theſe things, that no Law in England warrants them; and if not, then conſider the Unreaſonableneſs of theſe Methods.

There is yet one Objection to be anſwer'd, which being a very great Hardſhip upon the Priſoner, gives ſome colour of impoſing other Hardſhips upon him, to wit, that a Witneſs cannot be examin'd for the Priſoner on his Oath in a Trial upon an Indictment of a capital Matter. It is not becauſe the Matter is Capital, for then no Witneſſes ought to be examin'd upon Oath for the Appellee in a capital Matter: Neither is it becauſe it is againſt the King, for then no Witneſs ought to be examin'd on Oath for the Defendant in a Trial upon an Indictment of any criminal Matter; yet in Indictments of all criminal Matters, not capital, 'tis permitted to the Priſoner.

To ſay truth, never any Reaſon was yet given for it, or I think can be, if you believe my Lord Coke, 3*d Inſtit. fol.* 79. of which Opinion my Lord Hale is, in his Pleas of the Crown*, that that Practice is not warranted by any Act of Parliament, Book-Caſe, or antient Record, and that there is not ſo much as ſcintilla Juris for it; for he ſays, when the Fault is deny'd, Truth cannot appear without Witneſſes. As for what is pretended, that it is ſwearing againſt the King, and therefore it is not allow'd of; 'tis a canting Reaſon, which put into ſenſible Engliſh, a Man will be aſham'd to own. And as ſlight is the Reaſon, that it being a matter of ſo high a moment as a Man's Life, the Priſoner will be the more violent and eager, and the Witneſſes may be more prevail'd upon to ſwear falſely, more than they would be in a matter of leſs moment: The Weakneſs of that Reaſon hath been in part, and ſhall be further ſhewn. I think none will deny, but the End of Trials in any matters Capital, Criminal, or Civil, is the Diſcovery of Truth: Next, 'tis as neceſſary for the Priſoner to have Witneſſes to prove his Innocence, as it is for the King to have Witneſſes to convict him of the Crime? which Propoſition is agreed by the Practice, it being always permitted, that the Priſoner ſhall produce what Witneſſes he can, but they are not to be upon Oath. In the laſt place, ſince Truth cannot appear but by the Confeſſion of the Party, or Teſtimony of Witneſſes of both ſides, it is neceſſary to put all the engagement as well on the Witneſſes of part of the Priſoner, as of part of the King, to ſay the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as the nature of the Matter will bear: and as yet no better means has been found out than an Oath; which if deny'd to the Priſoner's Witneſſes, either he is allow'd too great an advantage to acquit himſelf, or he is not allow'd enough.

If all that his Witneſſes ſay without Oath, ſhall have equal credit as if they ſwore it, then he hath too much advantage; for Men may be found who will ſay falſely, what they will not ſwear, as is plain enough. How often doth a Defendant ſay, in a Plea at Law, that a Deed is not his, which yet in an Anſwer in Chancery, he will confeſs to be his? If his Witneſſes ſhall not have Credit becauſe not ſworn, to what Purpoſe then is it permitted him to produce them? If they ſhall have Credit, but not ſo much as if ſworn, I aſk how much Credit ſhall be given? Is it two, three, or ten Witneſſes without Oath ſhall be equivalent to one upon Oath? And beſides, that Queſtion never was or can be anſwered, what Credit ſhall be given them? There is an unreaſonable Diſadvantage put on the Priſoner, that a Witneſs produc'd on his part, of equal Credit with the Witneſs againſt him, ſhall not have equal Credit given him, becauſe he is not on his Oath; whereas he is ready to deliver the ſame things on his Oath, if the Court would adminiſter it to him: and yet that Difference was taken in Fitzharris's Caſe, as to the Credibility of Everard and Oates, the firſt being upon his Oath, the laſt not.

I do not offer this as any Reflection upon the late Proceedings, but as a Reaſon why Matters in capital Proceedings ought not to have been carried further than heretofore they were, againſt the Priſoner by Example of ſo unreaſonable a Practice.

But to return to the Trial of Colledge, which came on in the Afternoon, when the Attorney inſiſted ſiſted that the King's Witneſſes ought not to be examin'd out of the hearing of each other; in which he was over-ruled, but the Rule not obſerv'd, nor was it material: for the King's Counſel having the Priſoner's Writings, and by them obſerv'd how he intended to make the Witneſſes againſt him contradict themſelves, they did not produce ſuch Witneſſes as were not inſtructed to concur in the Evidence of the ſame matter, but produc'd only ſuch as were inſtructed to give Evidence of diſtinct matters. And therefore Dugdale was firſt produc'd, who gave Evidence of villifying Words ſpoke of the King at ſeveral times, at Oxford and London, by the Priſoner, to himſelf alone; that he ſhew'd the Witneſs ſeveral ſcandalous Libels and Pictures, and ſaid he was the Author of them; and that he had a ſilk Armour, a brace of Horſe-Piſtols, and a Pocket-Piſtol and Sword; that he ſaid, he had ſeveral ſtout Men to ſtand by him, and that he would make uſe of them for the defence of the Proteſtant Religion; he ſaid, the King's Party was but an Hand-full to his Party. Stevens ſwore the finding of the Original of the Raree-Show in the Priſoner's Chambers. John Smith ſwore his ſpeaking ſcandalous Words of the King, and of his having his Armour; and that when he ſhew'd it the Witneſs, he ſaid, Theſe are things that will deſtroy the pitiful Guards of Rowley; that he ſaid, he expected the King would ſeize ſome of the Members of Parliament at Oxford; which, if done, he would be one ſhould ſeize the King; that he ſaid, Fitzgerald, at Oxon, had made his Noſe bleed; but before long, he hoped to ſee a great deal more Blood ſhed for the Cauſe; that if any, nay, if Rowley himſelf, came to diſarm the City, he would be the death of him. Haynes ſwore he ſaid, Unleſs the King would let the Parliament ſit at Oxon, they would ſeize him, and bring him to the Block; and that he ſaid, the City had One Thouſand five hundred Barrels of Powder, and One hundred thouſand Men ready at an Hour's warning. Turberville ſwore, he ſaid at Oxford, that he wiſh'd the King would begin; if he did not, they would begin with him, and ſeize him; and ſaid, he came to Oxford for that purpoſe.

* Tit. Evidence, p. 264. See Hiſt. P. C. Vol. II. cap. 37. p. 283.

Mr. Maſters ſwore, that in diſcourſe between him and the Priſoner, he juſtified the Proceedings of the Parliament in 1640, at which the Witneſs wondred; and ſaid, How could he juſtify that Parliament that rais'd the Rebellion, and cut off the King's Head? To which the Priſoner reply'd, That that Parliament had done nothing but what they had juſt cauſe for, and that the Parliament which ſat laſt at Weſtminſter was of the ſame Opinion; that he call'd the Priſoner Colonel in mockery, who reply'd, Mock not, I may be one in a little time.

Sir William Jennings ſwore as to the fighting with Fitzgerald, and the Words about his bleeding.

For the Priſoner.

Hickman ſaid he heard Haynes ſwear, God damn him, he car'd not what he ſwore, nor whom he ſwore againſt, for it was his Trade to get Money by ſwearing. Mrs. Oliver ſaid, Haynes writ a Letter in her Father's Name, unknown to her Father. Mrs. Hall ſaid, ſhe heard Haynes own that he was employed to put a Plot on the Diſſenting-Proteſtants. Mrs. Richards ſaid, ſhe heard him ſay the ſame thing. Whaley ſaid, Haynes ſtole a Silver Tankard from him. Lun ſaid, Haynes ſaid the Parliament were a Company of Rogues for not giving the King Money, but he would help the King to Money enough out of the Fanaticks Eſtates. Oates ſaid, Turberville ſaid, a little before the Witneſſes were ſworn at the Old-Bailey, that he was not a Witneſs againſt the Priſoner, nor could give any Evidence againſt him: And after he came from Oxford, he ſaid, he had been ſworn before the Grand-Jury againſt the Priſoner, and ſaid, the Proteſtant Citizens had deſerted him, and God damn him, he would not ſtarve. That John Smith ſaid, God damn him, he would have Colledge's Blood. That he heard Dugdale ſay, that he knew nothing againſt any Proteſtant in England; and being tax'd, that he had gone againſt his Conſcience in his Evidence, he ſaid, it was long of Colonel Warcup, for he could get no Money elſe; that he had given out that he had been poiſon'd, whereas in truth it was a Clap. Blake ſaid, that Smith told him Haynes's Diſcovery was a Sham-Plot, a Meal-Tub Plot.

Bolron ſaid, Smith would have had him given Evidence againſt Sir John Brooks, that Sir John ſhould ſay there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament-Men went provided with four, five, ſix, or ten Men a-piece; and that there was a Conſult at Grantham, wherein it was reſolv'd, that it was better to ſeize the King than to let him go, whereas he knew of no ſuch thing: that he would have Bolron to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and told him what he ſhould ſay, leſt they ſhould diſagree in their Evidence; that he heard Haynes ſay, he knew nothing of a Popiſh or Presbyterian Plot, but if he were to be an Evidence, he car'd not what he ſwore, but would ſwear any thing to get Money. Mowbray ſaid, Smith tempted him to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and was inquiſitive to know what Diſcourſe paſſed betwixt him and my Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern, on the Road; and ſaid, that if the Parliament would not give the King Money, and ſtood on the Bill of Excluſion, that was Pretence enough to ſwear a Deſign to ſeize the King at Oxford.

Everard ſaid, Smith told him he knew of no Preſbyterian or Proteſtant Plot, and ſaid, Juſtice Warcup would have perſuaded him to ſwear againſt ſome Lords, a Presbyterian Plot, but he knew of none; he ſaid, Haynes told him it was Neceſſity and hard Pay drove him to ſpeak any thing againſt the Proteſtants; and being queſtion'd how his Teſtimony agreed with what he formerly ſaid, anſwer'd, he would not ſay much to excuſe himſelf; his Wife was reduc'd to that neceſſity, that ſhe begg'd at Rouſe's Door, and mere Neceſſity drove him to it, and Self-preſervation, for he was brought in guilty when he was taken up, and was oblig'd to do ſomething to ſave his Life, and that it was a Judgment upon the King or People; the Iriſhmens ſwearing againſt them was juſtly fallen on them, for outing the Iriſh of their Eſtates.

Parkhurſt and Symons ſaid, they had ſeen at Colledge's Houſe his Arms, about the latter end of November. Yates ſaid, Dugdale beſpoke a Piſtol of him for Colledge, which he promis'd to give Colledge. And upon Diſcourſe ſome time after the Oxford Parliament, Yates ſaid, Colledge was a very honeſt Man, and ſtood up for the good of the King and Government. Yes, ſaid Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary. Deacon and Whitaker ſaid they knew Colledge was bred a Proteſtant, and went to Church, and never to a Conventicle that they knew of, and thought him an honeſt Man. Neal, Rimington, Janner, and Norris to the ſame purpoſe; and Norris, that Smith (in company where was Diſcourſe of the Parliament-Mens being agreed to go to Oxford) ſaid, he hoped they would be well provided to go, if they did go. El. Hunt ſaid, a Porter, in her Maſter's abſence, brought the Prints taken in Colledge's Houſe eight Weeks before; and ſaid, Dugdale told her, after her Maſter was in Priſon, he did not believe Colledge had any more hand in any Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty, than the Child unborn: and he had as lieve have given an hundred Pounds he had never ſpoke what he had; and that he had nothing to ſay againſt her Maſter, which would touch his Life.

Having ſummed up all the material part of the Evidence in the order it was given, for or againſt the Priſoner; let us ſee whether, upon the whole, an honeſt underſtanding Jury could, with a good Conſcience, have given the Verdict the then Jury did; or whether an upright Court could, with a good Conſcience, have declar'd they were well ſatisfied in the Verdict given, as all the four Judges in that Caſe did, though the Chief Juſtice North only ſpoke the Words. And though it is too late to advantage the deceaſed, yet it will do right to the Memory of the Man, to whoſe dextrous Management on his Trial, many now alive owe the continuance of their Lives to this day. It was not their Innocence protected the Lord Fairfax, Sir John Brooks, and many others before-mention'd, and many not named in the Trial, but Colledge's baffling that Crew of Witneſſes, and ſo plainly detecting their Falſhood, that the King's Counſel never durſt play them at any other Perſon but the Earl of Shaftesbury, as ſhall be ſhewn; and failing there, they were paid off, and vaniſh'd, and never did more harm viſibly: what under-hand Practices they might be afterwards guilty of, I know not.

Who could believe any one of thoſe four Witneſſes, Dugdale, Haynes, Turberville, and Smith, if it were for no other Reaſon than the improbability of the thing; for (as Colledge ſaid) was it probable he ſhould truſt things of that nature with Papiſts, who had broke their Faith with their own Party, who could lay greater Obligations of Secrecy upon them than he was able to do? That he, a Proteſtant, ſhould truſt People who had been employed to cut Proteſtants Throats? And neither of them ever diſcovered any of the things they ſwore, till after the Oxford Parliament, tho' moſt of them were pretended to be tranſacted and ſpoken before.

Who could believe Dugdale in any of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, when Oates teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid he knew nothing againſt any Proteſtants in England? And being tax'd by Oates, that he had gone againſt his Conſcience in his Evidence againſt Colledge to the Grand-Jury at London, he ſaid, It was long of Colonel Warcup, for he could get no Money elſe; which is a plain Confeſſion he had ſworn wrong, and of the Cauſe for which he did it, and of the Perſon who induced him to do it. That he had given out that he was poiſon'd, whereas his Diſeaſe was a Clap: which was an ill thing in him, as it imply'd a Charge of poiſoning him on other Perſons. And when Elizabeth Hunt teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid, after Colledge was in Priſon, that he did not believe Colledge had any more hand in any Conſpiracy againſt the King, than the Child unborn; and that he had as lieve have given an hundred Pound he had never ſpoken what he had; and that he had nothing to ſay againſt Colledge which could touch his Life: And when Yates teſtify'd againſt him, that when Yates ſaid Colledge was an honeſt Man, and ſtood up for the good of the King and Government; Yes, ſaid Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary.

Who could believe Haynes in any part of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, when Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Richards ſaid, he own'd he was employ'd to put a Plot upon the Diſſenting Proteſtants? when Whaley teſtified againſt him that he was a Thief, and had ſtole Whaley's Tankard? when Lun teſtify'd that Haynes ſaid the Parliament were a Company of Rogues, for not giving the King Money; but he would help the King to Money enough out of the Fanaticks Eſtates? when Hickman teſtified againſt him he heard him ſay, God damn him, he car'd not what he ſwore, nor againſt whom he ſwore, for 'twas his Trade to get Money by ſwearing? when Mrs. Oliver ſaid, that he had writ a Letter in her Father's Name, without her Father's knowledge? when Bolron teſtify'd againſt him, that he ſaid he knew nothing of a Popiſh or a Preſbyterian Plot, but if he were to be an Evidence, he cared not what he ſwore, but would ſwear any thing to get Money? when Everard teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid, Neceſſity and hard Pay drove him to ſay any thing againſt the Proteſtants; and being tax'd that his Evidence againſt Colledge agreed not with what he had formerly ſaid, he ſaid, he could not excuſe it, but his Poverty and Self-preſervation drove him to it? which was a plain Confeſſion of the falſhood of his Evidence, and of the reaſon of it; and added, it was a judgment upon the King or People, the Iriſhmens ſwearing againſt them, for outing the Iriſh of their Eſtates: which can have no other Senſe, than the Iriſhmens forſwearing themſelves againſt the Engliſh was a Judgment, &c.

How could Turberville be believed in any part of his Evidence againſt Colledge, when Oates teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid, a little before the Witneſſes were ſworn againſt Colledge at the Old-Bailey, that he was not a Witneſs againſt him, nor could give any Evidence againſt him; and yet afterwards, at Oxon, Turberville told him he had ſworn againſt Colledge to the Grand-Jury, and ſaid, the Proteſtant Citizens had deſerted him, and God damn him he would not ſtarve: which Words, I think, need no Explanation.

And laſtly, How could Smith be believed in any part of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, when it was teſtified againſt him by Blake, that he ſaid Haynes's Diſcovery was a Sham-Plot, a Meal-Tub-Plot? The meaning of the Words, I think, are well known: That he would have had Bolron ſwear againſt Sir John Brooks, the Lord Shaftesbury, and Colledge, Things of which he knew nothing, and told him what he ſhould ſwear, leſt they ſhould diſagree in their Evidence. When it was teſtified againſt him by Oates, that he ſaid, God damn him, he would have Colledge's Blood? when it was teſtified againſt him by Mowbray, that he tempted Mowbray to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge and Sir John Brooks, and was very inquiſitive to know what Diſcourſe he had with the Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern, on the Road to Oxon; and ſaid, if the Parliament did not give the King Money, but ſtood on the Bill of Excluſion, that was pretence enough to ſwear a Deſign to ſecure the King at Oxon? when Everard, and many others teſtified he ſaid he knew of no Presbyterian or Proteſtant Plot. Now if Colledge's Witneſſes were credited, it was impoſſible the King's Witneſſes could be credited; that was agreed by the Court to be true upon the Trial. The Anſwer on the Trial was, that the King's Witneſſes were on their Oaths, the Priſoner's were not; which was a Reaſon in Words, but not in Senſe.

And ſurely what Colledge ſaid on that Matter, without any Knowledge in the Law, cannot be anſwer'd. It is not fair dealing, ſaid he, with a Man for his Life, becauſe the Witneſſes againſt him, upon their Oaths, deny the things the Witneſſes for him prove; therefore the Witneſſes againſt him muſt be believed, and the Witneſſes for him disbelieved, when yet the Witneſſes for him were ready, on their Oaths, to maintain what they ſaid for him.

Nor is the Law ſo: for taking the Law to be, that a Witneſs for the Priſoner ſhall not be ſworn, which is only made good by Practice; the ſame Law, that is to ſay Practice, is, that a Witneſs without Oath, for the Priſoner, is of equal Credit with the Witneſs againſt him upon Oath, and none can ſhew the contrary till of late Days.

To give one Example of many, where it was neceſſary for the Priſoner to produce a Witneſs to prove his Innocency, and where the Witneſs for him was as much believed as the Witneſs againſt him: There was a Perſon, whoſe Name I do not remember, arraign'd (at the ſame time that an Indictment of High-Treaſon was endeavour'd to be found againſt the Lord Shaftesbury) for robbing another of Money, and of a hired Horſe, of which likewiſe the Perſon was robb'd. The robbing of the Money and a Horſe was prov'd by himſelf, and ſeveral others; but that the Priſoner was the Perſon that committed the Robbery, none poſitively ſwore but the Perſon robb'd; who likewiſe ſwore, that the Horſe on which the Priſoner was taken, was the Horſe taken from him; againſt which the Priſoner prov'd, by the Perſon of whom the Horſe was agreed to be hired, that the Horſe the Priſoner was taken upon, was not the Horſe he let to hire to the Perſon robb'd; whereupon the Priſoner was acquitted; and yet the Priſoner's Witneſs was not on his Oath, and the Perſon robbed was on his Oath: which, beſides that it proves the Matter for which it is brought, ſhews the Folly, as well as Injuſtice of the Practice of impriſoning Men, without letting them know for what, and without confronting them with the Witneſſes againſt them, upon the Commitment. For how could this Man have known what Witneſſes to produce, unleſs he had known what in particular he was indicted for? and how could he have ſent to ſuch Witneſſes, unleſs he had had the liberty of ſending to the Perſons who were to be Witneſſes for him? And it ſhews the Folly of thoſe Sayings, that a Man's Innocence muſt defend him, and that the Evidence againſt the Priſoner muſt be as clear as the Sun at Noon-day. All will agree that the Priſoner in this Caſe was innocent, and yet that alone, without producing a Witneſs to prove his Innocence, would have ſtood him but in little ſtead; and how could he have known what ſort of Evidence to have ready, unleſs he knew what he was accus'd of?

I do not mean what Crime he was accus'd of, as Treaſon, Murder, Robbery, Theft, or any other Crime; but unleſs he knew the Perſon robbed, when, where, and other Circumſtances; which, ſay ſome, is not to be permitted in Proſecutions of High-Treaſon; for if ſo, then no Man ſhall be hanged for High-Treaſon; unleſs there was as ſtrong Proof againſt him, as is requir'd in any Indictment of any capital Matter: and that, they ſay, is not to be expected in Treaſon; for no Man will call two Witneſſes to be Evidences of his Words or Actions, being Overt-Acts of his Deſign of High-Treaſon. The Objection is too fooliſh to be anſwer'd; for it is neither better nor worſe, than that if a Man ſhall not be hang'd for Treaſon without Evidence, he ſhall never be hang'd for Treaſon; for no Evidence, and Evidence which the Law rejects, is the ſame in Senſe, though different in Words: and as the Intent of the Mind is difficult to prove on the Part of the King, ſo is the Priſoner's Part of producing Counter-Evidence much more difficult; and therefore the Law hath taken care, by the Statute of Edward the Third, that the Intent ſhall be proved by an Overt-Act; and by the Statute of Edward the Sixth, that that Overt-Act ſhall be proved by two Witneſſes. And therefore, ſince the Law hath taken care that there ſhall be a ſtricter Proof in High-Treaſon than in any other Crime, for the Judges to ſay a leſs Proof may be admitted to convict one of High-Treaſon than of any other Crime, is very ridiculous; unleſs they will at the ſame time ſay, that the Parliament, who made thoſe Statutes, were Men of little Underſtanding, and not to be regarded. And certainly, it was a good Counter-Evidence which was given in behalf of the Priſoner, by ſome Witneſſes, though ſlighted by the Court, and not permitted by the Court to be given by others, that there were great Endeavours to ſet up Sham-plots, and charge the Proteſtants with them: For let any one ſhew me a Reaſon, why the Evidence of Sham-plots, though they do not immediately concern the Priſoner, is not as good Evidence for him, as the Evidence of a real Plot, in which he was not concern'd, is againſt him. The laſt was permitted to be given in Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel, Col. Sidney, and others; though the firſt was not permitted to many Witneſſes in this Trial, and it was a material Objection which Colledge made, That there was no proof of any Perſons being concerned with him in the Deſign of ſeizing the King.

It was an unadviſed Anſwer the Court gave, that he alone might be ſo vain as to deſign it alone: For if from thence an Inference is made, as was inſinuated by the Court to the Jury, that therefore he did alone deſign it, it was an Evidence of his being a Mad-man, not a Traitor. Had the Evidence been of the miſchiefing the King by means which a ſingle Perſon is capable of uſing, as Stabbing, Shooting, and the like, the Matter is not impoſſible; but it being by means which it is impoſſible for a ſingle Perſon to execute, it carries ſuch diſbelief with it, that it is impoſſible to find a Man in his Senſes at the ſame time guilty of it. And a Man that is non compos Mentis, if my Lords Coke * and Hale † are to be believ'd, cannot be guilty of High-Treaſon within that Branch of the Statute, compaſſing and imagining, &c.

It is true, a Mad-man may be guilty of Treaſon, in attempting the King's Perſon; but for that he is no more ſaid to be puniſh'd, than Beaſts of Prey are when kill'd; which are more properly ſaid to be deſtroy'd than puniſh'd for the publick good. But if ſo good a Counter-proof in Colledge's Caſe was not made, as ought to have been, ſome Allowances ought to be made for the Priſoner's ignorance of what he was accus'd of, his uſage and ſtrict Impriſonment before his Trial, the ruffling him juſt before his Trial in the Manner before declar'd, the depriving him of his Notes, the giving an Evidence of many Hours long againſt him, before he was permitted to anſwer any part of it. And the † H. P. C. p. 10. 43. Hiſt. of P. C. Vol. I. p. 37.

the uſe of Pen, Ink, and Paper, was but of little advantage to him; for a Man that hath not been uſed to do it, cannot take Notes of any uſe. And in truth, he complain'd he had not taken Notes of half ſaid, but relied on the Court to do him juſtice in ſumming up the Evidences; which they promiſed to do, but broke their Words.

It muſt likewiſe be conſider'd, that the concern a Man hath upon him, when he is upon Trial for his Life, is ſo far from fortifying, that it weakens his Memory: Beſides, the foul Practice, without any Remorſe, put upon him and his Witneſſes; ſome of them impriſon'd, that he could not have them at the Trial; others ſo threaten'd, that they durſt not appear for him, and the Cry of the Auditory againſt him and his Witneſſes, were mighty Diſcouragements. All theſe things being conſider'd, how could any underſtanding Jury take it on their Oaths, That the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, of a Deſign to ſeize the King, &c. was as clear as the Sun at Noon-Day?

As for the Evidence which Mr. Maſters gave, if it were true, it was no Evidence of Treaſon; an erroneous Opinion may make an Heretick, but not a Traitor: it is a very diſtant Conſequence, that becauſe he affirm'd that the Parliament in Forty had done nothing but what was juſt in reſpect of King Charles the Firſt, therefore the Priſoner was guilty of a Deſign againſt King Charles the Second: Beſides, that in all Probability, tho' Mr. Maſters might inveigh againſt the Parliament, Colledge might only juſtify them, by throwing the ill things done in that time upon the Papiſts, as Colledge in his Defence ſays; and Mr. Maſters, after much pumping, recollected himſelf, and ſaid he thought the Priſoner ſaid, the Papiſts had a hand in thoſe things; which prov'd the Truth of Colledge's Aſſertion.

As for the Evidence of Colledge's ſaying he might be a Colonel in time; if he hoped for what he ſaid, it was no Crime, or Proof of a Crime, 'tis no more than what every Soldier hopes for, and he himſelf had been one.

As for the Evidence of Atterbury, Sawel, and Stevens, of their ſeizing the Pictures; admit they ſwore true, it did not amount to the Proof of the Treaſon in the Indictment, or of any ſort of Treaſon: And yet if Colledge's Maid ſaid true, it looks as if the Finders or ſome other Perſon ſent them to Colledge's Houſe, in order to find them there.

Of all Sorts of Evidence, the finding Papers in a Perſon's Poſſeſſion is the weakeſt, becauſe no Perſon can ſecure himſelf againſt Deſigns upon him in that kind. And after Dangerfield's Deſign upon Colonel Manſel, and the Evidence in Fitzharris's Trial, that the Deſign of that Pamphlet was to convey Copies of it into ſome Members of Parliament's Pockets, and then ſeize them, that piece of Evidence ought to have been ſpar'd, till thoſe and other Practices of like kind had been forgotten.

The laſt Witneſs was Sir William Jennings, of Colledge's ſaying he had loſt the firſt Blood in the Cauſe, but it would not be long before more would be loſt; what was that more, than that he thought more would be loſt in the Cauſe, which he interpreted the Proteſtant Cauſe? Suppoſe he thought ſo without Reaſon, and was miſtaken, where was the Crime? But if he thought ſo upon good Reaſon, and good Reaſon he had to think ſo, there was no pretence of a Crime in it. I believe moſt Men thought as Colledge did, from the time of the Buſineſs of Fitzharris; and what Imputation was it to him? Why were not all the Expreſſions he us'd in his Trial as good Evidence againſt him as that Saying? For he then ſaid, it was an horrid Conſpiracy to take away his Life, and would not ſtop at him, for it was againſt all the Proteſtants of England, and the like; which was his Opinion, and After-times ſhewed him a true Prophet.

One thing was very diſhoneſtly inſinuated, that the Priſoner was a Papiſt, which was only to incenſe the Jury againſt him, and it had its Effect; whereas it was very plain that he was a Proteſtant, tho' perhaps a Diſſenter, and therefore had not lately come to the publick Church; and under that Notion the Papiſts and ſome Proteſtants were contented that Diſſenters ſhould be puniſhed as Papiſts; yet if they could have proved him a Papiſt, no doubt they would have done it, for the Deſtruction of the Man was the Deſign of the Proſecution, and it matter'd not for what Treaſon he was convicted, ſo he was convicted. And he himſelf gave a pretty ſort of Evidence againſt himſelf, if they could have prov'd him a Papiſt: he prov'd, and confeſſed, he was educated a Proteſtant; and if they could have proved him reconciled to the Popiſh Religion, which was Treaſon, he help'd them a great deal in their Proofs: It was therefore very diſingenuous in the Chief Juſtice to reproach him at his Condemnation, that he had not made that Proof of his Religion as it was expected, when his Religion was not the Matter of which he was indicted; that was ſlily inſinuated to exaſperate, and no Proof pretended to be made of his being a Papiſt. But he had more Reaſon to complain of the Injuſtice of the Court in ſumming up the Evidence, who did it in ſuch a Manner, that if they had been Counſel for the Priſoner, as they pretended, they would have been juſtly ſuſpected to have taken a Fee of the other ſide to betray their Client.

For, as Colledge readily ſaid, if the Chief Juſtice had looked on his Notes, he would have found more Evidence againſt Turberville, and Dugdale, than he had repeated. And it was a lame Excuſe for the Chief Juſtice to ſay, he referr'd it to the Memory of the Jury, for he could not remember more; when, as I dare ſay, after about thirteen Hours Evidence, the Jury remember'd no more, than that they were to find him Guilty.

The Truth is, upon the whole, what Colledge ſaid was true; they took away all Helps from him for defending himſelf, and therefore they had as good have condemned him without a Trial. Notwithſtanding all which, the Courage of the Man never fainted, but after he was condemn'd, boldly aſked, when he was to be executed? To which the Lord Chief Juſtice reply'd, it depended on the King's Pleaſure; but ſmoothly ſaid, in thoſe Caſes of High Treaſon they did not uſe to precipitate the Execution, it ſhould not be ſo ſudden but that he ſhould have Notice to prepare himſelf. And in truth he had from the eighteenth, on which he was condemned, to prepare himſelf, to the one and thirtieth of Auguſt 1681, on which he was executed; a much longer time than was allow'd my Lord Ruſſel, or Mr. Corniſh, and many others. And the true Reaſon of ſo long a Reprieve, was to ſee how the Nation would digeſt the Matter, and whether the Man by the Terror of Death could be prevail'd upon to become a Tool to deſtroy other Innocents: But when it was found that the People were quiet, and that the Priſoner could not be prevail'd upon to do an ill thing to ſave his Life, his Execution was order'd; yet as a ſhew of Mercy, his Quarters were permitted to be bury'd; a Favour he ſlighted, with ſaying that he car'd not whether he was eaten up with Flies or Worms. The ſame Favour was likewiſe ſhewed Fitzharris, but the true Reaſon of both was, That they had a mind that the Trials and pretended Crimes, for which Fitzharris and Colledge were condemned, ſhould be forgotten; which would not be ſo ſoon done, if their Quarters were always expos'd to view. But though all People were quiet, yet there was great grumbling, and moſt honeſt Men were afraid; and the Conſtancy of Colledge at his Execution was ſuch, that it made the moſt violent againſt him relent.

Remarks on the Earl of Shaftesbury's Grand Jury.

THE next Perſon queſtion'd was the Earl of Shaftesbury, againſt whom a Bill of High-Treaſon was preferr'd to the Grand Jury, at the Seſſions-Houſe, on the 24th Day of November 1681. The Evidence was publickly given in Court, and was this; Mr. Blathwaite ſwore he found the Papers then produc'd in a Velvet Bag in the great Trunk, which was taken by Mr. Gwynne in the Lord Shaftesbury's Houſe. Mr. Gwynne ſwore all the Papers in the Velvet Bag, when he deliver'd them to Mr. Blathwaite, were taken by him in the Lord Shaftesbury's Houſe: Sir Leoline Jenkins ſwore, the Paper produc'd was the Paper deliver'd him by Mr. Blathwaite, and it was unalter'd. Then the Paper was read, the Effect of which was a Project of an Aſſociation ſigned by no Perſon, and whoſe Hand-writing it was, none knew. John Booth ſwore, that he was engag'd to Captain Wilkinſon, who pretended to have a Commiſſion from the Lord Shaftesbury and ſeveral others to go for Carolina; he was about that time introduced into the Earl's Acquaintance by the Captain, where was a Diſcourſe about Carolina Buſineſs; he was four or five times between Chriſtmas and March, with the Earl and the Captain: that the Captain told him he was to command fifty Men to be the Earl's Guard at Oxon, and would have had him to be one: That if the King did not conſent to ſeveral Acts of Parliament and other Things, they were to purge the Guards and Court of ſeveral Perſons; and though the Captain told him that firſt, afterwards he heard the Earl ſay the ſame things, particularly about a Week or ten Days before the Parliament ſat at Oxon, he gave ſome Intimation of this to Walter Banes, and then writ it down, and ſent it to the Council ſealed in a Cover. Turberville ſwore, that the Lord Shaftesbury ſaid about February, there was but little good to be done with the King as long as his Guards were about him. Smith teſtify'd a great deal of Diſcourſe between him and the Lord Shaftesbury of ſomething ſaid reflecting on the King; and that he ſhould ſay, that if the King ſhould offer any Violence to the Parliament at Oxford, he would meet with a ſtrong Oppoſition, for that the Gentlemen, who came out of the Country, came well provided with Horſe and Arms to oppoſe, and that they might lawfully do it, if he offer'd any Violence to them whilſt they ſat. Haynes ſwore, that the Earl ſaid if the King did not give Haynes his Pardon, he and others would raiſe the Kingdom againſt him; that Haynes gave the Earl an exact Account of Tranſactions ſince King Charles the Firſt's coming to the Crown, and that the Earl ſaid the Duke of Buckingham had as much Right to the Crown as any Stuart in England. John Macnamarra ſaid, the Earl ſaid, the King was Popiſhly affected, and took the ſame Methods his Father did, which brought his Father's Head to the Block, and they would bring his thither; and this was ſaid in the Preſence of Ivey, and he thought of his Brother; and ſaid, the King deſerv'd to be depos'd as much as King Richard the Second. Dennis Macnamarra likewiſe teſtify'd the laſt Words, and that it was the latter end of March, or beginning of April. Ivey ſaid, the Earl ſaid, if the King deny'd Haynes a Pardon, they would riſe upon him and force him to give one, and that they deſign'd to depoſe him and ſet up another in his ſtead. Bernard Dennis ſaid, he had a great deal of Diſcourſe with the Earl, who bid him ſpeak to his Friends in Ireland to be in a readineſs to aſſiſt the Commonwealth of England, for they intended to have England under a Commonwealth, and extirpate the King and his Family.

Then the Court told the Jury the Indictment was grounded on the Statute of King Charles the Second, but they ought to conſider both of that Statute, as alſo the 25th of Edward III.

The Queſtion is, whether the Grand Jury ought to have found the Bill on this Evidence. Firſt it ought to be conſider'd, what the Duty of a Grand Jury is; and I think it is not what the Chief Juſtice * ſaid, to conſider only whether there be probable ground for the King to call the Perſon accuſed to an account, much leſs do I think that the reaſon of finding a Bill by the Grand Jury was for the Honour of the King, or Decency of the Matter, leſt Perſons accuſed ſhould be called to an Account by the King, where there is no kind of Suſpicion of the Crime committed by them, as the Court ſaid, (which laſt Matter was never aſſigned as a Reaſon of finding a Bill by the Grand Jury before) but I take the Reaſon of a Grand Jury to be this, that no Man for a capital Matter ſhall ever be queſtioned by the King, unleſs a Grand Jury take it on their Oaths that they believe the Matter of the Accuſation true; I put an Emphaſis on the Words queſtioned by the King.

* Sir Francis Pemberton.

It is true, it is generally ſaid, that the Buſineſs of a Grand Jury, in capital Matters, is in favorem vitæ; but that taken ſimply is not true, for then what what Reaſon can be aſſign'd, why a Man ſhall be arraign'd on an Appeal of Murder, Robbery, or the like, which touches his Life, as much as an Indictment of thoſe Crimes, without having the Matter of the Appeal firſt found to be true by a Grand Jury? But the true Reaſon of a Grand Jury is the vaſt Inequality of the Plaintiff and Defendant, which in an Indictment is always between the King and his Subjects; and that doth not hold in an Appeal, which is always been Subject and Subject: and therefore the Law in an Indictment hath given a Privilege to the Defendant, which it hath done in no other Proſecution, on purpoſe, if it were poſſible, to make them equal in the Proſecutions and Defence, that equal Juſtice may be done between both. It conſiders the Judges, Witneſſes and Jury are more likely to be influenced by the King than the Defendant; the Judges as having been made by him, and as it is in his Power to turn them out, puniſh, to prefer or reward them higher; and though there are no juſt Cauſes for them to ſtrain the Law, yet there are ſuch Cauſes, which in all Ages have taken place, and probably always will. This was the Reaſon of running Prerogative ſo high in their Judgment of High-Treaſon before the Stat. of Ed. III. that no Man, as that Statute ſays, knew what was not High-Treaſon: This was the Reaſon of expounding that Statute oftentimes between the making of it, and the making of the Statute of Queen Mary, that People were at as great a loſs, till the laſt Statute, as they were before the making of the firſt; and even ſince the Statute of Queen Mary, the Expoſition on the Statute of Ed. III. has been ſo extravagant and various, that People are at this day as much at a loſs to know what is not High-Treaſon, as they were before the Statute of Ed. III. Nor was it, nor is it, poſſible, but that the great Power of enriching, honouring, rewarding and puniſhing lodg'd in the King, always had, and yet muſt have an Influence on the Witneſſes and Jury; and therefore it is that the Law has ordered, that at the King's Proſecution, no Man ſhall be criminally queſtioned, unleſs a Grand Jury, upon their own Knowledge, or upon the Evidence given them, ſhall give a Verdict, that they really believe the Accuſation is true.

I own, of late Days, they have ſaid the Duty of the Grand Jury is to find, whether the Accuſation be probable or no. But that Saying is warranted by no poſitive Law, or antient Authority; and therefore the Duty of the Grand Jury muſt be founded in the Oath adminiſtred to them, which is as ſtrict as the Oath adminiſtred to the Petit Jury: and to ſay truth, the Verdict of the Petit Jury takes credit from the Verdict of the Grand Jury; which is not only the Reaſon of the Difference in the Names of the two Juries, but is likewiſe the Reaſon why an Attaint for a falſe Verdict doth not lie againſt a Petit Jury.

The Oath of the Grand-Jury, is, To preſent the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: The Oath of the Petit Jury is, well and truly to try, and true Deliverance make, between the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, &c. which ſignifies the ſame thing as to preſent the Truth, &c. It is true, ſome Reaſons have been offer'd, which, if conſider'd, are Words without Senſe; as that the Preſentment of the Grand Jury is but in order to bring the Priſoner to his Trial, and he not before the Grand Jury to make his Defence himſelf: but that can be no Reaſon why Probabilities ſhould ſatisfy the Jury, becauſe it doth not anſwer the Deſign of the Law, which will have a Man convicted by the poſitive Oaths of two Juries, conſiſting of more than twenty-four, in all Indictments.

Next, why is a Grand Jury compoſed of more ſubſtantial and underſtanding Men than a Petit Jury, if their Buſineſs be mere Formality, or a Matter of leſs Weight than the Buſineſs of a Petit Jury? In the laſt place, why is leſs Evidence required to convict a Man in his abſence, than is required to convict him if preſent? It is far from an Argument, that leſs Evidence is requir'd to convict one if abſent, than if preſent, that it ſeems to me that more Evidence ſhould be requir'd to do it. Men may, and often do make very fair Stories in the abſence of a Perſon accuſed, that when preſent, he eaſily anſwers; and there being no poſitive Law for the Direction of a Grand Jury in that matter, a Grand Jury-man is excuſable, nay, it is his Duty to give a Verdict according to the plain underſtanding of the Words of his Oath, which is to preſent the Truth, as far as he is convinced of it; and that Truth muſt be found according to his Knowledge, or as it is repreſented to him by Witneſſes.

And as for the Witneſſes, they muſt be Perſons of Credit; and all Perſons are ſuppoſed to be ſo, unleſs the Grand Jury know the contrary, or have been ſo credibly informed. 'Tis true, a Grand Jury ought not to believe Coffee-houſe Stories, or light Stories; but common Fame by credible Perſons, which is Vox Populi, ought to prejudice them againſt a Witneſs, ſo as to diſbelieve him: and it is no Anſwer to ſay, as the Chief Juſtice in this Caſe ſaid, that the Credibility of the Witneſs is not to be conſidered by the Grand Jury, becauſe the King is not preſent to defend the Credit of his Witneſſes: tho' the Fact in that Caſe was not true, for the King's Attorney, Sollicitor and Counſel were preſent, and I think the King is no otherwiſe preſent at any Criminal Proſecution; and the Jury knew by Colledge's Trial, and by Wilkinſon's Depoſitions before the King, that the Evidence of all the Witneſſes produced, except what were to the Paper, was queſtioned, but even that was afterwards quitted by the Court, when it would not be ſwallowed by the Grand Jury: for afterwards the Court told them, that if they of their own Knowledge knew any thing againſt the Witneſſes, they might conſider of it, but not of what they were credibly inform'd by others. And, beſides the Credibility of the Witneſſes, the Poſſibility or Probability of the thing ſworn is to be conſider'd by the Grand Jury; an impoſſible thing they ought not to believe, though ſworn by never ſo many credible Witneſſes, and a very improbable thing they cannot poſitively on their Oaths ſwear they believe.

And not only the Fact, but what the Crime of the Fact alledged in the Bill of Indictment, the Grand Jury, as far as they are capable of judging Matter of Law, ought to conſider; ſo they were told in the Charge given them. 'Tis true, if they were ignorant in the Law, and the Court in their Directions miſled them, as if the Court ſhould tell them ſtealing a Horſe is High-Treaſon, and the Grand Jury find it accordingly, it is excuſable in the Grand Jury, though puniſhable in the Court. But wrong Directions by the Court, in finding a Fact where there is no Evidence, do not excuſe the Jury.

Now, to examine the Matter in hand by theſe Rules, could any Perſon who knew my Lord Shaftesbury, or that had heard of, or believed his Character to be what it was, believe that it was poſſible for him to diſcourſe with the Witneſſes at the rate they ſwore, to ſome of them at the firſt, to others of them the ſecond time he ſaw them; to diſcourſe of Matters of Policy, with Booth at one time, and afterwards with Haynes, and afterwards with Macnamarra, Fellows of ſo little Senſe, that he would have been aſham'd to have entertain'd them in the meaneſt Office about him; and yet as they pretended, he makes them his Privadoes in the Secret, of not ſo much what he would have had them, but of what he intended himſelf to do?

Who could believe any thing, Truberville, Smith or Haynes ſhould ſay, where there was ſo much of their Falſhood, and of their Deſigns to ſwear falſly, prov'd againſt them in Colledge's Trial? Or of Ivey, and the three Macnamarra's after that Trial, who, though they were not produc'd at it, becauſe the King's Counſel by Colledge's Notes ſaw he was able to falſify them, yet ſome Witneſſes in that Trial prov'd their Deſign of ſwearing falſly?

Who could believe Booth's Story of liſting ſo many Men under Wilkinſon, to be at my Lord Shafteſbury's diſpoſe at Oxon, after Colledge's Trial, and after what Wilkinſon had teſtify'd to the King and Council, though not then prov'd to the Grand-Jury?

A Judge indeed cannot take notice of any thing not prov'd (though he may and ought to be a Witneſs, if he knew any thing material of the Matter try'd before him and others) but a Grand-Jury may take notice of any thing they know or believe. The Paſſages at Colledge's Trial were pretty notorious, being authentically publiſh'd by Fra. North, and the Examination of Wilkinſon by as authentick a Paper.

It was unaccountable, that the Witneſſes conceal'd what they heard the Earl ſpeak ſo long, of which none of them pretended to give any Reaſon; nor was it any Excuſe to thoſe who ſign'd a Petition to the City, in which they ſuggeſted they were tempted to ſwear againſt their Conſciences, to ſay they knew not what was in the Petition: He that ſets his Hand to a thing as if he aſſented to it, but doth not, is a Man of Falſhood. Suppoſe one ſets his Hand to a Bond, ſaid to be ſeal'd and deliver'd, not having ſeen it ſeal'd and deliver'd, is not he guilty of little leſs than Forgery? But admitting thoſe Witneſſes had ſworn Truth, yet the Jury ought not to have found the Bill; for they ought to find the Bill true according to all the material Circumſtances of it, as well as the Subſtance of it, which was High-Treaſon. One material Circumſtance of it was, that it was ſaid to be High-Treaſon within the Statute of Charles II. And that made another Circumſtance of the Indictment material, which was the time when that Treaſon was committed; becauſe by that Statute the Proſecutions of Treaſon on that Statute ought to be within ſix Months after it is committed, and the Indictment ought to be within three Months after the Proſecution: and he being impriſon'd in July, and the Bill ſuggeſting that the ſuppos'd Treaſon was committed the 18th of March before, and divers other times, both before and after, which might be interpreted to have been after the Priſoner's Commitment; had the Jury found the Bill as laid, they had found the Treaſon to have been committed, not only within the time the Proſecution by that Statute ought to be, but alſo within the time the Indictment ought to have been preferr'd, whereas in truth the Earl had been impriſon'd above three Months before the Indictment preferr'd, and there was no Evidence of any Treaſon committed by him after his Impriſonment: and therefore the finding the Bill as laid had been injurious, to bring a Man in queſtion for his Life on that Statute, whereas by Law he ought not to have been.

For it was reſolv'd in Colledge's Caſe, that the Proſecution for Treaſon on that Statute ought to be within ſix Months, and the Indictment within three Months, though the Court was of another Opinion in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial.

And that this Indictment was on that Statute, was expreſsly ſaid to the Grand-Jury, and upon good Reaſon; for the Court in their Charge ſaid, that the Intention of levying War, or deſigning to impriſon the King, was not Treaſon, till the Statute of Charles the Second; though in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial it was held to be Treaſon by the Statute of Edw. III. and therefore the time of the Treaſon committed was material to be found by the Jury.

As for the Writing found in the Earl's Study, it was no manner of Evidence of Treaſon, admitting what the Witneſſes ſwore as to the finding it to be true; becauſe it was not prov'd that it was proſecuted or compos'd by the Earl of Shaftesbury, or by his Order, and that piece of Evidence was in that particular a meer Original.

In Fitzharris's Caſe, it was prov'd the Libel was compos'd by his Direction; Colonel Sidney's Book was prov'd to be like his Hand; it was pretended that Colledge ſaid he was the Author of the Raree-Show, and no Example of this Evidence was ever made uſe of before.

Neither was it Evidence of Treaſon as to the Matter, for there was not one Word againſt the preſent King, but his Succeſſor, if he ſhould be ſuch a Perſon.

It is true, one of the King's Counſel ſaid that one Paſſage in it was, that they would join to deſtroy the Mercenary Forces about London, and thence inferr'd it was downright levying War againſt the King and his Guards; whereas there is not any ſuch word or thing in the Paper as he pretended to cite: and if it had been in the Paper, it would have been but Evidence of a Treaſon within the Statute of the late King. And then the time of Writing it, ought to have appear'd; and if that had been clear'd, yet for the above Reaſons it was no Evidence: and the Grand-Jury, tho' ſome of them afterwards ſmarted for it upon other Pretences, did like honeſt underſtanding Gentlemen; and had they done otherwiſe, to avoid the Ignominy of being call'd, though in truth it was an honour to be, an Ignoramus Jury, they had juſtly deſerv'd the Reproach which ſince have lighted on other Juries, ſuch as Mr. Corniſh's, and the like. And having ſpoken of this Ignoramus Jury, for which, two of them, if not more, were afterwards upon other Pretences ſeverely handled; I think fit to ſay ſomething of the Sufferings of one, for being in a preceding Ignoramus Jury, becauſe it was a meer Novelty, and that was Mr. Wilmer.

Remarks on Mr. Wilmer's Homine Replegiando.

HIS Proſecution, though it was but Criminal and not Capital, did as much Miſchief, as it ſtruck a Terror into all Grand Juries, as any the before mentioned Matters; and it was by the Homine Replegiando iſſued out againſt him. As for the Information againſt him, I ſhall ſay nothing, becauſe the Injuſtice of both will appear in the Diſcourſe of the firſt. Mr. Wilmer had ſent a Boy beyond Sea by Agreement, as Mr. Wilmer ſaid, whether true or not, as to this matter is not material; a Homine Replegiando is granted againſt Mr. Wilmer for this, at whoſe Proſecution is not material: for any Perſon upon Suggeſtion, back'd by an Affidavit, may have it granted. The Sheriff would have return'd on the Writ, that the Boy was ſent by his own Agreement and Conſent with Mr. Wilmer; which Return was not allow'd, and the Sheriffs were told that they muſt either return they had replevied the Boy, and they muſt have him in Court, or elſe they would be laid by the heels; or elſe they muſt return that Mr. Wilmer had Eſſoigned him, which is carrying him away, where the Sheriff could not find him; and then a Withernam would iſſue againſt Mr. Wilmer, upon which he would be taken and kept in Priſon till he produced the Boy: and no other Return ſhould be allowed than one of thoſe two, and if they did not make one of thoſe two Returns, they ſhould be committed. Now if the Law be ſo, the Court muſt be innocent, but the Law ought then to be reformed in that Particular; but if the Law was not, as I think it is not, I think Mr. Wilmer and the Nation had great Injuſtice done them; for it was quckly ſeen what the Miſchief of that Judgment was, and therefore it was endeavoured to be reformed by an Act of King and Coucil afterwards. Firſt, I ſay, it is lawful for a Maſter to covenant with a Servant to ſerve him beyond Sea; in the next place it is lawful for a Maſter to ſend his Servant beyond Sea according to ſuch Agreement. And if both theſe Propoſitions be true, as I think no Man will ſay they are not, it is a natural Conſequence to ſay, that the Law hath provided a Return upon a Writ of Homine Replegiando, if it ſhould be ſued out againſt ſuch Maſter for a Servant ſo ſent beyond Sea, which may indemnify the Maſter in ſo doing; and that Return can be no other than the ſpecial Matter which in this Caſe was refuſed to be accepted. 'Tis no Argument that no ſuch Return is ever read of in any Book: For the Law hath determined, that ſome Returns are good, and others bad; yet it hath not ſaid, what are all the good Returns, which may be made on an Homine Replegiando, and the Sheriff is no more confin'd to Returns, than a Man in the pleading of his Caſe, which my Lord Coke ſays may vary according to the Nature of his Caſe; and yet the Law hath ſaid what is a good Plea, and what a bad one, but hath not expreſt all the good or bad Pleas. And therefore it is no Argument againſt ſuch a Return, that no Precedent of it can be found, 'tis enough that no Judgment can be produced againſt it; and the Reaſon of both may be, that the Caſe never happened before, that is to ſay, that never any Perſon was ſo malicious before, as to ſue out an Homine Replegiando againſt a Maſter for a Servant ſent by Agreement beyond Sea: and Returns muſt be varied according to the Caſe. Perhaps no Precedent can be found of a Return on that Writ, that the Perſon ſought for is dead; yet all Perſons will agree it is a good Return, it is ſo in Replevin of Cattle, and even that Example falſifies the Doctrine of the Court, that there are but two Returns on that Writ allowable by Law. It is not an Argument for diſallowing the Return, that the Perſon ſent beyond Sea was a Child, not capable of making ſuch a Contract (though I believe, if the matter were look'd into, he was of age ſo to do) for nothing of that doth, or can appear in the Writ or Return: It ſtands therefore ſimply upon this, whether the Sheriff may on an Homine Replegiando return, that the Perſon ſuppoſed to be in cuſtody, being of full Age, was by mutual Agreement ſent beyond Sea by the Perſon in whoſe cuſtody by the Writ he is ſuppoſed to be, which I think is far from a Doubt. But notwithſtanding all theſe Hardſhips on Juries, it was ſeen to be plainly impoſſible to procure any Bills of Indictment for High-Treaſon, much leſs any Perſons to be convicted on the like Evidence, except in London, were are ſome of the beſt, as well as the worſt of Men in the Nation; and even there it was not to be done, as long as the Juries were ſenſible and honeſt Men, which would be as long as the Election of Sheriffs was in the Citizens; and, to the Honour of the City, it was ſeen that they choſe only honeſt Men to be their Sheriffs; and that when they ſaw the publick Safety depend on honeſt Officers, though at other times they had rather pay a Fine, than undergo the Trouble and Charges of that Office, yet at that time no Man, legally choſen, refuſed to ſtand, though they were reproached and puniſhed for it: and if Mr. Box refuſed, it was becauſe he would not join with North, who was impoſed on the City; for which reaſon it was reſolved to take from the City the Right of chuſing Sheriffs, but by what means was not preſently reſolved on.

That the City might forfeit their Right of electing, there was no great doubt; as if the Sheriffs were dead, and new ones were not choſen in a convenient time, ſo that there was a defect of Juſtice, or the like: but nothing of that kind could be laid to their Charge, and therefore a new unheard-of matter was thought on, and ſet a-foot, which was, to make the City forfeit their being a Corporation; and being annihilated, the Grants made to them by the Crown, as the Right of electing Sheriffs was, would revert to the Crown again.

A Quo Warranto was therefore brought againſt the City in Hilary Term, 1681, to ſhew by what Warrant they pretended to be a Corporation, and to have their Privileges mentioned in the Writ; to which the City pleaded, and ſet forth their Right; and the King reply'd, and ſet forth ſeveral Matters done by them, contrary to the Duty of a Corporation: upon which there was a Demurer, of which Judgment was not given till Trinity Term, 1683.

1683. I will ſay nothing of the Right of the Proceeding, it having been largely and learnedly argu'd for the City; but if the Matter were ſo clear a Caſe, as the King's Counſel and Court would have it to be, how came it to paſs that in Henry the Eighth's time, when the King was ſo earneſtly bent to diſſolve the Religious Corporations, in which the publick Inclination join'd with him, the doing it by Quo Warranto was not thought of? It was very plain, that thoſe pretended Religious did not obſerve the Rules, nor perform the Ends for which they were incorporated; and certainly their Miſdemeanours, againſt the Intent of their being incorporated, were better Cauſes of Forfeiture, than was the City's petitioning for a Parliament, &c. Yet that King took other Methods, he had formal Conveyances of their Lands from moſt of thoſe Corporations, and formal Surrenders of their Corporations, ſign'd by every Individual of the Corporations, and thoſe afterwards confirm'd by Act of Parliament. And ſure the late King had as much Right to bring a Quo Warranto againſt Magdalen College, for refuſing, contrary to their Duty to admit the Preſident the King nominated, if the King had a Kight to nominate the Preſident (as ſome Judges aſſerted he had) as King Charles the Second had againſt the City: and it was once in Debate, whether the Proceeding againſt that College ſhould be by Quo Warranto, or before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners; the laſt was reſolv'd on, not as more legal or effectual, but as more expeditious; in the one, the Proceedings being de Die in Diem, in the other from Term to Term. This only I will obſerve, that when the Judgment againſt the City was given, which was of the greateſt Concern to the Nation ever conteſted in any Court of Weſtminſter-Hall, it was done by two Judges only, and no Reaſon of that Judgment rendred: whereof Withins, who was one, I think, heard but one Argument in the Caſe. It is true, they ſaid Raymond, when alive, was of the ſame Opinion; and ſaid Saunders, who was then paſt his Senſes, was of the ſame Opinion; though I was told by one who was preſent, when the two Juſtices came to aſk his Opinion in the matter, he had only Senſe enough to reproach them for troubling him about the matter, when they were ſenſible he had loſt his Memory. And to ſay truth, the delivering the Senſe of an abſent Judge, though it hath been ſometimes pactis'd, is not allowable; for ſometimes they deliver another Opinion than what the abſent Judge is of. Judge Withins did ſo in ſeveral Caſes, when he delivered the Opinion of Sir Edward Herbert, which Sir Edward Herbert afterwards in open Court, diſown'd: Judge Holloway ſerv'd Judge Powel the ſame Trick, if the laſt ſaid true. The long depending of the Quo Warranto had alarm'd all the Nation, who were yet quiet, hoping that Judgment would be given for the City, as ſome of the Judges and of the King's Counſel, had given out it would; but the contrary was reſolv'd on, and therefore the Nation, at the time of the giving the Judgment, muſt be amus'd with ſomewhat elſe and nothing ſo proper as a Plot: but there was difficulty in that alſo; for if the pretended Plotters ſhould be acquitted, it would make the Matter worſe; and nothing would ſecure that, but impoſſing what Sheriffs they pleas'd on the City, and accordingly North and Rich being pitch'd on, the one by a ſhameleſs Trick, and the other by open Force, were impos'd on the City.

Having gain'd that Point, the Proceedings in the Quo Warranto were much quicker than before, and two Arguments were only permitted in it of each ſide, the one in Hilary Term, the other in Eaſter Term; and ſo the Caſe was ripe for Judgment in Trinity Term following, but muſt be, and was uſher'd in, with the Diſcovery of a pretended Plot: Which ſo amaz'd the Nation, that though Judgment in the Quo Warranto was given two Days after the pretended Diſcovery, no body took any notice of it for ſeveral Months after it was given. The truth was, no body durſt mutter againſt it, or queſtion the Legality of it; it was enough to have brought any Perſon into the Plot to have done it, it would have been call'd flying in the Face of the Government, queſtioning the Juſtice of the Nation, and ſuch like Cant.

Remarks on the Lord Ruſſel's Trial.

THE Plot being nois'd abroad, the Perſons before-hand reſolv'd on were ſeiz'd on, and the Lord Ruſſel, and others were clapp'd up cloſe Priſoners.

The Lord Ruſſel having been for ſome few Weeks a cloſe Priſoner in the Tower, was, the 13th of July, 1683. brought to the Old-Bailey, and arraign'd for High-Treaſon, in deſigning to raiſe a Rebellion, &c. and the ſame Morning was try'd. He deſir'd he might not be try'd that Day, for he had ſome Witneſſes which would not be in Town till Night: Which being deny'd, then he deſir'd that the Trial might be put off till the Afternoon; which was likewiſe deny'd. He ask'd whether he might not make uſe of any Papers he had; which was allow'd. He deſir'd he might have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury that was to paſs on him; he was told he had a Copy deliver'd to his Servant ſome Days before.

The Jury being call'd, he challeng'd the Foreman for being no Freeholder in London. To argue which, Counſel were aſſign'd him; who preſently came into the Court, and having excus'd their not ſpeaking more to the Matter, for want of time to conſider of it, argu'd, That it was a good Challenge, becauſe at common Law every Juryman ought to be a Freeholder; that the Statute of 2 Hen. V. provides none ſhall be a Juryman in capital Matters, but a Freeholder of Forty Shillings yearly: That there is no Difference between a City and County, and a County at large, at common Law; nor by that Statute 7 Hen. VII. which takes away the Challenge of no Freeholder in the Ward in London, and ſhews it was a good Challenge in London before that time: The 4th of Hen. VIII. which likewiſe takes away the Challenge of no Freehold in London, ſhews it was a good Challenge before that time; and the ſame was inferr'd from the 23d of Henry VIII: But though none of thoſe Statutes extended to Treaſon, yet if it was a good Challenge in Treaſon in London before thoſe Statutes, it was ſo ſtill.

The King's Counſel ſaid, at common Law it was not neceſſary that a Juryman in Treaſon, ſhould be a Freeholder; and though Treaſon is within the 2d of Henry the V, yet by the Statute of Queen Mary, the Statute of the 2d of Henry the Vth, as to Treaſon, was repeal'd; that it was a Point they would not have loſt to the City of London; that if the Priſoner ſhould peremptorily challenge Thirty-five, as by Law he might, there would ſcarce be found Thirty-five more Freeholders in the City, the Inheritance of the City being moſtly in the Nobility and Corporations, and conſequently Treaſons may be committed in the City, and there would not be enough to try it; and in the Caſe of the City of Worceſter, in Quo Warranto brought againſt them, that Challenge was taken and over-rul'd by the King's-Bench, by Advice of the Judges of the Common-Pleas; that the Venire mentions no Freehold, but only Probos & Legales Homines de Vicineto.

Then the * Chief Juſtice aſk'd Mr. Pollexfen, Whether he did find any Judgment in Treaſon at common Law, that no Freehold was a Challenge? Who anſwer'd, he did not. Whereupon the Chief Juſtice reply'd, That then he did not ſpeak ad idem; for he took it, in caſe of Treaſon and Felony, at common Law it was no Challenge; and the Statute of Henry the Fifth, in that Point, was introductive of a new Law, and that Statute, as to Treaſon, was repeal'd by that of Queen Mary; and that a Caſe cannot be found of ſuch a Challenge in Treaſon ſince the Statute of Queen Mary, but it was a Buſineſs of great Importance.

* Sir Francis Pemberton.

The * Chief Baron was of the ſame Opinion; for the ſame Reaſon, Juſtice Windham and Juſtice Jones were of the ſame Opinion; the laſt added, the rather becauſe the Priſoner is allow'd to challenge Thirty-five peremptorily: and Juſtice Carlton was of the ſame Opinion, and the rather, becauſe no Precedent had been offer'd of ſuch a Challenge before: Juſtice Levinz was of the ſame Opinion, for the ſame Reaſon: Juſtice Street was of the ſame Opinion, for the ſame Reaſons; and thought they had been very nice, when the Life of the King lay at ſtake, and all the Cuſtoms and Privileges of the City of London ſeem'd to be levell'd at in that point: Juſtice Withins was of the ſame Opinion.

* Will. Montague, Eſq;

Then the Chief Juſtice told the Priſoner, the Court over-rul'd his Challenge; but that he had no Hardſhip put upon him, for the Reaſon of Law for Freeholders was, that no ſlight Perſons ſhould be put upon the Jury; but in his Caſe there were Perſons of Quality and Subſtance put upon the Jury, which was the ſame in ſubſtance with a Jury of Freeholders.

Theſe being the Reaſons of over-ruling that Challenge, they may be ranked under theſe Heads: There was no ſuch Challenge at common Law; if there were, yet not in Treaſon. And if it were a Challenge in Treaſon, where a Trial is in a County at large, yet not where it is in a City and County; and if in a City and County, yet not in London.

The aſſigning many Reaſons for one and the ſame thing, makes the Judgment juſtly ſuſpected: for if when two Witneſſes to one Fact, varying in the Circumſtances of it, are juſtly ſuſpected in point of truth ſeveral Reaſons for the ſame Judgment make the Knowledge or Integrity of the Judges juſtly ſuſpected; every Caſe in Law, as my Lords Coke and Hale ſay, ſtanding upon its own particular Reaſon: and therefore when many Reaſons are given, it looks as if the Judges were hunting about for Reaſons to make good what beforehand they are reſolved to vent for Law, rather than that their Judgment is the Reſult of thoſe Reaſons.

But to conſider them ſingly, I do indeed think there is no expreſs Reſolution, that at common Law in any Caſe of any capital Matter, it was a good Challenge (except the Caſe of Fitzharris, already taken notice of) but in civil Matters my Lord Coke is expreſs, that at common Law it was a good Challenge; and with him Sir John Forteſcue ſeems to concur, who, in his Expoſition on that Statute of Henry the Vth, ſays, if the Debts or Damages be under Forty Marks, the Juryman ſhall have Land to a competent Value, according to the Diſcretion of the Juſtices. My Lord Coke ſaith, in ſuch Caſe any Freehold ſufficeth; now how can that be true, if it were not neceſſary at common Law to have ſome Freehold? For the Statute makes no Proviſion for Debt or Damages under Forty Marks. It muſt therefore be by common Law that ſome Freehold was neceſſary, and that any Freehold ſhall ſuffice. And ſurely, if in civil Matters it was neceſſary for a Juror to have a Freehold, much more in capital Matters, and moſtly in Treaſon. It is very plain, that at common Law no Man was thought to be a ſufficient Man, but a Freeholder; and tho' now, and for ſome time paſt, the Value of Trade is equal to that of Land, yet heretofore it was not ſo, and by what was heretofore, the common Law is to be known.

The matter of Trade was heretofore ſo inconſiderable, and the Traders themſelves for that Reaſon ſo vile, that it was a Diſparagement for a Freeholder to marry with a Tradeſman, as is to be ſeen by the Statute † Merton: and therefore mere Tradeſmen, and not Freeholders, were not to be truſted with the Concern of a Trial in a civil Matter, and much leſs in a Capital, and leaſt of all in a Trial of High-Treaſon.

The Chief Juſtice Pemberton ſays, that the Reaſon of Freeholders was, that no ſlight Perſons ſhould be put upon a Jury where the Life of a Man, or his Eſtate, is in queſtion; it is plain therefore, the Concern of the thing to be tried, is the meaſure of the Subſtance of the Juryman. If that be true, the Trial in Treaſon is of the higheſt Concern: How then is it true, as ſome of the Judges concluded, that tho' Freehold might be requiſite in ſome Caſes at common Law, yet in Treaſon certainly not? It is indeed a Paradox to me.

And the peremptory Challenge of Thirty-five allowed the Priſoner, is no Reaſon againſt the Challenge of no Freeholder; for that is only a Privilege allowed the Priſoner in favorem Vitæ; and it might as well be argued, that no Challenge at all to the Petty-Jury ſhall be allow'd the Priſoner, becauſe he had a Grand-Jury paſt upon him before, which is alſo in favorem Vitæ; that no Man, at the King's Suit, ſhall be ſo much as queſtion'd for his Life, till above the Number of Twelve ſubſtantial Men have on their Oaths ſaid they think the Accuſation true; and after that, he is allow'd to challenge peremptorily

peremptorily Thirty-five, and with Cauſe without number. To affirm therefore that no Freehold is not a Cauſe of Challenge, becauſe he may challenge peremptorily Thirty-five, is a non ſequitur: and though Non-uſage, that is to ſay, that this Challenge was never taken in Treaſon, was then us'd as an Argument, yet it is the weakeſt of Arguments which is to be found in Littleton; tho' even that Fact was not true, for the Challenge was taken and allow'd before; unleſs you will diſtinguiſh and ſay, that in that Caſe it was taken by the King, and therefore good, and in this by the Priſoner, and therefore bad. I'm ſure that difference cannot be warranted, either by Authority or Reaſon; and what though Cook, and the other Regicides, and other Perſons, did not take that Challenge, is it an Argument that they could not, or that they thought they could not? perhaps they had forgotten to do it, as much as the Judges in this Caſe had forgotten their Reſolution in Fitzharris's Caſe; or perhaps they could not take it, their Jury being Freeholders; or perhaps it was to no purpoſe, they being tried in Middleſex, where a Jury of Freeholders would quickly be found. Nor is it an Argument that no Caſe of this Challenge at common Law is to be found in the Books; for ſince the Statute of Henry the Fifth, to the time of Queen Mary, it could never be a Caſe; and from that time to this it could never be a Caſe in Felony: and the Law being ſo very plain, that if the Fact were with the Priſoner, it was always allowed; if againſt the Priſoner, it was diſallowed, not as not good in point of Law, but as not true in point of Fact; therefore the Challenge perhaps was not taken notice of in the Books, which only report Difficulties.

It is true of late, and it is but of late Practice, the whole Tranſactions of a Trial are publiſhed for the Benefit of the Publiſher, rather than for the common Good; and that indeed was the Motive of publiſhing Fitzharris's Trial ſigned by Fra. Pemberton, and of Colledge's Trial ſigned by Fra. North, and of my Lord Ruſſel's ſigned by William Pritchard, Mayor, and Col. Sidney's Trial ſigned by George Jefferies, and Mr. Corniſh's Trial ſigned by Thomas Jones. And that is the Reaſon why, ſince that Statute, we find no Caſe of ſuch a Challenge in capital Matters, and before that Statute the Year-Books go but a little way.

It is enough there was no Reſolution that it was not a good Challenge, for it will be of the King's ſide to ſhew why that ſhould not be a good Challenge in Treaſon, which was in moſt, if not in all other Caſes.

It is pretty to obſerve what Steps were made in over-ruling this Challenge: ſome were of Opinion that it was no Challenge in any Caſe at common Law; ſo ſaid the Attorney and Sollicitor-General, the Chief Baron, Juſtice Windham, and Baron Street. The Chief Juſtice thought it no Challenge at common Law in Treaſon or Felony only, but that the Statute of Henry the Fifth made it a Challege in Treaſon and Felony; but whether the Statute of Henry the Fifth made it a Challenge in Treaſon, the Chief Baron and Juſtice Windham doubted. Juſtice Jones thought it no Challenge at common Law in Treaſon; Juſtice Levinz would not determine whether it was a good Challenge in any Caſe at common Law, but he and Baron Street were clearly of Opinion it was not a good Challenge in London. The Chief Juſtice thought it a Buſineſs of great Conſequence, not only for the Priſoner, but for all other Perſons: Baron Street thought the Judges had been very nice in the matter, which, in the Phraſe of the Law, is giving themſelves a great deal of trouble in a matter very clear, or of no moment.

But though they differ'd in their Reaſons, yet all agreed in this, and in this only, that tried he ſhould be, and that preſently.

Then as for the Cuſtom of the City of London, to try without Freeholders, how did it appear to the Judges that there was any ſuch Cuſtom? Did they ever read of any ſuch Cuſtom in the City of London? Nay, were not the Statutes which were cited, where no Freehold was made no Challenge in London in particular Caſes, as ſo many expreſs Reſolutions, that there was no ſuch Cuſtom in the City? for if there had been ſuch Cuſtom, what need thoſe Statutes? To which the Judges never vouchſafed any Anſwer, becauſe in truth they could make none.

But it was objected, there was the Reſolution in the City of Worceſter's Caſe, which I agree was of as good Authority, and of no better, than the Judgment in the principal Matter of the Quo Warranto. And it was likewiſe objected, there would be a failure of Juſtice in Cities, if the Challenge were good for want of Freeholders.

I aſk, Would it have been a failure of Juſtice at common Law, or by reaſon of ſomewhat which hath happened of late Times? There is none who pretends to know any thing of the Hiſtory of England, that will ſay, that heretofore the Cities were not inhabited moſtly by the Gentry, and eſpecially the City of London; partly for Luxury, partly for their Security, and then there was no want of Freeholders in the Cities; but when matters became more quiet, and Trade increaſed, and made Houſes in the Cities more valuable, then were Houſes of equal Convenience, and leſs Price, ſituate in the Suburbs, or in the Country; the Gentry by degrees parted with their Houſes in the Cities to Tradeſmen for Profit, and remov'd themſelves to other Places. And I believe it may be remembred, that even the Strand, in the Memory of Man, could have furniſh'd the County of Middleſex with a ſufficient Number of Freeholders; and yet now, for the above Reaſons, you can hardly find a Jury of Freeholders there.

Beſides, it muſt be remembred, that London heretofore had many of the King's Palaces in it; and the Country Gentlemen did not then, as now, take up with Lodgings, but were Inhabitants of Houſes: and if the failure of Juſtice happen by the above means, I am ſure it is againſt the Oath of the Judges to ſupply that Defect with their Reſolution; but it ought to have been ſupplied by an Act of the Legiſlative Power.

If the Neceſſity of the Thing warrants the Judgment, how unlearned were the Judges in Henry the Seventh and Henry the Eighth's Times, that they did not ſupply the Defect in Law in the City of London, and other Cities, by their Reſolutions? How vain were the Parliaments in thoſe Times, who ſupplied thoſe Defects in Law, mentioned in the Acts cited by thoſe Statutes, which were Works of time and trouble, if they had thought the Judges, by their Reſolutions, had power to do it? for if they had power to do it, they could have done it extempore, as in this Caſe.

For the laſt Objection, that the Writ mentions only Probos & Legales Homines, and ſpeaks nothing of Freeholders; Legales may be very well interpreted, preted, to imply Men qualify'd by Law; but I take it, that Homines implies it: for by Homines de Comitatu are meant Freeholders of that County; and all others, in point of Truſt, are not conſider'd in Law. My Lord Coke, in his Comment upon the 28th of Eliz. 1. cap. 8. which gives the Election of Sheriffs to the People of the County where the Sheriffwick is not in Fee, ſays, People there, means Freeholders of the County; and the ſame is underſtood by Writs to the Counties to chooſe Coroners, Verdurers, and the like, though the Writ ſays, per communitatem Comitatus, & de aſſenſu Comitatus.

And tho' the Writs of Venire in civil Matters, of late Days, mention what Freehold each Juror ſhall have, yet that is by the Statute of the 35th of Hen. VIII. cap. 6. which expreſsly commands the Writ ſhall ſo expreſs it, in all Iſſues join'd in Weſtminſter, to be tried between Party and Party; before which time it is plain, the Venire, even in civil Matters, did not expreſs any Freehold, and that Statute doth not extend to Iſſues join'd on Indictments.

Now if upon all which hath been ſaid, it is not plain, that the Challenge ought to have been allow'd, yet ſure it was doubtful; and if ſo, and a matter of great Conſequence, as the Chief Juſtice ſaid it was, why might not the Counſel for the Priſoner have had a little more time to have conſider'd of the Challenge before they had argu'd it, or the Judges have taken a little time to conſider the Matter before they had given their Judgment? I dare ſay, none of them could remember any poſitive Reſolutions one way or other, nor upon a ſudden was it expected they ſhould; and therefore, for their own ſakes, if not for the Priſoner's, they might have taken the Morning, if not the Day. The Priſoner deſir'd his Trial to be put off, for to have conſider'd of it; in that time, perhaps, ſome of them might have remembred, or others might have put them in mind of their Reſolutions in Fitzharris's Caſe; they might have conſider'd how to diſtinguiſh between that Caſe and this, and not run away with it, that that Challenge was never made in Treaſon, as all the Judges affirm'd. But my Lord Ruſſel was told by the Court, that they always tried the Priſoner, in Treaſon, the Day he was arraign'd, and could not put off the Trial for a Morning, without the Attorney-General's Conſent; but ſurely that is not true, Plunket and Fitzharris were try'd the Term after they were arraign'd, though the Attorney-General oppos'd it. It is true, he ſubmitted to the Rule, as it was as much his Duty to do, as the Priſoner's; but if there be a difference between an Arraignment at Weſtminſter and the Old-Bailey, as to the ſpeeding the Trial, the Place will not vary the Reaſon of the thing, if there be not any Law for it, as there is not; but even at the Old-Bailey, the Trial in Treaſon hath been put off to another Seſſions, it was done in Whitebread's Caſe, and in many other Caſes. If it be ſaid that was by the Attorney-General's Conſent, I ſay that makes no difference; for the Judge is to be indifferent between the Attorney-General and the Priſoner. If the Court muſt order nothing but what the Attorney aſſents to, why is not the Priſoner try'd and judg'd by the Attorney alone? or what needs all the Formality of a Trial? If it be ſaid, that that Trial was put off, becauſe the King's Witneſſes were not ready; I ſay, there is the ſame Reaſon to put off a Trial, becauſe the Priſoner's Witneſſes are not ready, and that was the pretended, though not the true Reaſon of putting off Fitzharris's Trial to another Term, and there is no Law to the contrary.

It is totally in the Diſcretion of the Judges to put off a Trial; which Diſcretion ought to be govern'd by Reaſon.

But indeed this was extraordinary, and without any Precedent: it can never be ſhewn in the Caſe of the greateſt or meaneſt Perſons, being accus'd of the greateſt or leaſt Crime, that ever the delay of a Day, much leſs of a Morning, for his Trial, was deny'd, where he ſhew'd but any colour for what he ſaid, when the Seſſions were to continue after the time he deſir'd, as in this Caſe it did. Fitzharris ſaid his Witneſſes were in Holland, and though he nam'd no Perſons, yet his Trial was put off to the next Term; my Lord Ruſſel ſaid his Witneſſes could not be in Town till that Night, yet the reſpite till next Day was deny'd: all Perſons agreed, that there was ſome extraordinary Reaſon for it, and before the Trial was over, the Riddle was our.

My Lord of Eſſex was kill'd, or to be kill'd that Morning; as to this Matter, it is not material whether by his own or another's Hand: they were ſenſible the Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel was very defective, and that Accident was to help it out; but that would not avail, unleſs it were a ſurprizing Matter upon the Jury: ſhould the Jury have had a Day's, or but a Morning's time to conſider of it, People might have been talking with the Jury. It was very material to aſk, what Influence that Accident would have on my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, whether it was any Evidence againſt him: they might have been told what was true, that no Perſon kill'd, was in Law ſuppos'd to have kill'd himſelf, till a Coroner's Inqueſt had ſat upon the View of his Body, and found it ſo; and if it had been ſo found, yet even that had been no Evidence againſt another, becauſe the Coroner's Inqueſt never found the Reaſon why a Man kill'd himſelf; and if they ſhould find the Reaſon, yet even that was no Evidence againſt another, becauſe that other was never call'd before the Coroner's Inqueſt to make his Defence. They might have been told a great many Circumſtances of the Improbability of the killing himſelf; they might have obſerv'd that the King's Counſel were ſo far ſenſible, that it was no Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel, that they never attempted to prove the Earl of Eſſex was dead, or kill'd himſelf: it was only ſlily inſinuated, together with the Reaſon of it, which had its Effect, if the Report be true of ſome of the Jurymen's ſaying it went farther with them, than all the Evidence of the Witneſſes produc'd; and if that be true, there was a reaſon, tho' not a juſt one, for ſpeeding that Trial beyond the ordinary Methods of Trials at the Old-Bailey.

But tho' my Lord Ruſſel had ſeemingly leſs favour in that Matter than any other Perſon, even than Colledge, who had the reſpite of two or three Hours between his Arraignment and Trial, (tho' that was not in favour to Colledge, but only to examine his Papers which they took from him, and inſtruct their Witneſſes accordingly) yet in other things he had more Favour or Juſtice done him: his Papers were not taken from him; it was agreed to be his Right to uſe them without queſtioning from whom he had them, what they were, or the like, as in Colledge's Caſe was done; he had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury, even before his Arraignment, given him; and the Chief Juſtice ſaid it never was denied in Caſe of Life that he knew of, which was denied Colledge before he pleaded; becauſe then 'twas pretended there was no Iſſue join'd, till Plea pleaded, after which the Venire is awarded; tho' all Men know, that the Sheriff ſummon'd the Jury before the Arraignment, and even after Iſſue join'd. Colledge was denied a Copy of the Pannel, only he was told, he ſhould look every Juryman in the Face before he was ſworn; and as far as the Looks of a Man betray him, he ſhould be ſatisfy'd whether he was honeſt or not, which is an ill way of judging; for I think the Perſon * that gave that Rule, would have deceiv'd any Man by his Countenance, who had not known his Practices.

* Lord Chief Juſtice North.

But ſays the Attorney General †, in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe it was matter of Favour, and not of Right, therefore no Injuſtice to Colledge. I confeſs of all Men who ever came to the Bar, he hath laid down the moſt Rules, which depend totally upon the Authority of his own ſaying: in Colledge's Caſe he affirm'd, that the King's Witneſſes ought not to be kept out of the hearing of each other, when they gave their Evidence (a Method us'd in civil Matters, the Reaſon of which is well known, and none can ſhow any Law or Reaſon why it ſhould not be us'd in capital Matters) with as much Reaſon and Authority, as what is now ſaid.

† Sir Robert Sawyer.

Firſt, I do affirm there is no Authority in Law, which ſays a Priſoner ſhall not have a Copy of the Pannel; in the next Place I affirm, that after a Jury ſtruck in a civil Matter, each Party ought to have a Copy of the Pannel, in order to provide himſelf of a Challenge, if there be any Cauſe. In the laſt place, I affirm, that by Law, more Favour is allow'd a Defendant in a Capital Matter, to defend himſelf, than in a Civil. And if theſe Propoſitions be true, let any Perſon, if he can, make out the Law or Reaſon of the above Aſſertions.

Of a like Stamp was the Saying of the Attorney, when my Lord deſir'd a Copy of the Matter of Fact laid againſt him, that he had Notice of it; for Queſtions were put to him about it, and he was with his Lordſhip himſelf, and examin'd him upon thoſe Queſtions, which was a Favour to him, that he might know what the Matter was he was accus'd of.

I do not affirm that ever it was practis'd, to give the Priſoner a Note of the Fact, to be given in Evidence againſt him, proving Treaſon, or that it was ever denied till then, nor do I know of any Law pro or con in the Caſe; but if one would judge by Reaſon or Practice in parallel Caſes, I think it ought not to be deny'd.

I know not at preſent of more than two Sorts of general Indictments, and thoſe are of Treaſon and Barretry; the laſt is a general Indictment, for ſtirring up Suits without Reaſon, and without mentioning any Suit in particular: and therefore if by the Rule of the Court the Defendant was not help'd, which obliges the Proſecutor to give the Defendant, ſome reaſonable time before the Trial, a Note of what Suits he intends to give in Evidence againſt him, it was impoſſible for the Defendant to eſcape, if it had been his Misfortune to have had five or ſix Suits.

For I never yet ſaw a Witneſs produc'd againſt the Indicted, but he would ſwear the Indicted brought an Action againſt him without Reaſon; and yet I have often ſeen, that the Indicted having had notice, that that was one of the Suits he was intended to be charg'd with, hath been able to prove that he had good, or at leaſt probable Cauſe of Suit, which he could not have done if he had not notice. And in Treaſon, for deſigning to kill the King, there have been ſo many Interpretations of Facts tending that way that it is almoſt impoſſible for an Innocent to defend himſelf, unleſs he had notice of the Fact intended to be inſiſted on at the Trial.

There are yet ſome Expreſſions which mightily puzzle me: the King's Counſel ſaid in the Argument of the Challenge, that they would not have the Point of being a Juryman, tho' not a Freeholder, loſt to the City of London; and one of the Judges ſaid, 'twas the Privileges of the City were ſtruck at in that Point. If by thoſe Expreſſions be meant, that it is for the benefit of the Publick that there ſhould be no failure of Juſtice, I agree to it; but if it be meant that it is for the Benefit of the Citizens to be Jurymen, I deny it: and I think nothing ſhews it plainer, than that it is a Privilege that a Citizen ſhall not be drawn out of the City to be a Juryman; that a Nobleman ſhall not be on a Jury; that it is a Matter of Prerogative in the King, and Favour to a particular Perſon, to grant a Charter of Exemption from being on a Jury. So that, if I conſider the Law, I know what is meant by thoſe Expreſſions; if I conſider allow'd Practice, it is true, a Juryman may earn his Eightpence for a Trial; but that is too inconſiderable Pay for Perſons of Subſtance, as the Jurymen in this Caſe were ſaid to be, to be fond of the Employ, or to account it a Privilege. Yet even that was but in civil Matters; in criminal Matters not Capital, the Jury were heretofore paid if they acquitted the Defendant, but not if they found him guilty, tho' of late it hath been practis'd to give them more, and treat them higher if they convicted the Defendant, than if they acquitted him: But in capital Matters, as the Caſe in queſtion was, it was never allow'd, or at leaſt own'd, to pay the Jury, be the Verdict which way it would.

Having ſpoken to the Preliminaries, I proceed to the Trial, wherein Colonel Rumſey was firſt produc'd: he ſaid, he was ſent by my Lord Shafteſbury about the end of October, or beginning of November; who told him, he ſhould meet at one Sheppard's the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, to know of them what Reſolution they were come to about the Riſing of Taunton. Sheppard carry'd him where they were, and anſwer was made, Mr. Trenchard had fail'd them, and there would be no more done in the matter at that time; thereupon the Lord Shaftesbury took a Reſolution to be gone. Mr. Ferguſon ſpoke moſt of the Meſſage, and he thought the Lord Gray ſpoke ſomething to the ſame Purpoſe; he did not know how often he had been at that Houſe, he was there more than once, or elſe he heard Mr. Ferguſon make a Report of another Meeting to the Lord Shaftesbury, my Lord Ruſſel was in the Room, and that was all they ſaid at that time that he remembred, he was not there above a Quarter of an Hour. There was ſome Diſcourſe about ſeeing in what poſture the Guards at the Mews and Savoy were in by all the Company, to know how to ſurprize them if the Riſing had gone on; Sir Thomas Armſtrong and Mr. Ferguſon began, all debated it; he thought the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong were ſent to view them; the Riſing was appointed to be the 19th of November; he was ſpoke to by the Lord Shaftesbury to go to Briſtol if the Riſing had gone on, but in was Quality was not determin'd. The Lord Ruſſel agreed to the Debate. Being aſk'd if my Lord Ruſſel ſaid any thing there, and what; he anſwer'd, My Lord Ruſſel ſpoke about the Riſing at Taunton. Being aſk'd what my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, he anſwer'd, My Lord Ruſſel diſcourſed of the Riſing. Being aſk'd if my Lord gave his Conſent to the Riſing, he ſaid he did.

The next Witneſs was Mr. Sheppard, who ſaid, In October laſt, Mr. Ferguſon came to him in the Duke of Monmouth's Name, and deſir'd the Conveniency of his Houſe for himſelf and ſome Perſons of Quality, which he granted. In the Evening the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Gray, Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Colonel Rumſey, and Mr. Ferguſon came, not all together, but the one after the other. Sir Thomas Armſtrong deſir'd, that none of his Servants might come up, and that they might be private; ſo what they wanted he went down for, a Bottle of Wine, or ſo: the Subſtance of the Diſcourſe was, to ſurprize the King's Guards; and in order to it, the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, went one Night, as he remembred, to the Mews, or thereabouts, to ſee the Guards; and the next time they came to his Houſe, he heard Sir Thomas Armſtrong ſay, the Guards were very remiſs in their places, and not like Soldiers, and the thing was feaſible if they had but ſtrength to do it. He remembred but two Meetings there; they came in the Evening; he neither heard nor ſaw any Coaches at his Door: When they came in, as he remembred, the Lord Ruſſel was both times there; he had no Buſineſs with the Lord Ruſſel, nor the Lord Ruſſel with him at that time, but ſince he had. He did not remember Colonel Rumſey diſcours'd the Lord Ruſſel about any private Buſineſs, nor remember'd any farther Diſcourſe; he remember'd no Writings nor Papers read at that time: upon recollection, he remember'd one Paper read by Mr. Ferguſon, in the Nature of a Declaration, ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation, the Particulars he could not tell; it was a pretty large Paper, it was ſhew'd for Approbation, as he ſuppos'd, when to be ſet out was not diſcours'd; 'twas ſhew'd to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and, as he remember'd, the Duke of Monmouth was preſent, and he thought Colonel Rumſey was preſent. Colonel Rumſey ſaid, he was not preſent, it was done before he came. Mr. Sheppard went on and ſaid, the Deſign of the Paper was in order to a Riſing, as he ſuppos'd by the Purport of it; he would not ſay the Lord Ruſſel was there when that Paper was read, but he was there when the talk was about ſeizing the Guards; he could not be poſitive as to the Times of thoſe Meetings, but it was when the Lord Shaftesbury was abſent from his Houſe, he abſented about Michaelmas-Day; he could not be poſitive that my Lord Ruſſel was at both Meetings; he thought he was at both, he was ſure he was at one.

The laſt Witneſs was the Lord Howard. He ſaid he brought Captain Walcot acquainted with the Lord Shaftesbury; and upon his Account Captain Walcot ſoon gain'd a confidence with Lord Shaftesbury. Walcot told him, the People were ſenſible all their Intereſts were going to be loſt by the Violence offer'd to the City in the Election of Sheriffs, and that they were reſolv'd to take ſome Courſe to put a Stop to it: that there were ſeveral Meetings about it, and ſome Perſons began to prepare to act; that ſome had good Horſes, and kept them in private Stables, and he reſolv'd to be one in it: He having an Eſtate in Ireland, he diſpatch'd his Son thither, and order'd his Son to turn his Stock into Money; the Son went about Auguſt: That the 30th of September, Walcot din'd with him; told him, that the Lord Shaftesbury was ſecreted, and deſir'd to ſpeak with him: Walcot brought him to the Lord Shaftesbury, who complain'd of the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Ruſſel for deſerting him; but there was ſuch preparation made in London, that now he was able to do it of himſelf, and intended to do it ſuddenly; he had above 10000 briſk Boys ready to follow him when he held up his Finger, they would poſſeſs themſelves of the Gates, and in twenty-four Hours they would multiply to five times the Number, and would be able to poſſeſs Whitehall by beating the Guards. The Lord Howard went to the Duke of Monmouth, told him the Lord Shaftesbury's Complaint, who ſaid, the Lord Ruſſel and he told the Lord Shaftesbury from the beginning, that there was nothing to be done by them in the Country at that time. The Matter of the Diſcourſe between him and the Duke of Monmouth, him and the Lord Shaftesbury, and him and Walcot, is too tedious to relate, and as little to the purpoſe, if the Jury had underſtood Matter of Law, which they did not; in it he takes care to ſhew what Confidence my Lord Shaftesbury had in him, more than in the Duke of Monmouth or the Lord Ruſſel; how very cautious he was, and how precipitate the Lord Shaftesbury was, and that what he told the Duke of Monmouth, the Duke told the Lord Ruſſel; and he heard the Lord Ruſſel had been with the Lord Shaftesbury, and put off the intended Riſing. At which the Lord Ruſſel interrupted him, and ſaid, he thought he had very hard meaſure, there was a great deal of Evidence given by hear-ſay only. Whereupon the Chief Juſtice ſaid, it was nothing againſt the Priſoner; he declar'd it to the Jury, but the Attorney-General bid the Lord Howard go on in the Method of Time, and that it was nothing againſt the Priſoner, but the Witneſſes were coming to it, if his Lordſhip would have patience, he aſſur'd him ſo. The Lord Howard went on where he left off, with a Story between him and Walcot of an intended Riſing, and of ſome dark Sayings let fall by Walcot and the Lord Gray, importing a Deſign upon the King's Perſon; but the Lord Howard was very careful to put all off, but at laſt it was reſolv'd to riſe on the 17th of November: But the Lord Howard fearing it had been diſcover'd, becauſe he ſaw a Proclamation a little before, forbidding Bonefires without the Lord Mayor's leave, that of the 17th of November was alſo diſappointed, and the Lord Shaftesbury went away and died. But conſidering they had gone ſo far that it was not ſafe to retreat, and likewiſe that ſo great an Affair as that, conſiſting of ſuch infinite Particulars, was to be manag'd with ſo much Fineſſe, they erected a Cabal of ſix Perſons, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord of Eſſex, Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Hampden, Algernon Sidney, and himſelf, about the middle of January laſt; and about that time they met at Mr. Hampden's Houſe, where it was conſider'd whether the Inſurrection ſhould be in London, or in a Place diſtant; what Countries and Towns were fitteſt and moſt diſpos'd to Action; what Arms neceſſary to be provided; how to raiſe twenty-five or thirty thouſand Pounds, and how they might ſo order it as to draw Scotland into a Conſent with them.

About ten days after they met at the Lord Ruſſel's Houſe, and reſolv'd to ſend ſome Perſons into Scotland land to the Lord Argyle, to invite ſome Perſons hither to give an Account of that Kingdom; the Perſons to be invited were Sir John Cockram, Lord Melvil, Sir Campbel; that Matter was referred to Col. Sidney, who told him he had ſent Aaron Smith; they agreed not to meet again till the return of the Meſſenger. The Meſſnger was gone about a Month, it was ſix Weeks or more before he returned, and then his Lordſhip was forced to go into Eſſex, where he had a ſmall Concern; there he ſtaid three Weeks, and when he returned, he was informed Sir John Cockram was come to Town, and afterwards he was forced to go to the Bath, where he ſpent five Weeks; and from that time to this was five Weeks, all which time was a Parentheſis to him; and that he and the five mentioned erected themſelves by mutual Agreement into that Society.

Atterbury ſwore Campbel was in his Cuſtody: then Colonel Rumſey was aſked, whether my Lord Ruſſel heard him when he delivered his Meſſage to the Company, and in what place of the Room the Company were: who anſwered, that when he came in, they were ſtanding by the Fire-ſide, but all came from thence to hear him; and when my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, Colonel Rumſey was there when he came in, Rumſey ſaid, No, the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Ruſſel went away together.

Then in behalf of my Lord Ruſſel, the Earl of Angleſey was examined, who ſaid, that viſiting the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Howard came in, and told the Earl of Bedford, that his Son could not be in ſuch a Plot, or ſuſpected of it, and that he knew nothing againſt the Lord Ruſſel, or any body elſe, of ſuch a barbarous Deſign: And he was going on again with what the Lady Chaworth had told him, but was interrupted by the King's Counſel, telling him, as the Court would not permit them to give Hear-ſay in Evidence againſt the Priſoner, ſo they muſt not permit his Lordſhip to give Hear-ſay in Evidence for the Priſoner.

Mr. Howard ſaid, that the Lord Howard took it upon his Honour, and his Faith, he knew nothing of any Perſon concerned in that Buſineſs, and not only thought my Lord Ruſſel unjuſtly ſuffered, but he took God and Man to witneſs, he thought my Lord Ruſſel the worthieſt Man in the World.

Dr. Burnet ſaid, the Lord Howard was with him, and he did then, as he had done before, with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, declare, he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believed any, and treated it with great Scorn and Contempt.

The Lord Cavendiſh teſtified as to the Life and Converſation of the Lord Ruſſel, and thence concluded, it was not likely he ſhould be guilty of any ſuch Matter, and heard the Lord Ruſſel ſpeak of Rumſey, as if he had an ill Opinion of him, and therefore it was not likely he ſhould truſt him. Dr. Tillotſon ſpoke of his Converſation; Dr. Burnet and Dr. Cox ſpoke of his Converſation, and of his Averſeneſs to all Riſings. Dr. Cox teſtified, that my Lord Ruſſel ſaid the Lord Howard was a Man of luxuriant Parts, but he had the luck not to be truſted by any Party. The Duke of Somerſet ſpoke of the Lord Ruſſel's Converſation. The Lord Clifford, Mr. Leveſon Gower, Mr. Spencer, and Dr. Fitzwilliams ſpoke of the Lord Ruſſel's Converſation. The Lord Howard being aſked by the Jury what he ſaid to the Earl of Angleſey's Evidence, owned what the Earl ſaid, but he did it to outface the Matter; and if he ſaid untrue, he ought not to be believed on his Oath, and inſinuated, that he meant what he ſaid to be meant of a Deſign of murdering the King, which he did not believe the Duke of Monmouth or the Lord Ruſſel guilty of.

This being the Sum of the Evidence given againſt, or for my Lord Ruſſel, let us conſider how far it will juſtify the Verdict given againſt him: firſt, conſider the Improbability of Rumſey's Evidence, if my Lord Cavendiſh ſaid true, that he ſhould truſt Rumſey to hear the Debate about ſeizing the Guards, when the Lord Ruſſel had an ill Opinion of Rumſey. As for Rumſey's delivering the Meſſage, there was no great Matter in that, it is impoſſible to hinder Peoples ſpeaking, and it is not Treaſon to conceal what's ſaid; beſides it was well known, it was Rumſey's way to talk extravagantly, in order to accuſe thoſe that heard him, if they did not diſcover it. But beſides the Improbability of the Evidence in reſpect of the Perſon, the manner of delivering the Evidence, and the Evidence itſelf was ſuch as carried no Colour of Truth with it: he ſaid he delivered his Meſſage, and had an Anſwer to it, and being aſked what the Company ſaid further, anſwered, that was all that was ſaid at that time, that he remembered, and gives a very good Reaſon for it, for he ſtaid not above a quarter of an Hour; and added, that he was not certain whether he then heard ſomething of a Declaration there, or whether Mr. Ferguſon reported it to my Lord Shafteſbury, that they had debated it: and yet when Sheppard ſaid Rumſey was there when the Declaration was read, he denied it, and ſaid it was read before he came in. Being aſked to what the Declaration tended, he anſwered to another matter, viz. that there was ſome Diſcourſe about ſeeing what poſture the Guards were in, and ſaid, that all the Company debated it; and being drawn on by Queſtions, ſaid, it was in order to ſeize the Guards, if the Riſing had gone on. Now how doth that part of the Evidence agree with what he ſaid before, that there was nothing more ſaid than the delivering his Meſſage, and the Anſwer to it? And how doth it agree with the time he ſaid he ſtaid, which was not above a quarter of an Hour? Whereas that Debate, if all the Perſons preſent (being ſix) debated it, as he ſaid they did, would certainly have taken up a larger time. How does the firſt and laſt part of his Evidence agree, when he ſaid, my Lord Ruſſel agreed to the Anſwer of his Meſſage? And being aſked whether and what he ſpoke to it, ſaid, he ſpoke about the Riſing at Taunton, but doth not ſay what; and yet in the firſt part of his Evidence, he ſaid, when aſked who ſent the Meſſage back, Mr. Ferguſon delivered the Anſwer, the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Ruſſel were preſent, and he thought the Lord Grey ſaid ſomething to the ſame purpoſe. But what Credit could be given to any part of a Man's Evidence, whoſe Memory was ſo ſhallow, that he could not remember whether he was at two Meetings, or whether Mr. Ferguſon related one of them to the Lord Shafteſbury? Yet both were ſuppoſed to be within the Compaſs of a Year, whereas a Man of Senſe is ſuppoſed to remember all his own Acts for ſeven Years paſt, which is the Reaſon why the Chancery obliges a Man to anſwer as to his own Acts poſitively for ſeven Years, without ſaying, as he believeth, or as he remembereth, or the like. What Credit is to be given to a Witneſs who teſtifieth what was ſaid in Company, and by whom, when his Memory doth not ſerve to anſwer poſitively, whether he was in the Company, or whether another told him what was there ſaid? He might as well well have ſaid he was there, or dreamt he was there, or that he heard the Diſcourſe or dreamt of it, which had carried equal Credit with it.

It was plain, the Man was not of ſane Memory enough to make a Will, much leſs to be a Witneſs in the Trial of a Man's Life; and nothing can be ſaid for him, but that he was a Witneſs for the King, that is to ſay, a mad Man may be a Witneſs to take away a Man's Life, which is as good Law as a great deal of other Cant vented as a part of the Prerogative.

It is true, one of the King's Counſel recommends Rumſey to the Jury, as a very credible Witneſs under the Notion of an unwilling Witneſs: but had the ſame Perſon been a Counſel for the Priſoner, he would have called Rumſey a dancing Witneſs, for he ſaid backwards and forwards; and an amazed Witneſs, for being aſked one thing, he anſwered another; being aſked as to the Declaration, he anſwered to the ſeizing of the Guards; being aſked whether my Lord Ruſſel aſſented to the Anſwer of the Meſſage, he replied, yes, becauſe he talked of the Riſing, &c. which might be as well againſt as for it.

Sheppard's Evidence was to the Deſign of ſeizing the Guards; and as to the Declaration, he remember'd but two Meetings, at both which he ſaid, as he remembered, my Lord Ruſſel was preſent, but he could not be poſitive in that, and the times of the Meetings he did not remember: he ſaid, the Subſtance of the Diſcourſe was, how to ſurprize the King's Guards; and that the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong went to ſee the Guards, as he remembered; and the next time they came to the Houſe, Sir Thomas Armſtrong ſaid the Guards were very remiſs, &c. Taking this Evidence by itſelf, without tacking Rumſey's Evidence to it, it was ſo far from being Evidence of Treaſon, that it was no Crime; for he doth not ſay, it was intended to be put in practice, notwithſtanding all ſaid by him: both the Diſcourſes and Perſons viewing the Guards, (which laſt was not Evidence, nor ought to have been given in Evidence) might be a Matter to try each other's Judgments, as well as an Evidence of a thing deſigned: and if it be capable of two Interpretations, the Law hath ſaid, it ſhall be taken in mitiore ſenſu, in favour of Life. That diſtinction was taken by the Chief Juſtice in Blague's Caſe, the Day after this Trial, where the Evidence againſt him was a Diſcourſe about taking the Tower, as high a Crime as ſeizing the Guards; and upon that Blague was acquitted. It is true, Rumſey ſaid it was in order to be put in practice, when the Riſing ſhould be in the Country, but that he did not ſay at firſt; but was afterwards led to it by Queſtions: nor did he ſpeak it as a thing at that or any other time determined, but as his own ſurmiſe or gueſs, becauſe he knew of an intended Riſing; yet how fooliſhly did he contradict himſelf? For, ſays Rumſey, it was to have been put in practice, if the intended Riſing had gone on; and yet at the ſame Meeting he had ſaid before, the Riſing was put off: how contradictory therefore is it to ſay they made Preparations for a thing they had laid aſide before? And it is plain Sheppard ſpeaks of the ſame time; for both agree Rumſey was at that Meeting, though they do not agree how ſoon he came: beſides, how could Sheppard ſpeak poſitively of the Diſcourſe, or of the Deſign of it, when he owns he did not hear all their Diſcourſe, and gives a very good Reaſon for it? For he ſaid he went ſeveral times down to fetch Wine, Sugar, and Nutmeg, and did not know what was ſaid in his Abſence: he ſaid he heard nothing about a Reſing, nor heard any further Diſcourſe; but on recollection, he heard ſomething about a Declaration of Grievances in order to a Riſing, as he ſuppoſed; the Particulars he could not tell. Now what ſort of Evidence was that? In all civil Matters, a Witneſs ſhall not be permitted to give Evidence of the Content of a Deed or Writing, with producing the Deed or Writing itſelf, or a true Copy of it, and upon very good Reaſon; for he may make an untrue Conſtruction of it. I remember a Witneſs who ſwore to the Content of a Deed of Intail; and being aſked, whether he knew a Deed of Intail, and by what he knew the Deed he ſpoke of to be a Deed of Intail, anſwered, he knew a tailed Deed very well, and he knew the Deed to be a tailed Deed, becauſe it had a Tail half as long as his Arm, meaning the Label of the Deed. And if this be the Practice, and the Reaſon of the Practice, in civil Matters, ſhew me any Authority or Reaſon any thing ſhould be permitted to be given in Evidence in Treaſon, which is not permitted to be given in Evidence in the Trial of any civil Matter.

If you ſay, as Juſtice Levinz ſaid in a like Caſe in Colledge's Trial, that it would be the difficulteſt thing in the World to prove Treaſon againſt a Man, if the Law were not ſo, and the King would in no ſort be ſafe; on the other Hand, I ſay as Colledge there ſaid, if the Law ſhould be ſo, no private Perſon is ſafe: and if there be Miſchief of either Hand, the Law is and muſt be Judge, which hath taken care (though to no purpoſe, becauſe it hath not been obſerved) that there ſhould be a ſtricter Proof in Treaſon than in any civil Matter, or in any other Crime: and how the Judges came to permit that looſe Evidence in Treaſon to be given, which of late Years they have done, no juſt or honeſt Account can be given.

The laſt material Witneſs againſt my Lord Ruſſel, was my Lord Howard, (as for Atterbury's Evidence, it ought not to have been permitted to be given, as ſhall be ſhewn, nor was it material) to no part of whoſe Evidence any Credit ought to be given, even by his own Confeſſion: he was ſurely in the right, when he ſaid that the Religion of an Oath is not tied to a Place; and I'll add, not to a Form, but receives its Obligation from the Appeal therein made to God: and therefore if he ſaid (though I own he was not bound to ſay it) to the Earl of Bedford, Mr. Howard, and Dr. Burnet, what was teſtified againſt him, he ought not to be believed in any part of his Evidence. Did he ſay true to my Lord Bedford, when unſent for and unaſked, (for ought appears after my Lord Ruſſel was clapt into the Tower) that ſure his Son could never be in any ſuch Plot as that, or ſuſpected for it, and that he knew nothing againſt him, or any body elſe, of ſuch a barbarous Deſign; and yet he knew, if he ſwore true, that my Lord Ruſſel was guilty of ſuch a barbarous Deſign, that nothing but the Lord Howard's Duty to God, the King, and the Country, could prevail with him to give it in Evidence againſt a Perſon for whom he had ſo great an Affection as he had for my Lord Ruſſel. How was it conſiſtent with the truth of his Evidence, what he ſaid to Mr. Howard, that he knew nothing of any Man's being concerned in that buſineſs, and particularly of my Lord Ruſſel, whom whom he highly commended, and ſaid, he thought the Lord Ruſſel unjuſtly ſuffered; or with what he ſaid to Dr. Burnet with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, which is as much an Appeal to God as may be, that he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believed any? It was an idle Evaſion to ſay, when he ſpoke of my Lord Ruſſel, he meant my Lord Ruſſel was not guilty of the Deſign of murdering the King, (for which that Man, as he ſaid, was committed, meaning Walcot, the Lord Ruſſel, or any other Perſon) for he is ſtill at liberty to explain himſelf, and I am apt to think they were all committed by Warrants of the ſame Form. I know not how dextrous he is at paring an Apple, but he muſt be an excellent Logician that can reconcile the Truth of his Evidence and Sayings. The Truth is, a Man that has thoſe Niceties in his Head ought to have no Credit; for no Man knows whether he underſtands what he ſays aright, and I am apt to think his Lordſhip could ſhew, that he did not intend what he ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Trial in the Senſe it was underſtood by the Court or Jury. To ſay, that he was to out-face the thing for himſelf and his Party, was as vain; (for beſides that I think he was of no Party, becauſe, as my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, he had the Luck to be truſted by none) where was the Senſe of making thoſe Proteſtations to Perſons who could do him no good, and would do him no harm, both which my Lord Pemberton could; and therefore 'twas not alike? It is true, the Attorney-General commends the Lord Howard as a Perſon of great Credit amongſt the Party, and inſinuates the Lord Grey was left out of the Cabal for his Immorality, and the Lord Howard was taken in his place. But to paſs from the General of his Evidence to the Particulars of it, for about two Leaves in the Print of it; it is a Diſcourſe between my Lord Shafteſbury and him, wherein he makes my Lord Shafteſbury have a wonderful Confidence in him, and diſcovers all the Deſign to him, and what number of Men he had at command; but who they were or what they were, was never yet diſcovered, and yet the Lord Howard had not at that time been concerned in the Matter, nor did then aſſent: he very prudently was reſolved to ſee whether it was likely to take effect or not, before he would enter on it. It was indeed a Matter of great wonder to thoſe who knew my Lord Shafteſbury, and knew what Opinion he had of the Lord Howard, from the time he diſcovered that the Lord Howard frequented the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, which was before Fitzharris's Trial, (though after that Trial the Matter was publickly owned, which was before ſuſpected by moſt, known to the Lord Shafteſbury) that he ſhould ſo readily truſt the Lord Howard with the Secret, who was unconcern'd in the Management before, as he ſays himſelf, and yet ſecreted himſelf from the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Ruſſel, who were equally guilty, if what was ſworn was true. I cannot but obſerve, that in all the time of the Lord Shafteſbury, the Lord Howard was no otherwiſe concerned in the pretended Deſign, but in raiſing Difficulties, and being in great fear leaſt there ſhould be a Riſing or an Attempt upon the King's Perſon: and if he ſaid true, he was the Man that put off the intended Riſings, and likewiſe the intended Deſign on the King's Perſon; inſomuch, that I think he was ſo far from ſtanding in need of a Pardon for Treaſon, that he deſerved a conſiderable Reward, if it were for nothing elſe than for his fearing the Deſign was diſcovered by the the Proclamation againſt Bone-fires, which, as he ſaid, put off the Riſing intended to be the 17th of November; and yet he and others being afraid, the middle of January they erected themſelves into a Cabal of ſix Perſons, of which there is but one Perſon in all his Narrative he pretends to have ſpoken to about that Matter before, which is the Duke of Monmouth, and but one more he pretends even by hearſay to be concerned in it before, which is my Lord Ruſſel. How improbable therefore was it, that thoſe ſix Perſons ſhould, as it were in ſight, put themſelves upon ſuch a dangerous Deſign, eſpecially conſidering the Reaſon he gives for it, which was their Fears, that what had been tranſacted was, or might be diſcover'd? This likewiſe is obſervable, that from the 30th of September, the time the Sheriffs entred upon their Office, to the 17th of November following, he is very exact as to the time of each Matter, when there was no Perſon could contradict him; for my Lord Shafteſbury was dead, Walcot was convicted, and the Duke of Monmouth was gone, who are all the Perſons mentioned to be concerned in that time: yet when he comes to ſpeak of the Matter in which my Lord Ruſſel was concerned, then he ſays it was about the middle of January, about ten Days after, about ſix Weeks after, about three Weeks, and five Weeks; for had he been preciſe in the times, he might have been diſproved in the Meetings he gave Evidence of: and it was much his Memory is ſo very good as to the former times, to be ſo very preciſe in them as he was, and ſo very defective in the latter times; and yet thoſe times do not make up the ſpace between the middle of January, and the time of the Trial, by many Weeks, unleſs you will give large Allowances to the Word about; an Exception which was taken to Mowbray's Evidence, though he rectify'd it by his Account in his Almanack; but it would not be admitted, though Colledge very ſenſibly deſired of the Court, for Juſtice ſake to look on the Almanack, to ſee whether it was newly writ, as if done for that purpoſe.

Beſides the Improbability, if ſuch a thing was in hand, as the Lord Howard pretended, for him to run into the Country, and then to the Bath, when the Matter was juſt come to a Criſis, as it were, ſhews him, if he ſwore true, rather a Madman than a Traitor.

But the Uſage of the King's Counſel and the Court towards the Priſoner, was very unjuſt and unfair; they permitted my Lord Howard to go on with a long Story of him and my Lord Shafteſbury, at which, when my Lord Ruſſel took Exceptions, the Chief Juſtice, it is true, ſaid it was no Evidence; yet the Attorney-General bidding him go on in the Method of time, he went on where he left off, intermixing Stories of Deſigns, and of Attempts by other Perſons upon the King's Perſon, to exaſperate the Jury, as my Lord Ruſſel ſaid rightly, againſt him; a thing which no Counſel durſt have done, and no Court would have ſuffered in any other Caſe, nor even in that would the Court or Counſel ſuffer it for the Priſoner. How was my Lord Angleſey check'd when he began to tell what my Lady Chaworth ſaid, and Mr. Edward Howard when he did not ſpeak of his own Knowledge! How unjuſt was it for the King's Counſel to repeat all the Evidence the Lord Howard gave, when they ſumm'd it up, even that which the Court told them before was not Evidence! How unjuſt was the inſinuating of the Death of my Lord of Eſſex, as Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel! And why did not the Court in ſumming up the Evidence take notice of the Liberty the Witneſſes and Counſel had taken, and have told them what was not Evidence? No other Reaſon can be given than what Colledge ſaid at his Trial, upon his Obſervation of Fitzharris's buſineſs and his own, that the Matter was not to ſtop at him.

Remarks on Colonel Sidney's Trial.

THE Lord Ruſſel being executed, and the ſame Day, what was called his Speech being publiſhed, than which, nothing in Print was ſo eagerly accepted or ſought after, which ſhewed the Inclination of the People, there was ſome reſpite for quieting the Minds of the People; but it was not to ſtop there, as Colledge ſaid, and therefore Colonel Sidney (who was talked to death under the Notion of a Commonwealth's-man) was the 7th of November, 1683, brought to Weſtminſter to be arraigned on an Indictment of High-Treaſon. The Indictment at the time he came to the Hall, was ſo far from being found by the Grand Jury, that it was not ſo much as preſented to them; but the King's Counſel, who had pack'd the Jury, knew well enough that it would be accepted, that is, found upon ſight by the Jury, without any Conſideration, which was accordingly done, and Colonel Sidney thereupon arraigned. The Indictment was for deſigning to depoſe the King, and to perſuade the King's Subjects to rebel; and that he did write a certain Libel wherein it was contain'd, that he (meaning King Charles the Second) is ſubject to the Law of God, as he is a Man; to the People who made him ſuch, as a King, &c. To which Indictment he would have put in ſome Exceptions, expreſt in a Parchment in his Hand, but was told by the Court he muſt either plead or demur, and upon no other terms Exceptions could or ought to be admitted; after which he pleaded Not Guilty.

The 21ſt of November he was try'd, at which time he inſiſted to have a Copy of his Indictment, as he had done when he was arraigned; but was both times denied. The firſt Witneſs againſt the Priſoner was Mr. Weſt, againſt whom Col. Sidney objected, becauſe he was not pardoned; but it was anſwered by the Court, that he was a good Witneſs in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, and therefore ſhould be in that. Then Colonel Sidney deſired Mr. Weſt might ſpeak nothing but what he knew of Colonel Sidney; but was anſwered by the Court, he might give Evidence of a Plot in general, tho' Colonel Sidney was not concerned it; and it was called Sir William Jones's Law. Then Mr. Weſt went on, and gave Evidence of what Colonel Rumſey, Mr. Nelthorp, and Mr. Ferguſon told him of Colonel Sidney; but of his own Knowledge he could not ſay any thing of the Priſoner. Rumſey gave a like Evidence he had done in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, with an addition of what Mr. Weſt and Mr. Goodenough told him. Keeling gave Evidence of what Goodenough told him, all which the Court agreed was no Evidence againſt the Priſoner. Then the Lord Howard gave the like Evidence, from the middle of January to that time, as he had done in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, ſaving that he ſaid the Earl of Saliſbury was brought into the Cabal, who was not mentioned before; and ſave that he ſaid the meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's was about a Fortnight or three Weeks after the meeting at Mr. Hampden's; whereas in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, he ſays it was about ten Days after the meeting at Mr. Hampden's Houſe: and here he makes two notable Speeches for Mr. Hampden at the opening of the Conſult, both which he had forgotten at my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, nor could remember at Mr. Hampden's Trial, tho' in the laſt he was led by a great many Queſtions to put him in mind of them. After his Evidence given, Colonel Sidney was aſk'd whether he would aſk the Witneſs any Queſtions, who anſwered, he had no Queſtions to aſk him; whereupon the Attorney-General ſaid, Silence—— You know the Proverb.

The Record of the Lord Ruſſel's Conviction and Attainder was given in Evidence. Sir Andrew Foſter ſwore Sir John Cockram, and the two Campbells came to London. Sir Philip Floyd proved the ſeizing of ſome Papers in the Priſoner's Houſe, and he did believe the Papers ſhewn in Court to be ſome of them. Sheppard, Cary, and Cook ſwore the Writing produced was like the Priſoner's Hand-writing. The Attorney-General deſired ſome part of the Writing ſhould be read; the Priſoner deſired all of it might be read, but was anſwered by the Court, that the Attorney muſt have what part of it he would to be read, and afterwards the Priſoner ſhould have what part of it he would to be read; but he perſiſted to deſire all of it ſhould be read. Then the Writing was read (which was plainly an Anſwer to a Book, but what Book, was not mentioned) in which the Right of the People was aſſerted. The Earl of Angleſea gave the ſame Evidence for the Priſoner, of the Lord Howard's ſpeaking of my Lord Ruſſel, and the Plot, as he had done in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial. The Earl of Clare ſaid that the Lord Howard, after Colonel Sidney's Impriſonment, ſaid, if he was queſtioned again, he would never plead; the quickeſt diſpatch was the beſt, he was ſure they would have his Life; and ſpeaking of the Primate of Armagh's Prophecy, he ſaid, the Perſecution was begun, and he believed it would be very ſharp, but hoped it would be ſhort; and ſaid, he thought Colonel Sidney as innocent as any Man breathing, gave him great Encomiums, and bemoaned his Misfortunes; and as for Col. Sidney's Papers, he ſaid, he was ſure they could make nothing of them. Mr. Philip Howard ſaid, the Lord Howard ſaid it was a Sham-plot; Dr. Burnet gave the ſame Evidence as he did in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial. Mr. Lucas gave Evidence, that the Lord Howard ſaid he knew nothing of Col. Sidney's being in any Plot. The Lord Paget gave Evidence to the ſame purpoſe. Mr. Edward Howward gave Evidence to the ſame purpoſe. Tracy and Penwick gave Evidence to the ſame purpoſe. Mr. Blake teſtified, that the Lord Howard ſaid he had not his Pardon, and could not aſcribe it to any other Reaſon, than that he muſt not have it till the Drudgery of ſwearing was over. Now to review what what hath been ſaid, it is ſtrange to ſee what a Progreſs was made in the Reſolutions of Points of Law, to take away a Man's Life; ſo ſay it in Col. Sidney's Words, as if the Court and Counſel thought it their Duty to take away a Man's Life any how. Mr. Weſt, and ſeveral others, are admitted to give Evidence by hear-ſay againſt the Priſoner, and their Evidence ſummed up, and urged as Evidence to the Jury; and the Reaſon given for it was, that he was admitted a good Witneſs of a like matter, in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial; which, beſides that it was not true, for it was rejected in that Trial, as it appears it was in the print, yet if he had been admitted, of no Authority, as Colonel Sidney ſaid, becauſe, perhaps, he was not excepted to. Of a like ſtamp is the Evidence of the Conviction of the Lord Ruſſel; tho' I agree the Lord Ruſſel's Conviction was as good Evidence againſt Colonel Sidney, as the Earl of Eſſex's Murder was againſt my Lord Ruſſel, and no better. The ſame may be ſaid of Rumſey, Keeling, Forſter, and Atterbury's Evidence. Againſt the Lord Howard's Evidence there were the ſame Objections as in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, with the addition of ſeveral other Perſons teſtifying he ſaid he knew not, nor believed any thing of the Matter; and that he could not have his Pardon, till he ſwore others out of their Lives, which in truth was the Senſe of his Expreſſions.

The King's Counſel indeed had thought of ſomething ſince the Trial of my Lord Ruſſel, to palliate the matter of the Lord Howard's Sayings. (for they lean'd hard upon his Reputation, and look'd as if he would perjure himſelf at the Expence of ſome Perſons Lives, as his Words are in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial) Would you, ſay they, have had him confeſs'd the matter to thoſe Perſons to whom he had deny'd it?

I think there is a difference between confeſſing and denying: Who aſk'd him the Queſtion? What did it avail him to deny it to the Perſons teſtifying againſt him? and therefore when he voluntarily ſaid a thing untrue, unaſked, not provoked or compelled to do it, and which could do him no good, it was good Evidence of his untruth, and that no credit ought to be given to what he ſwore.

As for the laſt part of the Evidence, which was about the Writing, both the Indictment and the Evidence was defective.

As for the Evidence, if the Subject-Matter of the Writing had been Evidence of Treaſon, the Indictment ought to have expreſs'd that he publiſh'd it, which the Indictment in this caſe did not; and upon good Reaſon, which was, that the Jury might be put in mind, that the publiſhing of it was neceſſary to make it known; whereas they very well knew that the Evidence would not, nor did come up to it. This was the firſt Indictment of High-Treaſon, upon which any Man loſt his Life, for writing any thing without publiſhing it; * for in Fitzharris's Indictment, he was charged with publiſhing his Libel; and ſo in all other Indictments for Writing, and upon good reaſon: for this being made an Overt-Act of Treaſon, it muſt be an Evidence of a Deſign to kill or depoſe the King, or the like; and as the Conſequence of what the Writing contain'd, which was, that the Power was in the People, &c. being in its nature no other, nor urged by the King's Counſel to any other Intent than to corrupt the Subjects Minds, could not be Evidence of ſuch matter, unleſs proved he had writ and publiſhed it, whereof the laſt was not pretended to be proved.

That it was neceſſary to be expreſs'd in the Indictment, and proved at the Trial, appears by the Reſolution of all the Judges of England in Hugh Pine's Caſe, reported in Cro. Car. fol. 117. at a time when Prerogative run pretty high; wherein, beſides the Reſolution that no Words charging the King with any perſonal Vice, was Treaſon, there is the Caſe of one Peacham, in the 33d of Henry the Eighth, cited, who was indicted for Treaſon, for treaſonable Paſſages in a Sermon never preached, nor intended to be preached, but found in Writing in his Study; he was found guilty, but never executed; for many Judges at that time were of Opinion it was not Treaſon, as the Book ſays: which I think, according to the Evidence here given, was the expreſs Caſe of Colonel Sidney, admitting he writ the Book produced, and that the Paſſages in it were treaſonable.

And as this Indictment was an Original in the particular before-mentioned, ſo it was a ſecond of an Innuendo Indictment of Treaſon; Fitzharris was the firſt. The Proſecution againſt Car, as I remember, was an Information, and Judgment arreſted after a Verdict, becauſe it was by Innuendo, of which no Precedent could be produc'd; and although in Actions for Words it was permitted, yet in Criminal Matters, being penal, it was reſolv'd it ought not to be permitted, and certainly much leſs in Treaſon: and as this Indictment was an Original in one part, and a ſecond in another, the Evidence on it was an Original in another part, which was proving the Book produc'd to be Col. Sidney's Writing, becauſe the Hand was like what ſome of the Witneſſes had ſeen him write; an Evidence never permitted in a criminal Matter before. The Caſe of the Lady Carre was well ci- by Colonel Sidney, againſt whom there was an Indictment or Information of Perjury; in which it was reſolv'd, that compariſon of Hands was no Evidence in any criminal Proſecution: And it muſt be own'd, that at that time, beſides Keeling and Twiſden, there then ſat in that Court Sir Wadham Windham, whom all will own to have been the ſecond beſt Judge which ſat in Weſtminſter-Hall ſince the King's Reſtoration: and if it be not Evidence in a Proſecution of Miſdemeanor, much leſs in Treaſon, as Col. Sidney ſaid; which Inference, beſides the Reaſon of the thing, is back'd by the Authority of my Lord Coke.

But admitting Colonel Sidney wrote that Book, and publiſhed it; yet if it were not done with a Deſign to ſtir the Subjects up into a Rebellion, but was writ and publiſhed only diſputandi gratia, as the Import of the Books ſhews plainly it was, it was no more Treaſon, than the Diſcourſe between Blague and Mate Lee about taking the Tower was. And ſuppoſe it was wrote with that Deſign, yet it not appearing when it was writ, how could a Jury, upon their Oaths, ſay it was done with a Deſign to raiſe Rebellion againſt King Charles the Second, when, for ought appeared, it was writ before he was King, or thought of? It might, for ought appeared, be writ in King Charles the Firſt's time, or Cromwell's time, and deſign'd againſt either of them, or any foreign Prince, and therefore could not be Treaſon againſt King Charles the Second.

The Evidence was an Original in this particular; alſo it was the firſt time that ever a particular Expreſſion in a Writing was given in Evidence againſt a Man in Treaſon, without reading the whole Writing, and for a very good Reaſon given by the Jury in Fitzharris's Caſe, which was, That there might be ſomething ſomething in the Writing not expreſſed in the Indictment, which may explain the Clauſes in the Indictment, ſo that they may bear another conſtruction: and in that Trial it was agreed the whole Writing ought to be read, and was read accordingly; and it was the Duty of the Court to have ordered it, whether the Priſoner or Jury had deſired it or not, as they are upon their Oaths to do right: but in Colonel Sidney's Caſe, when preſſed by him, it was denied; only ſome particular Paſſages he might have read if he would, which he did not accept, upon a very good Reaſon which he gave, which was, that he knew not the Paſſages of the Book, or at leaſt he did not remember them, and therefore could not call for them. 'Tis true, that Practice in civil Matters is allowed to ſave time, where the Miſchief is not very great; becauſe of a Paſſage in a Deed or Writing, material for either Party, omitted in reading, the Matter may be brought about again; but in Criminal, much leſs in Capital Proſecutions, they cannot be, unleſs a way can be found to bring a Man to Life again.

* 1 Sid. 419.

Almoſt all the Circumſtances of this Trial are Originals; the ſumming up of the Evidence againſt him was barbarous, being Invectives, and no Conſequences. It was ſaid he was not only guilty of the Practices he was accuſed of, but that he could not have been otherwiſe, becauſe his Principles led him to it; and it might with as good Reaſon have been urged, that he not only was become, but was born a Traitor. The laſt matter remarkable in the Trial, was that of an Overt-Act, of which the Court ſaid it was reſolved by all the Judges of England, that if I buy a Knife of J. S. to kill the King, and one Witneſs prove I bought a Knife, and another prove I bought it for that Purpoſe, it is two Witneſſes of an Overt-Act within the Statute of Edward the Sixth.

It were fit to know who the Judges were who gave that Reſolution, if it were but for the Authority of the Caſe; for I doubt the Reaſon of it will convince no Man: They might as well have reſolved, that eating or drinking, or the moſt ordinary Acts of a Man's Life, is an Overt-Act of High-Treaſon.

The Law hath taken that Care for the Evidence of High-Treaſon, which it hath not done in any other Caſe, that it muſt be proved by an Overt-Act, proved by two Witneſſes. One would think at the firſt Sight of the Statute, that there ſhould be two Witneſſes to the ſame Fact; but that hath been adjudged otherwiſe, yet ſtill it was reſolved there muſt be two Witneſſes: but if this Reſolution be Law, it is plain there needs but one. 'Tis true, if a Man does an Act for which he can give no Reaſon, as placing a Mine of Powder in a Place the King uſually paſſeth over, or planting a Piece of Cannon to ſhoot at a Place the King uſually paſſeth by, if he cannot give a credible Reaſon why he did it, and another ſwears the Purpoſe of the thing, it is two good Witneſſes within the Act.

It hath been ſaid, if a Man be bound to his good Behaviour, and wears a Sword, it is a Breach of the good Behaviour; and perhaps, heretofore, when Swords were not uſually worn but by Soldiers, it might be ſo, becauſe it ſtruck a Terror in other People as much as a Blunderbuſs, or the like unuſual Weapon; or the going armed in a Coat of Mail, for any Perſon but a Soldier, doth at this Day. Yet no Man will ſay that, now Swords are uſually worn by all Sorts of People, it is a Breach of the good Behaviour; and ſo that which heretofore was a Crime, by Cuſtom now is become none. It is therefore the unuſualneſs and the unaccountableneſs of the Circumſtance make it an Evidence, which cannot be aſſigned as a Reaſon in the Overt-Act mentioned.

The laſt thing I take notice of, is, that Colonel Sidney refuſed to aſk the Lord Howard any Queſtions; from whence was inferred, that he aſſented to the Truth of the Matter ſworn: but it is well known, 'tis no prudence to aſk a thorough-pac'd Witneſs a Queſtion; in Mr. Hampden's Trial, his Counſel refuſed ſo to do for that Reaſon.

The next who fell a Sacrifice, according to Colledge's Prophecy, was James Holloway; he was outlawed, and taken beyond Sea; and being induced with Promiſes of Life, to accuſe himſelf of things (whether guilty or not) enough to make good an Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt him, it was indeed generouſly offered him that his Outlawry ſhould be ſet aſide, and he have the liberty to be tried, and defend himſelf as well as he could: but knowing that what he had ſaid ſince he was taken would be brought in Evidence againſt him, he refuſed his Trial; and becauſe he would not purchaſe his Pardon at the Expence of innocent Men's Blood, by accuſing others, of what he did not know they were guilty (if his dying Speech is to be believed) he was executed.

I ſhould not have mention'd this, but for the ſake of the next Perſon's Caſe, which was Sir Thomas Armſtrong's, who was outlawed for High-Treaſon, when he was beyond Sea; he was taken and brought to the King's Bench Bar.

Remarks upon the AWARD of Execution againſt Sir Thomas Armſtrong.

AT Common Law, if a Perſon was beyond Sea when an Outlawry was pronounc'd againſt him, it was an Error in Fact, for which the Outlawry was to be revers'd; and it is an Error in all Outlawries but for High-Treaſon to this Day. By the 6th of Edward VI. that Error is taken away in High-Treaſon, but there is a Proviſo in that Statute, that if the Perſon outlaw'd ſhall within a Year after the Outlawry pronounc'd, yield himſelf to the Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, and offer to traverſe his Indictment, and on his Trial ſhall be acquitted, he ſhall be diſcharg'd of the Outlawry. Upon the Conſtruction of this Statute, no Judgment was ever given that I know of; and the reaſon is, no Man outlaw'd was ever deny'd a Trial till this time, if he was taken within a competent Time. The reaſon of making that Statute was this; Men would commit Treaſon, and preſently fly beyond Sea, and ſtay there till the Witneſſes who ſhould prove the Treaſon were dead; then return, and reverſe the Outlawry for the Error of their being beyond Sea; and the Witneſſes being dead, they were ſafe: and therefore this Statute takes away that Error in part, tho' not in the whole, and doth in effect ſay, that the Perſon outlaw'd ſhall not have advantage of that Error, unleſs he comes and takes his Trial within a competent time, which that Statute limits to a year after the Outlawry pronounc'd.

and

This being plainly the Senſe of the Statute, it was Injuſtice to deny the Favour or Right of a Trial to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, which was never deny'd any Perſon before nor ſince, where it was agreed that all the Witneſſes againſt the Perſon accus'd were alive, as in Sir Thomas Armſtrong's Caſe they were, barely upon the Quibble of the Word render, which in no Caſe that ever I read was differenc'd from taken, but in one Caſe, which is Smith and Aſhe's Caſe in Cro. Car. 58. in an Outlawry for Debt againſt Huſband and Wife, which will not extend to, or warrant the Judgment in this Caſe: and if there were but a Doubt in the Caſe, as it cannot be deny'd there was, the Outlawry ought to have been wav'd, or at leaſt Counſel for the Priſoner heard as to the Point.

It was a vain and unjuſt Reaſon (and only tending to incenſe the thing) aſſign'd by the Attorney, that the Priſoner was one who actually engag'd to go, upon the King's haſty coming to Town, to deſtroy him by the way; whereas the Priſoner offer'd to prove his Innocence in that and other Matters of which he was accus'd: and even that Objection againſt him was an Invention of the Attorney's for any thing appears; but then it was reſolv'd to ſtop at nothing, and Succeſs had made them fearleſs. Fitzharris and Colledge 'twas own'd had hard meaſure, and that their Caſes might be forgotten, their Quarters were buried; but Sir Thomas Armſtrong's were expos'd, tho' the Proceedings againſt him were equally as unjuſtifiable as in the other two Caſes.

Remarks on the Trial of Count Conningſmark.

I Think fit to remember in the ſame Reign, tho' before this time, one Caſe, to ſhew how the Courts of Juſtice were remiſs or violent, according to the ſubject Matter.

All will agree, that the Murder of Mr. Thynne was one of the moſt barbarous and impudent Murders that ever was committed; and of that Murder Count Conningſmark, tho' he eſcap'd Puniſhment, was the moſt Guilty.

I do not complain that in that Trial the Chief Juſtice directed the Priſoner the way to make the King's Counſel ſhew the Cauſe of Challenge againſt the Perſons call'd on the Jury, and challeng'd for the King, without any Reaſon. It was his Duty ſo to do; and he ought to have directed Fitzharris the ſame Method, which he did not: but he was blameable that he did not aſk the Lieutenant and Polander what they had to ſay for themſelves, which was always done before and ſince that time, and ought to be, which was an Injuſtice; and therefore two of the Priſoners at the time of their Sentences ſaid, they were never try'd, tho' I believe no great Injury to them, becauſe they had little or nothing to have ſaid for themſelves.

But if they had been aſk'd, they would have ſaid as they did before their Trials to the Juſtice of Peace who committed them, and as they did after their Condemnations, that Count Conningſmark put them upon doing what they did, which might have influenc'd the Jury to have found the Count guilty, which was contrary to the Deſign of the Court; and it was for the ſame Reaſon the Chief Juſtice would not permit the Juſtice of Peace to read the Examination of Stern and Boroſky.

I do agree, that what they ſaid before the Juſtice of Peace was not Evidence againſt the Count; I agree that the Count being indicted and try'd as Acceſſory, at the ſame time the Principals were indicted and try'd, the Principals could not be good Witneſſes againſt the Count, becauſe properly a Principal ought to be convicted before the Acceſſory be try'd; and therefore, tho' for Expedition both are try'd together, yet the Verdict always is and ought to be given againſt the Principal, before that of the Acceſſory.

But I deny what was in that Trial laid down for Law, that the Acceſſory being in the ſame Indictment with the Principal muſt be try'd at the ſame time. It is true, the Count deſir'd his Trial might be put off for two or three Days, which the Court knowing what was beſt for the Count deny'd, and not for the above pretended Reaſons; for an Indictment againſt many may be joint, and yet the Trials may be ſeveral: the truth is, in ſuch Caſes the Indictment is joint and ſeveral.

Suppoſe the Acceſſory, at the Trials of the Principals, had not been in cuſtody; will any Perſon ſay, that if afterwards he was taken, he can't be try'd upon that Indictment in which he was join'd with the Principals?

But beſides a hundred Precedents not printed, there is the Caſe of George Saliſbury & al. in Plowden, Fol. 100. where it was reſolv'd, that tho' an Indictment againſt many is joint, yet the Venire may be ſeveral againſt each Perſon, and conſequently the Trials may be ſeveral; and if ſo, then the times of the Trials may be ſeveral, but that which is to be complain'd of is, that the Count, in the Opinion of all Mankind, at that time and ſince, was the moſt guilty Man; yet the care taken to puniſh the leſs guilty, as Stern and Boroſky, was in order to let the moſt guilty eſcape; for I think both Stern and Boroſky might, and would have been good Witneſſes againſt the Count, if the Court would have permitted it. The Count might have been indicted as Acceſſory to Uratz only; for the Acceſſory to all the Principals is Acceſſory to every of them ſeverally: and when the Court in their private Conſciences were ſatisfy'd the Count was moſt guilty, they ought to have been cunning, aſtuti, as my Lord Hobart calls it, to have brought him to Puniſhment. But 'twas ſaid, Stern and Boroſky being indicted dicted of the ſame Crime with the Count, they could not be good Witneſſes againſt him, which I think is no more Law than Truth: Truth it was not, for the Count was indicted as Acceſſory, the reſt as Principals. But taking it that all were indicted and try'd as Principals for the ſame Fact at the ſame time, why is not the Evidence of the one good againſt the other? Firſt, I think there is no expreſs Reſolution for that Point of Law, but a late Rule given at Kingſton Aſſizes upon the Trial of a Maid and one Saterwaite for burning of an Houſe; and therefore there is a Liberty to examine by Reaſon how the Law is. I agree if a Man is indicted and try'd for killing another, he ſhall not be admitted to ſay, B. did it by himſelf; but I think he may be a good Witneſs to prove that he and B. did it; that is to ſay, he ſhall not give any Evidence againſt another, which tends to acquit himſelf as well as accuſe another; and I think he may give Evidence which accuſes another of the ſame Crime whereof he is indicted, if it doth not tend to acquit himſelf.

For it is agreed on all hands, that being guilty of the ſame Crime, doth not diſable a Witneſs: for then Rumſey and ſeveral Perſons in the Lord Ruſſel's Plot, as it was call'd, had not been good Witneſſes. In the next place, the Circumſtances of an Indictment againſt the Witneſſes for the ſame thing he teſtifies againſt another, do not diſable him; Widdrington was indicted for the ſame things, of which he gave Evidence againſt ſeveral others as his Complices in Robberies. Nay, the Law hath given ſomewhat more Credit to the Evidence of a Perſon indicted, as a Witneſs of the ſame things againſt others, than it does to a Perſon not indicted; as in the Caſe of an Approver, which, as Stamford * ſays, was a Perſon in Priſon (not at large) for the Fact for which he was indicted, arraign'd upon an Indictment, or an Appeal of Felony, who before a Coroner aſſign'd by the Court, confeſſes himſelf guilty of the Felony of which he is indicted, and not of any other, and confeſſes other Perſons naming them as Coadjutors with him in committing the Crime of which he is indicted, and not of any other Crime; ſo much Credit ſhall be given to that Confeſſion, that Proceſs ſhall be made out againſt the Perſon impeach'd, who, if taken, ſhall be arraign'd on that Approvement, as if an Indictment by a Grand Jury had been found againſt him: and if the Law gives ſo much Credit to an Approver, I think no Perſon can ſhew me a Reaſon why a Perſon indicted is not a good Witneſs againſt another for the ſame Crime.

* S. P. C. Lib. 2. c. 53.

It is true, Stamford * ſays, if the King gives an Approver a Pardon, he is a good Witneſs; which implies, that otherwiſe he is not: But it muſt be conſider'd, that the reaſon of that is, that an Approver being indicted, as he always is, and confeſſing the Indictment, is convicted; and a Perſon convicted of Felony cannot be a Witneſs till pardon'd. But it will be no Argument why Stern and Boroſky had not been good Witneſſes againſt the Count before they were convicted; and it was a like piece of Juſtice, that whereas the Count was the moſt guilty, he was acquitted.

* S.P.C. Lib. 2. c. 58.

Uratz being the next greateſt Offender, was honourably interr'd, and Stern and the Polander, who were the leaſt Offenders in that matter, were hang'd in Chains.

It was ſomewhat like the New-England Law, remember'd by Hudibras *, of hanging an uſeleſs innocent Weaver for an uſeful guilty Cobler.

* Part 2. Canto 2.

Remarks upon Mr. Corniſh's Trial.

THERE yet remain two Perſons Proſecutions to ſpeak of; the one is Mr. Corniſh, who was taken the — of October, 1685. and was arraign'd on an Indictment of High-Treaſon the Monday after, for conſpiring to kill the late King Charles the Second; and knowing James Duke of Monmouth, William Ruſſel, Eſq; and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, to be Rebels and Traitors, promis'd to be aſſiſting to them in their Treaſons: To which he pleaded Not Guilty. He deſir'd to put off his Trial, becauſe he had no notice till the Saturday before at twelve a-clock, and he could get no Friend to come to him till eight a-clock at Night; and then he was permitted to ſpeak with no body but in the Preſence of the Goaler: he had been allow'd no Pen, Ink, or Paper. He was told by the Court he ought not to have it, without leave given on a Petition preferr'd by him, and that he was taken Tueſday before, which to that time was almoſt a Week. He ſaid, his Children had petition'd the King the Night before to put off his Trial, and it was referr'd to the Judges: he did not know whether he was committed for High-Treaſon againſt the preſent, or the former King, and he had a material Witueſs an hundred and forty Miles off; but was told by the Court, they had no power to put off his Trial. It is true, they ſaid the Lord Ruſſel's Trial was put off till the Afternoon, (which was not true) but that was a Favour which could not be challeng'd by another as a Right. He complain'd he had not a Copy of the Pannel, but was anſwer'd, it was not his Right to have it. Then the Attorney ſaid, he had not deſerv'd ſo well of the Government as to have his Trial delay'd, and therefore he was preſently try'd.

Rumſey ſwore, that about the latter end of October, or beginning of November, the Earl of Shafteſbury deſir'd him to go to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where was a Meeting of the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Ferguſon, and Mr. Sheppard; he came late, and they were juſt on going away; he deliver'd his Meſſage, and they told him that Mr. Trenchard had diſappointed them. He had not been there above a Quarter of an Hour, but Mr. Sheppard was call'd down, and brought up Mr. Corniſh, and told them Mr. Corniſh was come; who came into the Room, and excus'd his not coming ſooner, and that he could not ſtay, for he was to meet about the the Charter; whereupon Mr. Ferguſon opened his Boſom, and under his Stomacher pulled out a Paper: they told Mr. Corniſh they had had it read, and deſired to read it to him: Mr. Ferguſon read it, Mr. Sheppard held the Candle while it was reading, and afterwards they aſked Mr. Corniſh how he liked it: who ſaid, he liked it very well. He remembered two Points in it very well, the one was for Liberty of Conſcience, the other was, that all who would aſſiſt in that Inſurrection, who had Church or King's-Lands in the late War, ſhould have them reſtor'd to them. He did not hear all the Paper, and obſerved only theſe two Points; it was a Declaration on a Riſing, and when the Riſing was to have been, it was to have been diſperſed abroad: there was a Riſing intended at that time, and Mr. Corniſh ſaid, he liked the Declaration, and what poor Intereſt he had he would join with it. He had great dealings with Mr. Corniſh, and Mr. Corniſh was a very honeſt Man, it was out of Compaſſion he had not accuſed Mr. Corniſh before.

Mr. Goodenough ſaid, there was a Deſign to riſe, in London, and for that purpoſe to divide the City into twenty Parts, and to raiſe five hundred Men out of each Part, to take the Tower, and to drive the Guards out of Town. Before that was agreed on, he being by chance at Mr. Corniſh's Houſe, ſaid, the Law will not defend us; ſome other way was to be thought on. Mr. Corniſh ſaid, he wondred the City was ſo unready, and the Country ſo ready. Mr. Goodenough reply'd, there is ſomething thought of to be done here; but in the firſt place the Tower muſt be ſeized, where the Magazine is. Mr. Corniſh pauſed a little, and ſaid, I will do what good I can, or what I can, or to that purpoſe, he ſaid.

He afterwards met Mr. Corniſh on the Exchange, who aſked him how Affairs went; and this was in Eaſter-Term 1683. He had ſome matters with Mr. Corniſh about managing the Riot, which was brought againſt him, Mr. Corniſh, and others: He came to Mr. Corniſh's Houſe about the Buſineſs of the Riot, and no Perſon was by at the Diſcourſe. Mr. Gosfright teſtified for Mr. Corniſh, that he oppoſed Mr. Goodenough's being Under-Sheriff, and ſaid, he would not truſt an Hair of his Head with him, he was an ill Man, obnoxious to the Government, and had done ill things, and he would not truſt his Eſtate and Reputation in the Hands of ſuch an Under-Sheriff; and he believed Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Corniſh were never reconciled. Mr. Love, Mr. Jekyl, and Sir William Turner, teſtified to the ſame purpoſe: Mr. Lane ſpoke out of the printed Trial of my Lord Ruſſel, and ſaid, Rumſey in that Trial ſaid he did not hear the Declaration read, for it was read before he came. Dr. Calamy ſaid, Mr. Corniſh did often come to Church, and receive the Sacrament. Mr. Sheppard ſaid, he was ſubpœna'd by the King, and by Mr. Corniſh the Night before; and that Mr. Corniſh's Son was was with him the Afternoon of the Day before, who preſt him to be at the Trial the next Day; that there were Accounts depending between him and Mr. Corniſh, whereon there was about one or two hundred Pounds due to Mr. Corniſh, and Mr. Corniſh's Subpœna was ſerved firſt upon him. At one of thoſe Meetings at his Houſe, Mr. Corniſh came to ſpeak a few Words with the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other, he could not be poſitive in that, it was many Years ago: he did not ſtay above half a quarter of an Hour in the Houſe; Sheppard came up Stairs, and went out with Mr. Corniſh, and there was not one Word read, nor no Paper ſeen while Mr. Corniſh was there: he remembred there was a Declaration read, Ferguſon pulled it out of his Shoe: he could not tell whether Mr. Corniſh was at his Houſe the Night the Declaration was read, but he was poſitive no Paper was read while Mr. Corniſh was there, for Mr. Corniſh was not looked on to be one of the Company: he did not know who Mr. Corniſh came to ſpeak with, when he came to his Houſe; Mr. Corniſh was but once at his Houſe when the Duke of Monmouth was there: he did not remember that Mr. Corniſh was in the Company when Mr. Rumſey was there; he ſaid, he had attended the Court from eleven a-Clock till half an Hour paſt three.

This being the Sum of the Evidence given in the Trial for and againſt the Priſoner, let us ſee whether thoſe Inferences could be made from it as were made by the Court and Counſel: and whether, on the whole, an honeſt Jury, tho' but of little underſtanding, could have found him guilty of the Treaſon in the Indictment.

It is agreed on all Hands, that a Petty Jury may and muſt conſider the Credibility of a Witneſs, (tho' in the Lord Shafteſbury's Caſe it was ſaid a Grand Jury ought not ſo to do) and if ſo, ſurely Rumſey was not a credible, tho' he was not a diſabled Witneſs; no more than a Man who owns himſelf to be a Man of Falſhood, a profligate Wretch, and perjured by his own Confeſſion, tho' not convicted of it: he had notoriouſly confeſſed himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon, and of being in the Deſign of an intended barbarous Murder; he had ſworn in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, he had named all the Perſons at the Meeting he ſpoke of, of which Mr. Corniſh was none; and being taxed in this Trial with it, he excuſes his Perjury with Compaſſion to the Priſoner, which was mean, fooliſh, and contradictory: he perjured himſelf to ſave the Priſoner, and then ſwore Truth to hang him. He had not Preſence of Mind enough to excuſe himſelf in the manner a Witneſs in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial did, that his God, his King, and his Country, put him unwillingly to act that part. Beſides that in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, Rumſey ſwore he was not at the reading the Declaration, and contradicted Sheppard, who ſwore thought he was there.

But that paſſage was proved only by a Witneſs who had read it in the Trial, which, I confeſs, in ſtrictneſs of Law is not Evidence; nor if the Witneſs had ſaid, he heard Rumſey ſwear ſo at the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, it had not been Evidence, unleſs a Record of that Trial had been produced in Court, which was not done. But all thoſe things being but mere Circumſtances, ſhew the Injuſtice of ſpeeding his Trial, and denying him Counſel: Would not any Counſel have told him that in ſtrictneſs of Law a paſſage in a printed Trial was not Evidence, and was it not eaſy for him to have got a Witneſs to have ſaid that he had heard Rumſey ſwear ſo at that Trial? were not all the Judges who ſat upon him, and all the King's Counſel who were againſt him, preſent at the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, and perfectly remembred what Rumſey then ſwore as to the pretended Declaration, and might he not have ſubpœna'd them to have teſtified that matter. Nay, was it not their Duty to have done it even without a Subpœna?

To ſay it was againſt the King, and therefore they could not do it; or they were in the Commiſſion to try him, and therefore they could not do it; is neither Law nor Reaſon. Every Man knows that a Judge in a civil Matter tried before him, and a Counſel, even againſt his Client, has been enforced to give Evidence, (provided it be not of a Secret communicated to him by his Client) for in that particular a Judge ceaſes to be a Judge, and is a Witneſs; of whoſe Evidence the Jury are the Judges, tho' he after re-aſſume his Authority, and is afterwards a Judge of the Jury's Verdict.

A Judge may ſue, and muſt be ſued in his Court, but in that Caſe he ceaſes to be a Judge and is a Suitor, tho' he re-aſſumes his Authority in all other Matters: and if it be ſo in civil Matters, let any Man ſhew me a Reaſon why the Law is not ſo in criminal Matters; there is no expreſs Law againſt it, and it will be abſurd in Reaſon to ſay the Law is not ſo: for at that rate the King may put any Witneſs, he knows the Priſoner intends to produce for himſelf, into the Commiſſion for trying him, and ſo deprive the Priſoner of the Benefit of his Evidence; as in this Caſe Sheppard, whoſe Evidence ought to have been of great uſe (as ſhall be ſhewn) tho' it was not of any avail to the Priſoner, might have been put into the Commiſſion to have tried Mr. Corniſh, for he was as much qualified for it, as Sir James Smith then Lord Mayor, or any Judge upon the Bench. And if they might have been Witneſſes for the Priſoner, if ſubpœna'd, they might have been Witneſſes for him even without aſking; and it was a Duty incumbent on them, tho' not as Judges, yet as chriſtian Men, ſo to be.

Humanity commands the Diſcovery of Truths, which prevent the ſhedding innocent Blood; and Chriſtianity commands a Man to do as he would be done by. I think the Queſtion need not be aſked what they would have had done, if it had been their Caſe.

The Reaſon that all matters of Law are, or ought to be, tranſacted publickly, is, That any Perſon, unconcerned as well as concerned, may, as amicus Curiæ, inform the Court better, if he thinks they are in an Error, that Juſtice may be done: and the reaſon that all Trials are publick, is, that any Perſon may inform in point of Fact, tho' not ſubpœna'd, that Truth may be diſcovered in civil as well as criminal Matters.

There is an Invitation to all Perſons, who can inform the Court concerning the matter to be tried, to come into the Court, and they ſhall be heard. It is true, if the Judges or any Perſon had teſtified what Rumſey ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, it had not been Evidence without the Record of the Trial; and it is as true, that neither the Record, nor a true Copy of it could have been procured between Mr. Corniſh's Commitment, if it were on Friday (as I have heard it was) tho' the Court ſaid it was on Tueſday, much leſs between the notice of his Trial which was Saturday-noon, and the time of his Trial which was Monday-morning.

But then what Juſtice was there in ſpeeding his Trial, ſo as to deprive him of the Circumſtances of his Defence? for that was but a Circumſtance, and not an eſſential Matter. And what Account can be given why the Court, when they were well ſatisfied that it was in the Priſoner's power to procure ſuch a Witneſs, and ſuch a Record, did not ſtay till he did it? Or if it would be too long in doing, why ſhould they not have put off the Trial for that time, and given the Priſoner a convenient time to do it?

The firſt in civil Matters, hath been frequently done, when a Deed or Witneſs hath been wanting, if it could be done in a convenient time, and a Trial has been put off before it came on, tho' after it came on they have not done it, becauſe there is no great Miſchief in that, for either Party hath power to bring it about again; but not ſo in capital Matters, and therefore Juries in capital Matters have been frequently diſcharged after ſworn, where the Evidence hath been defective.

It is true, my Lord Coke ſaith, that a Jury once charged with a Priſoner, cannot be diſcharged but muſt give their Verdict; but it is as true that he ſays ſo in favour of the Priſoner, that when the Evidence againſt him appears defective, he ſhall not be continued a Priſoner till more Evidence can be found, or procured againſt him, though the Practice of late Days hath been quite contrary, viz. to diſcharge the Jury where the Evidence againſt the Priſoner hath been defective, but enforce them to give a Verdict where the Priſoner's Defence hath been defective; tho' to their knowledge if he had longer time to do it, he had been able to produce the Witneſſes who could clear him: but by what Law or Reaſon I am to ſeek. Yet I confeſs, if Rumſey's owning his Perjury in the Lord Ruſſel's Trial, in the very point ſworn againſt the Priſoner, and ſo frivolouſly excuſing it, would not diſcredit him, I know not that any Record, Witneſs, or Evidence would have availed Mr. Corniſh.

And add to Rumſey's contradicting himſelf, that Sheppard, who never contradicted himſelf, and had been a Witneſs in both Trials, agrees, that what Rumſey had ſworn in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, as to Mr. Corniſh's not being there, was true.

But admitting Rumſey had never perjured himſelf, but was of equal Credit with Sheppard; yet when they contradicted each other in a point which carried no probability or improbability with it, in a capital Matter the Jury ought to believe in favorem vitæ; for it makes the matter at leaſt doubtful: and therefore the Jury ought to have acquitted the Priſoner, for a Reaſon in Law, and which was given in Colonel Sidney's Trial (tho' ſhewiſhly) by the Court, viz. that it is better that twenty Nocents ſhould eſcape, than one Innocent ſuffer.

But to paſs from the Credibility of the Witneſſes to the Matter of his Evidence, this was the ſecond time that this ſort of Evidence in any Caſe criminal or civil was permitted to be given in Evidence; and there are the ſame Exceptions to it, as are above aſſigned to the Evidence of Sheppard. As to the Declaration in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, if a true Copy of part of a Deed or Writing was never yet permitted to be given in Evidence, much leſs hath or ought the Purport of Part of a Writing be given in Evidence, eſpecially when ſuch a Reaſon is given why the Witneſs remembred but part of it, as is given by Sheppard in my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, and by Rumſey in this Trial, viz. that he did not hear all the Paper read.

And ſurely Goodenough could no way fortify Rumſey's Evidence, being clearly of another matter, and that ſo very uncertain, that no heed ought to have been given to it. When Goodenough told

Mr.

Mr. Corniſh ſomething ought to be done in the City, but in the firſt place the Tower ought to be ſeized; to which he anſwered, he would do what he could, or what good he could: theſe words may as well relate to Goodenough's preſent Diſcourſe, where he complains that the Law would not defend them tho' innocent, as well as to the ſeizing the Tower; and if they ſhould refer to the laſt, yet they may be well enough interpreted, that he would do what he could, or what good he could, to prevent the ſeizing the Tower. And if they are capable of two Senſes, they ought to be interpreted in the beſt for the Priſoner.

Beſides, the Words are ſpoken not as a thing deſigned, but as a Matter, without which all other Matters were in vain, and might be meer matter of Diſcourſe, as was that between Blague and Mate Lee about taking the Tower: and if there was ſuch a Deſign on foot, it doth not appear that Mr. Corniſh was ever acquainted with it. The ſame may be ſaid as to what he aſked Goodenough, when he aſked how Matters went: may not thoſe Words well enough be applied to the Buſineſs of the Riot, Goodenough managed for Mr. Corniſh and others? And if what Goodenough ſaid was Evidence of a Deſign of ſeizing the Tower, that, as well as the Treaſon againſt the Guards, was Treaſon by the Act of the late King, and not by the 25th of Edward the Third, if it be true Doctrine which was laid down in the Charge to the Earl of Shafteſbury's Grand-Jury: and if ſo, he ought to have been proſecuted for it within ſix Months, and indicted within three Months, if the Doctrine in Colledge's Trial be true; and yet this Deſign, if true, was in Eaſter-Term, 1683, and the Proſecution not till October 1685.

There was yet one piece of Evidence urged againſt him, viz. of his own Witneſs Sheppard, who poſitively teſtified for him as to the main, yet in a Circumſtance ſeemed to teſtify againſt him, which was Mr. Corniſh's being at his Houſe when the Duke of Monmouth and the reſt were there, when the Declaration was read; and upon that piece of Evidence, as if it had contradicted what Mr. Corniſh ſaid before, there was a mighty Triumph: whereas, the moſt that could have been made of it was, that Mr. Corniſh in part of his Defence was guilty of an untruth. And even that was not ſo in Fact; for being charged to have been at Sheppard's the Night the Declaration was read, he anſwered he was never at a Conſult in his Life, he never was at Sheppard's in any Conſult, he never was there with my Lord Ruſſel, as he remembred; he had been at Sheppard's ſeveral times, but never liked Ferguſon for his Morals, and therefore never liked to be in his Company, and he did not know but that he might enquire for the Duke of Monmouth in other Places, and this is all Mr. Corniſh ſays to that matter.

Sheppard ſays, Mr. Corniſh came into his Houſe at one of the Meetings to ſpeak with the Duke of Monmouth or ſome other, he could not be poſitive in that, it was ſo many Years ago, and did not ſtay half a quarter of an Hour: he could not ſay it was the Night the Declaration was read; he did not know whether Mr. Corniſh came to ſpeak with the Duke of Monmouth or not; he could not remember whether Mr. Corniſh was there in Company when Rumſey was there; there were not above three Perſons there when Mr. Corniſh came, which was the Duke of Monmouth, Mr. Ferguſon, and he could not tell whether the other was the Lord Ruſſel, or the Lord Grey.

Now it would be hard to find out the Contradiction between Mr. Corniſh's Sayings and Sheppard's Evidence; both agree that Mr. Corniſh hath been often at Sheppard's Houſe, and neither denies or affirms that he was or was not there the Night the Declaration was read, for a good reaſon; which was, that Mr. Corniſh knew nothing of it, and Sheppard knew not which of the Nights he was there. Mr. Corniſh ſaid he was not there with my Lord Ruſſel as he remembred, and Sheppard doth not affirm he was there with the Lord Ruſſel. Sheppard ſays, that he was there when the Duke of Monmouth was there, and Mr. Corniſh doth not ſay that he was not there with the Duke of Monmouth. Sheppard ſaid, he ſpoke to the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other Perſon, but he thought it was the Duke of Monmouth, which is no direct Affirmation that he ſpoke to the Duke; and Mr. Corniſh doth not ſay, he did not ſpeak to the Duke of Monmouth. So that if the Account of the Trial, ſet out by the Authority of, and ſigned by, Thomas Jones, be true, I cannot ſee any manner of Contradiction between Mr. Corniſh and Sheppard: and therefore, as the Court and King's Counſel did infer, that Sheppard's Evidence, who poſitively denies the Truth of Rumſey's Evidence, was ſo far from invalidating, that it corroborated Rumſey's Evidence, and cleared the thing which was before ſomewhat dark, beyond all manner of Contradiction, is a piece of effrontery. So admitting Sheppard had ſaid Mr. Corniſh was at his Houſe the Night the Declaration was read, and had contradicted Mr. Corniſh, is it a neceſſary Conſequence, that he heard the Declaration read, and promiſed his Aſſiſtance to it? Which muſt be the Inference, if muſt ſupport Rumſey's Evidence.

If it be not a neceſſary Conſequence, but a probable one, that ought not to weigh with a Jury, to convict a Perſon of a capital Crime, eſpecially not of Treaſon. The Statute of Edward the Third ſays, probably Convict; that is, ſays my Lord Coke, convicted upon direct and manifeſt Proof, not upon probable conjectural Preſumptions, or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: And to ſay truth, when Verdicts have been given on ſuch Evidence, they have been often faulty.

To give ſome Inſtances of many, it is remembred in our time * where Perſons were convicted of the Murder of a Perſon abſent, but not dead, barely by Inferences upon the Evidence of fooliſh Words and Actions; but the Judge before whom it was tried, was ſo unſatisfied in the Matter, becauſe the Body of the Perſon ſuppoſed to be murdered was not to be found, that he reprieved the Perſons condemned; yet in a Circuit afterwards, a certain unwary Judge, without enquiring into the Reaſons of the Reprieve, ordered Execution, and the Perſons to be hanged in Chains, which was done accordingly; and afterwards, to his reproach, the Perſon ſuppoſed to be murdered appeared alive.

My Lord Coke relates a Story † in his Time, of an Uncle who beat his Niece, that had an Eſtate, which

* He ſeems to mean the Caſe of Joan Perry and her two Sons, John and Richard Perry, who were Executed at Glouceſter Lent-Aſſizes, 1661, for the ſuppoſed Murder of William Harriſon, who had been conveyed into Turky, and made a Slave for two Years, and afterwards eſcaped, and came back to England.

† This was at Warwick Aſſizes, 8 Jac. I. 3 Co. Inſt. 232. By the Civil Law, unleſs there was direct and poſitive proof that the Perſon was killed, no Circumſtances were admitted againſt the Perſon accuſed of the Murder. Digeſt. lib. 39. tit. 5. §. 24.

which on her Death would deſcend to him; the Girl was heard to cry, Good Uncle, do not kill me; after which ſhe run away, and concealed herſelf ſome few Miles from London. The Girl being miſſing, and the Neighbours remembring the Cry of the Girl, and tacking it to the Probability that the Uncle might be induced, for his Advantage, to murder his Niece apprehended him, and he was indicted for it at the Seſſions; and the Judges being unſatisfied in the Evidence, by reaſon the Body of the ſuppoſed murdered Girl did not appear, the Uncle ſaying that ſhe was run away, they gave him time to the next Seſſions to find her out, which he being not able to do, thought to defend himſelf by producing another Girl very like his own Niece, which he did accordingly; and being detected, it increaſed the Suſpicion, and by Inferences from all thoſe Circumſtances, he was convicted, and afterwards executed.

Some Years after which, the Girl appeared, and claimed her Eſtate: and therefore it is a moſt dangerous and unwarrantable thing for a Jury, in capital Matters, eſpecially in Treaſon, to convict a Perſon upon the Evidence of Probabilities.

As the Evidence in this Caſe againſt the Priſoner was weaker than in any of the precedent Caſes, ſo the Uſage of the Priſoner was more rigorous than in any of them: in all the other Caſes, the Priſoners had more Weeks allowed them to prepare for their Trials, than this Perſon had Days; all the other Perſons, after notice of their Trial, were permitted to have Friends, nay, Counſel, freely to come to them, and confer with them in private, without the Preſence of a Goaler, which was denied this Perſon: All the others, except Colonel Sidney, had ſoft Words given them on their Trials; but this Perſon was rudely handled.

How often was he ſnubbed and bid hold his tongue? How often did he beg the Patience of the Court, to hear him and his Witneſſes? And when he was heard, how was all he ſaid ridiculed? And if he ſaid he was innocent, he was bid remember my Lord Ruſſel ſaid ſo to his Death; when he ſaid he was as innocent as any Perſon in the Court, he was told, for all his Confidence, few believed him. If he ſaid the Matter ſworn againſt him was improbable (which hath been taken for a pretty good Topick for the diſbelief of a Matter teſtified) how is it ridiculed by Improbability, Improbability, Improbability? If he go to prove he is an honeſt Man, he is told that is all Appearance. If he ſays he employed Goodenough about the Riot, he is told that is a Branch of the Plot. If he call Mr. Goſfright as a Witneſs for him, the Witneſs is reproached with having helped the Priſoner in packing Juries; if he call one to prove he received the Sacrament, he is told, that was in order to qualify himſelf to be a Sheriff; and ſuch was his Uſage before, and at the Trial, ſuch was it afterwards: to order him to be tied when he was ſentenced, was an Indignity not uſed to Perſons of his Quality; a thing indeed permitted, not commanded to be uſed, on boiſterous Criminals, who may be ſuſpected to do a ſudden Miſchief, if their Arms were at liberty.

Of like kind was the Reproaching him with the Chearfulneſs of his Countenance at his Condemnation, and that it might be all of a ſtrain, his Quarters were expoſed, a Severity uſed to none abovementioned, but Sir Thomas Armſtrong; and in all theſe Trials, Colledge made the beſt Defence, and perhaps, Circumſtances conſidered, the beſt Defence ever made upon an Indictment of a Capital Matter, and Mr. Corniſh's was the weakeſt, tho' it ſignified nothing: for I believe that none who reads his Trial, but will plainly ſee he was ſo beſet, that the Defence he, or any for him could make, would have availed him nothing, and no account can be given for the Proceedings againſt Mr. Corniſh, in the above manner, but that ſome of the Judges, whereof three who were on the Bench, had newly come out of the Weſt, where they had been ſo fluſhed and hardned, that nothing ſeemed to them rigorous or cruel, and the reſt ſeemed to vie with them in the Practice.

Remarks on the Trial of Mr. Charles Bateman.

THE laſt Perſon which concluded the Tragedy, was one Charles Bateman, a Chirurgeon; his Demerits were, that he had been, or at leaſt was reputed to have been, Chirurgeon to the Earl of Shafteſbury, and one whom his Lordſhip had a Kindneſs for, and therefore according to the Cant of the Time, he was called a factious Fellow; and he had revived the Memory of his Demerits, by attending when Oates came from his Whipping, and letting him Blood. Whether either of thoſe Circumſtances were true or not, I know not, but they were believed: And therefore the 9th of December 1685, he was indicted and tried for High-Treaſon. On his Trial he ſeemed to be diſtracted, and therefore, out of abundance of Charity, the Court appointed his Son to make his Defence for him.

The Witneſſes againſt him were Keeling, who only ſpoke of a Deſign in general, without mentioning Bateman to be concerned in it. Thomas Lee and Richard Goodenough ſwore, at ſeveral times and places, his Diſcourſe to them ſeverally, of ſeizing the Tower, City, and Savoy. Baker for the Priſoner ſaid, Lee in the Year 1683, would have had him inſinuated himſelf in the Priſoner's Company, and diſcourſe about State-Affairs, and by that he would find a way to make Baker a great Man: upon the Evidence the Priſoner was found guilty. Againſt Goodenough's Evidence, there is only this to be ſaid, that he was pardoned, but ſo far only, as to qualify him to be a Witneſs, though not a very credible one, not only the Guilt ſticking to him, but even the Puniſhment of what he had then lately done, hanging over his Head; and what was ſaid for ſome time, of all the Witneſſes for the King, at that time, and for ſome time before, was true, they hunted like Cormorants, with Halters about their Necks, though even that matter by one of the King's Counſel was boaſted to the Jury, as a Circumſtance of more Credibility; for he aſſured them there was not a Witneſs which he produced had a Pardon, as the Witneſſes in the Popiſh Plot had. 'Tis true, in the the Popiſh Plot, upon very good reaſon, the Witneſſes having confeſſed what they pretended to know, of matters in which they had an hand, it was not thought proper to uſe them as Witneſſes, though they had uſed them as Informers, till they were pardon'd, leſt it might happen to be, or at leaſt it would have been, ſuſpected, that the terror of the Puniſhment of the Crimes confeſs'd might influence them to ſwear falſely, to the jeopardy of other Men's Lives, to ſave their own; which, as the Lord Howard truly ſaid, was the Drudgery of ſwearing. But to Lee's Evidence, beſides the Evidence of Baker againſt him, that he would have procured Baker to have been a Witneſs againſt the Priſoner, and enticed him with the promiſe of making him a great Man; and beſides that, it appears in Rouſe's Trial, that Rouſe and he were upon the Trepan with each other, to bring each other into the pretence of a Plot, in order to make ſome advantageous diſcovery of it, of which Lee got the ſtart of Rouſe; the Objection which was made to his Evidence, why Lee had not accuſed the Priſoner ſooner, there being near three Years between the pretended Deſign, and the Diſcovery of it, was never ſatisfactorily anſwered. It was a fooliſh Story, to ſay Goodenough could not be had before, and a ſingle Teſtimony in High-Treaſon was not ſufficient; every one knows, that though a ſingle Witneſs is not enough to convict a Man of High-Treaſon, yet a ſingle Perſon's Teſtimony is enough to commit a Perſon accuſed, and upon Conviction, on the Teſtimony of a ſingle Witneſs, to make him a Priſoner for his Life, witneſs Mr. Hampden, and others; beſides the ſubjecting him to other corporal Puniſhments, inflicted at Diſcretion, witneſs Mr. Johnſon and Oates. And in 1683, when the Words were pretended to be ſpoken, Bateman had not been ſpared, if accuſed; and though it be a good Reaſon for the Court to have given, why they did not proceed againſt the Priſoner till that time, becauſe there were not two Witneſſes againſt him; yet it was no reaſon for Lee, why he did not accuſe the Priſoner before that time, eſpecially he having been ſeveral times before that time examined, not only of what he knew, but of what Perſons he knew concerned: but to ſay truth, Lee, in the Trial, did not pretend to anſwer the Objection, but the Court, in the manner before, endeavoured to anſwer it for him.

The laſt Matter obſervable in this Trial, was the permitting Bateman's Son to make his Father's Defence, which was an extraordinary unparallell'd Favour; it was the firſt and laſt time that, or any thing like it, had been done: The Lord Ruſſel's Lady indeed was permitted to take Notes at the Trial for her Lord, but he only was permitted to make uſe of them. Fitzharris's Wife when ſhe but whiſper'd her Huſband, or but told him what Jurors he ſhould challenge, and what not, was ſeverely corrected, and threatned to be thruſt out of Court, for doing it in prejudice of the King. In Colledge's Trial, he was told, that Perſons that adviſ'd a Priſoner in Treaſon, even before a Trial, were guilty of a high Miſdemeanor; nay, a Sollicitor had been indicted of High-Treaſon for it: and therefore nothing can excuſe the allowing the Priſoner Counſel in matter of Fact, as was done in this Caſe, (it is not material, whether the Son was a Barriſter at Law or not) but the Weakneſs of the Priſoner, who to all appearance was moped mad.

But the Court by excuſing their Favour upon that account, incurred a worſe Cenſure; for nothing is more certain in Law, than that a Perſon who falls mad after a Crime ſuppos'd to be committed, ſhall not be try'd for it; and if he fall mad after Judgment, he ſhall not be executed: † though I do not think the reaſon given for the Law in that Point will maintain it, which is, that the End of Puniſhment is the ſtriking a Terror into others, but the execution of a Madman hath not that effect; which is not true, for the Terror to the Living is equal, whether the Perſon be mad or in his Senſes: and that is the reaſon of breaking the Perſon executed for Treaſon, and expoſing his Quarters, which is done rather to deter the Living, than for puniſhing the Dead. But the true reaſon of the Law I think to be this, a Perſon of non ſana Memoria, and a Lunatick during his Lunacy, is by an Act of God (for ſo it is call'd, though the means may be human, be it violent, as hard Impriſonment, terror of Death, or natural, as Sickneſs) diſabled to make his juſt Defence. There may be Circumſtances lying in his private Knowledge, which would prove his Innocency, of which he can have no Advantage, becauſe not known to the Perſons who ſhall take upon them his Defence; and that is the Reaſon many civil Actions die with the Perſons againſt whom they lay in their Life-times; and that is the Reaſon why in criminal Matters, Perſons by ordinary courſe of Law cannot be convicted after their Deaths. 3 Cok. Inſtit. p. 4.

For in all civil Actions there is as much reaſon for the Perſon injured, to have Satisfaction out of the Eſtate of the Perſon who injur'd him, in the Hands of his Heir or Executor after his Death, as there was to have it out of the Eſtate of the Injurer, in his own Hands in his Life-time: and there is as much reaſon that the Heir or Executor of a Perſon who hath committed a Crime, which by Law would have forfeited his Eſtate, if in his Life-time he had been attainted of the ſame, ſhould forfeit the Eſtates they claim from him, as if he had been attainted in his Life-time, which had prevented the ſaid Eſtates veſting in them. And it hath been ſometimes practis'd, where the Crimes of the Perſons deceas'd have been notorious, and without any Doubt; as was the Caſe of ſeveral Perſons mention'd in the Act of Pains and Penalties: which Act had Example from many other Acts of Parliament in other Reigns, where the Perſons were dead before Puniſhment overtook them.

And though of late Years it hath been pretended, that the King's Safety depends upon the ſpeedy Trial and Execution of a Perſon guilty of High-Treaſon; yet this was never thought ſo heretofore, nor in truth in itſelf is ſo: for it is plain, in Reaſon as well as Experience, that what is ſaid of Witches, is true of all Malefactors when once they are in Cuſtody, their power of doing Miſchief ceaſes.

The King is therefore no otherwiſe benefited by the Deſtruction of his Subjects, than that the Example deters others from committing the like Crimes; and there being ſo many to be made Examples of, beſides thoſe on whom the Misfortunes of Madneſs fall, it is inconſiſtent with Humanity to make Examples of them; it is inconſiſtent with Religion, as being againſt Chriſtian Charity to ſend a great Offender quick, as it is ſtil'd, into another World, when he is not of a Capacity to fit himſelf ſelf for it. But whatever the Reaſon of the Law is, it is plain the Law is ſo; and for remedying it in High-Treaſon, was the 33d of Henry the Eighth made *, whereby it is enacted, That if a Man fall mad after he hath committed High-Treaſon, he ſhall notwithſtanding be try'd in his Abſence; and if a Man fall mad after he is attainted of High-Treaſon, he ſhall notwithſtanding be executed. Which Statute extending only to High-Treaſon, the Law continu'd, and yet is as it was at common Law in all other capital Matters; and even that * Statute was call'd a cruel and inhumane Law, and therefore liv'd not long, for it was afterwards repeal'd †: ſo that the Law, as to this matter, when this Man was tried and executed, was as it was at common Law; and therefore if he was of non ſanæ Memoriæ, he ought not to have been try'd, much leſs executed.

† 4 Co. Rep. 124. b. Hale's H. P. C. Vol. I, p. 55.

* 3 Co. Inſt. p. 6.

I know it will be objected, that if this Matter of non ſana Memoria ſhould be permitted to put off a Trial or ſtay Execution, all Malefactors will pretend to be ſo: But I ſay there is a great difference between Pretences and Realities, and ſana and non ſana Memoria hath been often try'd in ‖ capital Matters, and the Priſoners have reap'd ſo little benefit by their Pretences, it being always diſcover'd, that we rarely hear of it. In this Caſe the Priſoner might have been try'd as well abſent as preſent, according to that repeal'd Statute, for any advantage he did or could reap by being preſent: and it ſeems very probable the Court thought him diſtemper'd; for if he was of ſane Memory, his Son ought not to have been permitted to make his Father's Defence; if he was diſtemper'd, he ought not to have been try'd, much leſs executed. And this Perſon being the laſt Man, as far as I can remember, or can find by the printed Trials, who ſuffer'd for the Plot of High-Treaſon firſt ſet on foot by Fitzharris, and carry'd on againſt Colledge, and the other Perſons herein mention'd; and the Deſign ſtopping here, I think fit to end my Remarks on the Proceedings of all Capital Matters with him. But I think it is fit for me to make ſome Apology for the thing, and for myſelf, for taking on me to cenſure the Opinions and Actions of Perſons whoſe Characters carry'd Authority with them. I confeſs I never thought that either the Great Seal or a Garment added to a Man's Senſe, Learning, or Honeſty; but he remain'd juſt ſuch, as to thoſe Qualities, after his Preferment, as he was before: and as to many of the Perſons reflected on in theſe Remarks, the Cenſure of Colonel Sidney was true; and for the beſt of them, it is plain they not only vary'd from one another in their Opinions, but even from themſelves in the Judgment of the ſame Caſe, but always tending to the Deſtruction of the Perſon try'd for his Life; witneſs the Opinion of the Court in the Challenge of Jurors not having a Freehold, and the deſigning to levy War, not Treaſon within the Statute of Edw. III. and forty other matters. And that not only gives a Liberty to enquire, but naturally puts one upon the Enquiry which of the two Opinions is right; tho' it is impoſſible for one not to think meanly of the Perſon, who, in ſo great a Concern as a Man's Life, ſhould be ſo raſh as to give his Opinion without Conſideration, or ſo unſteady as to give different Opinions in the ſame Caſe: for if a Man who tells Hiſtory backward and forward, is juſtly ſuſpected in point of Truth, the Knowledge and Sincerity of a Man, who gives different Opinions in the ſame Caſe, is juſtly ſuſpected in point of Law; which, together with the fulſome, but injurious, Stuff vented for Crown-Law, was the firſt Matter which put me on conſidering and writing what I have done.

As for my ſelf, if Tully thought it a Reproach to his Son if he did not abound with Philoſophy, having heard Cratippus for the ſpace of a whole Year, and that at Athens; ſurely one who hath had his Education at one of the three great Schools for ſome Years, and afterwards at the Univerſity, and laſtly, twenty-five years conſtant Reſidence in an Inn of Court, and twenty years attendance at Weſtminſter-Hall, and not diverted by the uſual Employs of a Sollicitor or Attorney, may be allow'd without the Imputation of Confidence to give his Cenſure, upon conſideration, on the extempore Judgments or Opinions of Perſons, tho' of greater Standing and Character than himſelf.

[Which he did.

Middleſex. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths preſent, that John Hampden, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt illuſtrious and excellent Prince, our Lord Charles the Second, late King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, thy natural Lord, the Fear of God in thy Heart not having, nor the Duty of thy Allegiance any ways weighing; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid late Lord the King, towards him our ſaid late Lord the King, of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and imagining, practiſing, and with thy whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, within this his Kingdom of England, to ſtir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our ſaid late Lord the King, of this his Kingdom of England to ſubvert, change, and alter; and our ſaid late Lord the King, of the Title, Honour, and Royal Name, of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive: And him our ſaid late Lord the King, to death, and final deſtruction to bring and put; the 20th Day of July, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Lord the King, Charles the Second, of England, &c. the 35th, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, with divers other falſe Rebels and Traitors unknown, didſt conſpire, compaſs, imagine, and intend our ſaid late Lord the King, then thy ſupreme and natural Lord, not only of his Royal State, Title, Power, and Government of this his Kingdom of England, to deprive and caſt down, but alſo our ſaid late Lord the King to kill, and to death to bring and put, and the antient Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to ſubvert; and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid late Lord the King, through his whole Kingdom of England, to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, within his Kingdom of England to procure: And theſe thy wicked, abominable, and deviliſh Treaſons and traitorous Conſpiracies, Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to paſs, thou the ſaid John Hampden, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, (to wit) the ſaid 20th Day of July, in the year of the Reign of our ſaid late Lord the King, 35th aforeſaid, and divers other days and times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, aforeſaid, in the ſaid County of Middleſex, falſely, unlawfully, wickedly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, with James late Duke of Monmouth, and divers other falſe Traitors unknown, did aſſemble your ſelf, meet together, and conſult, and conſent to move and procure divers great Sums of Money, and a great Number of Men armed, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, traitorouſly to levy and make, againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Lord the King, and againſt our Lord the King that now is, their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statutes in that caſe made and provided, &c.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I perceive that I am here indicted for a Fact, for which I was indicted above two Years ago, and I was convicted of it, and did ſuffer Impriſonment, in Execution, upon the Judgment that was given againſt me, and am ſtill under Execution for the Fine that was ſet upon me by way of Puniſhment for that Fact. I think, my Lord, I have as much to ſay in point of Law for my ſelf, as any Priſoner that ever came before your Lordſhip upon ſuch an account, twice tried, twice convicted, and twice puniſhed for the ſame Fact, muſt be very extraordinary; but, my Lord, I do paſs by all Pleas whatſoever, and caſt my ſelf wholly upon the King's Mercy; that is my Reſolution, my Lord.

* L. C. J. Then you muſt plead Guilty or not Guilty. But you ſay you have been tried twice for the ſame Fact; Were you ever tried for High-Treaſon before? The very Puniſhment that you alledge to be inflicted upon you for it, is a plain Proof that you were not tried for High-Treaſon, for that is not uſually puniſhed by Fine and Impriſonment. * Sir George Jefferies.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I only inſinuate that the Fact is the ſame.

L. C. J. You muſt plead Guilty or not Guilty.

Clerk. Are you Guilty or not Guilty of the High-Treaſon, whereof you ſtand indicted, John Hampden?

L. C. J. You muſt plead directly; ſay you are Guilty, or you are not Guilty.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I do plead Guilty to the Indictment.

Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to hear me: My Lord, I do confeſs my Offence againſt the King is very great, I am very ſorrowful for it. My Lord, I know the King is the Fountain of Mercy as well as Juſtice, an inexhauſtible Fountain of Mercy; and if I may be ſo happy to obtain your Lordſhip's Interceſſion to his Majeſty on my behalf, I doubt not but that Grace and Goodneſs which hath been extended to others, may be beſtowed upon me.

L. C. J. Mr. Hampden, as the King is the Fountain of Mercy, ſo it comes freely from him. I confeſs, as the Circumſtances of your Caſe are, you have pleaded the beſt Plea to find Mercy; but how far the pleading guilty, when there is full Evidence to prove you ſo, may move the King to have mercy upon you, I don't know; you muſt apply your ſelf to the King.

Mr. Hampden. I humbly beg your Lordſhip's Interceſſion, I know none can do it better than your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. You muſt record the Plea.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I humbly beg your Lordſhip, that you would be pleaſed to repreſent to his Majeſty what my paſt Sufferings have been, and how ſorrowful I am for having offended his Majeſty, and that your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to beg his Majeſty's gracious Pardon in my behalf; I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to do it, and it ſhall

ſhall be the endeavour of all my Life to behave my ſelf as dutiful and loyal a Subject as any the King hath.

L. C. J. The King ſhall have an account of what you ſay.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, there is one thing I would humbly beg the Liberty for; there are Words in the Indictment concerning the Death of the King: my Lord, what conſtruction the Law may put upon ſuch an Action, I am ignorant of; but for any direct Intention of taking away the Life of the King, no Man does abominate and abhor more than I have done.

L. C. J. Mr. Hampden, it is but a neceſſary conſtruction that the Law puts upon it, it is a conſtruction confirmed by woful Experience. We ſee that Rebellion, let the beginning be what it will, never ſtops, unleſs by God's great Mercy and the Juſtice of the King's Cauſe, but it will end in the Death of the King, it hath a natural Tendency that way: but however you are underſtood that you had not any thoughts of killing the King, but only to raiſe Rebellion within the Kingdom, which muſt neceſſarily end in the Death of the King.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, no Man doth abhor that more than I do.

L. C. J. You may aſk Mr. Hampden if he hath any thing to ſay why Sentence of Death ſhould not paſs upon him.

Clerk. John Hampden hold up thy Hand. Thou ſtandeſt convicted of High-Treaſon by your own Confeſſion, what can you ſay for yourſelf why Sentence ſhould not paſs upon you?

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I humbly caſt my ſelf upon the King's Mercy. My Lord, I would humbly move your Lordſhip in one thing, that I may have the Liberty of my Friends and Relations to come to me in Priſon as they did before.

L. C. J. You muſt apply yourſelf to the King.

Mr. Hampden. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to order it, my Lord? I had two or three of my own Relations the King was pleaſed to grant to come to me

L. C. J. It is eaſy for you, Mr. Hampden, to make your Application to the King, it will be better for you: I direct it as the better way to apply yourſelf to the King.

Mr. Hampden. I only beg it, my Lord.

L. C. J. In the preſence of a Keeper I don't know why his Relations ſhould not come to him; but I think it had been better to apply yourſelf to the King.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I have two or three near Relations allowed to be without the Preſence of a Keeper.

L. C. J. Mr. Hampden, that we cannot do, that was an extraordinary Favour, and as that came from the King, ſo you muſt apply your ſelf to the King again; but in the Preſence of a Keeper, we grant it; we cannot grant it without a Keeper, if you will apply your ſelf to the King for that, you may.

Cryer. Gentlemen of Middleſex, that have been ſummon'd upon the King's Service this Day, the Court diſcharges you.

Then after the Judges did withdraw, the Clerk was commanded to proceed.

Cl. John Hampden, hold up thy Hand. You ſtand convicted of High-Treaſon by your own Confeſſion, what can you ſay for your ſelf, why the Court ſhould not pronounce Sentence upon you?

Mr. Hampden. I only plead the King's Mercy. I rely upon no other thing.

Cryer. O-Yes, all manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence whilſt Judgment is giving upon pain of Impriſonment.

Mr. Recorder *. Mr. Hampden, you have been indicted for High-Treaſon, and the Indictment hath been read to you, and whereupon, according as the Law doth require, it hath been demanded of you, that you ſhould plead to it, and thereupon you have pleaded Guilty to this Indictment, which is recorded accordingly; and therefore I need not ſay any thing for to let you know the heinouſneſs of this Crime, for I perceive you are ſenſible enough of it your ſelf, and I do verily believe you have taken a very wiſe and diſcreet Courſe to confeſs the Truth, for you were brought hither to be tried for this Crime, in caſe you had pleaded not Guilty to this Indictment, which now you have prevented by this your candid Confeſſion. However, it is the Duty of my place to pronounce the Judgment that the Law hath provided for ſuch Crimes as theſe are, and that is this;

* Sir Thomas Jenner.

You muſt be had to the place from whence you came, and from thence you muſt be drawn to the Place of Execution, and there you are to be hang'd by the Neck, and whilſt you are alive you muſt be cut down, and your Entrails be taken out, and burnt before you; and your Head muſt be cut off, and your Body quartered, and your Head and your Quarters to be diſpoſed of at the King's pleaſure, and the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I hope I ſhall have your Lordſhip's Interceſſion with his Majeſty.

Mr. Recorder. I don't doubt, Mr. Hampden, but you have us'd the beſt means to obtain ſo great a Favour; and as it is the Duty of my place to give an account of this to his Majeſty, ſo I ſhall truly and faithfully repreſent it with the advantages your Demeanour this day hath deſerv'd.

Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I humbly beg the Favour that my Wife may come to me without the preſence of a Keeper.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Hampden, 'tis too late for us to give any directions in this Matter, becauſe you aſk'd this while the Judges were here; but I don't doubt upon your Application to his Majeſty, but you will have all things that you can reaſonably deſire, if you pleaſe to apply your ſelf to him for this, and what elſe you ſhall be adviſed may be fitting and convenient for you to beg.

His abject Submiſſion did indeed procure him a Pardon; but the Shame of ſuch a mean Behaviour ſo ſunk and diſordered his Spirits, that he was never quite right after it, and about ten Years after he cut his own Throat.

CXXXIX. The Trial of Henry Lord Delamere *, before the Lords at Weſtminſter, for High-Treaſon, Jan. 14, 1685. 1 Jac. II.

Cl. of Cr. SErjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O-Yes, O-Yes, O-Yes. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace doth ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons to keep ſilence, and to give ear to the King's Majeſty's Commiſſion to his Grace my Lord High Steward of England, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Then the Commiſſion was read, his Grace, and all the Peers ſtanding up bare-headed.

Then the Staff being carried between Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod, was with three Reverences deliver'd upon the knee to his Grace, and by him re-delivered to the Gentleman-Uſher of the Black Rod, to hold during the Service.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O-Yes! His Grace my Lord High Steward of England doth ſtraitly charge and command all manner of perſons here preſent, except Peers, Privy Counſellors, and the reverend Judges now aſſiſtant, to be uncovered.

Cl. of Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. O-Yes! My Lord High Steward of England his Grace ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all Juſtices, Commiſſioners, and all and every other perſon and perſons to whom any Writ or Precept has been directed, for the certifying of any Indictment or Record before his Grace my Lord High Steward of England, that they do certify and bring in the ſame forthwith, according to the Tenor of the ſame Writ and Precept, to them or any of them directed, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereon.

Then Sir Edward Lutwyche, one of his Majeſty's Serjeants at Law, and Chief Juſtice of Cheſter, delivered in his Writ and Return at the Clerks Table.

The Writ of Certiorari and the Return thereof were read in hæc verba.

* George Lord Jefferies.

* L. H. Steward. Call the Lieutenant of the Tower to return his Precept, and bring his Priſoner to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, return thy Writ and Precept to thee directed, together with the Body of Henry Baron of Delamere, thy Priſoner, forthwith, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereon.

The Priſoner was brought to the Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower: the Writ and Return thereof, together with his Grace's Precept, and the Return thereof were read in hæc verba.

Cl. of. Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. Sir Roger Harſnet Knight, Serjeant at Arms to our Sovereign Lord the King, return the Precept to thee directed, together with the Names of all the Lords and Noblemen of this Realm of England, Peers of Henry Baron of Delamere, by thee ſummoned, forthwith, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereon.

The Serjeant of Arms delivered in his Precept and Return at the Clerks Table.

L. H. Steward. Read the Precept and the Return.

They were read in hæc verba.

Cl. of Cr. Make an O-Yes.

Serj. At. Arms. O-Yes! All Dukes, Earls, Viſcounts, and Barons of this Realm of England, Peers of Henry Baron of Delamere, who, by Commandment of my Lord High Steward of England his Grace, were ſummoned to appear here this Day, and are now preſent in Court, anſwer to your names, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

The Peers ſummoned were called over, and thoſe that appeared, ſtanding up uncovered, anſwered to their Names, each making a Reverence to the Lord High Steward.

Then his Grace the Lord High Steward addreſſed himſelf to the Lord Delamere the Priſoner at the Bar in this manner.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, the King being acquainted that you ſtand accuſed of High-Treaſon, not by common Report or Hearſay, but by a Bill of Indictment found againſt you by Gentlemen of great Quality, and known Integrity within the County Palatine of Cheſter, the place of your Reſidence; has thought it neceſſary in Tenderneſs to you, as well as Juſtice to himſelf, to order you a ſpeedy Trial.

My Lord, if you know your ſelf innocent, in the name of God do not deſpond, for you may be aſſured of a fair and patient hearing, and in your proper time a free Liberty to make your full Defence: and I am ſure you cannot but be well convinced, that my Noble Lords that are here your Peers to try you, will be as deſirous and ready to acquit you, if you appear to be innocent, as they will to convict you if you be guilty.

But, my Lord, if you are conſcious to your ſelf that you are guilty of this heinous Crime, give Glory to God, make amends to his Vicegerent the King, by a plain and full diſcovery of your Guilt, and do not, by an obſtinate perſiſting in the Denial of it, provoke the juſt Indignation of your Prince, who has made it appear to the World, that his Inclinations are rather to ſhew Mercy than inflict Puniſhments. My Lord, attend with patience, and hear the Bill of Indictment that hath been found againſt you read. Read the Bill of Indictment to my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Henry Baron of Delamere, hold up thy Hand.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg your Grace would pleaſe to anſwer me one Queſtion, Whether a Peer of England be obliged by the Laws of this Land to hold up his Hand at the Bar, as a Commoner muſt do; and I aſk your Grace this queſtion the rather, becauſe in my Lord Stafford's Caſe it was allowed to be the Privilege of the Peers not to hold up their Hands.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, this being a matter of the Privilege of the Peerage, it is not fit for me to determine it one way or the other; but I think I may acquaint your Lordſhips, that in point of Law, if you are ſatisfied this is the Perſon indicted, the holding, or not holding, up of the Hand is but a Formality, which does not ſignify much either way.

L. Delamere. I humbly pray your Grace's direction in one thing farther, whether I muſt addreſs my ſelf to your Grace when I would ſpeak, or to your Grace with the reſt of theſe noble Lords my Peers.

L. H. Steward. You muſt direct what you have to ſay to me, my Lord.

L. Delamere. I beg your Grace would pleaſe to ſatisfy me, whether your Grace be one of my Judges in concurrence with the reſt of the Lords?

L. H. Steward. No, my Lord, I am Judge of the Court, but I am none of your Triers. Go on.

Cl. of Cr. HEnry Baron of Delamere, thou ſtandeſt indicted in the County Palatine of Cheſter by the Name of Henry Baron of Delamere of Mere in the ſaid County of Cheſter, for that thou as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt illuſtrious and moſt excellent Prince James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, thy natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid late Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and contriving, practiſing, and with all thy might intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb; and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to ſtir up, move, and procure, and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, change and alter, and our ſaid Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put; the fourteenth day of April in the firſt Year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord James the Second now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at Mere in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traitorouſly, with divers other falſe Traitors and Rebels, to the Jurors unknown, didſt conſpire, compaſs, imagine, and intend our ſaid Lord the King, thy ſupreme, true and natural Lord, not only from the Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England to deprive and caſt down, but alſo the ſame our Lord the King to kill, and to death to bring and put, and the antient Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King throughout his whole Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to procure and aſſiſt; and the ſame thy moſt wicked, moſt impious and deviliſh Treaſons and traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and bring to effect, thou the ſaid Henry

Baron of Delamere, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, to wit, the ſaid fourteenth day of April in the firſt Year aboveſaid, and divers other days and times as well before as after, at Mere aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, unlawfully, wickedly, and traitorouſly with Charles Gerrard, Eſq; and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, didſt aſſemble thy ſelf, gather together, conſult and agree to raiſe and procure divers great Sums of Money, and a great number of armed Men, War and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to levy and make, and the City of Cheſter in the County of the ſame City, as alſo the Caſtle of our ſaid Lord the King of Cheſter, at Cheſter in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, and all the Magazines in the ſame Caſtle then being, to enter, take, ſeize, and ſurprize, and into thy Poſſeſſion and Power to obtain: And that thou the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere afterwards, to wit, the 27*th* day of May, in the firſt Year aboveſaid, falſely, unlawfully, wickedly, and traitorouſly didſt take a Journey from the City of London unto Mere aforeſaid, in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, thy traitorous Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect: And that thou the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere, afterwards, to wit, the fourth day of June, in the firſt Year aboveſaid, at Mere aforeſaid, in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, in further Proſecution of thy unlawful, moſt wicked and traitorous Purpoſes aforeſaid, divers Liege People and Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, with thee the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere, and the aforeſaid other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, falſely, unlawfully, and traitorouſly, in the War and Rebellion aforeſaid, and in thy traitorous purpoſes aforeſaid, to join and adhere didſt excite, animate, and perſuade, againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that caſe made and provided. How ſay'ſt thou Henry Baron of Delamere, art thou Guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, and haſt been now arraign'd, or not Guilty?

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg the Indictment may be read again.

L. H. Steward. Let it be read again.

[Which was done.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, I humbly beg the favour to be heard a few Words before I plead to this Indictment.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am very unwilling to give your Lordſhip any Interruption, but according to the Methods of Law, which muſt be obſerved in your Caſe, as well as all others, you muſt plead to the Indictment before you be heard to any thing elſe.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, I have ſomething to offer to your Grace's and their Lordſhip's Conſideration which is a matter of Law.

L. H. Steward. I know not what matter of Law you have to offer: If you have a mind to demur to the Indictment, you may.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace pleaſe to hear what I have to ſay? And then I ſhall ſubmit it to your Grace's Judgment.

L. H. Steward. I would hear what you have to ſay, my Lord, with all my heart, If I could: But I muſt then paſs by all the Forms and uſual Methods of proceeding, and that without any advantage to you too, and that I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip will not deſire of me. Aſk my Lord, whether he be guilty, or not guilty?

Cl. of Cr. How ſay'ſt thou, Henry Baron of Delamere, art thou guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou haſt been indicted, or not guilty?

L. Delamere. I beſeech your Grace to hear me what I have to ſay; I ſhall not detain your Grace very long, but I beg your Grace to hear me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I muſt keep you to the known Rules and Methods of Law: This is not your time to ſpeak, but to plead; in your proper time you ſhall be fully heard whatſoever you have to ſay.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have ſomething to ſay which concerns all the Peers of England in point of Right.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you muſt either plead, or demur to this Indictment, that is the uſual Practice before any thing elſe can be done.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have a Plea to offer to your Grace and my Lords; and it is with reference to the Privilege and Right of the Peers of England.

L. H. Steward. If you have any Plea to offer, it muſt be received, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, amidſt the Hardſhips I have lain under by my frequent Impriſonments and cloſe Confinement———

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, you muſt keep up to the Legal Method of Proceedings: In Caſes of this nature I would, as far as is poſſible for me to do, indulge a Perſon of your Quality, and in your Condition; but withal I muſt do right to the Court, and not permit any Breach to be made upon the legal Courſe of Proceedings. You muſt plead, or demur to the Indictment, before you are heard to ſay any thing.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace be pleaſed to hear me tell you my Reaſons why I offer you a Plea of this nature to the Indictment.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Plea, put it in.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace be pleas'd to accept it as I have done it? It may be it is not ſo formal, becauſe I have had no Counſel allowed me to peruſe and ſign it. But as it is, I here offer it to your Grace's Conſideration.

L. H. Steward. Ay, put it in.

[Then it was delivered to the Clerk.

L. H. Steward. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. The humble Plea of Henry Lord Delamere, to the Indictment of High-Treaſon againſt him, now to be tried by the Lord High Steward and Peers here aſſembled.

THE ſaid Lord Delamere, ſaving to himſelf all benefit of Advantage of any further or other matter of Exception to the Generality, Incertainty, or Inſufficience of the ſaid Indictment, and all matters and things which do or may concern the ſame, for Plea hereunto ſaith,

That he was by His Majeſty's Writ ſummoned to this preſent Parliament, which began the Nineteenth Day of May laſt, and attended his Duty there as a Peer of this Realm.

That for High-Treaſon ſuppoſed to be committed by him, during the Sitting of the ſame Parliament, he was the Twenty-ſixth Day of July laſt, committed, by Warrant of the Earl of Sunderland, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, to the Tower of London.

That the Peers in Parliament aſſembled, taking notice by his Petition of the Ninth of November laſt, of his being abſent from his Attendance in Parliament, ſent a Meſſage to his Majeſty to know the Reaſon Reaſon why he the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere, a Peer of that Houſe, was abſent from his Attendance there.

Upon the Tenth Day of November laſt, the Lord Treaſurer reported his Majeſty's Anſwer to the ſaid Meſſage, viz. That the ſaid Lord Delamere was abſent from his Attendance in Parliament, becauſe he ſtood committed for High-Treaſon, for levying War againſt the King this laſt Summer, teſtified upon Oath, and that his Majeſty had given Directions that he ſhould be proceeded againſt with all ſpeed according to Law.

The Houſe of Peers not being ſatisfied with this Anſwer, the Debate thereof was adjourn'd till the Monday Morning following

On which Day the Lords reſuming the Debate concerning the Lord Delamere and the King's Meſſage; after ſome Debate, the Lord Chancellor by his Majeſty's Command, gave the Houſe an Account what Proceedings had been againſt the Lord Delamere ſince his Majeſty's Anſwer to their Addreſs concerning his abſence from the Houſe; which was to this Effect:

That the King had given Order for a ſpeedy Proſecution of him: That the Treaſon whereof he was accuſed was committed in Cheſhire; and that being a County Palatine, the Proſecution ought to be there, and not in the King's-Bench; as it might be if the Treaſon had been committed in another County: and that therefore his Majeſty had given Order for a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer into Cheſhire, in order to the finding of an Indictment againſt him for the ſaid Treaſon. And that accordingly a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was already ſealed; and if the Indictment be not found before the End of the Term, the ſaid Lord Delamere's Prayer being entred in the King's-Bench, he ſhould be bailed.

All which Proceedings do more fully appear in the Journals of the ſaid Houſe of Peers; to which the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere doth refer himſelf.

Afterwards, that is to ſay, upon the Day of the ſaid Parliament was prorogued by his Majeſty unto the Tenth Day of February next, as by the ſaid Journals it doth appear.

Upon all which Matters the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere doth humbly tender this his Plea to the Juriſdiction of your Lordſhips in this Cauſe, and doth humbly conceive your Lordſhips ought not to proceed in the Trial of him upon the Indictment of High-Treaſon now before you: And that for theſe following Reaſons.

Firſt, Inaſmuch as it appears by the ſaid Petition of the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere, and the ſeveral Orders of the Lords, and the King's Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Lords thereupon. That the ſaid Houſe are already poſſeſſed of his ſaid Cauſe, which is the ſame ſuppoſed Treaſon for which he was at firſt committed, and which is the ſame Treaſon for which he now ſtands indicted before your Lordſhips. And for this Reaſon, your Lordſhips, as he humbly conceives, by the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, which is part of the Law and Cuſtom of the Land, ought not to proceed againſt him upon the ſaid Indictment; but his ſaid Cauſe ought wholly to be determined and adjudged in the ſaid Houſe of Peers, and not elſewhere, as in like Caſes has been formerly done.

Secondly, Whereas it is the Right and Privilege of the Peerage of this Realm, That no Peer thereof ought to be tried or proceeded againſt for High-Treaſon during the Continuance of the Parliament, except in the ſaid Houſe of Peers, and before the whole Body of the Peers there: And, whereas the aforeſaid Parliament is now continuing by Proroga tion, until the Tenth Day of February next aboveſaid, the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere humbly conceives that by the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament hitherto uſed, which is Part of the Law and Cuſtom of the Realm, he ought not, nor can be tried before your Lordſhips for the ſaid Treaſons, becauſe the ſaid Parliment is ſtill continuing, and not diſſolved.

And laſtly, The ſaid Henry Lord Delamere doth further ſay, That he is the ſame Henry Lord Delamere mentioned in the Commitment, Petitions, Meſſages, Anſwers and Indictment now read unto him, and the ſaid Treaſon for which he was committed, it is the ſame Treaſon mentioned in the Commitment, Petition, Meſſages, Anſwers, and Indictment, as aforeſaid.

To which ſaid Indictment he humbly conceives he is not bound by Law to make any further or other Anſwer.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my Noble Lords, I do not offer this Plea out of any Diffidence or Diſtruſt in my Cauſe, nor out of any Diſlike I have to any of your Lordſhips that are here ſummoned to be my Triers; I cannot hope to ſtand before any more juſt and noble, nor can I wiſh to ſtand before any others: but your Grace, and my Lords will pardon me if I inſiſt upon it, becauſe I apprehend it a Right and Privilege due to all the Peerage of England; which, as it is againſt the Duty of every Peer to betray or forego, ſo it is not in the power of any one, or more, to wave it, or give it up without the Conſent of the whole Body of the Peers, every one of them being equally intereſted.

This, my Lord, I humbly demand as my Right and Privilege as a Peer of England, and ſubmit to the Direction of your Grace and my Noble Lords.

L. H. Steward. What ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. *Attorney. May it pleaſe your Grace, This Plea that is here offered by this Noble Lord, is a Plea to the Juriſdiction; but, with Submiſſion, it needs very little Anſwer, for it has very little in it: The Force of the Plea is, That he ought to be tried by the whole Body of the Houſe of Peers in Parliament, becauſe the Parliament is ſtill continuing, being under a Prorogation, and not diſſolved; and becauſe there was ſome agitation of the Matter concerning this Proſecution, upon his Petition, in the Houſe of Lords; and therefore it concludes, That he ought not to be tried by your Grace and theſe Noble Lords upon this Commiſſion, but by all the Lords in Parliament. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, this is contrary to all the antient Precedents, and againſt the known Rules of Law; for the Law is, if the King pleaſes to try a Peer in Parliament, then the Record may be brought into the Houſe, and there they proceed as in other Caſes, and all the Peers are Judges. Thus it is in the time of a Seſſion of Parliament; but if the Parliament be prorogued, there are many Inſtances (and indeed none to the contrary) that after a Prorogation, the Proceedings are before the High-Steward by Commiſſion. And as to the other part of the Caſe, I have this to ſay to it, that there is nothing at all depending in the Houſe of Lords that can ouſt this Court of the Juriſdiction; for there was not ſo much as any Indictment return'd there, no, nor ſo much as found during the Seſſion of Parliament. All the Agitation was only upon my Lord's Petition, and the King's Anſwer; that he intended as ſpeedy a Proſecution as could be: Beſides, my Lord, your Grace ſees it is a Plea in Paper and in Engliſh, without our out any Counſel's Hand, and therefore I hope your Grace does not expect that I ſhould formally demur to a Plea in this Form, and that contains no more of Subſtance in it. But I muſt deſire your Grace to over-rule it, and that the Priſoner may plead in chief.

* Sir Robert Sawyer.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly pray that I may have Counſel aſſign'd me, to put my Plea into Form, and to argue the matter of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am ſure I ought, and ever ſhall be as tender of the Privileges of the Peers of England, as any other Perſon whatſoever: For I am concerned, as well in Intereſt as Inclination ſo to be, having the Honour to be one myſelf: But I know your Lordſhip will not think the Privilege of the Peers is concern'd in this matter; nor will your Lordſhip, I dare ſay, inſiſt upon matters that are purely dilatory, if your Lordſhip be ſatisfied that they are ſo: And therefore give me leave, my Lord, to mind you of a few things, whereby your Lordſhip will eaſily ſee, that the chief things on which you inſiſt, are grounded upon Miſtakes. Firſt, you ſay, the Houſe of Peers was poſſeſs'd of the Cauſe; which could not be, and I will tell you why; becauſe there was no Indictment ever removed thither, or lodg'd there: which plainly proves that the Lords were never poſſeſs'd of the Cauſe. Nor indeed was the Bill found, upon which you are now arraigned, till after the Prorogation of the Parliament. So that they could never come to be poſſeſs'd of this matter. Theſe are Miſtakes in point of Fact, and your Lordſhip cannot but well know them to be ſo.

And there is a great Miſtake in the Law, that during the continuance of a Parliament (tho' it were prorogued, yet if not diſſolved) a Peer cannot be tried but by the Houſe of Lords. This certainly is a very ſtrange Doctrine, and is not only againſt the reaſon and methods of Law, but contrary even to your Lordſhip's own Experience: For your Lordſhip cannot but very well remember, that during the continuance of the Parliament, after a Prorogation, the Lord Cornwallis *, was tried before the High Steward, and ſuch a number of Peers as were then ſummoned, upon ſuch a Commiſſion as I now ſit here by. But indeed during the Sitting of the Parliament, then all the Peers are both Triers and Judges, as was in the Caſes of my Lord Stafford *, and my Lord of Pembroke †; they being a Court of Judicature, then actually ſitting: and therefore this Plea is grounded as upon miſtake in Fact, ſo upon a miſtake in point of Law. So that though as I ſaid at firſt, it is both my Duty and Intereſt to preſerve the Privileges of the Peers, yet I muſt take care that no Injury be done to the Law, and truly I take this Plea to be altogether dilatory, and I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip is ſatisfied of it, and will not inſiſt upon it.

* Trial 77.

* Trial 101.
† Trial 73.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, it was alledg'd and agreed in the Caſe of my Lord of Briſtol, that the Cauſe of a Peer in time of Parliament properly belong'd only to the Houſe of Lords; and that which poſſeſs'd the Houſe of Lords of his Caſe, was, as I apprehend, no more than is in my Caſe, a Petition upon the account of being abſent; and there the Lords claim the Cognizance of the whole Cauſe, and nothing was done but in the Houſe of Lords. And as to the Inſtances your Grace has mention'd of my Lord Cornwallis (and there was another of them, my Lord Morley ‖) this Queſtion was never under Debate in thoſe Caſes; therefore I ſuppoſe they cannot be admitted as Precedents.

L. H. Steward. But, my Lord, it would have been an Error in the whole Proceedings, if this Court had not Juriſdiction: And ſure the Judges who are always call'd to aſſiſt in ſuch Caſes; and who, in Matters of Life, even in the Caſes of common Perſons, are ſo tender and careful, that there be no Irregularity in the Proceedings, would not have let things paſs in that manner, had they been erroneous.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I think no other Precedents are produced but thoſe two, and there the Queſtion was never debated.

L. H. Steward I only put you in mind of thoſe that were lately within Memory; but no queſtion of it there are a great many more Inſtances to be given.

Mr. At. Gen. I pray your Grace's Judgment to over-rule the Plea, and that my Lord may plead in chief.

L. Delamere. I hope your Grace will be pleas'd to aſſign me Counſel to put my Plea in Form; and that I may have time for it, that they may be heard to make a ſolemn Argument in Law.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you inſiſt upon it and think it worth the while to have Counſel heard we will hear them.

L. Delamere. I ſubmit it to your Grace, I only offer it that I may not be wanting to the ſupport of the Peers Privileges; I aſſure your Grace, I ſpeak not to put off the Cauſe, for I am willing to come to my Trial, and I have reaſon ſo to be, for I queſtion not but to make my Innocence appear.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I tell you what my opinion of the Plea is, but if you inſiſt upon it to have your Counſel heard, I will hear them.

L. Delamere. I have no Counſel here, if your Grace pleaſe to give me time to ſend for them, and that they may prepare to argue it.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, if your Grace will hear Counſel, I for the King muſt pray that it may be done preſently; for a Plea to the Juriſdiction is never favoured, nor is the Party to be allow'd time to maintain it, but he muſt be ready at the time it is offer'd.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, how was it done in the Caſe of Fitzharris *? His Plea was a Plea to the Juriſdiction, and he had four Days allow'd him to put his Plea in form, and to inſtruct his Counſel.

* Trial 102.

L. H. Steward. I am not able at preſent to remember what was done in ſuch or ſuch a particular Caſe: But according to the general Method and Courſe of Law, the Plea to the Juriſdiction is not favoured, nor time allowed to it, but the Party muſt be ready to maintain it preſently.

Mr. At. Gen. But, with ſubmiſſion, my Lord, that Caſe of Fitzharris is nothing to this noble Lord's Caſe neither: There was a formal Plea put in Writing, and drawn up in Latin, and a formal Demurrer joined; and thereupon I did take time to ſpeak to it. But, with your Grace's favour, by the Law, the Priſoner muſt be always ready to make good his Plea, if he will ouſt the Court of their Juriſdiction.

L. H. Steward. Mr. Attorney, if my Lord Delamere does inſiſt upon having his Counſel heard, it is not fit for me to refuſe hearing what they can ſay.

‖ He was tried by his Peers for Murder, April 30, 1666 Keeling's Reports 53.

Mr. At. Gen. But that muſt be preſently then, my Lord.

L. Delamere. It is my Duty, my Lord, to ſubmit to what your Grace and my noble Lords ſhall determine: I would inſiſt upon nothing that ſhould offend your Grace or them.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Grace pleaſes, you are the only Judge in this Caſe in Matters of Law: For theſe noble Lords, the Peers, are only Triers of the Fact. Therefore I appeal to your Grace's Judgment, and pray for the King, that this Plea may be over-ruled; it being vitious and naught, both in Form and Subſtance.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I muſt acquaint you, that according to the Conſtitution of this Court, Matters of Law are determined by me, as the ſole Judge, while I have the Honour to act under this Commiſſion: But if your Lordſhip inſiſt upon it, to have your Counſel heard, God forbid that I ſhould deny it you. I will hear what your Counſel will ſay; and afterwards I will, according to the beſt of my Underſtanding, deliver my Judgment.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have never had any Counſel aſſigned me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Counſel ready, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe to aſſign me Counſel, and give me time to ſend for them, and them time to prepare, I will obey your Grace's Directions; but I could have none here ready, becauſe none were aſſigned me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you cannot, by the Courſe of Law, have Counſel allowed you in the Caſe of a Capital Crime, till ſuch time as the Court, where you are called to anſwer, is apprized that there is ſome matter of Law in your Caſe, that may need Counſel to be heard, to inform their Judgment, and which they may think convenient to hear Counſel to: For if in caſe any Priſoner at the Bar ſhall before-hand be allowed to have Counſel to ſtart frivolous Objections, ſuch as this (and we all know, that there are ſome, who will be eaſily prevailed with to endeavour to pick holes where there are none) and to offer Matters foreign from the things whereof the Party ſtands accuſed; and upon the Priſoner's bare Requeſt, Counſel muſt be heard to every trivial Point, the Courts of Law would never be at an end in any Trial; but ſome dilatory Matter or other would be found to retard the Proceedings: But it does not conſiſt with the Grandeur of the Court, nor your Lordſhip's Intereſt, to let ſuch a frivolous Plea interrupt your Lordſhip's Trial. However, if your Lordſhip has Counſel ready, I will not refuſe to hear them.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I hope the Privilege of the Peers of England, is not frivolous. I aſſure your Grace, I do not offer this matter, as if I thought it more conducing to my Intereſt, than my Trial now. No, my Lord, it is not for my ſelf, but for the whole Body of Peers, of which I have the Honour to be a Member: And if my Lords here are ſatisfied it is not the Right and Privilege of the Peers, I acquieſce.

L. H. Steward. Pray, good my Lord, do not think that I ſhould ſay any ſuch thing, that the Privilege of the Peers is frivolous; for you do not hear me ſay, That this is one of their Privileges. As I would not willingly miſtake you, ſo I deſire your Lordſhip would not miſapprehend or miſrepreſent me. I ſpoke not at all of the Peers Privilege, but of your Plea: I tell your Lordſhip, I think your Plea is not a good Plea, to ouſt this Court of the Juriſdiction of your Cauſe. But if your Lordſhip have a mind to have your Counſel heard to it, in God's Name let them come; they ſhall be heard: And when that is done, to ſatisfy you the more, I will adviſe with my Lords the Judges, that are there to aſſiſt, what they take to be the Law in the Caſe; and, upon the whole, I will deliver my Judgment as well as I can.

L. Delamere. I hope your Grace will be pleas'd to adviſe with my Lords the Peers here preſent; it being upon a Point of Privilege.

L. H. Steward. Good my Lord, I hope you that are a Priſoner at the Bar, are not to give me Direction, who I ſhould adviſe with, or how I ſhould demean my ſelf here.

L. Delamere. I beg your Grace's Pardon; I did not intend to give your Grace any Direction.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I ſhall take care to perform that Duty that is incumbent upon me, and that with all Tenderneſs to your Lordſhip: And, I aſſure your Lordſhip, I will have as much care that I do not injure you, as I will that I do not wrong my own Conſcience; and I will endeavour to diſcharge my Duty to both, with the utmoſt Fidelity.

L. Delamere. I humbly thank your Grace; I queſtion it not: But if your Grace pleaſe ——

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you muſt pardon me; I can enter into no further Interlocutions with your Lordſhip. If your Lordſhip have any mind to have Counſel heard, and your Counſel be ready, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. If your Grace require of me to produce Counſel preſently, and they to argue it immediately, I muſt acquaint your Grace, I cannot do it: For I have none here.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I cannot tell how to help it: the Plea muſt then be over-ruled and rejected.

Clerk of the Crown. Henry Baron of Delamere, art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, and haſt been now arraign'd, or not Guilty?

L. Delamere. Not Guilty.

Clerk of the Crown. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

L. Delamere. By God, and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O-Yes! If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, againſt Henry Baron of Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, concerning the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard: for now he ſtands at the Bar, upon his Deliverance

Then his Grace gave the Charge to the Peers Triers in this manner:

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I know you cannot but well remember, what unjuſt and inſolent Attempts were made upon the rightful and unalterable Succeſſion to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, under the pretence of that which has been ſo often found to be the Occaſion of Rebellion, I mean, the ſpecious Pretence of Religion, by the fierce, froward, and phanatical Zeal of ſome Members of the Houſe of Commons, in the laſt Parliaments under the late King Charles the Second, of ever-bleſſed Memory.

Which, by the wonderful Providence of Almighty God, not prevailing, the chief Contrivers of that horrid Villany, conſulted together how to gain that Advantage upon the Monarchy by open Force, which they could not obtain by a pretended Courſe of Law.

And in order thereto, it is too well known, how they had ſeveral treaſonable Meetings, made bold and riotous Progreſſes into ſeveral Parts of the King's Dominions; thereby endeavouring to debauch the Minds of the well-meaning, though unwary and ignorant, Part of the King's Subjects.

But theſe their evil Purpoſes, it pleaſed God alſo to fruſtrate, by bringing to light that curſed Conſpiracy againſt the Life of his ſacred Majeſty, King Charles the Second; as alſo, againſt that of our dread Sovereign, that now is, whom God long preſerve.

Theſe helliſh and damnable Plots, one would have thought, could not have ſurvived the juſt Condemnation and Execution of ſome of the chief Contrivers of them; eſpecially conſidering, that after it had pleaſed Almighty God to take to himſelf our late merciful and dread Sovereign, no ſooner was his ſacred Majeſty, that now is, ſeated in the Royal Throne of his Anceſtors, but he made it his utmoſt Endeavours, not only to convince the World, that he had quite forgot thoſe impudent and abominable Indignities that had been put upon him, only for being the beſt of Subjects, and the beſt of Brothers; but did alſo give forth the moſt Benign Aſſurances imaginable to all his loving People, that he would approve himſelf to be the beſt of Kings.

And further to evince the Reality of theſe his Gracious and Heroick Reſolutions, he immediately called a Parliament; and therein repeated, and ſolemnly confirmed his former Royal Declarations of having a particular Care of maintaining our eſtabliſh'd Laws and Religion: With which that Wiſe, Great, and Loyal Aſſembly, were ſo fully and perfectly ſatisfied, that they thought they could not make ſufficient Returns of Gratitude for ſuch Gracious and Princely Condeſcenſions.

And yet, my Lords, while the King and the Parliament were thus, as I may ſay, endeavouring to out-do each other in Expreſſions of Kindneſs, that wicked and unnatural Rebellion broke out; and thereupon the Arch-Traitor, Monmouth, was, by a Bill brought into the Lower Houſe, and paſs'd by the general Conſent of both Houſes, (and I could wiſh, my Lords, for the ſake of that Noble Lord at the Bar, that I could ſay, it had paſs'd the Conſent of every particular Member of each Houſe) juſtly attainted of High-Treaſon.

My Lords, what ſhare my Lord at the Bar had in thoſe other matters, I muſt acquaint you, is not within the compaſs of this Indictment, for which you are to try him, as his Peers; for that is for a Treaſon alledged to have been committed by him, in his Majeſty's Reign that now is.

Give me leave, my Lords, to detain you but with a Word or two more on this occaſion; and that is, to let you know, that as my Lord at the Bar may, with great ſafety and ſecurity to himſelf, rely upon your Lordſhips Candor and Integrity, that you will be tenderly careful, and ready to acquit him of the Treaſon whereof he is accuſed, if, upon the Evidence that ſhall be given you, you ſhall find him innocent: So I muſt tell you, the King has an entire confidence in your Reſolution, Fidelity, and good Affections to him, that you will not, by reaſon of the Priſoner's quality, and nearneſs to you, as being a Peer of this Realm, acquit him if he ſhall appear to be guilty.

My Lords, I have one thing further to mind your Lordſhips of, that, according to the uſual Forms of Proceedings in theſe Caſes, if your Lordſhips have any Queſtions to propound, wherein you would be ſatisfied as to any Matter, either of Fact or Law, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to put thoſe Queſtions to me, and I ſhall take care to give your Lordſhips the beſt Satisfaction I can.

L. Delamere. My Lord High Steward, I beg the favour of your Grace, I may have one to write for me.

L. H. Steward. Ay, by all means. Let my Lord have whom he pleaſes to write for him.

Mr. * Recorder. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and you my noble Lords, the Peers of the Priſoner at the Bar: Henry Baron of Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted, for that he, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt illuſtrious and moſt excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, the 14th day of April laſt, at Mere, in the County of Cheſter, did maliciouſly conſpire, with other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, the death and depoſing of the King: And for the better and more effectual fulfilling of thoſe his Treaſons, the ſaid 14th day of April, at Mere aforeſaid, did maliciouſly and traitorouſly aſſemble, conſult, and agree with Charles Gerrard Eſq; and other falſe Traitors, to raiſe great Sums of Money, and procure Numbers of armed Men, to make a Rebellion againſt the King, and the City and Caſtle of Cheſter to ſeize, with the Magazines there; and that afterwards, the 27th day of May laſt, he took a Journey from London to Mere aforeſaid, to accompliſh his treaſonable Intentions. And further, that upon the 4th day of June, in further proſecution of his traitorous Purpoſes, at Mere aforeſaid, he did incite divers Subjects of our Lord the King, to join with him, and other falſe Traitors, in his Treaſon. And this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that caſe made and provided. To this Indictment, may it pleaſe your Grace, and the reſt of theſe noble Lords, my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, has pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial, has put himſelf upon his Peers. We ſhall therefore call our Witneſſes for the King; and if we prove him guilty, we do not queſtion but your Lordſhips will find him ſo.

* Sir Thomas Jenner.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and you my noble Lords the Peers: My Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for conſpiring the Death of his Majeſty, and in order thereunto to raiſe a Rebellion in the Kingdom.

My Lords, in proving this Charge upon him, we crave leave to give your Grace, and your Lordſhips ſome ſhort Account, by Witneſſes that we have here, of a former Deſign that was previous to this matter, for which this noble Lord ſtands here accuſed: And we ſhall not trouble your Grace, and your Lordſhips, with any long Evidence, becauſe it has received many ſolemn and repeated Trials; and, as to the proof of it, has been confirmed by as many Verdicts. But we do it, rather to give ſome account, as an Introduction to a material Evidence, by ſhewing, that Cheſhire, which was the Province of this noble Lord, was one of the Stages where that Rebellion was principally to be acted; and that, preparatory to it, great riotous Assemblies, and tumultuous Gatherings of the People, were set on foot by the Conspirators.

We shall then shew, my Lords, that after the late Duke of Monmouth, (the Head of the Conspiracy) went beyond Sea, (especially after the death of the late King) frequent Messages, and Intercourse of Correspondency, were sent and held between him, and the rest of his Accomplices abroad, and their Fellow-Conspirators here at home.

And particularly, we shall prove, that a little before the Rebels came over last Summer into the West, the Duke of Monmouth did dispatch one Jones, (who was one of the most considerable Agents in this Contrivance) to come from Holland into England, to let his Friends know, that tho' he had intended to go into Scotland, and begin his Work there, yet now his Resolutions were for England; where, he hoped, his Friends would be prepared for him. And with this Message and Resolution of his, Jones was to acquaint some Lords, (who they were, the Witness will tell your Lordships, but) among others, this noble Lord, the Prisoner, was one: And to acquaint them, besides, that he would immediately set sail for England, whether he would come so soon as he could get. That he had a Design to have landed in Cheshire, where he expected to be most readily receiv'd; but finding that inconvenient, they should have notice four or five Days before-hand, of the Place of his landing which he intended should be in the West. And, among the Directions that Jones had to give to those Lords, one was, that they should immediately repair into Cheshire, there to wait for the News.

These Instructions Jones had given him in Writing, but sealed up, with an injunction not to open them till he came to Sea; and then he was to peruse that Writing, and deliver his Message according to his Instructions: And in that Writing was the name of this noble Lord, as one that was principally relied on, to carry on the Rebellion in Cheshire. And we shall give you an account, that the late Duke of Monmouth did look upon Cheshire as one of his main Supports, and upon my Lord Delamare as a principal Assistant there.

My Lord, this Message was Jones to communicate to Captain Matthews, and Captain Matthews was to transmit it to this noble Lord, and the other Persons that were concern'd with him. Jones arrived with this Message here in England upon the 27th of May: [And I must beg your Lordships to observe the Time particularly.] But Captain Matthews, to whom he was directed, was not to be found; nor Major Wildman, to whom, in the absence of Captain Matthews, he was to apply himself, as you will hear more fully from the Witness's own Mouth: Thereupon he sends for one Disney, (a Name which your Lordships cannot but know, he being since executed for Treason) and one Brand, whom your Lordships will likewise hear of; and they meet with the same Jones, who communicates his Message to them, and they undertake to deliver it to the Persons concern'd; Captain Matthews being out of Town, and Major Wildman not to be found.

That very Night, my Lords, this same Brand, and Disney they meet this Noble Lord, my Lord Delamere, at the Coffee-House, and give him an Account of the Messages: And as soon as ever he had received the Message, upon that Twenty-Seventh of May, at ten of the clock at Night, does my Lord Delamere dispatch out of Town, with only one Servant to attend him, and two other Friends that he had pick'd up, or appointed to meet him, and go with him.

With all these Badges of Plot and Design, does my Lord Delamere set out that Night. It was the same Night that Jones came to Town: It was late at Night. He changed his Name, and went by the Name of Brown. He chose to go all the By-Roads, and would not keep the high common Road; and went with great speed, as we cannot but presume according to the Message delivered by Jones, on purpose to repair into Cheshire.

And if your Lordships please to observe, you will find several remarkable Instances of Plot and Contrivance in the matter: First, That a Nobleman, and one of so considerable a Character in his Country, as my Lord Delamere, should make such haste out of Town with so small an Equipage, as but one Servant. Then, that he should go so late at Night: Again, that he should change his Name; and that should prove to be a Name not casually taken up, as the first Name he could think of next his own; but a Name of distinction, that he was known by among all his own Party: For all the Communications between the Confederates and him, were managed, as to him, under the Name of Brown. By that Name, several of the late Duke of Monmouth's Traitorous Declarations were sent for; which were to be sent to him, or by him, into Cheshire: And that alone, with Submission, my Lords. would be a shrewd Circumstance of Suspicion, that a Noble Lord, such an one as my Lord Delamere, should assume the Name of a Commoner, and post out of Town so ill accompanied in a Disguise at that time of Night; especially the Parliament being then sitting, as really it was,

But besides all this Circumstantial Evidence, we shall prove, by Positive Testimony, what the hasty Business was, that made my Lord undertake this Journey in this manner: For, having notice of the Duke of Monmouth's Intention to land speedily in England, when he comes into Cheshire, he actually sets about the Work to put that County in a forwardness to assist in the Rebellion, endeavours to stir up the People to join with him; and acquaints one that he imployed in that Affair, with the whole Design, that he was engaged to raise so many Thousand Men, and so much Money, to be ready by such a a Day.

Nor does my Lord rest here: But, after the Duke of Monmouth was landed in the West, to corrupt the Minds of the People, we shall prove what Discourses he had, (and these will testify his Inclinations to the Cause) concerning the great Victories he had obtained over the King's Forces, and how he applauded his Conquests.

My Lords, we shall plainly shew you all this that I have opened in plain Proof: And then, we shall submit it to your Lordships Judgments, whether this noble Peer be Not Guilty, as he has pleaded to his Indictment.

L. H. Steward. Call your Witnesses, Mr. Attorney: Who do you begin with?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Howard of Eſcrick : We deſire he may be firſt ſworn. [Which was done.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you aſk my Lord Howard ?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I call you to give an Account what you know of a Deſign of an Inſurrection that was to have been ; and in what Parts ; and what ſhare Cheſhire was to have had in it, in the late King's Time.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Queſtion ; what ſay you to it, my Lord ?

L. Howard. My Lord, I am to direct my ſelf to ſpeak to what was done in the late King's Time : For as to that Noble Lord at the Bar, I have nothing to ſay againſt him.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Howard, if I apprehend Mr. Attorney aright, you are not called as a particular Witneſs againſt my Lord Delamere ; but only to give an Account, what was agreed upon in any Conſultations, where you were preſent, in the late King's Time, about a Conſpiracy for an Inſurrection ?

L. Howard. If ſo, my Lord, then I am called not to be an Evidence againſt my Lord Delamere, but againſt my Self ; that is, to repeat what I have often delivered at ſeveral Trials, in the Courts of Juſtice ; and which I muſt always repeat, with Shame and Confuſion for my Guilt, as I cannot but always reflect upon it with Sorrow and Horror. But if it be for the Service of his Majeſty, and this Honourable Court, for me ſo to do, I ſhall endeavour to comply with it, and repeat it as well as I can, by the Aſſiſtance of a broken Memory ; it being an Account of things done ſeveral Years paſt, and from a Memory interrupted by ſuch Accidents as are very well known, and as have diſabled me to make a more diſtinct and particular Relation before ſo great an Auditory.

My Lords, I ſuppoſe, it will be expected, I ſhould begin my Account with the Occaſion and Ground, and the Time when thoſe Things happened.

L. H. Steward. Take your own Method, my Lord.

L. Howard. Truly, my Lord, I am not able to fix the particular time, unleſs you will give me leave to reckon the Years by the Sheriffs of London, as the Romans uſed to do theirs by their Conſuls ; for I have no other means of computing the exact Time.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, tell the Times as near as you can, and uſe what helps for your Memory you think beſt.

L. Howard. My Lords, it was in that Year, when Mr. Shute and Mr. Pilkington were Sheriffs, for the City of London : And at that time, it is well known how great Heats did ariſe upon the Conteſts that were in the City, about Election of Officers for the Year enſuing——

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord Delamere ſeems to be faint with ſtanding If your Grace pleaſe, a Chair may be provided for my Lord to ſit in.

L. H. Steward. Ay, by all means : Let a Chair be provided for my Lord to ſit down. Go on, my Lord.

L. Howard. My Lord, I was ſaying, that the Conteſt about the diſputed Election of Sheriffs, had occaſioned ſuch Heats in the City of London, and other Places, that it was even beyond the common expreſſions of diſcontent. I knew nothing of any particular Deſign there was in hand till about ſix Weeks after, when Captain Walcot came to me, a Perſon I had known ſome time before, and upon diſcourſe, acquainted me, that he had found out that there were ſome Perſons engaged in a conſiderable Action that was near its Execution ; and that in order to it, he had had notice given him to make preparation, and thereupon he had thought fit, for that reaſon, to withdraw from the place where he did at that time lodge, (which was in Red-Lion Court in Fleet-ſtreet, as I remember) and betake himſelf to a private Lodging, that he might be the readier for Action ; and to put himſelf into a better Equipage for joining in the Enterprize, he had bought himſelf a Horſe, and ſent his Son into Ireland to turn all he could into ready Money, and return it, that he might be the better able to go through with the Undertaking. My Lords, this was a great ſurpriſe to me ; for though I knew, as all the reſt of the World did, that there were great diſcontents, yet, till then, I never had any intimation of any particular deſign. I told him I was going into the Country, but ſhould be glad to know how things went, and deſired him to write to me, and gave him a little Cabala or Cypher to diſguiſe the matter he was to write about. And when I was in the Country, I did receive ſeveral Letters which intimated ſomething of a Deſign that was going on, and at laſt he writ with ſome warmth to me, of a neceſſity we were under to enter into Action, and of the readineſs of my Correſpondents ; (for the Style of the Letters was that of Merchants, for ſo was the Cant that I had given him :) But truly I was not over-haſty in my return to London, becauſe I rather choſe to ſee what would be the Iſſue of what was then projected, before I did intermeddle in ſuch an Affair, and ſo made uſe of all the delays I could to retard my return, and came not to Town till that Week which determined the long continued Controverſy in London. Nay, and then alſo avoided meeting with any body in any ſet-way, till I could better ſee how things were managed, and what event they would probably come to : thereupon I would not go to my own Houſe, but took up my Lodging at Mile-end, and lay three or four Days, till the Day came for confirming the new-elected Sheriffs, and the Election of a new Lord Mayor, which, as I take it, is on the day before Michaelmas-day, and Michaelmas-day. When that day was over, I could not find there was any Intention of entering into any ſort of Action ; I found indeed there were great Murmurings in the mouths of all ſorts of People, and very angry warm Speeches, and nothing elſe : So I thought the buſineſs was over for that time, and thereupon away I went to my own Houſe. This, my Lords, was upon the Saturday, as I remember : Upon the Monday Morning Captain Walcot came to me, and deſired that he might have ſome private diſcourſe with me in my Garden ; and there he told me, my Lord Shaftesbury had withdrawn himſelf, and that he did believe things were in a great Preparation for Action. I deſired him to tell me what it was ; he anſwered me, That he deſired to be excuſed in that, for I muſt go to my Lord Shaftesbury, who would give me an account of the whole : and withal he told me, my Lord Shaftesbury had been much deſerted and ill uſed by thoſe Lords upon whoſe concurrence he had rely'd, and that was the reaſon why he had withdrawn himſelf, and kept himſelf ſo private. I told him, I did not know my Lord Shaftesbury had any deſire to ſpeak with me. Yes, he ſaid he had, for he had ſent him to me on purpoſe, and he was to bring back my anſwer, whether I would join or no. I told him, if my Lord deſired to ſpeak with me, I would wait upon him; and thereupon I went with him, and he carried me to a place where my Lord Shaftesbury was retired into the City, ſomewhere about Foſter-Lane or Wood-Street, at the houſe of one Watſon. When I came there, after Salutation, my Lord Shafteſbury began to make great reflections upon the Miſery and Badneſs of the Times, particularly, upon the iſſue of that great Affair, the Election of the Sheriffs, which had ended ſo unfortunately to the Terror of all good men: For whereas before, the great and ſure reſort of innocency was to the Integrity of our Juries, when returned by fair and equal Sheriffs, they looked upon the eagerneſs of getting thoſe Perſons ſworn that were then in Office to be a deſign to intrap the innocent, the elected Sheriffs being eſteemed perſons that would accommodate themſelves to the humour of the Court; and now every man muſt be run down for Crimes that he was no way guilty of, if the finger of the Court did but point him out to deſtruction. The apprehenſion of this, he ſaid, had made him withdraw himſelf, not knowing how ſoon he might be ſeiz'd, ſhould he have remain'd in publick; and he thought the danger was as imminent upon, and likely to reach to others, as well as to him; and particularly to my ſelf, and therefore, he ſaid, the ſenſe of this danger ought to put every Engliſhman, that had a value for his Country, and any thing that was dear to him in it, upon uſing his utmoſt endeavours to give ſome prevention to thoſe calamities which were impendent over us, and which threatned the deſtruction of all men that ſtood up for the Rights of the people: and this, he ſaid, was his reſolution.

My Lord, in order to this, he declared to me, what Preparations had been made for the Raiſing of Force for this purpoſe; he ſaid, there were eight or ten thouſand Men (I cannot fix the particular number) that he was well aſſured to have ready in the City; That there had been divers Horſe (I think about Fourſcore or an Hundred he named) that about a Fortnight before, had been, by parcels, drawn into the Town, without being obſerved; and theſe were in daily expectation to go into Action; but through the unhandſome Diſappointment of the Duke of Monmouth, and the other Lords that adhered to him, who were to have joined in the Action, and have ſet the Wheels at work in other Parts, he was left alone to do the whole in his Province of London, they being not ready to concur according to their Engagement: But as he ſhould have the greater Danger, ſo he ſhould have the greater Glory; and he reſolved to go through with the Attempt, or periſh in the Execution. To all this Diſcourſe I gave ſuch an Anſwer as the nature of the thing required: I told my Lord Shaftesbury, I could not deny all thoſe things to be true, as he hath repreſented them in his Diſcourſe; and that I would not diſtruſt his Judgment ſo much, as to ſuppoſe he would enter upon ſuch an Affair, without due deliberation of all the Circumſtances requiſite to it; and ſo I would not queſtion, but there was ſuch Preparations, and that he had Aſſurance of ſuch a Force, as he had ſpoke of, whenever they ſhould begin any Action. But I told him ſomething ſtuck with me, and troubled me very much; That, in a time of ſuch difficulty, when the convenient Help of the Nation was all little enough to join in the Work, he ſhould ſtand by himſelf, and engage in ſuch an Enterprize, in ſeparation from thoſe other Lords, of whoſe Help there would be ſo much need. He ſaid, he could not help it, they had appointed this time, and that, but now, when it came to the puſh, they were not ready to do their Parts; but the People were now in ſuch expectation of ſomething to be done, eſpecially in London, that it was impoſſible to reſtrain them, and as impoſſible to get thoſe Lords ready to join with them. I told him, I was altogether unacquainted with the proceedings in this Affair, and that all of it was wholly new to me: But pray, my Lord, ſaid I, give me leave to act that part in this buſineſs, that, I think, will moſt conduce to the ſucceſsful Iſſue of it, which is to be a Mediator between you; and let me deſire you to let things reſt as they are, till I have endeavoured to create a better underſtanding between your Lordſhip, and thoſe Lords, of whoſe Tergiverſation you ſeem to complain. Upon this my Lord was in a great heat, and expreſs'd himſelf with great warmth; but at laſt, with much ado, he gave me permiſſion to go to the Duke of Monmouth, and aſſure him, and the reſt of the Lords that were concern'd, and tell them from him, that, if they would be ready to take the Poſts that were aſſign'd them, according to their own former Agreement, and immediately enter upon Action, he would join with them; but if not, he was reſolved to go on alone. This was, as I remember, upon Tueſday, the Second of October: upon the Wedneſday Morning I went to find out the Duke of Monmouth, but coming to his Lodgings, he was gone to Moor-Park, where, when I came, I found ſeveral Perſons with him; but after a little time, I ſeparated him from the Company, and whiſpering to him, I gave him to underſtand, how great a Diſorder I found my Lord Shaftesbury in, and how great a Complaint he made of his being deſerted by him, and the other Lords engaged with him, and what Reſolution he had taken to ſet upon the Work alone. "My "Lord, ſays he, I think the Man is mad, his "Fear makes him loſe his Underſtanding; I do "not know why he hides himſelf from his Friends, "that no body can tell where he is: but as to "that which he ſpeaks of, of our forſaking him, "and Breach of Faith, he is miſtaken. For, "'tis true indeed, we are about doing the "Thing, that he is ſo eager for, but we are "not for doing it ſo haſtily, as his Fears pre-"cipitate him to do; and he muſt excuſe us, "if we comply not with his Humour, to hazard "the whole Undertaking by a raſh beginning." Upon that, I ſaid to him, My Lord, I ſhall not diſcourſe the Particularities of the buſineſs with your Grace; but this is all that I at preſent addreſs to your Grace for, to be a means, if I can, with your Grace, as I have been with him, to procure a Meeting between you, that you may ſettle it with one another. "With all " my heart, ſays the Duke, pray let it be ſo; " for, though my Lord Shaftesbury is angry " without a cauſe, yet I would not have him " loſe himſelf in a temerarious Undertaking." My Lord, ſaid I, I will tell him what you ſay, and will ſee if I can work him to a Compliance with the Propoſal. The next day, being Thurſday, my Lord, I went to my Lord Shafteſbury again, and reported to him the Diſcourſe I had with the Duke of Monmouth, and what Anſwer he had given to his Complaint of their deſerting him. He reply'd, " It was falſe, they " had poſitively engaged to be ready by ſuch a " time, and had appointed the very Day; but " now they were off, and would not tell when " they would be ready:" and withal, he told me, he greatly ſuſpected the Duke of Monmouth to have a ſecret Correſpondence with the King. I then deſired him, That he would pleaſe to conſent to the Treaty that was propoſed, and give the Duke of Monmouth, and the Lords a Meeting. He, in great heat, replyed, No, he would come no more at them. It is ſtrange, my Lord, ſaid I, that you ſhould have ſuch an Opinion of theſe Men, that they would go about to betray you; they are not Men of that ſize: but he perſiſted in it, that they had dealt perfidiouſly with him: For after a poſitive Agreement, when the Thing was brought juſt to the Birth, they withdrew their helping hand: but he was ſure, in London, he could raiſe a ſufficient Force to do the Work, and if he were but once ſet on horſe-back, he would head them himſelf: But yet he was willing to put it off for a Fortnight, or three Weeks longer, if they would be ſure to keep pace with him. With this Propoſal I went the next day, which was Friday, to the Duke of Monmouth, and had the ſame Anſwer from him, that I had before; but withal, he bid me tell my Lord Shafteſbury, That he did make it his earneſt Requeſt to him, to give him and his other Friends a Meeting before he engaged in this buſineſs: For he found by his precipitation, he was about to deſtroy himſelf, and all that adhered to him. Thereupon, I came to my Lord Shaftesbury again, upon the Saturday; and when I came there, after a long and importunate urging all the Arguments I could think of, I ſo far prevailed with him, that he agreed to give them a Meeting, upon condition, that it ſhould be the next day: and becauſe it ſhould be ſo private, that no notice might be taken of it, he choſe to have the Meeting at his own Houſe, where no body would ſuſpect him to be, and whither he would be conveyed, under the Diſguiſe of a Parſon. I went back with this Meſſage to the Duke of Monmouth, who did undertake, that the other Lords ſhould be there.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Howard, not to interrupt you, Did he name thoſe other Lords? If he did, pray acquaint my Lords, who they were.

L. Howard. My Lord Shaftesbury named my Lord Ruſſel and my Lord Gray, and a great many more that ſhould bear their parts. I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and told him of it, I ſay, and he engaged, that they ſhould certainly be there: But, upon the Sunday Morning, when I came to the Temple, there I found a Meſſage left for me, that my Lord Shaftesbury had receiv'd an Alarm, That there was ſome great Tories living near his Houſe in Alderſgate-ſtreet, who were continually ſpying about; and ſo great a Company might make their more than ordinary Obſervation: That this gave him ſuch a Jealouſy, as would not permit him to meet according to his Appointment. Afterwards, I came to a better underſtanding of the Reaſon of this, and found there was ſome Fineſſe in it, which I could not comprehend before: But after this time, I never ſaw my Lord Shaftesbury, for he removed then to other Lodgings. So that, what I now ſpeak of him, is only what I had, by hear-ſay, from others: For I had no knowledge of what paſs'd, as to him, but what I had from Capt. Walcot; who told me, That after that, there were ſeveral days of Meeting appointed, but ſtill, from time to time, put off; but upon what reaſon, I cannot particularly remember.

This is all I know of my Lord Shaftesbury; and the latter Part is wholly by Hearſay from Walcot. But by reaſon of this Agitation, we continued under Expectation till ſuch time as my Lord Shaftesbury went into Holland; where he ſhortly after died. And truly, I thought, at that time, much of the Deſign was quaſhed, and laid aſide: But, ſoon after Ferguſon came over; who, when he came here, began to revive and quicken the Buſineſs, and puſh it on to Execution. I ſpoke with him at the One Bell in the Strand; and there he gave me an Account of all the Steps that had been taken: He told me what Preparations had been made in the City, in general; what to ſeize the Gates of the City; what to poſſeſs themſelves of the Tower; what to attack the Guards; and ſeveral other things, which I can't now ſo well remember, the Impreſſions of them being worn out of my Memory, by length of Time, and other Accidents.

This, in general, is all that I can ſay, as to what was previous to the particular Engagement wherein I was concern'd: For, at laſt, after many Diſcourſes, the Troubles and Difficulties of the Time increaſing, and the Dangers that threatned us, as we thought, growing higher and higher, this gave an Occaſion for our uniting Counſels, and entring into a kind of Junto; which, I ſuppoſe, is foreign to this Affair before your Lordſhips; and therefore, I ſuppoſe, would be likewiſe impertinent for me, to trouble your Lordſhips with.

L. H. Steward. Mr. Attorney, do you deſire my Lord Howard ſhould give an Account of the other Meetings, and Conſultations, at which he was preſent?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I think there will be no need of it; and I am unwilling to take up your Grace's Time to no purpoſe.

L. Howard. As for that Noble Lord at the Bar, I know nothing concerning him.

L. H. Steward. Then, Gentlemen, will you have him aſked any Queſtions?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you aſk him any more Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Before my Lord Howard goes, I would aſk him one Queſtion in general, whether he knew of any Deſign of a Riſing in Cheſhire?

L. Howard. No, my Lord, I knew of none at all.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we desire my Lord Gray may be sworn.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, will you give his Grace and my Lords an Account, what you know of any Designs of an Insurrection or Rebellion, when you were beyond Sea, or before? and who were engaged in it?

L. Gray. My Lord, I am subpœna'd hither on behalf of the King; and I am also subpœna'd on behalf of my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar. I do not know any thing, that I can speak of my own Knowledge, against the Prisoner; nor have I any thing to say, that I know of, that will be for his Advantage. But I am here ready to answer such Questions, as shall be ask'd me, either of one side, or the other.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Question I ask you, is, What do you know of any Design of a Rising in Cheshire, and when?

L. Gray. About the Time of the Election of Sheriffs for the City of London; I mean, that memorable Time of the contested Election, which furnished the World with so much Discourse, and was the occasion of such Heats and Animosities: About that time, the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord of Shaftesbury began to discourse about making use of that, as an Opportunity to accomplish their Design; for they thought the Ferment was so high, that Men would easily be disposed to an Insurrection: and after many Discourses to that purpose, they came to this Resolution, that they would apply themselves to make what Interest they could, to procure a Rising in three several Parts of the Kingdom at once: one in Cheshire, whither the Duke of Monmouth was to betake himself; and there be advised by my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere that then was, and the Prisoner at the Bar, what Gentlemen were proper to apply to, for joining in the Design. The second was in London, which was assigned to be the Province of my Lord of Shaftesbury. And the third was in the West; which was committed to the Care of my Lord Russel. The Duke of Monmouth did accordingly go his Progress into Cheshire, as is very well known; and upon his Return, was taken into Custody by the Serjeant at Arms: Upon which, Sir Thomas Armstrong was sent Post to Town, to get an Habeas Corpus; and withal, to deliver a Message to me, to be communicated to my Lord Russel, and my Lord Shaftesbury: Which Message, as near as I can remember, was to this Effect; that he had been kindly receiv'd by the Gentlemen of the County, and had discours'd the Matter with them, and found them all inclined very much to his Satisfaction: That upon his being arrested, he had been advised to make his escape into Cheshire, and rise immediately; but that he would not do a Matter of that great Importance, without the Approbation of his Friends. This is all that I know of any thing, that was designed in Cheshire.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, what do you know of any Messages that Captain Matthews or Jones brought over from Holland, and to whom, and from whom?

L. Gray. Sir, I will give the best account I can, upon the sudden, for I am not prepared to give a particular distinct account, in regard I did not know it would be expected from me, nor indeed that it would affect the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, give my Lords the Peers as succinct and particular an Account as you can.

L. Gray. My Lord, soon after the late King's Death, the Duke of Monmouth was at Amsterdam with my Lord of Argyle, where there was an account given of the Design that was in hand, of an Insurrection in Scotland, and the Preparations that had been made in order to it; and at that time there came over to Holland Mr. Crag, that came as I was inform'd from Major Wildman, and his Errand was to promote and recommend a Reconciliation between the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Argyle, who till that time had acted in separate Interests; and Crag then gave an account that Means and Money were prepared: he had no particular Message to the Duke, because he did not know of meeting him there at that time. The Duke of Monmouth, upon this Encouragement, did send Captain Matthews into England, with a Message to Major Wildman, wherein he did desire him that he would procure a Meeting with my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere, and I think Mr. Charleton, and acquaint them that he had received a full account of my Lord Argyle's Affair, and the Preparations that had been made for it, and accordingly he had ordered his own Affairs to join with him; he likewise sent Crag with a Message to the same purpose to other Friends in London, and he dispatch'd away one Battescomb into the West, to prepare things there. When Crag return'd back again to the Duke, he gave him an account that Major Wildman had procur'd a Meeting with those Lords and Gentlemen, that I mentioned before, who were all of Opinion, that the Duke of Monmouth should go for Scotland, for they thought that his coming there, would be the best Service he could do the Interest at present, and they should know the Strength of the Enemy here, by their sending Forces to suppress the Rebellion there. There was likewise a particular Message from Major Wildman to the Duke of Monmouth, that he desired he would bring over with him a Broad Seal to seal Commissions with, and to take upon him the Title of King. The other particular Branches of the Message I do not so well remember, but only this, he was particularly ask'd, whether the Prisoner at the Bar was there, and he said he was——

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord Gray, will you give an account what you know of Jones's coming over, and what Errand he was sent of?

L. Gray. Jones came some time after Crag return'd, and he gave an account of other things conformable to what Crag had said, and was sent back again to England by the Duke of Monmouth to give an account of his being ready to sail; he gave him also a Letter, the Contents whereof I did not see. I had some short account of it, but whether it were written to any particular Person, I cannot tell; the Sum of his Message was, that he would land by that time he could get thither.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Gray, you had frequent Discourse with the Duke of Monmouth, and and ſo I ſuppoſe you can give an account who he kept Correſpondence with, and upon whoſe Aſſiſtance he relied.

L. Gray. I ſuppoſe few people will believe we were ſo weary of our Lives, as to come and throw them away with Threeſcore, or a very few more Men, (for it was but a very ſmall number we began with) except we had had Expectation of good aſſiſtance. This I am ſure of, by all Diſcourſes with the Duke of Monmouth, he did depend very much upon Cheſhire, and was reſolv'd to have landed and begun there; but afterwards he conſidered of it, and thought better to ſend ſome ſort of excuſe for not landing in Cheſhire; that the Perſons that were to be apply'd to there, being Men of great Quality and Intereſt in their Country, and able to manage it, without his Aſſiſtance: but in the Weſt, the Friends he relied on, were not of that conſiderable Quality, and therefore he choſe to land there.

Mr. At. Gen. What Lords did he name, that he depended upon.

L. Gray. I did name them; my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, and my Lord Delamere; but I obſerved when the Duke of Monmouth ſpoke of his Friends in Cheſhire, he did name my Lord Macclesfield, and my Lord Brandon as Perſons.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord Steward, I humbly pray this Witneſs may be aſked to whom that Letter was written, that he ſaith the late Duke of Monmouth ſent by Jones?

L. H. Steward. You hear my Lord's Queſtion, who did Monmouth ſend that Letter by Jones to?

L. Gray. My Lord, I never ſaw the Letter, nor do I know any Directions there were upon it; I always looked upon it as a Paper of Inſtructions given to him about the time when, and the name of the place where the Duke was to land.

Mr. At. Gen. We will give an account of that by Jones by and by, my Lord. Now ſwear Nathaniel Wade.

[Which was done.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you aſk this Witneſs?

Mr. At. Gen. Wade, that which I call you for, is this, to give an account what you know of any Deſign of landing in Cheſhire, or elſewhere, and of Jones's coming over, and what Errand he was ſent upon?

Mr. Wade, My Lord, I ſhall give an account as far as I know. After the death of the late King, Captain Matthews came to Amſterdam and gave an account there, that the Duke of Monmouth intended to be there ſhortly to meet and conſult with my Lord Argyle, who, we underſtood, then was preparing for an Expedition into Scotland; thereupon I was ſent into Frieſland to deſire my Lord Argyle to come to Amſterdam, which he did; and there the Duke of Monmouth did conſult with him, and they did agree together, that at the ſame time that my Lord Argyle made an Inſurrection in Scotland, the Duke of Monmout ſhould invade England, and to that end, that he ſhould ſend thoſe Friends he had in England, to be ready to aſſiſt him when he came there; and in order to it, he did ſend Captain Matthews, who, amongſt other things, was to go to the Duke's Friends in Cheſhire, and amongſt them, my Lord Delamere was named to be one, and the buſineſs was to deſire them to be ready to aſſiſt him when he ſhould land. Accordingly Captain Matthews went; but a little after his going away, I think one Crag came over, and he came from Major Wildman, and his buſineſs was to endeavour a good Underſtanding between the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Argyle, who were then at ſome difference; and to endeavour to make them act jointly by united Counſel. A little after he was ſent back again into England to Major Wildman, to deſire him to aſſiſt them with ſome Money; he went back again, and returned, but brought no Money: thereupon he was ſent again by the Duke of Monmouth, becauſe the firſt time he was not ſent by him. The Sum demanded was ſix Thouſand Pounds, or four Thouſand Pounds. and at laſt he ſent for a Thouſand Pounds. Crag returned with this Anſwer, that they could not aſſiſt them with Money, for they did not know to what end they ſhould have Money, but to buy Arms, and for that the People were well provided enough already, and there was no need of Money for that purpoſe. The Duke of Monmouth a while after ſent Mr. Crag, and pawn'd all the Jewels he had, to raiſe Money, and fitted out three Ships for this Service, laden with Ammunition; and becauſe he had promiſed my Lord Argyle to make a Diverſion in England, while he invaded Scotland, he reſolved to go with that Proviſion he had, and deſired by Mr. Crag, that ſince thoſe Lords and Gentlemen that were to aſſiſt them, had ſent no Money, as was deſired of them, and expected from them, they ſhould now trouble themſelves with no further needleſs Conſultations; but ſhould repair each Man into his own Country, where their Intereſt was greateſt, to be ready when he ſhould come. And in order to this, the Duke of Monmouth did ſet ſail from Holland, and came to Lyme, and landed there; and did afterwards order his March, ſo that he might moſt conveniently meet with his Cheſhire Friends; that is, towards Glouceſter, and ſo to get Glouceſter-Bridge, that thereby gaining the Command of the River of Severn, thoſe of Cheſhire, if they did, as was expected, make an Inſurrection at the ſame time, they might eaſily join together. In purſuance of this Deſign we came to Keinſham-Bridge, and there a Party of the King's Horſe ſet upon us, and we took ſome Priſoners, and thereupon thought it adviſable not to let the King's Army join together, but to go back and engage thoſe that were already come together; and that was the reaſon we did not go over the Bridge.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know any thing of Jones's coming into Holland, and for what?

Wade. My Lord, I had forgot that; a little before Crag's going laſt away, Jones came over, and his Buſineſs was to know why we ſtaid ſo long, for the Duke of Monmouth's Friends in England had expected him long before, and he was diſpatch'd away quickly to acquaint them the Duke was coming.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was it he ſent to, to acquaint with his coming?

Wade. To Major Wildman, he was directed to Major Wildman.

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Who elſe were to be acquainted with it?

Wade. Amongſt the reſt, my Lord Delamere, my Lord Macclesfield, and my Lord Brandon were to be acquainted that he was coming, and expected that they ſhould raiſe what Forces they could to aſſiſt him.

L. H. Steward. Will my Lord Delamere aſk him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I never ſaw his Face before, that I know of.

L. H. Steward. Who do you go to next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Next we call Richard Goodenough: Swear him, [Which was done.] That which I would know of you, Mr. Goodenough, is, whether Jones was ſent of any Meſſage, and about what?

Goodenough. My Lord, I was beyond Sea with the Duke of Monmouth, and Mr. Jones was ſent (among other Perſons) to my Lord Delamere to give him notice that he ſhould be ready againſt the time that the Duke ſhould land, and take care to ſecure himſelf, that he might not be ſeized here in Town, for we were apprehenſive ſuch a thing would be attempted.

Mr. At. Gen. What Directions were given him, what Lords to go to?

Goodenough. My Lord, we were informed in Holland, that my Lord Delamere was one of thoſe Lords that had promiſed to draw his Sword in his behalf.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you any diſcourſe with the Duke of Monmouth about it at any time?

Goodenough. Yes, I have diſcourſed with the Duke of Monmouth ſeveral times.

L. H. Steward. Ay, what did he ſay to you about it?

Goodenough. My Lord, he ſaid (among other things) that he hoped my Lord Delamere would not break his Promiſe with him?

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you aſk him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord. I never ſaw his Face before, that I know of, I will aſſure you.

L. H. Steward. That is pretty ſtrange, ſo famous an Under-Sheriff of London and Middleſex, as he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Jones. [Which was done.] Pray will you give an account what Meſſage you received from the Duke of Monmouth upon your going over into Holland, and to whom you were to deliver it, and what became of it?

Jones. My Lord, I went to Holland about the latter end of April laſt; my going, as I have acquainted his Majeſty and the Council, was not only about this Affair, for I had other Buſineſs that called me thither, which I ſhall not now take up your time, or trouble you with repeating of: but having ſome knowledge from Mr. Diſney, that there were ſome Intentions of doing ſomething, tho' it was communicated to me but very darkly, and therefore that little I did know, made me the willinger to go for Holland ſo ſoon as I did: but before I went, I had a mind to underſtand ſomething more of the Deſign; and therefore the Night before I went, I came to Mr. Diſney, and acquainted him with my intended Journey. Mr. Diſney did perſuade me againſt it, thinking that I had gone upon this account, but I told him the Occaſion, which he partly knew, why I went; but withal I told him, I did intend to ſee the Duke of Monmouth, and if he had any Meſſage that he would have delivered to him, I would deliver it very ſafely. He told me all the Meſſage I ſhould deliver to the Duke of Monmouth, if I ſaw him, was to deſire him to keep to the laſt Concluſion, which he would find in a Letter that had been ſent to him, and that if he had not yet received the Letter, it was to come by the Crop-hair'd Merchant, or the Crop-ear'd Merchant, I cannot ſay which, but I think it was the Crop-hair'd. I aſked him what that Meſſage was, leſt the Letter ſhould miſcarry; for I told him, if I ſhould go to the Duke of Monmouth, and refer him to a Letter wherein a Meſſage was to be brought him, which he was to keep to, and that Letter ſhould miſcarry, I ſhould, in effect, bring no Meſſage at all to him. My Lord, thereupon he told me, that I ſhould acquaint the Duke of Monmouth that his Friends in England would not by any means have him come for England, but that he ſhould continue where he was, and if he thought good to go for Scotland, they approved of it. This is the Sum of what he ſaid to me, as near as I can remember. When I came to Amſterdam, there was one Mr. that was kill'd at Philips-Norton, went with me to the Duke of Monmouth's, and when I came to him, I acquainted him, as Mr. Diſney appointed me to do, that there was ſuch a Letter ſent by ſuch a Perſon, and that ſuch a Meſſage was included in it. My Lord, he was in a great Paſſion, I know not how to expreſs it, and ſeemed to be very much troubled, and did reflect very much upon Major Wildman, and ſaid, that was Wildman's Work; and he ſaid, (as I think that was the word he uſed) Wildman was a Villain, or to that purpoſe: but withal he ſaid, it was too late to ſend ſuch a Meſſage now, and that he was reſolved to come for England; and he would make Wildman hang with him, or fight for it, with him: That Wildman did think by tying his own Purſe, he ſhould tye his Hand, but he ſhould find it ſhould not be ſo; and ſome other words of the like nature he uſed, but this is the Subſtance of what he ſaid. He gave ſome account what Preparations had been made; he ſaid Money was very ſhort, and he had been fain to pawn all he had, to raiſe what Money was raiſed upon his own Charge. He aſked me if I did think to return to England ſhortly; I told him if he had any ſervice to command me for England, I had ſome little buſineſs to do at Rotterdam, which I would diſpatch, and then I would perform his Commands. He told me, he would be glad I did return as ſoon as I could for England, and that this ſhould be the Meſſage I ſhould carry to Wildman, in anſwer to the Meſſage he had ſent him, that he would come for England, and he ſhould either fight with him, or hang with him; and that was all he had to ſay to him. I was coming away from him, but he ſtopped me, and told me he would not have me go out of Town till he had ſpoke with me again; this was upon the Sunday: accordingly I did go in the Evening to him, and when I came, he told me, he would have me ſtay till Tueſday Morning, for he was going out of Town, and intended to be back again at that time; but if not, I ſhould receive from my Lord Grey what he had to ſay to me. He did not come upon the Tueſday, but my Lord Grey did come, and I think to the beſt of my remembrance brance Mr. Crag was with me; he told me all he had to ſay was, that the Duke intended to in be England within nine days, and that upon the Thurſday ſeven-night after I came away, the Duke would be in England: and he bid me to remember to tell Brand, that when he heard the Duke was landed, he ſhould acquaint Sir Robert Peyton with it, but not till he was landed; for tho' they did think that he would join with them when the thing was begun, yet they ought to be careful who it was communicated to, for fear it ſhould be diſcovered and diſappointed: this was all that I had in command for my Lord Grey. I came to Rotterdam, and diſpatch'd my buſineſs there, and would have come away, but it happened there were no Ships coming for England, nor would there be any in a Fortnight's time; thereupon I returned to Amſterdam. When I came back, I went to ſee the Duke, to give him an account how it happened that I was not gone for England. The Duke told me he was glad I was not gone; for now he had a further Meſſage for me to carry, and he would have me ſtay two or three days in Town for it. I ſtay'd three days, and came again to him, but he told me he was not ready for me yet; then I ſtaid two or three days longer till the 21ſt of May, to the beſt of my remembrance; it was upon a Thurſday that he gave me the Meſſage that I was to bring into England. I came to him in the Morning, and he told me I ſhould come to him upon the Evening of that Day, and when I came, there was a Paper lay before him on the Table, and he took the Paper and ſeal'd it up; I cannot ſay he wrote all that was in that Paper, but the Paper that lay before him was not finiſhed when I came in, and that he did not write while I was there, I am ſure; but he took it up and ſealed it before me, and when he had ſealed the Paper, he told me, I muſt as ſoon as I came to London, ſee for Captain Matthews, Sir Thomas Armſtrong's Son-in-Law, who lodged at Mr. Blake's in Covent-Garden, and deſire him to acquaint my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, and my Lord Delamere, with his deſign of coming for England, and that he was reſolved to ſet out upon the Saturday Morning after I came away, which was upon the Friday. He told me Captain Matthews was to ſend one poſt to that place that was named in the Note to receive Intelligence of his landing, and that ſhould be brought to his Friends here immediately, (he deſigned it ſhould be twenty-four Hours before the Court had notice of it in Town,) and thoſe Lords were to be in Readineſs, that as ſoon as they knew he was landed, they might repair to their ſeveral Poſts to aſſiſt him. I told him that I would deliver what Meſſage he gave me, and aſked him, what I was to do with the Paper he put into my hands; thereupon, as near as I remember, he uſed theſe Expreſſions to me; I do by you, as Princes do by their Admirals, when they ſend them out upon any conſiderable Expedition, which requires Secrecy in the Management of it, they have their Commiſſion delivered to them ſealed, which they are not to break open till they are at Sea. So here I deliver you your Inſtructions ſealed up, which you are not to open till you are at Sea; and when you have opened them, and read what is contained in them, I would have you tear the Paper, and throw it into the Sea, or otherwiſe diſpoſe of it, leſt you be ſurprized and ſearched at your landing, and my Papers found about you. My Lord, I aſked him, becauſe I would be as punctual in my Meſſage as I could, what thoſe Lords were to do when they came out of Town, whether they ſhould come directly to him or no; he told me no, not but that they ſhould go into the Country, and ſecure their Intereſt for him there. I aſk'd him then, if Captain Matthews be out of the way, and I be diſappointed of meeting with him, ſhall I deliver this Meſſage to the Lords my ſelf? He told me no, by no means, for thoſe Lords were Perſons of Quality, and that that was not a thing to be done by me. What ſhall I then do, my Lord, ſaid I, if Captain Matthews be out of the way? You need not queſtion that, ſaith he, but if you meet not with Matthews, ſpeak to Wildman.

My Lord, with theſe Inſtructions (and this as near as I can remember is the Sum of all he ſaid to me) I came away, and came to Sea; when I was out at Sea, I broke open the Letter that I had given me by the Duke, and I will tell you as near as I can, what were the Contents of it; there was written in it to this Effect:

TAUNTON in Somerſetſhire is the place to which all are to reſort; the Perſons to be acquainted with the time of landing, are the Lord Macclesfield, the Lord Brandon, and the Lord Delamere; the Place to ſend the Coach to, is to Taunton, to Mr. Savage's Houſe at the Red-Lion. The place where the Poſt was appointed to return, was Captain Matthews's Lodging, at Mr. Blake's, and he was to receive the Meſſage, or if he did not, he was to appoint one that ſhould receive it; or if it were to return to any other place, that was left to him to do as he thought fit.

And this was all, as near as I can remember. When I had ſeen this, I came to London, and being very weary and tired, when I came home, I went to bed.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Court as near as you can, what day it was you came.

Jones. I came out of Holland the 22d of May, I came home the 27th, and looking upon my Almanack, I find that it was the Wedneſday Fortnight before the Duke landed, that I came. When I was come home, I ſent for Mr. Diſney, and he came to me immediately; I told him I had ſeen the Duke, and deſired that he would help me to the Speech of Captain Matthews. He told me he was out of Town; then I deſired to ſpeak with Major Wildman, he told me he was gone out of Town too. Then I told him I muſt deliver my Meſſage to him, and I told this Meſſage as I have told your Lordſhips before, and therefore left it to him to convey it to the Knowledge of thoſe Lords that were concerned; he did ſeem to be unwilling, and told me he did not know how to communicate it to thoſe Lords, and aſked me why I would not deliver the Meſſage my ſelf. I told him I did aſk the Duke of Monmouth that very Queſtion, whether I might, and he had forbid me, and ordered me to deliver it either to Captain Matthews, or to Major Wildman; and ſince they were abſent, I knew not any to communicate it to but only to him, in order to their having notice of it. He told me he would do what he could.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray who were preſent when you had this Diſcourſe with Diſney?

Jones. There was none preſent but himſelf then, for it was the firſt time that I ſpoke with him after I came from Holland; I told him there was a Poſt to go to receive Intelligence which ſhould bring notice of his landing twenty four Hours before it could be known at Whitehall, and therefore it were fit they ſhould be in a readineſs. He did ſcruple at it, and ſaid he did not know where to get any one that could convey the Meſſage to them, but he would do what he could; and concluded to meet at night in Smithfield, and he did ſo, and there were two Perſons with him, Mr. Crag, and Mr. Liſle, and another, I think his Name was Brand, and he took me and Brand aſide, and did aſk me where was the Place that the Poſt was to go. I told him where, and then he did diſcourſe of the Duke's coming over, but I mentioned not any thing of the Lords, but only to Diſney; and after an Hour's talk or thereabouts, we parted. I ſaw Mr. Diſney once afterwards, but what he did with the Meſſage I cannot tell, he gave me no account of it; I did indeed before I went out of Town ſee him at the Half-Moon Tavern in I went out of Town, and met the Duke of Monmouth at Lyme where he landed; and when I came to him, I told him what I had done with my Meſſage, and how it happened that I could not deliver it to the Perſons that he had ordered. The Duke told me he was ſatisfied that I had done what I could, but ſeemed to be troubled that Matthews was out of Town. And this is the Sum of what paſſed in my Knowledge, as near as I can remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you no Diſcourſe with Diſney what he had done with the Meſſage, when you met at Smithfield?

Jones. No, becauſe thoſe Men were Strangers to me, and I had never ſeen them before.

Mr. At. Gen. But afterwards had you no Diſcourſe with Brand nor Liſle about it?

Jones. No, not at all: Brand I never ſpoke but once with, and Liſle would not own that he was the Man that was there.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to aſk him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will your Lordſhip aſk him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I never ſaw his Face before this Time, that I know of, in my Life.

L. H. Steward. Then who do you call next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. The next Witneſs that we call, my Lord, is Story.

[Who was ſworn.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Story, pray will you give an Account what Notice you had of Jones's Meſſage, and what was done upon it, and what Diſcourſe you had with any Body concerning my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, and with whom?

Story. My Lord, I had Notice of it by one ——— that lived at Biſhopſgate, who told me the 28*th* of May laſt, that Mr. Jones was returned home from Holland upon a Meſſage from the Duke of Monmouth, and that he had agreed to go to Taunton, and there he expected Mr. Dare or Mr. Williams to bring an account that the Duke was landed; and he ſaid that Mr. Jones's Meſſage was delivered to Diſney, in the abſence of Captain Matthews, who was out of Town; that after Diſney had received the Meſſage from Jones, he went and had ſome Diſcourſe with my Lord Delamere, and that that Night my Lord Delamere went out of Town with two Friends, and went a By-way through Enfield Chaſe, towards Hatfield.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when was it you went out of Town, Story?

Story. The 28th of May.

Mr. At. Gen. Who went out of Town with you?

Story. No body, but I overtook Mr. Brand that Evening.

L. H. Steward. Pray repeat what it was he acquainted you with?

Story. He told me that the Day before, Jones was returned Home with a Meſſage from Holland, which Meſſage was to be delivered to Captain Matthews, but in his abſence Diſney received it; and that Evening after he had diſcourſed with my Lord Delamere, my Lord that Night went out of Town, and two Friends of mine he ſaid went with him, and did convey him away by a By-way through Enfield Chaſe towards Hatfield.

L. H. Steward. Have you many more Queſtions to aſk him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, had you any Diſcourſe with the late Duke of Monmouth at Shepton-Mallet? and about what?

L. H. Steward. By the way, Friend, where is that Brand that you ſpeak of?

Story. He is kill'd; I did not ſee him die, but he is ſaid to be kill'd at Keinſham Bridge.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Diſcourſe had you with the late Duke of Monmouth about the Priſoner at the Bar?

Story. I heard the late Duke of Monmouth ſay at Shepton-Mallet, that his great Dependance was upon my Lord Delamere and his Friends in Cheſhire, but he was afraid they had failed him, or betray'd him, or ſome ſuch Word he uſed; and he ſaid he could have been ſupply'd otherwiſe, but that he had a Dependance upon them.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Office had you under the Duke of Monmouth?

Story. I was Commiſſary-General.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, we have done with you.

L. H. Steward. Will you aſk him any Queſtions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delemere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have a Queſtion to aſk him.

L. H. Steward. Ay, with all my Heart; what Queſtion you will, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he knows one Saxon.

L. H. Steward. What Saxon does your Lordſhip mean, one that was in the Army?

L. Delamere. Yes, one Thomas Saxon.

Story. Yes, my Lord, I knew him a Priſoner in Dorcheſter Priſon, where I was a Priſoner my ſelf.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordſhip nothing more to aſk him but that?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we call ſome Perſons to prove, that that very Night when Jones came to Town, my Lord Delamere the Priſoner at the Bar goes out of Town without any Servant, changes his name, and goes a By-way: Swear Vaux and Edlin.

[Vaux was ſworn.

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſays this Man?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give my Lords an account whither you went out of Town with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Vaux. My Lord, perhaps I may not remember the very words that I gave my Evidence in before, but I will repeat the Subſtance.

Mr. At. Gen. It is not ſo long ago, but you may eaſily recollect your ſelf; pray what day was it that my Lord Delamere ſent for you?

Vaux. The 26*th* Day of May, and I went out of Town the 27*th*.

Mr. At. Gen. You are upon your Oath, and you muſt remember you are ſworn to tell the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Vaux. Sir, I ſhall take care to do it as far as I can remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither was it that he ſent for you?

Vaux. To the Rummer Tavern in Queenſtreet, and the next day I went out of Town with him.

Mr. At. Gen. What day of the Month did you go out of Town?

Vaux. It was the 27*th* day of May.

Mr. At. Gen. What time of the night was it you went out of London?

Vaux. It was about nine or ten of the clock.

Mr. At. Gen. What name did my Lord Delamere then go by?

Vaux. He went by the name of Brown.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I would acquaint your Grace, that this is an unwilling Witneſs, and we are forc'd to pump all out of him by Queſtions?

Vaux. I do tell you the Truth of all that I know.

Mr. At. Gen. How far did you ride that night?

Vaux. To Hoddeſdon.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did you get thither?

Vaux. About twelve of the clock.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you go then?

Vaux. We went to Hitchin, and I return'd back again the next Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither was my Lord Delamere going then?

Vaux. To ſee his Son that was ſick in the Country.

L. H. Steward. What! he told you ſo, did he?

Vaux. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What other Company went with you?

Vaux. Two Gentlemen, the one I knew, the other I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Name of him you did know?

Vaux. It was Edlin.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray was that the direct Road to Cheſhire that you went?

Vaux. We made it our Way.

Mr. At. Gen. You made it your Way; but I aſk you whether it be the beſt Way?

Vaux. It is the freeſt Road from Duſt.

Mr. At. Gen. But I aſk you a plain Queſtion, upon your Oath is it the beſt way into Cheſhire?

Vaux. Truly, my Lord, I do not know that.

L. H. Steward. Pray who gave you Directions to call my Lord Delamere by the name of Brown?

Vaux. Himſelf, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Was that the firſt time my Lord went by that name, as you know of?

Vaux. Yes, my Lord, I never heard that he was called by that name till that time.

L. Delamere. I was call'd by the name of Brown at that time, and I will give your Grace an account by and by of the reaſon of it.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordſhip any Queſtion to aſk him?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then go on to the next.

Mr. At. Gen. Our next Witneſs is Edlin, pray ſwear him, [which was done.] Pray will you give my Lords and the Court an account whither you went with my Lord Delamere out of Town, and when?

Edlin. The 27*th* of May laſt, I was at the Cuſtom-Houſe, and there came Mr. Vaux, the Gentleman that was here laſt, who told me he was going out of Town as far as Hitchin, and aſked me to go along with him; he ſaid he was to go that Evening. I aſked him what time he intended to return? he told me, he was reſolved to return the next Day. I told him, then I would go along with him, and we appointed the place of meeting to be at the Bell-Inn in Coleman-ſtreet; when I came there, he ſaid there was a Friend that was going along with him, one Mr. Brown, we went as far as Hoddeſdon that night.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Edlin, will you look upon that Gentleman that ſtands at the Bar; is that he that went by the name of Brown?

Edlin. Yes, my Lord, that is he.

Mr. At. Gen. Well then, what time did you ſet out?

Edlin. It was very near nine of the clock.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when was it that Vaux met you at the Cuſtom-Houſe?

Edlin. It was about ten of the clock in the Morning.

L. H. Steward. Pray did you hear or know upon the Road, whither he was going?

Edlin. My Lord, I did never ſee my Lord Delamere before in my life.

L. H. Steward. But did not he tell you as he went along, whither he was going?

Edlin. He ſaid he was going for Cheſhire to ſee a ſick Child.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay, Sir, that you went firſt for Hoddeſdon?

Edlin. We did ſo, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, how long were you riding that, from the Bell in Coleman-ſtreet to Hoddeſdon?

Edlin. It was three hours I believe, or about three hours and a half.

Mr. At. Gen. Then you rid hard out of Town.

Edlin. My Lord, it was towards nine of the clock when we got on Horſeback, and it was about twelve or a little more, when we came to Hoddeſdon.

L. H. Steward. Well, Mr. Attorney, is that all you have to aſk him?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H.

L. H. Steward. Will you aſk him any Queſtions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. No my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, to confirm this Evidence, and to explain it, I ſhall call you a couple of Witneſſes to prove that this Gentleman went by the name of Brown in the Cant of thoſe that were engaged in this Buſineſs, that the name was known as his name by all the Party, and called ſo conſtantly in their Letters and Meſſages. Swear Tracey Paunceford, and Thomas Babington.

[Which was done.

L. H. Steward. Which will you begin with firſt?

Mr. At. Gen. We begin with Paunceford. Pray will you give his Grace and theſe Lords an account what diſcourſe you heard at Diſney's concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, and what name was he uſually call'd by, in your Meetings.

Paunceford. My Lord, I ſhall give as juſt an account as I can; I was acquainted with Mr. Diſney, and the 14*th* of June I was at his Houſe.

L. H. Steward. What June do you mean?

Paunceford. Laſt June, my Lord, and there were three more beſides, one Joſhua Lock, and a Country Gentleman that I have underſtood ſince to be one Hooper, and there was one Halſey; and being there, Lock ſtaid for ſome Declarations.

L. H. Steward. What Declarations were thoſe you ſpeak of?

Paunceford. The Declarations of the late Duke of Monmouth.

L. H. Steward. Were they printed at that time?

Paunceford. They were not ready at four of the Clock in the Afternoon; but about nine of the Clock they were finiſhed, and three were printed off, and were delivered to Joſhua Lock, and when he had received them at that time, there was a diſcourſe of having them ſent into Cheſhire to one Mr. Brown. After we had received them, we came over the Water together, and we landed at Saliſbury Stairs, and Lock was very earneſt for going out of Town that night, with thoſe three Declarations, which, as he ſaid, were to be carried to one Mr. Brown: This was at nine of the Clock, and ſo we parted.

L. H. Steward. Pray into what Country was he to carry them?

Paunceford. A little way out of Town, he ſaid.

L. H. Steward. Juſt now you ſaid they were to go to Cheſhire.

Paunceford. My Lord, the Diſcourſe at Diſney's Houſe was, that they were to be ſent into Cheſhire; but when we came over the Water, Lock ſaid he was to go a little out of Town to one Mr. Brown.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray who was that Mr. Brown as they meant, as you apprehended?

Paunceford. I underſtood Mr. Brown to be my Lord Delamere by ſome diſcourſe.

L. H. Steward. Whoſe diſcourſe did you underſtand it by?

Paunceford. The firſt time, my Lord, that I heard of my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown, was upon a diſcourſe with one Edlin.

L. H. Steward. Prithee tell us what that diſcourſe thou hadſt with Edlin, was.

Paunceford. Mr. Edlin, about the latter end of May laſt, went out of Town, as I heard, and when he came back again, I aſked him whither he went? he ſaid he was invited by a Friend to go with him out of Town, and my Lord Delamere went along with them, and went by the name of Brown.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you with Diſney, or any body elſe about my Lord Delamere's going by the Name of Brown?

Paunceford. Mr. Diſney did uſe to mention my Lord Delamere by the name of Brown.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray were you at any Meeting with any body, and whom, at any Tavern, and what Tavern, where any ſuch diſcourſe was had?

Paunceford. My Lord, I was at a Meeting at the Caſtle-Tavern with Mr. Vermuyden, and my Brother Babington, and one Manning; but there was no mention then of any Brown that I remember, nor of my Lord Delamere, but only there was ſomething in relation to the landing of the Duke of Monmouth; the Queſtion was aſked where he was to land, and Mr. Vermuyden made anſwer he did not know.

L. H. Steward. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Pray, Sir, did you ever know any body elſe that went by the name of Brown beſides me?

Paunceford. May I anſwer this Queſtion, my Lord?

L. H. Steward. Anſwer it! yes you muſt, you are ſworn to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, Man.

Paunceford. My Lord, there was a diſcourſe of Mr. Vermuyden's going by the name of Brown.

L. H. Steward. Will you aſk him any more Queſtions, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Babington, do you tell my Lords what you know of my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown.

Babington. My Lord, I ſhall give an account. When I firſt knew any thing of the Tranſactions, I was with my Brother Paunceford, Mr. Vermuyden, and one Chadwick that went into the Weſt, and there was a diſcourſe of two Gentlemen that went by names I did not know; Brown was one, and I was deſirous to know who was meant by it: I was at that time but newly acquainted with the Concerns of theſe People; and ſo I found they were fearful to entruſt me: but afterwards I was at the Caſtle-Tavern where my Brother, and my Uncle Vermuyden was, and in diſcourſe of Mr. Brown, ſome body happened to name my Lord Delamere's name, but he was preſently taken up; you mean Mr. Brown. Ay, ſaith he, I do.

L. H. Steward. About what time was this, pray you?

Babington. About the middle or latter end of May laſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at Diſney's when the Declarations were printed there?

Babington. Mr. Attorney, I will give an account of that afterwards, but I have ſomething elſe to ſay firſt. After this, I was diligent to know of my Uncle Vermuyden and my Brother, who this Mr. Brown was: my Uncle told me it was my Lord Delamere, and deſired me whenever I diſcourſed of him, to call him by that name, and I have very good reaſon to believe Mr. Vermuyden knew of the matter, becauſe he was acquainted with a great many of that ſort of People, and declared he had collected and knew of Moneys that were gathered for that Purpoſe; and he had a good account of Monmouth's landing, and of the Force he had in the Weſt, and how long it was preſumed that he could maintain that Force without Aſſiſtance from any body elſe; and ſo I preſume he was very well acquainted with the whole Tranſaction. Afterwards I happened to be at Diſney's over the Water, there was my Brother Paunceford, Mr. Halſey, and my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell what paſſed there at that time.

Babington. Diſney ſhew'd me a Declaration that was not perfected quite, but after that we fell into a diſcourſe about Mr. Brown, and afterwards my Lord Delamere's name was named by ſome body, that ſome of the Declarations were to be ſent to him; and I remember Mr. Diſney ſaid he was afraid my Lord Delamere was not capable of doing that Service that was expected from him in Cheſhire for want of ſome of thoſe Declarations, which would be mighty uſeful to him to inform the People, they being Monmouth's Declarations.

L. H. Steward. Had Lock any of thoſe Declarations away for that Mr. Brown you ſpeak of?

Babington. I never knew Lock, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What number of Declarations did Diſney print?

Babington. Diſney told us he hoped in twenty four Hours to have 500 printed, a good number of them were to be ſent to my Lord Delamere, and ſeveral of them were diſperſed.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to aſk him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Will you aſk him any Queſtions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Then may it pleaſe your Grace, the next Witneſs we ſhall being, ſhall be to prove that my Lord Delamere took frequent Journies backward and forward, in a very little compaſs of time, and the ſame Witneſs will likewiſe tell you what Diſcourſe he had with my Lord during the very time of Monmouth's Rebellion, to ſtir up the People to join with him. Swear Hope, [Which was done.] Pray tell my Lords what diſcourſe you had with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Hope. Upon the Sunday before the Coronation, my Lord Delamere came down Poſt to my Houſe, towards his own Houſe in Cheſhire——

L. H. Steward. Prithee where is thy Houſe? For theſe noble Lords do not know thee, perhaps ſo well as I do; therefore tell us where it is.

Hope. My Lord, my Houſe is at the Three-Tuns in Coventry.

L. H. Steward. Well, go on, tell what thou knoweſt.

Hope. —— Some time after that he came down Poſt again, and a little after he went up again Poſt, and he told me he went down another way; and after that, the 21ſt of June, he came down Poſt again, this was upon a Sunday, the Sunday Seven-night after the Duke of Monmouth landed.

Mr. At. Gen. Had he any Servant with him at that time?

Hope. Yes, he had.

L. H. Steward. Had he a Servant with him every time he came down Poſt?

Hope. No, he came over, I remember, without any Servant, only with a Poſt-Boy.

L. H. Steward. Well, and what diſcourſe had you with him at that, or at any other time?

Hope. My Lord, that Sunday the 21ſt of June, my Houſe was very full of People to enquire News; it being in the time of the Rebellion, every one was deſirous to know how things went: and there was one Ingram in the Houſe, that came to me, and aſked what News from London, for they ſay, ſaith he, that the Duke of Albemarle is killed, and his Hearſe brought to Weſtminſter Abbey. Thereupon I knowing my Lord Delamere was come from London, I went into the Room to my Lord, and deſired to know of his Lordſhip what was the News in London. He told me he was little at Court, and therefore could not tell much News. I then aſked him what he heard concerning the Duke of Albemarle; ſaid I, they ſay here he is killed. Saith my Lord, I am ſorry for it, if it be ſo, but I fear it is too true; but if he be killed, it is ſaid he is killed by his own Party. I aſked him how? He told me, a Party of the Duke of Albemarle's Men were commanded to fire at the Duke of Monmouth's Men, but inſtead of ſhooting at them, they ſhot into the Ground, upon which they were very ſeverely handled by their Officers; which ſo enraged them, that they fired upon them, and killed ſeveral of them, and amongſt others, the Duke of Albemarle was killed; and he told me the Duke of Monmouth had ſeveral Field-Pieces, and Arms ſufficient for near thirty thouſand Men.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did he ſhew you any Places in any Maps?

Hope. There was in the Room Adams's Map of England, and my Lord Delamere ſhewed me which way Monmouth went, and pointed out ſuch and ſuch Towns that he was poſſeſſed of; and withal ſaid, he did fear there would be many bloody Noſes before the Buſineſs was at an end.

Mr. At. Gen. How many times do you think my Lord did ride poſt to and fro?

Hope. About five times, I believe.

L. H. Steward. Within what ſpace of time?

Hope. From the Sunday Sev'night before the Coronation to the Twenty-firſt of June following.

L. H. Steward. Have you done with him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord High Steward, with your Grace's Leave, may I aſk this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. H. Steward. Yes, my Lord, what you pleaſe.

L. Delamere. Pray, did I go down poſt four or five times, do you ſay in that ſpace?

Hope. My Lord, I ſay you did go ſo often backward and forward.

L. Delamere. What time was that, you ſay, I came without any Servant, only with a Poſt-boy?

Hope. I cannot tell.

L. H. Steward. Will your Lordſhip aſk him any more Queſtions?

L. Dela-

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we deſire Thomas Saxon may be ſworn: [Which was done.] Pray, Mr. Saxon, will you give an account to his Grace and my Lords, what you know of my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, concerning any Inſurrection or Rebellion deſigned by him in Cheſhire, and when?

Saxon. At the beginning of June laſt, I was ſent for to Mere, my Lord Delamere's Houſe in Cheſhire, where when I came I was conveyed into a lower Room, where were my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. Crew Offley, and they told me I was recommended to them by my Lord Brandon, who had ſaid, I was an honeſt uſeful Man, and they hoped I would prove ſo: For they had ſent to the Duke of Monmouth, who was in Holland, and received an Anſwer by one Jones, and as ſoon as they had an anſwer, my Lord Delamere came away poſt into the Country under another Name, and by being conveyed through Moreſields, came down to raiſe ten thouſand Men for the Duke of Monmouth in Cheſhire, by the firſt of June; but now they had conſidered of it, and found they could not raiſe them till Midſummer, for they muſt have time to raiſe a Sum of Money, forty thouſand Pounds in that Country, to maintain the Men. They aſked me whether I would not undertake to carry a Meſſage to the Duke of Monmouth: I told them I would, and I had there given me eleven Guineas, and five Pounds in Silver for my Journey, and I did hire a Horſe afterwards, and did deliver my Meſſage to the Duke of Monmouth.

L. H. Steward. When was this, do you ſay?

Saxon. This was the beginning of June.

L. H. Steward. What Day of June?

Saxon. I cannot tell to a day, what day in June it was, for I did not ſet it down; but I believe it was the third or fourth of June.

L. H. Steward. How came you to be recommended by my Lord Brandon to theſe Gentlemen? Were you acquainted with my Lord Brandon?

Saxon. I was acquainted with him: The firſt time I was with him was at Over, the next time was at my Lord's own Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, pray tell my Lord, how you came acquainted with my Lord Brandon?

Saxon. Upon the Monday in Eaſter Week laſt, being at Over, I was ſent for by my Lord Brandon to drink a Glaſs of Ale, and ſmoke a Pipe of Tobacco with him; and when I came thither, my Lord told me he had a deſire to be acquainted with me; ſo we drank a conſiderable while; and he was attended at that time with one Hollinſhead, and one Mr. Lee. And after we had drank pretty ſmartly, and after ſome Diſcourſe, Lee and Hollinſhead went forth, being called out to ſpeak with ſome body, about an Eſtate or a Tenement that they were concerned in. After they were gone out, my Lord Brandon began to diſcourſe about the Elections of Parliament-Men, how unfairly they had been carried: he ſaid, he ſtood both for the Town and County of Lancaſter, but had loſt it by an unfair Election; for the other Party had made ſevenſcore Freemen in one Night in the Town, and by that means had carried it againſt him; which had exaſperated the Country ſo much, that they were reſolved to make it an occaſion of raiſing up the Country in Arms, under pretence of maintaining the Chriſtian Engliſh Liberties; and that they had a deſign to ſend for the Duke of Monmouth, and make him King, and that they muſt make uſe of ſuch Men as me, that were Men of Intereſt in the Country, to ſtir up the People to riſe in Arms: and if I would come to Goſworth, his Houſe, upon the Monday after, he would tell me more of that Buſineſs. I went according to the time, and there he told me a great deal to the ſame purpoſe, and withal he ſhewed me a Letter that he had written to the Duke of Monmouth; which Letter I afterwards ſaw at Bridgwater.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to aſk him?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord; but if my Lord Delamere pleaſe to aſk him any Queſtions he may.

L. Delamere. I humbly pray he may repeat the Evidence he hath given againſt me, for I have not heard what he has ſaid.

L. H. Steward. Turn toward my Lord Delamere, and repeat the Evidence that you gave againſt him, ſo as he may hear you.

[Which he did to the ſame Effect as before.

L. H. Steward. Pray, from whom did you receive that Money?

Saxon. I received it from my Lord Delamere.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you aſk him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. Yes, may it pleaſe your Grace.

L. H. Steward. Then the Method you are to take, is this, you muſt propound your Queſtions to me, and then I will propound them to the Witneſs?

L. Delamere. I deſire to know, may it pleaſe your Grace, when was the firſt time that he declared this that he has now ſworn againſt me?

L. H. Steward. My Lord deſires to know of you, when it was that you firſt made known this againſt him?

L. Delamere. And to whom, my Lord?

Saxon. I ſuppoſe I told Mr. Storey of it firſt, my Lord, at Dorcheſter after I was taken Priſoner for the Rebellion.

L. Delamere. When did he tell it Storey, my Lord?

Saxon. I think it was a Fortnight after my acquaintance with him.

L. H. Steward. Were you then in the ſame Priſon with Storey.

Saxon. Yes, I lay with him in the ſame Bed.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I would aſk him another Queſtion.

L. H. Steward. Ay, what you will.

L. Delamere. I deſire to know, when was the firſt time that he made Oath of this, and upon what occaſion it was?

L. H. Steward. What ſay you to that?

Saxon. The firſt time I made Oath of it, was when I lay ſick.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace pleaſe to aſk him where that was, and when?

Saxon. It was before his Majeſty's Counſellors, that were ſent to take my Examination in Newgate.

L. H. Steward. Prithee, I do not know when thou cameſt to Newgate, it may be thou haſt been there oftner than once.

Saxon. I gave my firſt Information immediately after I was brought to Town, when I was removed from Dorcheſter Goal to Newgate.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire your Grace would aſk him what time he came up?

Saxon. The beginning of the laſt Term.

L. Delamere. Then I deſire to know, my Lord, whether he did remain a Priſoner in the Country all the other Time?

Saxon. Yes, I did ſo, from the Tenth of July, till the Time that I was brought up to Newgate.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, whether I had ever imployed him about any of my Concerns, that ſhould give me an occaſion of truſting him with ſuch Secrets?

L. H. Steward. What Buſineſs of Importance had my Lord Delamere ever imploy'd you about before this time?

Saxon. I was never imploy'd about any Concerns of my Lord Delamere's before that time, neither was I ever in his Company, but only then, and then as recommended by him to him; for they ſaid, they muſt make uſe of ſuch as me to make their Deſigns known to the Country, for the accompliſhing what they did intend.

L. Delamere. Recommended by him, who does he mean?

Saxon. By my Lord Brandon.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I deſire to know what the Buſineſs was that he was to do?

Saxon. I was to inform the Country concerning the time of the Riſing, my Acquaintance abounded that way, and by their Diſcourſe they had got Men in every Place to acquaint the Country when they ſhould riſe.

L. H. Steward. Were you acquainted with any great Number?

Saxon. My Lord, I was a publick Tradeſman in Middlewich, and much acquainted with the ordinary ſort of People.

L. Delamere. My Lord, he ſays he was ſent for to my Houſe, I deſire to know who was the Meſſenger that was ſent for him?

Saxon. My Lord, I did aſk him his Name, but he would not tell it me; he told me he was but a Tenant to my Lord Delamere, and had been imployed in ſuch Buſineſſes for my Lord Delamere's Father, Sir George Booth; he was a lame Man in one Arm, for he had his Hand ſhot away at the Siege of Nantwich.

L. Delamere. It was Tom Long the Carrier, I ſuppoſe, or ſome ſuch Fellow or other, that I ſent for him; my Lord, I deſire to know what time of Day or Night was it when he came to my Houſe?

Saxon. It was juſt when it began to be dark, the Meſſenger came to me in the Afternoon to fetch me thither, and I ſent for a Man's Horſe that lived near me, and when it was brought me, he aſked me what made me go ſo late; I told him I had occaſion to go late, and I ſhould return late, and the Man ſtaid at my Houſe for his Horſe till it was late: but I not coming Home, he left order for his Horſe to be brought to him.

L. Delamere. Next, my Lord, I deſire to know when he came to my Houſe, whether he did alight from his Horſe at the Stables that belong to the Houſe or no?

Saxon. I did alight juſt at the Old-Buildings, and the Man's Horſe that came with me and mine were taken into the Stables.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, aſk him who took his Horſe from him?

Saxon. The Man that came with me, and he went into the Houſe and brought out a Candle.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I would aſk him whether the Door he was let in at, was that which was neareſt the Stable, or which Door?

L. H. Steward. Do you know what Door of the Houſe you were let in at?

L. Delamere. My Lord, I aſk him whether it were the next Door to the Stable?

Saxon. My Lord, I cannot very well give an account of that, for I never was at the Houſe before.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, let him recollect himſelf, whether it were the Door next the Stable or not.

L. H. Steward. Ay, with all my Heart, if he can.

Saxon. I did not ſee any other Door but that I came in at, and therefore I cannot tell which Door it was.

L. Delamere. Theſe Queſtions, my Lord, I take to be proper for me to aſk, and I believe I ſhall make it appear to your Grace to be ſo by and by.

L. H. Steward. Good my Lord, take your full Liberty, and aſk what Queſtions you pleaſe; for I know my Lords here will be very well pleaſed that you have all the Scope allowed you that can be.

L. Delamere. I humbly thank your Grace; I deſire to know of him, who let him into the Houſe?

Saxon. The Man that came with me went with me juſt to the Door, and let me in within the Door, and I ſaw no other Man but that Man, till I came into the Room where my Lord and thoſe two Gentlemen were.

L. Delamere. Was there no Body elſe but we there?

Saxon. No, you were ſo wiſe, you would let no Body be by.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I ſhall trouble this Witneſs no farther at preſent.

L. H. Steward. Then Mr. Attorney-General, will you proceed?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall give no more Evidence at preſent, but ſhall reſt here till we ſee what Defence this Noble Lord will make for himſelf.

L. H. Steward. Then, my Lord Delamere, your time is now come to make your Defence, you have heard what has been evidenced againſt you, and my Lords now expect to hear what you have to ſay for your ſelf.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, a great Part of the Day is ſpent, and I would beg the Favour of your Grace, that I may have the Favour till to-morrow Morning to review the Notes I have taken, and then I ſhall make my Defence.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I had this very thing in my Thoughts before I came hither hither this Day, becauſe I did foreſee that this was likely to be a long Cauſe, and the proceedings in it would take up much time: I have a little doubt, I muſt needs ſay, in my own Mind, whether it may be done by Law; I know very well, if this were a Trial in full Parliament, there have been Precedents to warrant the Adjournment till another Day, though it be in the midſt of a Trial; and in the middle of the Evidence: But this Court I take to be of the ſame nature, though of a degree higher, with the other ordinary Courts of Judicature; and whether it be not obliged and tied up to the ſame Method of Proceedings with thoſe other Courts, where all Capital Offences are tried, is a thing I am in ſome doubt about: In thoſe Courts it has not been uſual to adjourn the Court after Evidence given; nay, it has been ſometimes a Queſtion, whether the Judges in thoſe Courts, after the Jury are gone from the Bar, to conſider of their Verdict, could adjourn themſelves: I ſay, the Judges have ſometimes made a Doubt of it, though I know the Point is now ſettled, and the Practice is, that they may, and do. But this is moſt certain, after the Evidence given, the Jury cannot be adjourned, but muſt proceed in their Enquiry, and be kept together till they are agreed of their Verdict; this has cauſed ſome Heſitancy in me, what the Law may be in this Caſe; therefore I think it may be proper to conſult with my Lords the Judges; for I deſire the thing may be conſidered and ſettled.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg this Favour of your Grace, but to adjourn till to-morrow.

L. H. Steward. With all my heart, my Lord, if it may be done by Law.

L. Delamere. I hope it may, my Lord, and I beg that Favour of your Grace.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I ſhould be very glad to comply with your Lordſhip's Deſires, but truly I have conſidered it, and do doubt whether I can by Law do it: In full Parliament it is clear it may be done, but upon this Commiſſion, after my Lords the Peers are once charged, and the Evidence partly given, whether I can then adjourn them till another Day, is with me a Doubt. My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, before ſuch time as my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, enters upon his Defence, I will with your leave propound the Queſtion to my Lords the Judges, and hear their Opinion what the Law is.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I ſhall hardly be able to finiſh all I have to ſay in any convenient time this Day.

L. H. Steward. But, my Lord, if an Adjournment cannot be by Law, I cannot help it.

L. Delamere. There has a great deal been ſaid, and it will require a great deal of time to give it an Anſwer.

L. H. Steward. Ay, but if it cannot be done as you would have it, we muſt be contented to ſtay the longer together; for I would not abridge you of your Defence: therefore, my Lords the Judges, if you will pleaſe to go together and conſider of it, and report your Opinions, what the Law is in this Caſe, we will ſtay till you come again.

Then the Judges withdrew into the Exchequer Chamber.

E. of Nottingham. My Lord High Steward, I do humbly conceive this is a Matter that concerns the Privilege of the Peers; and becauſe it is a matter that doth ſo much concern the whole Peerage, I think my Lords here ought in ſome meaſure to concern themſelves about it: Therefore, my Lord, I have a ſhort Motion to make to your Grace, That, conſidering the Conſequence that the Precedent of this Caſe may draw with it, ſince my Lords the Judges are gone together to conſult of this Point, of which, I may ſay, they are not altogether the ſole Judges; we may alſo withdraw to conſider of this Matter with them, becauſe it may not be proper for my Lords in publick here, to offer what they may have to ſay, to incline my Lords the Judges in their Judgments one way or other.

L. Falconberg. My Lord, I humbly offer this to your Grace, upon the Motion that this Noble Lord has made, That, with Submiſſion, I take this to be a thing that concerns the Privilege of Peerage only, and I conceive the Judges are not concerned to make any Determination of that Matter. I think therefore, my Lords here ought to retire with them to conſider of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I think, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, that this is a Queſtion naturally proper for my Lords the Judges to give their Opinions in, Whether this Court, as a Court of Judicature for the Trial of this Noble Lord, may, in the midſt of the Trial, adjourn till another Day: And the Privilege of the Peerage cannot at all come in queſtion here, as I conceive.

L. Falconberg. My Lord, that we conceive is a Point of Privilege, which certainly the inferior Courts can have no power to determine.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordſhips have a mind to withdraw, you may.

Lords. Ay, withdraw, withdraw.

Then the Peers withdrew, and after half an hour the Judges returned and took their Places as before, and after about an hour the Peers returned to their former Places.

L. H. Steward. My Lords the Judges, have you conſidered the Matter that has been propoſed to you, and what is your Opinion?

L. C. J. Herbert. May it pleaſe your Grace, the Judges, in obedience to your Grace's Commands, have withdrawn, and conſidered of what your Grace propoſed to them, and with humble Submiſſion they take the Queſtion to be this.

Not, Whether your Grace may adjourn your Commiſſion from one day to another, for that is clear you may, and has been practiſed, for that is the Caſe of the Earl of Somerſet and his Wife:

But the Queſtion is, Whether after the Priſoner is upon his Trial, and the Evidence for the King is given, the Lords being, as we may term term it, charged with the Priſoner, the Peers Triers may ſeparate for a time, which is the Conſequent of an Adjournment to another Day.

And, my Lord, the Judges preſume to acquaint your Grace, that this is a matter wholly new to them, and that they know not, upon recollection of all that they can remember to have read, that either this matter was done, or queſtioned, whether it might or might not be done in any Caſe.

My Lord, if the matter had been formerly done, or been brought into queſtion in any Caſe, where it had received a determination, and reported in any of our Books of Law, then it would have been our duty to contribute all our Reading and Experience for the Satisfaction of this great Court: But being, as it is, a new Queſtion, and a Queſtion that not only concerns the particular Caſe of this Noble Lord at the Bar, but is to be a Precedent in all Caſes of the like nature for the future: All we can do is, to acquaint your Grace and my Noble Lords, what the Law is in the inferiour Courts in Caſes of the like nature, and the Reaſon of the Law in thoſe Points, and then leave the Juriſdiction of this Court to its proper Judgment.

My Lord, in the firſt place, where the Trial is by a Jury, there the Law is clear, the Jury once charged can never be diſcharged till they have given their Verdict, this is clear; and the reaſon of that is, for fear of Corruption, and tampering with the Jury. An Officer is ſworn to keep the Jury together without permitting them to ſeparate, or any one to converſe with them; for no Man knows what may happen, for (though the Law requires honeſt Men ſhould be returned upon Juries, and without a known Objection they are preſumed to be probi & legales homines, yet) they are weak Men, and perhaps may be wrought upon by undue Applications.

This, my Lord, it is ſaid, fails in this Caſe, becauſe the Lords that are to try a Peer, are Perſons of that great Integrity and Honour, that there is not the leaſt Preſumption of their being to be prevail'd upon in any ſuch way; and for that reaſon, becauſe of the Confidence which the Law repoſes (and juſtly) in Perſons of their Quality, they are not ſworn as common ordinary Jurors are, but are charged and deliver their Verdict upon Honour.

My Lord, in the Caſe of a Trial of a Peer in Parliament, as your Grace was pleaſed to obſerve, and as is very well known by late Experience, there the matter has been adjourned till another Day, and for divers Days; the Evidence being in ſeveral Parcels, and there the danger is as great (if any were to be ſuppoſed) of Tampering: But whether the Lords being Judges in that Caſe, and in this Caſe only in the nature of a Jury, makes the Difference, though in both Caſes it is but like a Verdict, for they give their Opinions ſeriatim, whether the Peer tried be Guilty or not Guilty, that they ſubmit to your Grace's Conſideration,

Upon the whole matter, my Lord, whether their being Judges in the one, and not in the other Inſtance, alters the Caſe, or whether the Reaſon of Law in inferiour Courts, why the Jury are not permitted to ſeparate till they have diſcharged themſelves by their Verdict, may have any influence upon this Caſe, where that Reaſon ſeems to fail, the Priſoner being to be tried by his Peers, that are Men of unqueſtionable unſuſpected Integrity and Honour, we can't preſume ſo far as to make any Determination in a Point that is both new to us, and of great conſequence in it ſelf; but think it the propereſt way for us, having laid matters as we conceive them before your Grace and my Lords, to ſubmit the Juriſdiction of your own Court to your own Determination.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I confeſs I would always be very tender of the Privilege of the Peers, wherever I find them concerned; but truly I apprehend, according to the beſt of my Underſtanding, that this Court is held before me. It is my Warrant that convenes the Priſoner to this Bar. It is my Summons that brings the Peers together to try him, and ſo I take my ſelf to be Judge of the Court.

My Lords, 'tis true, may withdraw, and they may call the Judges to them to aſſiſt them, which ſhews they have an extraordinary Privilege in ſome Caſes more before the High-Steward, than Juries have in inferior Courts in Caſes of common Perſons: For, if it be in a common Caſe, no Jury can call either Counſel or Judges to aſſiſt them, in the abſence of the Priſoner; but if they will have advice, it muſt be aſked in open Court, in the preſence of the Party accuſed.

But now, my Lords, if you have a mind to conſult with me in private, as I now ſit by virtue of this Commiſſion, which is his Majeſty's Warrant for me to hold this Court, I could not withdraw with you; but you muſt ask all your Queſtions of me, in the preſence of the Priſoner, in open Court: Whereas if it were in full Parliament, as were the Caſes of my Lord Stafford, and my Lord of Pembroke, then he that were the High Steward might go along with you when you withdrew, and conſult with you, and give his Opinion, which I cannot do in this Caſe; for I am bound to ſit in Court, while you withdraw to conſider of the Evidence, and am not to hear any thing ſaid to me, but what is ſaid in open Court in the preſence of the Priſoner, except it be when you deliver your Verdict.

This I confeſs, my Lords, has a great weight with me, and I know your Lordſhips will be very tender of proceeding in ſuch a Caſe any way but according to Law: For though you are Judges of your own Privileges, yet, with Submiſſion, you are not Judges of the Law of this Court; for that I take to be my Province.

Why then, ſuppoſe, my Lords, I ſhould take upon me to do as my Lord Delamere deſires, and adjourn the Court; and ſuppoſe the Law ſhould fall out to be that indeed I ought not ſo to have done; would it be any advantage to this Noble Peer, if he ſhould be acquitted by your Lordſhips after ſuch an Adjournment? Might not the evil Conſequence of that be, that he might be indicted for the ſame Crime, and tried again? For all the Proceedings after that would be void, and liable to be reverſed.

And

And if on the other ſide your Lordſhips ſhould think fit, upon the Evidence you have now heard, and what he ſhall ſay for himſelf, to convict him, after I have adjourned as is deſired, and I paſs Judgment upon him, as it will be a Duty incumbent upon me to paſs Sentence on him, if you convict him; what will become of the Caſe then? and how ſhall I be able to anſwer it, as having done my Duty, when I pronounce a Judgment notoriouſly Erroneous and Illegal? for ſo it will be, if the Law prove to be againſt my adjourning. This, my Lords, is a matter of great Moment, and worth the Conſideration.

But in the other Caſe of a Trial in full Parliament, the Lord that ſits where I do, is only as the Chairman of the Court rather than Judge, he gives a Vote in ſuch Proceedings; and therefore my Lord the Priſoner did very well at the beginning to aſk the Queſtion, whether I had any Vote in his Trial, as a Peer, jointly with your Lordſhips. If I ſat in full Parliament, I ſhould without all queſtion give my Vote as well as any other Peer; but ſitting here by immediate Commiſſion from the King pro hac vice, High-Steward; I acquaint you as I did him, I have no authority to give any Vote: my Buſineſs is to ſee the Law obſerved and fulfilled as Judge.

Certainly, my Lords, your Lordſhips and I, and all Mankind ought to be tender of committing any Errors in Caſes of Life and Death, and I would be loth, I will aſſure you, to be recorded for giving an Erroneous Judgment in a Caſe of Blood, and as the firſt Man that ſhould bring in an illegal Precedent, the Conſequence of which may extend I know not how far.

Mr. At. Gen. Will your Grace give Direction for my Lord to proceed?

L. H. Steward. Yes; he muſt proceed I think.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my Lords, it is an Offence of a very high nature, for which I am this day to anſwer before your Lordſhips; yet I thank God I am not afraid to ſpeak in this place, becauſe I am not only certain and well aſſured of my own Innocency, no ſuch Thought having as yet entred into my Heart; but I am alſo well aſſured of your Lordſhips Wiſdom and Juſtice, which cannot be impoſed upon or ſurprized by Inſinuations and florid Harangues, nor governed by any thing but the Juſtice of the Cauſe.

While I had the Honour to be a Magiſtrate in my Country, I did conſtantly, duly, and impartially, execute the Laws, and in every publick Truſt I was very faithful in the Diſcharge of it; for I never voted nor ſpoke in any manner but as my Conſcience and Judgment did dictate to me. I have always made the Laws the meaſure of my Loyalty, and have ſtill been as Zealous and Careful to give the King his Prerogative, as to preſerve to the People their Properties, and have endeavoured as far as in me lay to live peaceably with all Men.

This, my Lords, was not only the Dictates of my own Inclinations, but it was the Principle of my Father, and the Leſſon that he taught me: I ſay my Father, who was ſo greatly inſtrumental in ſnatching this Nation out of its Confuſion, and reſtoring it to its ancient Government, by ſettling his late Majeſty upon his Throne, and conſequently was the means of his preſent Majeſty, that now is, his coming ſo peaceably to the Crown. And this I may the more boldly ſpeak, becauſe I ſpeak it by good Authority; becauſe in the Patent that created my Father a Peer, his late Majeſty is pleaſed to ſay, his Riſing was mainly inſtrumental in his Reſtauration. I beg the Favour of your Grace and my Lords, that I may read you that Clauſe in the Preamble of the Patent, which I have here ready to produce.

Which was read, and then my Lord proceeded as follows, viz.

My Lords, I ſuppoſe moſt of your Lordſhips did know him, and whoſoever did ſo, I dare ſay, did believe him to be a good Man: For my part I did not know a better Copy to write after than his Example, which I endeavoured always to imitate, and that I hope will go very far to vindicate me from the Imputation of being inclined to any ſuch Crime as I ſtand charged with.

My Lords, it is now late and therefore I ſhall cut off a great deal of what I had intended to ſay to your Lordſhips, that I may not take up too much of your time, and come immediately to my Defence, as to what I ſtand accuſed of.

And firſt, my Lords, I ſhall obſerve that here have been a great many Witneſſes produced, and a great deal of Swearing, but little or nothing of Legal Evidence to affect me; for there is but one Man that ſaith any thing home and poſitively againſt me (and whom I ſhall anſwer by and by) all the reſt are but Hearſays, and ſuch remote Circumſtances, as may be tacked to any Evidence againſt any other Perſon, but are urged againſt me for want of greater matters to charge me with; and therefore I hope the producing and preſſing of theſe things againſt me, is rather a ſtrong Argument that I am innocent, and that there have been miſchievous and ill Deſigns of ſome againſt me, than that I am Guilty; for if they had had other and greater matters, your Lordſhips would have been ſure to have heard of them.

With your Lordſhips leave, I cannot but obſerve to your Lordſhips an excellent Saying of that great Man my Lord of Nottingham, (whoſe Name will ever be remembred with Honour in our Engliſh Nation,) when he ſat in the ſame place that your Grace does now, at the Trial of my Lord Cornwallis, which I will read to your Lordſhips. Speaking to the Peers, he has this paſſage:

I know your Lordſhips will weigh the Fact, with all its Circumſtances, from which it is to receive its true and its proper doom. Your Lordſhips are too juſt to let Pity make any abatement for the Crime, and too wiſe to ſuffer Rhetorick to make any Improvement of it: This only will be neceſſary to be obſerved by all your Lordſhips, that the fouler the Crime is, the clearer and the plainer ought the Proof of it to be; there is no other good Reaſon can be given, why the Law refuſes to allow the Priſoner at the Bar Counſel in Matter of Fact, when Life is concerned, but only this, becauſe the Evidence by which he is condemned ought to be ſo very evident and ſo plain, that all the Counſel in the world ſhould not be able to anſwer it.

My Lords, I think the Evidence that has been given againſt me this Day does not come up to this. And I hope your Lordſhips will regard this Saying of my Lord Nottingham's, as more worthy of your conſideration, than the fine Flouriſhings and Inſinuations of the King's Counſel, which tend (if it be not ſo deſigned) rather to miſguide your Lordſhips, than to lead you to find out the Truth.

My Lords, I ſhall now tell you the method that I ſhall proceed in, in making my Defence; and I begin with Saxon, for he I perceive is the great Goliah, whoſe Evidence is to maintain this Accuſation, and if I cut him down, I ſuppoſe I ſhall be thought to have done my own buſineſs: therefore to that I ſhall apply my ſelf firſt, and do it if I can; and I will in the firſt place examine ſeveral Perſons that are his Neighbours and have converſed with him, what they have heard and know of him: and firſt I deſire Richard Hall may be called.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, if you begin that way to call Witneſſes againſt Saxon, it is fit he ſhould be here to know what is ſaid againſt him.

L. Delamere. Ay, with all my heart, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then call Saxon again.

[Then Saxon and Hall came both in.

L. Delamere. Pray Mr. Hall tell my Lords here what you know of Thomas Saxon.

L. H. Steward. What is it you aſk of this Witneſs.

L. Delamere. My Lord I deſire him to give an account what he knows of a Letter, that was forged by Saxon, in the name of one Hildage.

Hall. About the nineteenth of December in the Year 1683, I received a Letter by Thomas Saxon from Richard Hildage, wherein he deſired me to ſend him the ſum of ſix pounds odd money which I owed him: I received the Letter and paid the money, and to the beſt of my knowledge ſome little time after I met with the ſaid Hildage at Newcaſtle, who aſked me to pay him the money I owed him. I replied I had paid the money, according to his Note, but he ſaid he never gave any ſuch Note, and threatned to ſue me; thereupon I ſent one Lord to Hildage, that is here now in the Court, and deſired Hildage's forbearance for a while, till I could get the money from Saxon back again, and afterwards he ſent again for his money, and I ſent to Saxon for it, but ſtill the money did not come.

L. H. Steward. Did you ever ſpeak with Saxon himſelf?

Hall. No, but with his Wife, who came to me about it; but he acknowledged, he wrote the Letter before John Lord.

Saxon. Did not my Wife tell you that Richard Hildage lent me the money?

L. H. Steward. Nay, you muſt not dialogue with one another, but if you have any Queſtions, you muſt propound them to the Court: My Lord Delamere, have you any Queſtions to aſk him?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then what is it you would have him aſked, Saxon?

Saxon. I deſire you would pleaſe to aſk him whether or no he did not lend me the money?

L. H. Steward. He! who do you mean?

Saxon. Richard Hildage did.

L. H. Steward. What ſay you, did Richard Hildage lend him the money?

Hall. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Look you, my Lord Delamere, the Objection carries a great deal of weight in it, to prove him a very ill man, if it be fully made out.

L. Delamere. My Lord, if your Grace pleaſe, I can prove that he owned the writing of the Letter to another man.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, he does own here, that he wrote the Letter, and that he wrote it in Hildage's name, but he ſaith, the Letter, he ſo wrote in Hildage's name, was by Hildage's direction; and if ſo, that takes off the Objection made againſt him.

L. Delamere. I muſt ſubmit that to your Grace, whether what he ſays in that matter be Evidence.

L. H. Steward. What Hildage did, or did not, is the main turn of the Queſtion in this Caſe; for he might lend him the Money, and yet afterwards might ſay, when he thought he might loſe it, that he did not ſend any ſuch Letter, and all this be true, and Saxon in no fault: I muſt confeſs, if Hildage were here himſelf, and ſhould deny the lending of the Money, or the giving him Directions to receive it, you would have fixed a ſhrewd Objection upon him; but otherwiſe Hear-ſays and Diſcourſes at ſecond hand are not to take off the Credit of any Man's Teſtimony.

L. Delamere. But Hall ſays Hildage denied the receipt of the Money, or any Order for receiving of it.

L. H. Steward. That ſignifies nothing, being but by ſecond hand.

Saxon. If it pleaſe your Grace, here is my Brother in Court will give you an account of it.

L. H. Steward. Well, well, hold your tongue; will your Lordſhip pleaſe to go on?

L. Delamere. The next Witneſs, my Lord, that I ſhall call, ſhall be Francis Ling, [who came in.]

L. H.

L. H. Steward. What do you aſk this Witneſs?

L. Delamere. Mr. Ling, pray will you tell his Grace, and my Lords, what you know concerning Saxon's receiving any Money in in the Name of Mrs. Wilbraham, without her Order.

Ling. He called at this ſame Hildage's at Newcaſtle, and received twenty five Shillings, and ſaid it was for Mrs. Wilbraham, in her name; but ſhe never received a penny of the Money, nor knew of his having received it, till he came to pay another Quarter.

L. H. Steward. Where is that Mrs. Wilbraham, is ſhe here?

Ling. No, my Lord, ſhe is a Neighbour of ours, an Ancient Woman, fourſcore years of Age, and cannot come ſo far.

L. H. Steward. This is the ſame Caſe with the other, you can never think to take off the Credibility of Witneſſes by ſuch Teſtimony; for this is only a Tale out of an Old Woman's Mouth: What if that Old Woman told him a falſe Story?

Ling. She ſaid ——

L. H. Steward. I care not what ſhe ſaid, this is no Evidence at all.

L. Delamere. Then pray call Richard Shaw, [who came in.]

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſays this Witneſs?

L. Delamere. Shaw, can you tell any thing of Thomas Saxon's writing a Letter and ſending it in the name of one Pangſton a Bayliff?

Shaw. He writ a Letter, as I underſtand, concerning ſome Money that I owed him; for I owed him a little Money, and being I did not pay it, he does forge a Letter and puts William Pangſton's name to it, ſo I got up the other Morning ——

L. H. Steward. Where is Pangſton? Is he here?

Shaw. No, my Lord, he is not, but he told me he did not write the Letter.

L. H. Steward. Why, this is juſt the ſame again, and we all know how eaſy a thing it is to hear a Bayliff tell a Lye.

Shaw. I cannot tell, but I called ——

L. H. Steward. All that is nothing. It is a difficulter matter to hear ſuch Fellows ſpeak Truth, than any thing elſe, I am ſure.

L. Delamere. The next Witneſs that I ſhall call is Peter Hough.

[Who appeared.

L. H. Steward. There is your Witneſs. What ſay you to him?

L. Delamere. Pray acquaint his Grace, and my Lords, what you know of Saxon's cheating you in the making of a Bond.

Hough. My Lord, he had ſix Pound ten Shillings in Money, and ten Shillings in Work done, for which he was to give me a Bond, and hereof he made the Bond himſelf. I thought it had been right, and took it; but about the time when the Money was become due, I looked upon it, and it proved to be but for 6 l.

L. H. Steward. What ſhould it have been for?

Hough. It ſhould have been for ſix Pounds ten Shillings in Money, and ten Shillings in Work.

L. H. Steward. Did not he give thee a Bond for all thy Money?

Hough. It ſhould have been ſo, but I never had it.

L. H. Steward. Had you never the Money?

Hough. No, I never had the Money?

L. H. Steward. What did he ſay the Bond ſhould be made for?

Hough. For ſeven Pounds.

L. H. Steward. What ſay you to it, Saxon.

Saxon. My Lord, I had five Pounds ten Shillings of him, and ten Shillings in Work, for which I gave him Bond; there were the Witneſſes Names at it, the Bond was fairly read, and I ſealed it, and he took it with him.

L. H. Steward. Ay, but he ſays it was to be for ſeven Pounds.

Saxon. I never had any more of him than ſix Pounds, and for that I gave him Bond.

L. H. Steward. Was the Bond read to you?

Hough. He read it himſelf, and he made it himſelf.

L. H. Steward. How did he read it? What did you apprehend by his reading it was made for?

Hough. I took it as he read it to be made for ſeven Pounds.

Saxon. He may ſay what he pleaſes, but I had no more of him but ſix Pounds; I was to give Bond for no more.

L. H. Steward. Now the Witneſſes to this Bond would be very proper to be produced here: For, if he did make the Bond but for ſix Pounds, when the Debt that was to be ſecured was ſeven Pounds, that is a ſign that he had an intention to cheat him of the Twenty Shillings.

L. Delamere. That ſhews what a kind of Man he is.

L. H. Steward. But this is but Witneſs againſt Witneſs, for he ſays he owed no more, and was to make the Bond for no more.

Hough. It was as I tell you, I aſſure you, my Lord.

Saxon. I had no more of him than ſix Pound.

Hough. Did not I aſk you afterwards one Queſtion more, and told you it was a Cheat, and you ſaid it ſhould be mended?

L. H. Steward. Well, my Lords have heard it, they will conſider what weight to lay upon it.

L. Delamere. Pray call Edward Wilkinſon.

[Who appeared.

L. H. Steward. What do you aſk him?

L. Delamere. Wilkinſon, pray tell my Lords, how Saxon dealt with you about your Horſe?

Wilkinſon. My Lord, he hired a Horſe of me for three Days, and was to give me twelvepence a Day, but he never came again, nor had I any Satisfaction for my Horſe, but I loſt my Horſe by the bargain, and my Money too.

L. H. Steward. How long ago was it ſince he hired your Horſe?

Wilkinſon. My Lord, it was the twenty third of June, to the beſt of my remembrance.

L. H. Steward. Did he not agree with you for 12 d. a day as long as he uſed your Horſe?

Wilkinſon. I expected to have my Horſe in three days time.

L. H. Steward. But mind my Queſtion, did you agree that he ſhould have him but three Days? Or, was he to give you 12 d. a Day for ſo long as he kept him out?

Wilkinſon. I was to have 12 d. a Day for him.

L. H. Steward. What! as long as he uſed him, or only for three Days?

Wilkinſon. He did agree with me to bring him again in three Days.

L. H. Steward. I perceive by the time, he rid into the Rebellion with this Horſe, and he was a very Knave for ſo doing, upon my Conſcience.

L. Delamere. Call William Wright, [who came in.] Pray will you give my Lords an account what Reputation this Thomas Saxon is of in his Country.

Wright. My Lord, this Thomas Saxon came to live at Sambige, and I had ſome dealings with him as well as other Men, and I never found him to perfect his Word in any thing.

L. H. Steward. What didſt thou never find him?

Wright. To perfect his Word in any thing, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. That is, make good his word, I ſuppoſe; but that is your Cheſhire Phraſe.

Wright. Whereupon I met with him one Evening after Evening-Prayer, and ſaid to him, Thomas Saxon, if I cared no more for keeping my Word than thou do'ſt, it were no matter if I were hang'd; for to be ſure if thy Mouth open, thy Tongue lyes: and he turn'd away from me, and would not anſwer me a word; and ſince that he owed me ſome Money, and when I aſked him for it, he told me if I did trouble him for the Money, it ſhould be the worſe for me; whereof all the Town knows as well as I, that I cannot ſet him forth in words as bad as he is.

L. H. Steward. Can you inſtance in particular, Friend, of any Fraud, Cheat, or Cozenage, that he has been guilty of? for it is not what the Town ſays, but what can be proved, that we muſt take for Evidence; the Town that thou liveſt in may reckon thee but an idle Fellow, and yet thou may'ſt be a very honeſt Man for all that.

Wright. I truſt, my Lord, I am ſo, and ſhall always prove ſo.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do'ſt thou know ill of him?

Wright. He did not keep his Word with me.

L. H. Steward. Wherein doſt thou mean?

Wright. As to Money he owed me.

L. H. Steward. How much Money did he owe thee?

Wright. He owed me a deal.

L. H. Steward. How much do'ſt thou call a deal?

Wright. I cannot tell how much exactly.

L. H. Steward. Does he owe thee any thing now?

Wright. Yes, but I cannot juſtly tell how much.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I would be very unwilling to interrupt the method of your Defence, or abridge you in your Evidence; but really this Objection that you endeavour to prove by this Witneſs, is not at all, as I conceive, for your Lordſhip's Service: For it is a very hard caſe, if any one that owes Money and does not pay it, ſhall for that very reaſon loſe the credit of his Teſtimony; this rather gives a countenance to what he ſays, that you know no other Objections but ſuch trivial ones to make againſt him.

L. Delamere. Then, if your Grace pleaſe, I will make ſhort work of it, and ſpare your time; I ſhall paſs over this part of my Evidence, though I have more Witneſſes to this Point, and come to other matters, to Matter of Fact, to encounter this poſitive Proof that has been given againſt me. Your Grace and my Lords do obſerve, that this Man Saxon has teſtified that about the third or fourth of June laſt (for there he fixed the time) this Man as an extraordinary Perſon that was fit to be truſted in an Affair of this nature, being confided in, and recommended by my Lord Brandon, was ſent for by me to Mere, where he found me and Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Offley, who did employ him to tranſact the matter of ſtirring up the Country in order to a riſing and joining with the late Duke of Monmouth: Now I will firſt prove to your Lordſhip in general, that Sir Robert Cotton was not in Cheſhire for many Weeks, nay, ſeveral Months, both before and after the time he ſpeaks of: And next in particular I ſhall prove as to the time that he has pitched upon, by divers Perſons that ſaw Sir Robert Cotton here then in London, and give you particular Reaſons for it. Firſt to prove, that he was here in Town ſo long in general, I ſhall produce his Servants that ſaw him every day: Call —— Billing, [who appear'd.] Pray Sir, will you give an account what time Sir Robert Cotton came to London, when he went out of London, and whether you were frequently in his Company and ſaw him here?

Billing. My Lord, to the beſt of my remembrance, Sir Robert Cotton came to Town the 10*th* of April laſt, and I was with him here in Town, at his Houſe at the Horſe-Ferry till the latter end of July, and ſaw him conſtantly more than once or twice every day for that time: I uſed to come into his Chamber moſt Mornings before he was up; I uſed to buy in his Proviſion for his Houſe, I ſaw him a-bed, or heard he was in Bed every Night.

L. H. Steward. Did you belong to him?

Billing. I am his Servant.

L. Delamere. He lived with him in the Houſe all the while, he ſays?

Billing. Then about the latter end of July he went out of Town for three Days to Epſom, and then he came to Town again, and continued here till the time he was committed to the Tower, and never was in Cheſhire ſince the 6*th* of April laſt.

L. H. Steward. How came you to remember ſo punctually when he came to Town, and that he ſtaid here all the while?

Billing. I know it by my Accounts for the Journey up, and by the Tradeſmens Bills for the Proviſion of the Houſe ever ſince.

L. H. Steward. In what Capacity did you ſerve Sir Robert Cotton?

Billing. I bought in all the Proviſion for his Houſe, and paid the Tradeſmens Bills.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Papers in your Pocket that will point to any particular Time?

Billing. I have not the Tradeſmens Bills here, my Lord, nor my own Accounts; but I have look'd upon them, and by that I am ſure what I have teſtified is true.

L. H. Steward. Who do you call next, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Call Margaret Davis, [Who appeared.] Pray will you give an account to my Lord, what time Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and to the beſt of your Remembrance when he went out of Town again.

Davis. He came to Town upon the Tenth of April laſt, or thereabouts, and he has not been out of Town any Night ſince, except it were in Auguſt.

L. H. Steward. What Day did he come to Town, do you ſay?

Davis. About the tenth of April.

L. H. Steward. And you ſay he did not go out of Town till Auguſt?

Davis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. How do you know this?

Davis. I was conſtantly in the Houſe with him.

L. H. Steward. But how came you to be ſo exact as to the Time?

Davis. I ſaw him continually every Day.

L. H. Steward. How came you to ſee him?

Davis. I live with him in the Houſe.

L. H. Steward. Pray recollect your ſelf as to the Time he went out of Town, for I perceive the other Man ſays it was the latter end of July.

Davis. It was in Auguſt certainly, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, the other Witneſs ſaith it was the latter end of July, and that may be very well conſiſtent, neither of them ſpeaking to a Day.

L. H. Steward. Well, are you ſure he was in Town all the Month of June?

Davis. Yes, he was.

L. H. Steward. Well, who do call you next?

L. Delamere. Mrs. Sidney Lane. [Who appeared.]

L. H. Steward. What do you aſk this Gentlewoman?

L. Delamere. I examine her to the ſame Point: And I queſtion not but I ſhall make it out to your Grace, and my Lords, none of us all three that he has named were there at that Time.

L. H. Steward. I ſhall be very glad of it, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Pray Mrs. Lane will you give an account when it was Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and how long he ſtaid here?

Mrs. Lane. He came to Town the April before the Coronation, and never lay out of Town I am ſure all thoſe three Months of April, May, and June, after he came to Town.

L. Delamere. This Gentlewoman, my Lord, lived in the ſame Houſe with him.

Mrs. Lane. I did ſo, my Lord, and ſaw him every Night and Morning.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have two or three more Witneſſes to the ſame purpoſe; but I would ſpare their Lordſhips time, if this Point be fully cleared.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, do not abridge your ſelf, for I know my Lords will not grudge the Time, but are very deſirous you ſhould have full Liberty in what is pertinent.

L. Delamere. Then I deſire Charles Reeves may be called, [Who appeared.] I pray, my Lord, that this Man may give an account what time it was Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and how long he ſtaid here.

Reeves. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, he was in Town before the Coronation, and I ſaw him here every day from that time till after July once or twice every day.

L. H. Steward. Did you belong to him?

Reeves. Yes, and I do now.

L. H. Steward. In what Capacity, Friend?

Reeves. My Lord, I am his Footman.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, the next Witneſs I have to produce is Mr. Aſhburnham; being he cannot eaſily remove, I beg he may be heard in the Place where he is.

L. H. Steward. Ay, let him ſpeak where he is, and let him ſpeak out.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir, will you pleaſe to recollect your ſelf what time you ſaw Sir Robert Cotton, and where the laſt Summer?

Aſhburnham. My Lord, I being at Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe at Weſtminſter, he deſired me to preſent a Petition of his to the Houſe of Commons for him, and it was about the latter end of the time allotted for Petitions, I cannot exactly tell what Day of the Week or Month it was, but I ſaw him that day I preſented his Petition, and I ſaw him at the Committee of Elections two or three days after.

L. Delamere. Sir William Twiſden I deſire may be alſo heard what he has to ſay to the ſame Point.

[Who anſwered to the ſame effect.

L. Delamere. Mr. Heveningham is my next Witneſs, my Lord; who I deſire that he would pleaſe to give your Grace and my Lords an account, when he remembers to have ſeen Sir Robert Cotton in Town.

Mr. Heveningham. My Lord, it was a more than ordinary Occaſion that makes me remember the thing and the time ſo particular. I was engaged in a diſpute in the Houſe of Commons about my own Election, and that was upon the ſecond of June; then was a Caſe debated in the Houſe, whether a Mayor that was elected a Burgeſs for any Town could ſit upon his own Return; it was then carried he ſhould not, and the next day, which was the third of June, another Queſtion came on, whether Sir Joſeph Williamſon was duly elected and returned; and I remember at that time I was walking with Sir Robert Cotton in the Court of Requeſts, and Mr. Neal came out of the Houſe and told me, that it was carried by five, that he was not; and then Sir Robert Cotton was with me.

L. H. Steward. So you ſpeak as to the ſecond and third of June?

Mr. Heveningham. My Lord, had it not been upon this particular occaſion, I could not have remember'd the time ſo exactly.

L. H. Steward. You give a very good token for your remembrance, and my Lords hear what you have ſaid.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace pleaſe that the Clerk of the Houſe of Commons may be called, and examined to the Journal of that Houſe, when it was Sir Robert Cotton preferred his Petition, and that will fix the time as to what Mr. Aſhburnham and Sir William Twiſden have ſaid?

L. H. Steward. Call whom you pleaſe, my Lord.

L. Delamere. It ſeems he is not ready, but I hope I have given your Grace and my Lords ſufficient Satisfaction, that Sir Robert Cotton was not there at that time that this Fellow ſpeaks of. I will now go on and prove Mr. Offley was not there neither; and the firſt Witneſs I call to that, ſhall be Sir Willoughby Aſton, whom I deſire your Grace will be pleaſed to hear ſpeak in his Place.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ſay, Sir Willoughby?

Sir W. Aſton. My Lord, I deſire to be guided in what account I ſhall give by the Queſtions that ſhall be asked.

L. H. Steward. What is it you ask Sir Willoughby Aſton?

L. Delamere. Pray can you remember, Sir Willoughby, what time it was, and whether about the latter end of May laſt, or when, that you know of Mr. Offley's being at your Houſe, and how long he ſtaid there?

Sir W. Aſton. I can give an account of his Motion for ten Days together, but that perhaps may be more than is neceſſary.

L. H. Steward. It will not be improper, Sir, for you to give as exact and particular account as you can of the Times.

Sir W. Aſton. If your Grace pleaſe, I will do it.

L. H. Steward. Pray do, Sir.

Sir W. Aſton. Upon the twenty ſixth of May, which was Tueſday, at Night Mr. Offley and his Lady and ſome of their Relations, came to my Houſe; upon Wedneſday the twenty ſeventh of May Mr. Offley was ſo ſick that he kept his Chamber and his Bed all Day; upon the twenty eighth of May, which was Thurſday, he was ſo ill that he kept his Chamber all Day, and roſe about five at Night, and I then waited upon him, and ſat with him three Hours in his Dreſſing-Room. On Friday the twenty ninth of May he went to Church, that Day was imployed a great part in Devotion. Upon the thirtieth of May, which was Saturday, Mr. Offley and his Lady went, and a great part of my Family went with them, to one Mr. Pickering's ſix Miles off my Houſe, there they dined, and returned at Night to my Houſe. Upon Sunday the thirty firſt of May, I have a particular Remark whereby I remember that Mr. Offley went to viſit Mr. Needham. Upon Monday the firſt of June, Mrs. Offley and the Women of my Family went to viſit my Lady Brooks, but Mr. Offley not being well, ſtaid at home. On Tueſday the ſecond of June he was ſtill at my Houſe, there was a great deal of Company there, and he was in the Company all the Day long. On Wedneſday the third I fell ſick in the Morning about four of the Clock, but Mr. Offley was in the Houſe all the Morning; but in the Afternoon he went to make a Viſit two Miles from my Houſe, at a Place called the Ware-houſe, where the Ships ride at Anchor: And upon Thurſday Morning, which was the fourth of June, he went from my Houſe. Now if your Lordſhip deſire to know any thing about any particular Time about this Compaſs, I'll give you the beſt account I can.

L. H. Steward. Can you tell where he went when he went from your Houſe?

Sir W. Aſton. He went directly home, as he ſaid.

L. H. Steward. Did you hear at any time that he ſtaid by the way, between his going from you and coming to his own Houſe?

Sir W. Aſton. My Son went with him two or three Miles of his way, and I heard that at Middlewich he ſtaid to ſpeak with ſome of the Militia Officers that he met with by the way there at a Muſter, and afterwards went directly home.

L. H. Steward. Pray is the uſual Way from his Houſe to your's by my Lord Delamere's?

Sir W. Aſton. No, my Lord, directly another way.

L. H. Steward. Will you aſk Sir Willoughby Aſton any more Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Grace pleaſe, I would aſk Sir Willoughby Aſton one Queſtion. Sir, I deſire to know how far it is from your Houſe to my Lord Delamere's?

Sir W. Aſton. Sir, it is about eleven Miles.

L. H. Steward. Eleven Miles you ſay, Sir?

Sir W. Aſton. Yes, my Lord, eleven of thoſe Northern Miles.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have ſome more Witneſſes to examine to this Point.

L. H. Steward. Call whom you pleaſe, my Lord?

L. Delamere. I call Mr. Gregory next, my Lord. [who appeared.] Pray give my Lord an account, when Mr. Offley went from Sir Willoughby Aſton's laſt Summer, and whither he went?

Gregory. My Lord, my Maſter went from Sir Willoughby Aſton's Houſe ——

L. H. Steward. Who is your Maſter?

Gregory. Mr. Offley, my Lord. It was upon the fourth of June at nine of the Clock in the Morning, and went from thence to Middlewich, and was at Home at his own Houſe about five of the clock in the Evening, as I was told, for I did not go directly Home with him.

L. H. Steward. Was he at Mere that Day at my Lord Delamere's?

Gregory. No, not that I know of, I was not with him.

L. Delamere. Then pray call Thomas Kidd. [Who appeared.] Pray were you that Day with Mr. Offley when he went from Sir Willoughby's Aſton's?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Delamere. What Day was it?

Kidd. The fourth of June.

L. Delamere. Then whither went he?

Kidd. He went the direct Road to his own Houſe, I never parted from him, nor did he ſtop any where till he came to Middlewich, where the Country Militia were exerciſing; and he juſt alighted off his Horſe, and ſpoke with Major Minſhaw and ſome of the Officers, but never ſo much as drank by the way till he came to his own Houſe.

L. H. Steward. What to his Houſe in Staffordſhire?

Kidd. No, but to Crew-Hall in Cheſhire.

L. H. Steward. Does Mere lie in the Road between Sir Willoughby Aſton's and Crew-Hall, ſo that your Maſter might be there within that time?

Kidd. No, that he could not do.

L. H. Steward. Were you with Mr. Offley the whole Journey home?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. H. Steward. Were you no time from him?

Kidd. No, my Lord, I was not.

L. H. Steward. What time did he come home?

Kidd. He came to his own Houſe about four or five a-clock at night.

L. H. Steward. And did not he go from thence that night?

Kidd. No, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Now, my Lord, I will prove as to my ſelf that I was in London at the time as he ſpeaks of. And firſt, I deſire Sir James Langham may be heard to that.

[He appeared, but gave no Evidence.

L. Delamere. Pray call ——— Booth, [who appeared.]

L. H. Steward. What is this Gentleman's Name?

L. Delamere. He is my Brother, my Lord, his Name is——Booth.

L. H. Steward. What do you aſk him?

L. Delamere. Pray can you remember what time in June you ſaw me in Town here?

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I ſaw my Brother here in Town, the third, fourth, fifth, ſixth, and ſo on to the tenth of June, and the tenth of June I went out of Town my ſelf; I ſaw him ſometimes twice or thrice a day in that time, for I did not lodge above half a ſcore doors from him.

L. H. Steward. Where was that?

Mr. Booth. In Great Ruſſel-ſtreet.

L. H. Steward. How come you to remember the time ſo particularly?

Mr. Booth. It was that day Se'nnight before I went out of Town, which was Wedneſday the tenth of June, and had it not been for that particular Circumſtance, I had not remark'd it ſo much as to be able particularly to remember it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Booth, did you know of your Brother's going out of Town the twenty ſeventh of May?

Mr. Booth. I heard he was gone out of Town about that time.

L. H. Steward. Why then, when came he hither to Town again?

Mr. Booth. I cannot tell, but I ſaw him upon the third of June in the Evening.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, it is not poſſible for him ſo to do in that time, if he rode Poſt.

L. H. Steward. He did make a great deal of haſte backward, and forward, that is certain.

L. Delamere. My Brother does not know when I went, but as he heard, he ſays.

L. H. Steward. But pray, my Lord, mind the Objection that has been made, for it carries a great deal of weight in it. It is plainly proved by two Witneſſes, that you went out of Town the twenty ſeventh of May at nine of the Clock at Night, and rode to Hoddeſdon, and the next Day came to Hitchin about Noon; then they left you and return'd back again to London that Night, and you told them you were going to ſee a ſick Child of your's in Cheſhire; how came you to make ſuch poſt-haſte back again, that he ſhould ſee you here in London the third of June?

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I am certain I ſaw him that day in the Evening, and ſo on to the tenth.

L. H. Steward. Did my Lord then tell you how your Friends did in Cheſhire?

Mr. Booth. I cannot remember the particular diſcourſe we had.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did he tell you he came to Town?

L. H. Steward. You ſay you uſed to ſee him every day one or twice a day.

Mr. Booth. Yes, I did ſo.

L. H. Steward. Pray where was he the Second of June?

Mr. Booth. He was not come to Town.

L. H. Steward. How long time was it before that, that you had not ſeen him?

Mr. Booth. I had not ſeen him of ſeveral days before.

L. Delamere. If it pleaſe your Grace, here is another Brother of mine that ſaw me, at the ſame time; and tho' he be my Brother, I hope he is a good Witneſs.

L. H. Steward. Ay, God forbid elſe; what is his name?

L. Delamere. George Booth.

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſay you, Sir?

Mr. George Booth. My Lord, I ſaw my Brother Delamere here in Town the fourth of June, by this particular Circumſtance which I cannot err in, That the next day, as I take it, I went down with him to the Houſe of Lords, to hear my Lord Macclesfield's Cauſe, which was then there to be heard upon the Appeal of Mr. Fitton; and my Brother was in the Houſe of Lords at that time, which was the fifth of June.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I think it not amiſs to put you in mind of one thing, which it is fit your Lordſhip ſhould give ſome anſwer to: Does your Lordſhip deny that you went out of Town the twenty ſeventh of May?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I do not; I acknowledge I did ſo.

L. H. Steward. Then it will be fit for you to give an account where you were the twenty eighth of May, and ſo all along till the third of June.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I hope I ſhall give you full Satisfaction in that by and by; but I have one Witneſs more to this point of my being in Town at ſuch a time, that I could not be in Cheſhire, when this Fellow ſays I was; and that is my Lord Lovelace.

L. H. Steward. There is my Lord Lovelace, what will you aſk him?

L. Delamere. Whether he did not ſee me at the Trial of my Lord Macclesfield in the Houſe of Lords?

L. Lovelace. I was in the Houſe of Lords that day that my Lord Macclesfield's Trial was, and I remember I did ſee my Lord Delamere there.

L. H. Steward. But we are as much at a loſs now as ever we were, for what day that Trial was, does not appear: What day was my Lord Macclesfield's Trial?

L. Delamere. The Journal of the Houſe of Lords proves that to be the fifth of June.

L. Love-

L. Lovelace. My Lord ſtood juſt by the Bar, and if I am not miſtaken took Notes.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I hope now I have ſatisfied your Grace, and the reſt of my Lords, that none of us three whom this Fellow has mentioned were there at that time at Mere, when he ſays we were: For my own part, I do poſitively affirm, and I ſpeak it as in the Preſence of Almighty God, that I have not ſeen Sir Robert Cotton at my Houſe that I know of theſe many Years, and I believe Mr. Offley was never in my Houſe ſince I was Maſter of it: And I do likewiſe proteſt, that to my Knowledge, I never ſaw the Face of this Man till now that he is produced as a Witneſs againſt me; I am ſure I never ſpoke with him in all my Life, nor never ſent for him to come to my Houſe: And if your Lordſhip pleaſe to conſider the Story that he tells, it will eaſily appear to be very improbable, for he neither tells you who the Meſſenger was that was ſent for him, nor the Way that he came into the Houſe, which any Body that has ever been at the Houſe could not miſtake. For when I asked him what Door it was he came in at, it was for this Reaſon, becauſe he muſt needs have gone a great way about, if he had not come in at the uſual Entry into the Hooſe, for I have but one Door into my Houſe except that by the Stables, which is a great way off the Houſe? And it being about that Time of the Year, if it were eight or nine of the Clock in the Evening, he muſt needs diſcern which Way he came in: And, beſides, my Lords, is it probable what he ſays, that he ſhould ſee no Body ſtirring about the Houſe except it were this Man without a Hand, that he ſays was ſent for him? I aſſure your Lordſhips, I have not, nor had my Father ever that I know of, any Servant or Tenant that was maimed in that Manner that he ſpeaks of. He ſaith, he was recommended to us by my Lord Brandon: But he cannot tell your Lordſhip any Thing that ever he had done, to recommend him either to him or us. I did ask him what important Service he had ever done for me, that might give a credibility to my imploying him in ſuch a Buſineſs as this. My Lord, I cannot help it, if People will tell falſe Stories of me, but I hope your Lordſhips will conſider the Credibility of it; is it to be imagined that I would take a Man I knew nothing of, upon another Man's Word, into ſo great a Confidence, as to employ him about a Buſineſs of this Nature? I am glad that he was called in here again for your Lordſhips to view him. I beſeech your Lordſhips to look at him; is this Fellow a likely Fellow to be uſed in ſuch an Affair? Does he look as if he were fit to be employed for the raiſing of ten thouſand Men? Does he ſeem to be a Man of ſuch conſiderable Intereſt in his Country? A Fellow, that though it be not direct Evidence, yet by ſeveral Witneſſes, I have ſhewn to be a Man of no Reputation in his Country, nay of a very ill one; and could we have none elſe to employ in a Matter of this Moment but ſuch a Fellow as his Neighbours would not take his Word for any Thing? It is an improbable Story upon theſe accounts, if I ſhould ſay no more. Your Lordſhips likewiſe ſee, that he is ſo well thought of, that he dare not be truſted out of Newgate, but is kept ſtill a Priſoner, and as ſuch gives Evidence here: And I know your Lordſhips will not forget that he ſwears to ſave himſelf, having been a Rebel by his own Confeſſion, and he would fain exchange his Life for mine; till he has a Pardon, which as yet, as I am informed, he has not. The Objection will ſtill lie upon him, that he ſwears to ſave himſelf, which will render his Teſtimony not credible, and the Law requires the Witneſſes in Treaſon, to be credible ones: And yet forſooth! this Man, that no Body that knows him will believe a Word he ſays, muſt be taken to be the Man of Integrity, Zeal, and Induſtry; the Man of Management and Diſpatch, the Man of Intereſt and Authority in his Country, that nothing can be done, but he muſt have a Hand in it. My Lords, I think I need ſay no more of him; your Lordſhips Time is precious, too precious indeed to be ſpent upon ſuch a Subject, and ſo I ſet him aſide.

My Lords, there is a Thing that I perceive the King's Counſel lay a great weight upon; and that is my going down upon the 27th Day of May, and my frequent riding Poſt to and fro. I ſhall now ſatisfy your Lordſhips of the Reaſons of my Journeys. The firſt Time, which was betwixt the Coronation and the ſitting of the Parliament was upon this Reaſon; I went down to take Poſſeſſion upon a Leaſe of a conſiderable Value which was renewed to me by the Biſhop. I did not think of going down at that Time ſo ſoon; but I had Word wrote me out of the Country that the Biſhop was ill, and that obliged me in Point of Intereſt to make haſte down. And this I ſhall prove by one that was Attorney for me, and another that was a Witneſs of my taking Poſſeſſion: And for this, I firſt call Mr. John Edmonds, [who came in] Pray, Sir, will you tell his Grace and my Lords, what you know of my coming down into the Country in the beginning of May, and upon what Account, and what Time it was?

Mr. Edmonds. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, upon the fifth of May my Lord Delamere did me the Honour to come to my Houſe, and he ſtaid there a little while, and deſired me to be a Witneſs of his taking Poſſeſſion upon a Leaſe of my Lord Biſhop of Cheſter's, and we went into the Houſe that was next to mine, which was and there did take Poſſeſſion.

L. H. Steward. Where is your Houſe?

Mr. Edmonds. At Boden, in Cheſhire.

L. H. Steward. When was this, do you ſay?

Mr. Edmonds. The fifth of May.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir, will you ſatisfy my Lord, whether the Biſhop was not ill at that time?

Mr. Edmonds. My Lord, I had been a little before at Cheſter, and hearing my Lord Biſhop was not very well, I went to Mr. Allen, and told him I was deſirous to ſee my Lord, and ſpeak with him, if I might; he told me my Lord was ſo ill, that he would ſpeak with no body.

L. H. Steward. Was it a Leaſe for Years, or a Leaſe for Lives?

Mr. Edmonds. It was a Leaſe for Lives.

L. H. Steward. Then that might require my Lord's taking Poſſeſſion. Who do you call next, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Mr. Henry.

L. H. Steward. What do you aſk this Man, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Pray will you give his Grace and my Lords an account whether you were not Attorney, and deliver'd me Poſſeſſion upon the Leaſe of my Lord Biſhop of Cheſter?

Mr. Henry. My Lord, I was Attorney by Appointment, and the 5th of May laſt I delivered Poſſeſſion to my Lord Delamere at one of the moſt remarkable places of the Land that belonged to that Leaſe of the Biſhop.

L. Delamere. My Lords, I hope this is a ſatisfactory Reaſon for my going down at that time, the Biſhop being ill, and the Leaſe being worth 6 or 7000 l. The next time that I have to ſpeak to, is, That of my going the 27th of May, and for that I give this anſwer; I did go out of Town the 27th of May, the occaſion of my going was, I had taken up a Reſolution before to go ſee my Child that that was not well, but I had not taken my Journey ſo ſoon, nor with ſuch Privacy, but that I had notice, there was a Warrant out to apprehend me; and knowing the Inconveniences of lying in Priſon, I was very willing to keep as long out of Cuſtody as I could, and therefore I went out of the way, and under a borrowed Name. When I came to my Houſe in Cheſhire, there were not above five of my own Servants that ſaw me all the while I was there, and I ſaw no body but them; but while I was there, my Wife ſent me an Expreſs, that as to the Warrant ſhe hoped it was a Miſtake, and there was no ſuch thing; but my eldeſt Son was very ill, and if I intended to ſee him alive, I muſt make haſte up: this was the occaſion of my quick return, and I ſhall ſatisfy your Lordſhips by Proof, that I came thither in that manner to avoid the Warrant, and for no other Reaſon.

L. H. Steward. You ſay you went to ſee a ſick Child in the Country.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Mother that is here, wrote me word that my Child was not well.

L. H. Steward. Pray what made you come back again ſo ſoon?

L. Delamere. Becauſe I had an Expreſs ſent me by my Wife that my other Son was like to die.

L. H. Steward. Call your Witneſs, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Mrs. Kelſey, [who came in.] Pray will you give an account what I ſaid, when I came down, was the occaſion of my coming ſo privately and changing my Name?

Mrs. Kelſey. My Lord heard, he ſaid, there was a Warrant for taking of him up, and he gave me that for a Reaſon; beſides his little Son in the Country was ill.

L. H. Steward. What, ſhe lived in the Country, did ſhe?

Mrs. Kelſey. My Lord, I was in the Houſe with him.

L. Delamere. If your Lordſhips pleaſe, my Mother may be examined?

L. H. Steward. Yes, with all my heart.

[She ſat by him at the Bar.

L. H. Steward. Pray, Madam, will you lift up your Voice, that my Lords may hear what you ſay.

Lady Delamere. My Lords, this Child of his that was in the Country, was more than ordinarily precious to him, in regard it was born to him at that time, when he was an innocent honeſt Men, (as he is now), a Priſoner in the Tower for High-Treaſon, above two Years ago, and I think it increaſed his Affection to the Child, that God had given it to him when he was in that Affliction. My Lord, I knowing the Affection that the Father and Mother both had to the Child, my Care in their abſence I thought ought to be more exerciſed about him: The Child ſucked, but I ſaw the Child decline, and therefore I was of Opinion that he ſhould be wean'd, and I ſent up word that if they did not take care quickly and look a little after him, I was afraid he would go into a Conſumption. Upon this, my Son came down, I ſaw him not indeed, becauſe he was very private all the while he was in the Country; but while he was there, it pleaſed God to viſit his eldeſt Son with a dangerous Diſtemper, upon which my Daughter ſent for him Poſt, if he intended to ſee his Son alive. And thereupon I think he made what haſte back again he could.

L. H. Steward. Were you in the ſame Houſe with him, Madam?

Lady Delamere. My Lord, I ſay I did not ſee him all the time he was there, I only tell you what I heard.

L. H. Steward. How long was he in the Country?

Lady Delamere. I cannot tell exactly that, I think he was not above two days.

L. H. Steward. He muſt be but one day by Computation of Time?

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, I will ſatisfy you in that point preſently: Mrs. Kelſey will give an account what time it was that I came down, and when I went away.

Mrs. Kelſey. My Lord came down on the Sabbath-day night, and ſtaid there Monday, and went away the Tueſday Morning.

L. H. Steward. Look you, my Lord, the 27th of May was upon a Wedneſday, that night you went out of Town, and went to Hoddeſdon. Thurſday, which was the 28th, you came to Hitchin at Noon. Friday was the 29th. Saturday the 30th. Sunday was the 31ſt, then you came to your Houſe; Monday the firſt of June, Tueſday the 2d, then you came away, and upon Wedneſday the 3d you were in Town, ſo ſays your Brother.

L. Delamere. It was ſo, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Which way did you come back?

L. Delamere. I came Poſt through Coventry, my Lord, and that was the time that Hope ſpeaks of, that I told him I had come another way into Cheſhire, when I came down.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you ſay you went down to ſecrete your ſelf from a Warrant that you apprehended was out againſt you, and that made you go a by-way, how come you then to come ſo publick back, the ordinary Poſt-Road?

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have told you I had an Expreſs came from my Wife, that told me it was a Miſtake as to the Warrant, but that my Child was very ill, and I muſt make haſte up.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Witneſſes, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Yes, my Lord, I deſire Mr. Kelſey may be called. [He came in.

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſay you?

Mr. Kelſey. My Lord came down upon the Sunday night at eleven of the clock, and ſtaid at home all Monday; and on Tueſday Morning at

at three of the clock in the Morning, he took horſe for London, and I have Letters by me that are dated the 4th of June, which was Thurſday, that told me my Lord was come to Town the night before.

L. H. Steward. Whoſe are thoſe two Letters?

Mr. Kelſey. They were from my Lady and Mrs. Vere Booth, and both came by the ſame Poſt.

L. Delamere. I ſhall call one Witneſs more, my Lord, to prove that my Child was ſick here in Town, and the time; and that is Sir Thomas Millington, who was his Phyſician.

[Sir Thomas was called, and came in.

L. Delamere. Pray, Sir Thomas, can you recollect your ſelf what time my Son was ill laſt Year?

Sir Thomas Millington. My Lord, I was ſent for to my Lord Delamere's Son upon the 28th of May, and I found him then very ill, and he continued ſo for two days, inſomuch as I told my Lady Delamere his Mother that I thought the Child would not eſcape. I told it likewiſe to Sir James Langham, who is my Neighbour in Lincolns-Inn-Fields; what they did upon it, whether they ſent for my Lord Delamere to Town or no, I cannot tell, but I know punctually this was the time, by reaſon the Bills I wrote are dated on that day, otherwiſe I could not have remembred the time; but the Bills being ſent me from the Apothecary, I find that date to them.

L. H. Steward. Pray, Mr. Attorney, will you call Edlin again, or Vaux, either of them.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is Edlin, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Where did you part with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Edlin. Upon Thurſday the 28th of May at Hitchin.

L. H. Steward. What time of the day was it when you parted?

Edlin. It was about ten of the Clock.

L. H. Steward. He went forward Poſt into Cheſhire, did he not?

Edlin. He did not go Poſt I ſuppoſe, for he went upon his own Horſe.

L. H. Steward. Did he go upon his own Horſe?

Edlin. It was the ſame Horſe he went to Hitchin upon.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Witneſſes, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I hope I have given their Lordſhips Satisfaction in all Points, and need to give no further Evidence.

L. H. Steward. Have you any thing more then to ſay, my Lord?

L. Delamere. My Lords, I acknowledge I did go at that time privately a By-Road, and by the name of Brown; and as for Jones, who it is ſaid came from Holland that day, I appeal to him himſelf, and I call God to Witneſs I never ſaw the Man before now in my Life; nay, till after I was made a Priſoner upon this account, I never ſo much as heard of his Name: and your Lordſhips ſee by the Proofs, that all that has been ſaid againſt me, except what this Fellow Saxon has teſtified, is but hearſay, nay indeed but hearſay upon hearſay at the third and fourth hand.

My Lords, if People will make uſe of my Name, and ſay this, and that, and the other, and among themſelves talk of Meſſages ſent to me; can I or any Man in the world help it? At this rate who can be innocent, if a Man muſt be guilty becauſe others intend to draw him into Treaſon? For there is no more in the utmoſt that this Proof can amount unto. It is at the pleaſure of any two Men in the World, to take away the Lives, Honours, and Eſtates of any of your Lordſhips, if it be a proof ſufficient to make you guilty of Treaſon, for them to ſwear you were intended to be drawn into Treaſon.

And, my Lords, as to the Truth of the thing it ſelf, that there was any Meſſage or Correſpondence between the late Duke of Monmouth and me, I call God to witneſs I have neither wrote nor ſent Letter or Meſſage to him, or received Letter or Meſſage from him, this three Years: I cannot tell what expectation he might have concerning me or any body elſe. It is very probable he might have Expectation of Aſſiſtance from ſome body, and that without ſuch Expectation he would not have made the attempt he did: But, my Lords, all that is nothing to me, I had no correſpondence either by Letters or Meſſages with him; ſo that all that has been ſaid upon that point of his Expectations, and what he declared, I muſt give the ſame anſwer to, that I gave to the Evidence about Jones's Meſſage, That admitting it to be true, he did declare ſo, yet, no proof being made of an actual Correſpondence, it is no more but only an Intention in him to draw Men into Commiſſion of Treaſon; and if that be allow'd for Proof of guilt, I muſt repeat it again, there's no Man can be innocent.

Upon the whole matter, my Lords, I muſt leave my Caſe to the Conſideration of your Lordſhips: I am not Maſter of ſo much Law or Rhetorick as the King's Counſel, to plead in my own Cauſe, and I have had but little time to recollect and apply my Defence to my Accuſation; but I hope what Evidence I have offered, has given your Lordſhips full Satisfaction that I am not guilty of what I ſtand charged with.

And after all that has been ſaid, my Lords, I would beg your Lordſhips to conſider this, that if in caſe I were guilty of theſe things, and were conſcious to my ſelf of having been engaged in an Affair of this nature, can any Man imagine I could have been ſo hardy as to have ſurrendred my ſelf upon the King's Proclamation: nay, if I with thoſe other two Gentlemen that he has named, had had any Tranſactions of this kind, with ſuch a Fellow as he has been made appear to be by his Neighbours, (that muſt needs be thought a Man of no Faith, becauſe of no Reputation, tho' he gives himſelf a great Character as a Man of great Intereſt, of wonderful Diſpatch and Dexterity in the Management of ſuch matters) ſo as at firſt ſight to put this large Confidence in him; can it be imagined I ſo little regarded my own Life and all that is dear to me, as to have ſurrendred my ſelf, were it not that I was certain of my own Innocence and Integrity? Life it ſelf, my Lords, is to be preferred above all things but Honour and Innocence; and Job ſaith, Skin for Skin, and all that a Man hath will he give for his Life: and why ſhould I be preſumed to have ſo little value for it, as voluntarily to deliver up my ſelf to Deſtruction, had I been conſcious that there was any one, who could really teſtify any thing that could hurt me?

Beſides, my Lords, this very Fellow Saxon is but one Evidence, and how far you will believe him, I muſt ſubmit it to you? but ſurely one Witneſs will never be ſufficient to convict a Man of Treaſon, tho' thouſands of Hear-ſays, and ſuch trivial Circumſtances be tacked to it; eſpecially when they are tacked to an Evidence, which I dare ſay your Lordſhips are far from thinking it deſerves any Credit.

My Lords, I deſire your leave to aſk this one Queſtion; Would not any of your Lordſhips think himſelf in a bad Condition as to his Fortune, if he could produce no better Evidence to prove his Title to his Eſtate, than what has been produced againſt me this day to take away my Life? And if ſuch Evidence as this would not be ſufficient to ſupport a Title to an Eſtate, certainly it can never be thought ſufficient to deprive a Man of Life, Honour, Eſtate and all.

My Lords, I am not the only Man that has been or may be falſely accuſed: God knows how ſoon the Misfortune of a falſe Accuſation may fall to the Lot of any of your Lordſhips; I pray God it never may, but ſince that may happen, I queſtion not, but your Lordſhips will be very cautious, how by an eaſy Credulity you give Encouragement to ſuch a Wickedneſs: For Knights of the Poſt will not end in my Trial, if they proſper in their Villany; and perhaps it may come home to ſome of your Lordſhips, if ſuch Practices be incouraged, as I cannot but firmly believe they will not.

My Lords, the Eyes of all the Nation are upon your Proceedings this day; nay, I may ſay, your Lordſhips are now judging the Cauſe of every Man in England, that ſhall happen to come under like Circumſtances with my ſelf at any time hereafter: For accordingly as you judge of me now, juſt ſo will inferior Courts be directed to give their Judgmeuts in like Caſes in time to come.

Your Lordſhips very well know, Blood once ſpilt can never be gathered up again, and therefore unleſs the Caſe be very clear againſt me, you I am ſure will not hazard the ſhedding of my Blood upon a doubtful Evidence. God Almighty is a God of Mercy and Equity: Our Law, the Law of England, is a Law of Equity and Mercy; and both God and the Law require from your Lordſhips, Tenderneſs in all Caſes of Life and Death: and if it ſhould be indifferent, or but doubtful to your Lordſhips, (which upon the Proofs that I have made, I cannot believe it can be) whether I am innocent or guilty, both God and the Law require you to acquit me.

My Lords, I leave my ſelf, my Cauſe, and all the Conſequences of it, with your Lordſhips; and I pray the All-wiſe, the Almighty God direct you in your Determination.

L. H. Steward. Have you any thing more to ſay, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then Mr. Attorney, and you that are of the King's Counſel, what have you to ſay more?

* Mr. Finch. Mr. *Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my noble Lords the Peers of my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar:

The Evidence that hath been given againſt this noble Lord is of two Natures, part of it is poſitive Proof, and part is circumſtantial; and though it be allowed that there muſt be two Witneſſes in Caſes of Treaſon, and that Circumſtances, tho' never ſo ſtrong, and ſufficient to fortify one poſitive Proof, do not, nor can make a ſecond poſitive Witneſs; yet I crave leave to ſay, that there may be Circumſtances ſo ſtrong and cogent, ſo violent and neceſſary to furniſh a poſitive Teſtimony, that will in Law amount to make a ſecond Witneſs, ſuch as the Law requires.

My Lords, I do not ſay every Circumſtance will do it, but ſuch as is neceſſarily and violently tending to the ſame thing that was poſitively proved. As for Example;

If a Man comes and ſwears againſt another that he ſaid he will go immediately and kill the King, and another Man that did not hear thoſe Words, comes and teſtifies his lying in wait; that Circumſtance of lying in wait, that was an Action indifferent in it ſelf, yet, when applied to the poſitive Proof, will be a ſecond Witneſs to ſatisfy the Law, which requires two Witneſſes in Treaſon.

I muſt confeſs, my Lords, when we will make Circumſtances to be a ſecond Evidence, they muſt be ſuch as are neceſſarily tending to fortify the poſitive Evidence that was given by the ſingle Witneſs: Now whether that be ſo in this Caſe, I muſt, as becomes me, leave to your Lordſhips Conſideration. It is not my buſineſs to carry the Evidence further than it will go, and I am ſure it is not my duty to let it loſe any of its weight; and if it have not that force it ought to have, I ſhould be to blame, as not having done what belongs to me to do. I will therefore ſtate the Fact to your Lordſhips plainly as it ſtands upon the Proof, and ſubmit the whole to your Lordſhips Determination.

My Lords, our poſitive Proof, with which I crave leave to begin, is but by one ſingle Witneſs, and that is Saxon; and his Evidence is this, that being in Cheſhire, where he lives, he was ſent for about the third or fourth of June laſt to my Lord Delamere's Houſe at Mere, that there he was brought into a lower Room, where he ſaw my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. Crew Offley: That my Lord Delamere told him he had received a Meſſage lately by one Jones, that was ſent from the Duke of Monmouth, whereby he underſtood that the Duke would ſpeedily be in England, and that they muſt provide Men and Arms to aſſiſt him when he came; that he was a Man recommended to them by my Lord Brandon, and that upon his Recommendation they had thought fit to intruſt him in the matter, and withal told him, they were to raiſe 40000 l. and 10000 Men in that County: He tells you likewiſe, theſe Gentlemen gave him eleven Guineas and 5 l. in Silver to go of an Errand for them to the Duke of Monmouth, which he undertook to do, and hired a Horſe to that purpoſe.

This, my Lords, is the poſitive Proof, and this, I muſt acknowledge, ſtanding ſingle and by it ſelf, will make but one Witneſs; but whether the Circumſtances that have been offered to your Lordſhips by the other Witneſſes, be ſuch violent Circumſtances as neceſſarily tend to fortify and ſupport that poſitive Evidence, and ſo will ſupply the defect of a ſecond Witneſs, is the next Queſtion that I come to conſider, and I ſhall take them into Conſideration in the ſame order that the Evidence was delivered.

The firſt Step, my Lords, that was made as to any Evidence that toucheth this noble Lord at the Bar, was what was teſtified by my Lord Gray; for as to the other part of the Evidence that related to the Conſpiracy in general, I need not trouble your Lordſhips with the Repetition of it, (that there was ſuch an one, is notoriouſly known) known) but I ſay that part of the Evidence in his Hiſtory of the Conſpiracy, which my Lord Gray brought home to my Lord Delamere, was this:

That upon the firſt Meetings and Conſultations, it was reſolved upon, that the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go into Cheſhire to make an Intereſt there; and among the Perſons that he was directed to go to, and to apply for advice there, as Perſons fit to be truſted, this noble Lord was one.

That upon the Duke of Monmouth's Return out of Cheſhire, he did give his Confederates here in Town an Account, how well he had been received, and that he liked all things very well there. This, my Lords, is the firſt Circumſtance that has been offered to you, to ſhew that he had a Confidence in my Lord Delamere, as a principal Support of his Deſigns at that very time.

The next thing that we offer, is this Meſſage of Jones's, and for that, our Evidence has fully and plainly made it out to your Lordſhips, that Jones did go over into Holland, and his Buſineſs there was an Errand from Diſney and Major Wildman, and the Confederates here. The effect of his Meſſage was, that it was their Opinion, that the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go for Scotland and join with my Lord Argyle; but upon the Receipt of the Meſſage, he being angry, ſaid, it was too late for ſuch a Meſſage now, and he would come into England, for he was ready to ſail: and thereupon he did ſend this ſame Jones back again into England upon a Meſſage, to inform the Lords and others of his Party, among whom my Lord Delamere was one, that he would have them betake themſelves into their ſeveral Countries, and not ſtay to be taken or clapp'd up here, for that, he did underſtand, was the Deſign: and this Meſſage was delivered in Writing; (now that the Duke of Monmouth did write a Note and give it to Jones, is verified by my Lord Gray's Teſtimony too) and this ſealed up, and he was not to open it till he came to Sea; and when he did open it, he found it contained a Signification of the Place where he was to land, and where he was to rendezvouz, which was Taunton, and who were the Perſons that were to have Notice of it, among whoſe Names we find my Lord Delamere's to be one: but he likewiſe tells you, he was not the Man that was to carry the Meſſage to theſe Perſons, but he was to deliver it to Matthews or Wildman, and they were to tranſmit it to the other Perſons.

He tells you likewiſe that when he came to Town, which was the 27th of May, he met neither with Matthews nor Major Wildman; whereupon being at a loſs what he ſhould do with his Meſſage, for want of thoſe other Perſons, he acquainted Diſney, that was executed, with his Errand, who promiſed to take care that it ſhould be delivered.

This, my Lords, is all Jones's Evidence; for Jones does not ſay that he himſelf acquainted, or that Diſney did acquaint my Lord Delamere with the Meſſage.

But here, my Lords, is the main Circumſtance that renders the matter ſuſpicious; that very Night that Jones came to Town, and Diſney being acquainted with the Meſſage, had undertaken to get it delivered, does my Lord Delamere at Ten of the clock at Night go out of Town, in the Company of two Friends under the Diſguiſe of the Name of Brown, and a By-Road, and ſo goes down to his own Houſe in Cheſhire; this, I ſay, is the Circumſtance that renders the thing ſuſpicious.

Now, my Lords, if we do prove by ſuch ſufficient Evidence, as may make the matter manifeſt to you, that my Lord Delamere had notice of Jones's Meſſage, (for upon that Point the Caſe will turn, whether he had Notice ſuch a Meſſage was brought, that ſuch things were in agitation, ſuch Preparations made, and that they were all to go into the Country) then I ſay, his going down is a violent Preſumption, he had an Intent to comply with the Meſſage, and join in the Deſign.

But now, my Lords, comes the Queſtion, the main Queſtion, how is it made out that he had notice Jones brought ſuch a Meſſage?

Jones indeed, my Lords, does not ſay that he himſelf imparted it to him, or that Diſney told him he had communicated it; but I think there is another Witneſs, and that is Storey, who ſaith, that Brand, one that knew of the Meſſage, did acquaint him, that my Lord had received it at the Coffee-Houſe, and that Night went out of Town.

It is true, my Lords, this is but a Hear-ſay, but that which followed being Matter of Fact, my Lord's going out of Town that Night, ſo late in the Night, and in ſuch an unuſual ſuſpicious manner, gives more Credit to the Relation, than a bare Hear-ſay could have of itſelf.

For unleſs there be ſome good account given of my Lord's thus going out of Town, it is a kind of neceſſary Preſumption, that he was acquainted with the Meſſage, part of which was, that he ſhould go out of Town; and if ſo, it can have no other Conſtruction, with Submiſſion, than to be in purſuance of, and complying with the Directions that that Meſſage brought him from the Duke of Monmouth.

My Lords, to carry this a little further, there were two Witneſſes produced that went out of Town with him; they ſeem indeed unwillingly to give their Evidence, but I ſhall faithfully repeat what Teſtimony they gave: Their Names were Vaux and Edlin.

Vaux, he ſaith, he met my Lord Delamere at the Rummer-Tavern in Queen-ſtreet the 26th day of May, which was the day before Jones came to Town, and that then he appointed to go out of Town the next day, which was the 27th, and accordingly he did go.

Edlin, he ſaith, he met Vaux at the Cuſtom-houſe upon the 27th of May in the Morning, and being deſired by him to go with him out of Town, he did ſo, and there was with him a Gentleman whoſe Name was Brown, and who now appears to be my Lord Delamere; they went in Company with him as far as Hitchin, where they left him upon Thurſday the 28th at Noon.

This Evidence is produced to ſhew, that my Lord did go out of Town at that time, and in that manner as has been alledged, and that theſe Perſons went with him to conduct him a private way, that he ſhould not go the common Road. Your Lordſhips will conſider what Anſwer hath been given to this, and what account my Lord Delamere has given of himſelf.

Another thing, my Lords, that renders this matter ſuſpicious, is the Name which my Lord was pleaſed to aſſume to diſguiſe himſelf by, it being a Name by which the Party uſe to call my Lord in their Diſcourſes of him; and to prove that, we have likewiſe produced two Witneſſes, Babington and Paunceford.

Babington,

Babington, he ſays, That in their Conſultations there were Diſcourſes of my Lord Delamere, under the Name of Brown; and once at a Tavern, when my Lord Delamere was named by one in the Company, he was preſently catched up for it, and replied to, You mean Mr. Brown; and ſo it ſeems that was the Canting Name under which they diſcourſed of my Lord Delamere.

The other Witneſs Paunceford, he tells you, That being at Diſney's Houſe, and concerned with him in printing the late Duke of Monmouth's Declarations (for the printing of which Diſney was executed) one Locke came for ſome of thoſe Declarations for Mr. Brown, and they were to be ſent into Cheſhire: So that though your Lordſhips obſerve the Witneſs ſaith, ſome body elſe was called by the Name of Brown, yet you have had no Account given you, that there was any other Brown in Cheſhire.

It is true, indeed, my Lords, that theſe are only things that Diſney ſaid, and Locke ſaid; but I muſt take leave to ſay, it is very ſuſpicious, that if my Lord went out of Town into Cheſhire under the Name of Brown, and ſome Perſons ſhall, on the behalf of Brown, come for Declarations to be ſent into Cheſhire, and my Lord commonly in that Party go by the Name of Brown, that thoſe Declarations were for my Lord, and that will be a great Evidence of his Correſpondence with Monmouth.

But I confeſs, my Lords, all this while our Proof is circumſtantial, and indeed there is no poſitive Proof but that of Saxon, and in him our Proof muſt center; for without him, I muſt acknowledge, nothing that has been offered will be Proof againſt my Lord upon this Indictment: for bare Circumſtances, and bare Suſpicions will be no Proof againſt any Man, but ſuch as are violent and neceſſary, and thoſe joined to a poſitive Proof, ſuch as the Law requires.

Now then, my Lords, I come to the Conſideration, of what Weight and Streſs is to be laid upon this poſitive Evidence of Saxon: And here I muſt confeſs there are Objections made to this Teſtimony, to which I cannot readily give an Anſwer; for Saxon has ſworn, That he was there at ſuch a Time, and that he was ſent for, and entertain'd as a Perſon recommended by my Lord Brandon, as fit to be entruſted with the Secret, and capable of being employed to ſtir up the Country, in order to the Proſecution of a Deſign they had on foot to raiſe a Rebellion; and he does charge Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Crew Offley to have been there at the ſame Time.

The Evidence, my Lords, that has been produced to falſify this poſitive Witneſs, in the Point of Sir Robert Cotton's being there, has been by five or ſix Witneſſes, who teſtify Sir Robert Cotton's being in Town, and not elſewhere, from the tenth of April to the latter end of July; and I do not ſee what we have to ſay in anſwer to their Teſtimony. I muſt agree the Proof to be full in that Point; and if the Evidence they give be true, I cannot ſay that Saxon's Evidence can be true in that Point.

Likewiſe as to Mr. Offley, Sir Willoughby Aſton and others have teſtified that he was not at my Lord Delamere's at the Time Saxon ſpeaks of: For he gives you an Account where he was every Day, from the twenty-ſixth of May to the fourth of June; and his own Servants bring him to his own Houſe upon the fourth of June in the Evening, which is quite another Way than from Sir Willoughby Aſton's to my Lord Delamere's: If this likewiſe be true, what Saxon ſays cannot be true, I muſt agree to it.

There is another Thing that is offered on my Lord Delamere's Part, that he was himſelf in Town at that Time that Saxon ſays he was at Mere: But here indeed the Matter ſeems to be a little more ſtrange and dubious, that my Lord ſhould make ſo much Haſte down, as to go out late at Night, and ſo cautiouſly, as to go by a wrong Name, and yet to ride to Town again the Poſt-way, to be here juſt the third of June, when Saxon ſwears he was in Cheſhire.

I muſt confeſs there is the Proof of his two Brothers, that ſay, they ſaw him in Town the third and fourth of June: There is likewiſe ſome Account given of his going out of Town, that it was upon a Meſſage received from his Mother, that his Child in the Country was ſick; and indeed he did go a By-way, and change his Name, for fear of a Warrant in a Meſſenger's Hands that was out againſt him to apprehend him.

Now, my Lords, I do not hear any thing that has been offered, that there was any ſuch Warrant, or any Diſcourſe to ground that Apprehenſion upon: My Lord had the firſt and only Apprehenſion of a Warrant; but upon what Reaſons he himſelf beſt knows: This Apprehenſion made him go out of Town ſo privately, he ſays, becauſe he would not be prevented of ſeeing his ſick Child.

But how comes it to paſs, that my Lord makes ſuch a ſpeedy Return? By the Proofs, it appears he did not get there till Sunday Night, and upon the Tueſday Morning comes Poſt for London.

The Account that he gives of that, is this, His Haſte was to ſee another Child that was here ſick in Town: For he had received an Expreſs from his Wife upon the Monday, to acquaint him, that the Coaſt was clear, and there was no Warrant out againſt him; but if he intended to ſee his Child alive, he muſt make Haſte up to Town; and accordingly, upon the Tueſday Morning early, he ſets out, and upon the Wedneſday in the Evening is here in Town again.

But, with Submiſſion, my Lords, there is no good Account given by this noble Lord, what Reaſon there was for ſo many Poſt-Journies backward and forward, as, has been teſtified, he made within a very little Compaſs of Time; for beſides this of his Return Poſt upon the ſecond of June, there is only an Anſwer given to one of the reſt, which is that of the fifth of May, when he ſaith he went to take Poſſeſſion of the Land that he held by a Leaſe then renewed to him by the Biſhop, which being of ſome Value and Conſideration to his Lordſhip, and the Biſhop being ſick, he thought it neceſſary to go down Poſt himſelf, and would not be content to receive Livery by Attornment. This is the only Anſwer that is given to all thoſe Times of his riding Poſt that have been given in Evidence.

Theſe are Matters of Suſpicion that are offered to your Lordſhips; but I confeſs, Matters of Suſpicion only, unleſs clear, poſitive, probable Proof be joined with them, will not weigh with your Lordſhips to convict a Man of High-Treaſon, where two Witneſſes are required. But whether theſe Matters of Suſpicion be ſuch violent and neceſſary Preſumptions as tend to fortify the poſitive Teſtimony, I muſt leave that to the Conſideration of your Lordſhips.

L. H. Steward. You do not call any more Witneſſes then, I perceive.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, it has not been uſual of late, for thoſe who have ſat in the Place where I now am, upon thoſe Occaſions to give your Lordſhips any Trouble in repeating or obſerving upon the Evidence. In this Caſe the Evidence that hath been given has been very long, and it would be too great a Preſumption in me, ſhould I have any manner of Doubt in the leaſt, that either your Lordſhips have not well obſerved it, or the learned Counſel for the King have been defective in collecting or remarking upon it, ſo as to need my Aſſiſtance.

But, my Lords, I confeſs there is ſomething I cannot omit taking Notice of, not for your Lordſhips Sakes, but for the Sake of this numerous and great Auditory, that one Miſtake in Point of Law might not go unrectified, which ſeemed to be urged with ſome Earneſtneſs by the noble Lord at the Bar, That there is a Neceſſity in Point of Law, that there ſhould be two poſitive Witneſſes to convict a Man of Treaſon.

He ſeemed to lay a great Streſs upon that; but certainly his Lordſhip is under a great Miſtake, as to the Law in that Point; for without all doubt, what was urged in anſwer to this Objection by that learned Gentleman that concluded for the King, is true, There may be ſuch other ſubſtantial Circumſtances joined to one poſitive Teſtimony, that, by the Opinion of all the Judges of England, ſeveral Times has been adjudged and held to be a ſufficient Proof.

As for the Purpoſe, in this Caſe, ſuppoſe your Lordſhips, upon the Evidence that has been given here this Day, ſhould believe Saxon ſwears true, who is a poſitive Witneſs, and ſhall then likewiſe believe that there was that Circumſtance of Jones's coming over from Holland with ſuch a Meſſage upon the twenty-ſeventh of May (which is directly ſworn in Evidence, you are the Judges of that Evidence) and what the other Witneſſes have ſworn likewiſe, and is not denied by my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, that he went out of Town that Night, changed his Name, and went in an indirect By-Road; certainly theſe Circumſtances, if your Lordſhips be ſatisfied he went for that Purpoſe, do neceſſarily knit the poſitive Teſtimony of Saxon, and amount to a ſecond Witneſs.

That is, if Saxon's poſitive Teſtimony be true, then ſuppoſe all theſe Circumſtances that gave the Jealouſy, do make up a ſtrong Preſumption to join with the poſitive Evidence of Saxon; then you have two Witneſſes, as the Law requires, eſpecially if the Anſwer given by the Priſoner to thoſe Circumſtances be not ſufficient (as the ſlender Account he gives of his ſo frequent Journies in ſo ſhort a Compaſs of Time) but that there ſtill remains ſome Suſpicion. I could have wiſhed, indeed, that Matter might have been made ſomewhat more clear, that no Shadow of Suſpicion might remain.

Your Lordſhips are Judges: And if you do not believe the Teſtimony of Saxon, whoſe Teſtimony hath been ſo poſitively contradicted by divers Witneſſes of Quality, the Priſoner ought to be acquitted of this Indictment: If your Lordſhips pleaſe, you may go together, and conſider of it.

Lords. Ay, withdraw, withdraw.

Then the Peers withdrew in their Order, according to their Precedency, with the Serjeant at Arms before them.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, take your Priſoner from the Bar.

The Priſoner was taken into the little Room appointed for him at the Entrance into the Court.

The Peers ſtaid out about half an Hour, and then returned in the ſame Order that they went out in, and ſeated themſelves in their Places as before.

Cl. Crown. Serjeant at Arms, take the Appearance of the Peers. Lawrence, Earl of Rocheſter, Lord High Treaſurer of England.

He ſtood up uncovered, and anſwered,

Lord Treaſurer. Here.

And ſo did all the reſt.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Lords. Yes.

The Lord High Steward took their Verdict Seriatim, beginning with the puiſne Peer, in this Manner.

L. H. Steward. How ſay you, my Lord Churchill, is Henry, Baron of Delamere, guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, and hath been Arraigned, or Not guilty?

The Lord Churchill ſtood up uncovered, and laying his Hand on his Breaſt, anſwered, Lord Churchill. Not guilty, upon my Honour.

And ſo did all the reſt of the Peers.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, bring your Priſoner to the Bar.

The Priſoner was brought again to the Bar.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am to acquaint you, that my Noble Lords, your Peers, having conſidered of the Evidence that hath been given, both againſt you and for you, after they were withdrawn, have returned, and agreed on their Verdict, and by that Verdict have unanimouſly declared, that you are not Guilty of the High-Treaſon, whereof you have been Indicted, and this Day Arraigned, and therefore I muſt diſcharge you of it.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, I ſhall pray to Almighty God, that he will pleaſe to give me a Heart to be thankful to him for his Mercy, and my Lords for their Juſtice; and I pray God deliver their Lordſhips, and all honeſt Men, from wicked and malicious, lying and falſe Teſtimony; I pray God bleſs his Majeſty, and long may he reign.

L. H. Steward. And I pray God continue to him his loyal Peers, and all other his loyal Subjects.

Cl. Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O-yes! My Lord High-Steward of England, his Grace, ſtraightly willeth and commandeth all manner of Perſons here preſent to depart hence in God's Peace, and the King's, for his Grace my Lord High-Steward of England now diſſolves his Commiſſion.

God ſave the King.

At which Words his Grace taking the White-Staff from the Uſher of the Black-Rod, held it over his own Head, and broke it in two; thereby diſſolving the Court.

The King's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion.

JAMES the Second, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To the moſt Reverend Father in God, Our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellor, William Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan. And to Our Right Truſty and Right Well-beloved Counſellor, George Lord Jeffereys, Lord Chancellor of England. And to Our Right Truſty, and Right Well-beloved Couſin, and Counſellor, Lawrence Earl of Rocheſter, Lord High-Treaſurer of England. And to Our Right Truſty, and Right Well-beloved Couſin and Counſellor, Robert Earl of Sunderland, Preſident of Our Council, and Our Principal Secretary of State. And to the Right Reverend Father in God, Our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellor, Nathaniel Lord Biſhop of Durham. And to the Right Reverend Father in God, Our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Thomas Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter. And to Our Right Truſty and Well-beloved Counſellor, Sir Edward Herbert, Knt. Lord Chief Juſtice of the Pleas, before Us to be holden, Aſſigned, Greeting. We for divers good, weighty and neceſſary Cauſes and Conſiderations, Us hereunto eſpecially moving, of Our meer Motion, and certain Knowledge, by Force and Virtue of Our Supreme Authority and Prerogative Royal, do aſſign, name and authorize by theſe Our Letters Patent under the Great Seal of England, you the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellor of England, Lord High Treaſurer of England, Lord Preſident of Our Council, Lord Biſhop of Dureſme, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Our Chief Juſtice aforeſaid, or any three or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, from Time to Time, and at all Times during Our Pleaſure, to Exerciſe, Uſe, Occupy and Execute under Us, all manner of Juriſdictions, Privileges, and Preheminencies in any wiſe touching or concerning any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdictions, within this Our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, and to viſit, reform, redreſs, order, correct, and amend all ſuch Abuſes, Offences, Contempts, and Enormities whatſoever, which by the Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Our Realm can or may lawfully be reformed, redreſſed, corrected, reſtrained, or amended, to the Pleaſure of Almighty God, and Increaſe of Virtue, and the Conſervation of the Peace and Unity of this Realm. And We do hereby give and grant unto you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, thus by Us named, aſſigned, authoriſed and appointed, by Force of Our ſupreme Authority and Perogative Royal, full Power and Authority, from Time to Time, and at all Times, during Our Pleaſure, under Us to exerciſe, uſe, and execute all the Premiſes, according to the Tenor and Effect of theſe Our Letters Patents, any Matter or Cauſe to the contrary, in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And We do by theſe Preſents give full Power and Authority unto you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, by all lawful Ways or Means, from time to Time hereafter, during Our Pleaſure, to enquire of all Offences, Contempts, Tranſgreſſions and Miſdemeanors done and committed, and hereafter to be done and committed, contrary to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Our Realm, in any County, City, Borough, or other Place or Places, exempt or not exempted, within this Our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, *and of all and every Offender or Offenders therein, and them, and every of them, to order, correct, reform and puniſh by Cenſure of the Church. committed or done, in any Place exempt or not exempt, within this our Realm, according to the Tenor of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws in that Behalf: Granting you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, full Power and Authority to order and award ſuch Puniſhment to every ſuch Offender, by Cenſures of the Church, or other Lawful Ways, as is aforeſaid. And further, we do give full Power and Authority unto you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, all and every Offender and Offenders in any of the Premiſes, and alſo all ſuch as by you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall ſeem to be ſuſpected Perſons in any of the Premiſes, and them to examine, touching every or any of the Premiſes which you ſhall object againſt them; and to proceed againſt them, and every of them, as the Nature and Quality of the Offence, or Suſpicion in that Behalf ſhall require: And alſo to call all ſuch Witneſſes, or any other Perſon or Perſons that can inform you concerning any of the Premiſes, as you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, and them, and every of them, to examine upon their corporal Oaths, for the better Trial and Opening of the Truth of the Premiſes, or any Part thereof. And if you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall find any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever obſtinate or diſobedient in their Appearance before you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, at your Calling and Commandment, or elſe not in obeying, or in not accompliſhing your Orders, Decrees, and Commandments, or any Thing touching the Premiſes, or any Part thereof, or any other Branch or Clauſe contained in this Commiſſion, that then you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall have full Power and Authority to puniſh the ſame Perſon and Perſons ſo offending, by Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Deprivation, or other Cenſures Eccleſiaſtical; and when any Perſons ſhall be convented or proſecuted before you, as aforeſaid, for any of the Cauſes above expreſſed, at the Inſtance and ſuit of any Perſon proſecuting the Offence in that Behalf, that then you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall have full Power and Authority to award ſuch Coſts and Expences of the Suit, as well to and againſt the Party as ſhall prefer or proſecute the ſaid Offence, as to and againſt any Party or Parties that ſhall be convented, according as their Cauſes ſhall require, and to you in Juſtice ſhall be thought reaſonable. And further Our Will and Pleaſure is, That you aſſume our Well-beloved Subject William Bridgman, Eſquire, one of the Clerks of our Council, or his ſufficient Deputy or Deputies in that Behalf, to be your Regiſter, whom We do by theſe Preſents depute to that Effect, for the Regiſtring of all your Acts, Decrees, and Proceedings, by Virtue of this Our Commiſſion; and that in like Manner you, or any three or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, by your Diſcretions ſhall appoint one or more Meſſenger or Meſſengers, or other Officer or Officers neceſſary and convenient to attend upon you for any Service in this Behalf. Our Will and expreſs Commandment alſo is, That there ſhall be two Paper Books indented and made, the one to remain with the ſaid Regiſter, or his ſufficient Deputy or Deputies, the other with ſuch Perſon, and in ſuch Places as you the ſaid Commiſſioners, or any three or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall in your Diſcretions think moſt fit and meet; in both which Books ſhall be fairly entred all the Acts, Decrees, and Proceedings made, or to be made, by Virtue of this Our Commiſſion. And whereas Our Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge, and divers Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges, Grammar-Schools, and other Eccleſiaſtical Incorporations, have been erected, founded, and endowed by ſeveral of Our Progenitors, Kings and Queens of this Realm, and ſome other by the Charity and Bounty of ſome of their Subjects, as well within Our Univerſities as other Parts and Places, the Ordinances, Rules and Statutes whereof be either imbezzled, loſt, corrupted, or altogether imperfect; we do therefore give full Power and Authority to you, or any five or more of you, of whom We will you the forenamed, the Lord Chancellor always to be one, to cauſe and command in Our Name, all and ſingular the Ordinances, Rules, and Statutes of Our ſaid Univerſities, and all and every Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges, Grammar-Schools, and other Eccleſiaſtical Incorporations, together with their ſeveral Letters Patents, and other Writings, touching or in any wiſe concerning their ſeveral Erections and Foundations, to be brought and exhibited before you, or any five or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one; willing, commanding, and authoriſing of you, or any five or more of you, as aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, upon the exhibiting and upon diligent and deliberate View, Search, and Examination of the ſaid Statutes, Rules and Ordinances, Letters Patents and Writings, as is aforeſaid, the ſame to correct, emend and alter; and alſo where no Statutes are extant, in all or any of the aforeſaid Caſes, to deviſe and ſet down ſuch good Orders and Statutes as you, or any five or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall think meet and convenient, to be by Us confirmed, ratified, allowed, and ſet forth, for the better Order and Rule of the ſaid Univerſities, Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges and Grammar-Schools, Erections and Foundations, and the Poſſeſſions and Revenues of the ſame, and as may beſt tend to the Honour of Almighty God, Increaſe of Virtue, Learning and Unity in the ſaid Places, and the publick Weal and Tranquillity of this Our Realm. Moreover, Our Will, Pleaſure, and Commandment is, that you Our ſaid Commiſſioners, and every of you, ſhall diligently and faithfully execute this Our Commiſſion, and every Part and Branch thereof, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, and according to the true Meaning thereof, notwithſtanding any Appellation, Provocation, Privilege or Exemption in that Behalf, to be had, made, pretended, or alledged by any Perſon or Perſons reſident or dwelling in any Place or Places exempt or not exempt, within this Our Realm; any Law, Statutes, Proclamations or Grants, Privileges or Ordinances, which be, or may ſeem contrary to the Premiſes notwithſtanding. And for the better Credit, and more manifeſt Notice of your ſo doing, in the Execution of this Our Commiſſion, Our Pleaſure and Commandment is, That to your Letters miſſive, Proceſſes, Decrees, Orders, and Judgments, for or by you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, to be awarded, ſent forth, had, made, decreed, given or pronounced, at ſuch certain publick Places as ſhall be appointed by you, or by any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, for the due Execution of this Our Commiſſion, you are ſome three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, ſhall cauſe to be put and fixed a Seal, engraven with a Roſe and Crown, and the Letter J. and Figure 2 before and the Letter R. after the ſame, with a Ring or Delivered at Fulham on Thurſday, being the 17*th* of the ſame June, in the Afternoon, by Mr. Atterbury the Meſſenger.

JAMES R.

RIght Reverend Father in God, We greet you well. Whereas We have been inform'd, and are fully ſatisfied, that Dr. John Sharp, Rector of the Pariſh-Church of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, and in your Dioceſe, notwithſtanding Our late Letter to the moſt Reverend Fathers in God the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, and our Directions concerning Preachers, given at our Court at Whitehall, the 15*th of* March, 1685, in the ſecond Year of Our Reign; yet he, the ſaid Dr. John Sharp, in Contempt of the ſaid Orders, hath in ſome of the Sermons he hath ſince preached, preſumed to make unbecoming Reflections, and to utter ſuch Expreſſions as were not fit or proper for him; endeavouring thereby to beget in the Minds of his Hearers an evil Opinion of Us and Our Government, by inſinuating Fears and Jealouſies, to diſpoſe them to Diſcontent, and to lead them into Diſobedience and Rebellion. Theſe are therefore to require and command you immediately upon Receipt hereof, forthwith to ſuſpend him from further Preaching in any Pariſh-Church or Chapel in your Dioceſe, until he has given Us Satisfaction, and Our further Pleaſure be known herein: And for ſo doing, this ſhall be your Warrant: And ſo We bid you heartily Farewel.

Given at Our Court at Windſor, the 14*th Day of* June, 1686. in the ſecond Year of Our Reign.

By his Majeſty's Command.

SUNDERLAND.

The Biſhop of London's Anſwer,

Sent by Dr. Sharp to the Earl of Sunderland, then at Hampton-Court, upon Friday, June 18. who could have no Anſwer.

To the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland, Lord Preſident, &c.

MY LORD,

I Always have, and ſhall count it my Duty to obey the King in whatever Commands he lays upon me, that I can perform with a ſafe Conſcience: But in this, I humbly conceive, I am obliged to proceed according to Law; and therefore it is impoſſible for me to comply; becauſe though his Majeſty commands me only to execute his Pleaſure, yet, in the Capacity I am to do it, I muſt act as a Judge; and your Lordſhip knows no Judge condemns any Man before he has Knowledge of the Cauſe, and has cited the Party. However, I ſent to Mr. Dean, and acquainted him with his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, whom I find ſo ready to give all reaſonable Satisfaction, that I have thought fit to make him the Bearer of this Anſwer, from him that will never be unfaithful to the King, nor otherwiſe than,

My Lord, your Lordſhip's
moſt humble Servant,
H. LONDON.

On Sunday after, Dr. Sharp carried a Petition to Windſor, which was not admitted to be read: Which is as follows.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

The humble Petition of John Sharp, Clerk,

Sheweth,

THAT nothing is ſo afflictive to your Petitioner, as his Unhappineſs to have incurred your Majeſty's Diſpleaſure; which he is ſo ſenſible of, that ever ſince your Majeſty was pleaſed to give Notice of it, he hath forborn all publick Exerciſe of his Function, and ſtill continues ſo to do.

Your Petitioner can with great Sincerity affirm, that ever ſince he hath been a Preacher, he hath faithfully endeavoured to do the beſt Service he could in his Place and Station, as well to the late King, your Royal Brother, as your Majeſty, both by preaching and otherwiſe.

And ſo far he hath always been from venting any thing in the Pulpit tending to Schiſm or Faction, or any way to the Diſturbance of your Majeſty's Government, that he hath upon all Occaſions in his Sermons, to the utmoſt of his Power, ſet himſelf againſt all Sorts of Doctrines and Principles that look that way: And this he is ſo well aſſured of, that he cannot but apprehend that his Sermons have been very much miſrepreſented to your Majeſty.

But if in any Sermon of his, any Words or Expreſſions have unwarily ſlipt from him, that have been capable of ſuch Conſtructions, as to give your Majeſty Cauſe of Offence, as he ſolemnly profeſſes he had no ill Intention in thoſe Words or Expreſſions, ſo he is very ſorry for them, and reſolves for the future to be ſo careful in the Diſcharge of his Duty, that your Majeſty ſhall have Reaſon to believe him to be your moſt faithful Subject.

And therefore he earneſtly prayeth, that your Majeſty out of Your Royal Grace and Clemency, would be pleaſed to lay aſide the Diſpleaſure You have conceived againſt Your humble Petitioner, and reſtore him to that Favour which the reſt of the Clergy enjoy under your Majeſty's gracious Government.

So ſhall Your Petitioner ever Pray, &c.

In

In the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, &c.

Mercurii 4 die Auguſti, 1686.

Preſent in Council, Lord Chancellor, Lord Biſhop of Durham, Lord Treaſurer, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, Lord Preſident, Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert.

Upon my Lord Biſhop's appearing before them, according to a Summons ſent unto him, the Lord Chancellor Jeffereys began, viz.

Lord Chancellor. MY Lord Biſhop of London, the Lords here preſent have received Orders from the King to inſpect all Eccleſiaſtical Affairs and Perſons; and He hath commanded us to cite you before us; and I deſire you would give a poſitive and direct Anſwer to it: What was the Reaſon you did not ſuſpend Dr. Sharp, when the King commanded, and ſent you expreſs Orders ſo to do, and told you what is was for, viz. for preaching ſeditiouſly and againſt the Government?

Lord Biſhop. I have received ſuch an Order; and if what was done in that Affair was done amiſs, and contrary to my Duty, it was my Ignorance and Inadvertency, and not a wilful Fault: I have been always ready to expreſs my Duty to his Majeſty; and if in this Particular I have not complied, it was becauſe, as I was told, I could not. I was not ſo ſhallow at to go on my own Head, but took the beſt Advice I could get: I conſulted thoſe whoſe Buſineſs it is more perfectly to underſtand theſe Proceedings; all told me I could not legally do it, but by way of Citation and hearing him.

Lord Chanc. Ignorantia Juris non excuſat; you ought to have known the Law, and it was a wonder you did not: The King is to be obey'd, and if you have any Reaſon to ſhew in this Particular, we are ready to hear you.

Lord Biſhop. I knew not what would be laid to my Charge, and therefore was not provided to make ſuch a Defence as I might have done; but if your Lordſhips will give me a Copy of your Commiſſion, and a Copy of my Charge, and allow me ſome Time, I will endeavour to give your Lordſhips Satisfaction.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, I would not miſinterpret your Words, but ſhall deſire you to explain their Meaning. If by deſiring a Copy of our Commiſſion, you deſign to quarrel with the Juriſdiction and Legality of the Court, I have another Anſwer for you; but till I know your Meaning here, my Anſwer is, that no Copy of the Commiſſion can be granted, and it is unreaſonable to deſire it; it is upon Record; all the Coffee-houſes have it for a Penny a-piece, and I doubt not but your Lordſhip has ſeen it.

Lord Biſhop. I have never ſeen it, nor have I deſired it for ſuch Ends, to diſpute the Legality of it: But your Lordſhips knows it is a Thing altogether new to this Generation, and, it may be, ſomething may be found in it, whereby I may be inſtructed and directed in my Anſwer and Behaviour in the Matter. But, my Lord, if I may not have a Copy of it, will your Lordſhips pleaſe I may either read, or hear it read?

Lord Chanc. That is a Thing I cannot grant of my ſelf, I muſt aſk my Lords Commiſſioners Judgment; and if you will be pleaſed to withdraw, you ſhall hear it.

The Biſhop and all the Company withdrew for a Quarter of an Hour; then returning, the Lord Chancellor ſaid,

My Lord, all the Commiſſioners are of Opinion, that your Requeſt is not to be granted, and that it is unreaſonable. Might every one that appears here challenge the ſight of our Commiſſion, and the reading of it, all our Time will be ſpent in the reading, and we have ſomething elſe to do.

The Proceedings of Courts in this Kind are never by Libel and Articles; Sapientem ſuccinctim ore tenus, by Word of Mouth only; and it is a ſhort Queſtion I aſk, Why you did not obey the King?

Lord Biſhop. It is a ſhort Queſtion, but requires more Words to anſwer it. I pray your Lordſhips to conſider I am a Peer, a Biſhop, and have a Publick Truſt, though unworthy, under a Publick Character; and I would behave my ſelf as becomes one in theſe Capacities.

Lord Chanc. We know very well your Lordſhip's Quality and Character, and are willing to ſhew all due Reſpect to your Lordſhip; but yet we muſt have a due Regard for the King, and Government too: His Majeſty muſt not be neglected.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I ſuppoſe there is no Appeal from the Court; and when a Man is to be condemned at one Bar, and is in Danger of being knock'd down at one Blow, you would think it unreaſonable he ſhould not have ſome Time to make his Defence.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, I ſuppoſe their Lordſhips will be willing to grant ſome Time: I pray what Time does your Lordſhip deſire?

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, it is the Aſſize-time, and moſt of the Counſel, upon ſome Occaſion or other (either Buſineſs or Diverſion) are in the Country: I pray you, my Lord, I may have till the beginning of the Term.

Lord Chanc. Hah! That's unreaſonable: His Majeſty's Buſineſs cannot admit of ſuch Delays; methinks a Week ſhould be enough: What ſay your Lordſhips, Is not a Week enough?

The Commiſſioners being asked, ſignified by the Chancellor that a Week was enough.

Lord Biſhop. Since your Lordſhip will grant no more, I will aſk no more.

Lord Chanc. Adjourn until Monday next, the Ninth of Auguſt, 1686.

Upon

Upon the Ninth Day his Lordſhip came, attended with his Nephew, the Earl of Northampton, his Brother in Law, Sir John Nicholas, and his Brother, Sir Francis Compton, &c.

There being preſent in Council the ſame as before in the ſame Proceedings.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, we are here to hear your Reaſons.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I have loſt no Time for preparing my Anſwer, but am not ſo ready as I might have been, becauſe I could not light of the Commiſſion your Lordſhip told me was upon Record, and in every Coffee-houſe, but employed a whole Week to ſearch for it, and could not have a Sight of it until laſt Night: If your Lordſhip doubts the Truth of this, I have the Perſon ready to make Oath here of it.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you are a Perſon of Honour, and we will not queſtion the Truth of what you ſay, there needs no Oath: But, my Lord, I muſt tell you, that we will not admit of any quarrelling with our Commiſſion, we are well aſſured of the Legality of it, otherwiſe we would not be ſuch Fools as to ſit here.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I have other Reaſons why I deſire a Sight of your Commiſſion; it may be, it may not reach me, being a Peer and a Biſhop; and it may be, it may not reach this particular Caſe; and therefore I deſire a Sight of it, in regard I could not ſee it until the laſt Night. I have not had time to take Advice what to anſwer; if your Lordſhip will not be ſatisfied, I muſt give ſuch an Anſwer as I have prepared; but it is my Deſire to have longer Time for it.

Lord Chanc. Is this all you have to ſay?

Lord Biſhop. This is the firſt Thing: I do not deſire to prolong the Time, the Neceſſity of the Caſe requiring it, the Counſel being out of Town in whom I think to confide.

Lord Chanc. If your Lordſhip will withdraw, we will give you an Anſwer.

He withdrew for a Quarter of an Hour.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, as I formerly told you, we will not endure any quarrelling at our Commiſſion; it will be an odd Thing in us to give you Time to pick Holes in it; but we are willing to pay all due Reſpects to your Lordſhip: What Time do you require?

Lord Biſhop. I ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhips; but I hope a Fortnight will not be unreaſonable.

Lord Chanc. Agreed: You ſhall have it until to Morrow Fortnight in the Morning.

To which my Lord Chancellor added,

Lord Chanc. My Lord, when I told you our Commiſſion was to be ſeen in every Coffee-houſe, I did not ſpeak with any Deſign to reflect on your Lordſhip, as if you were a Haunter of Coffee-houſes. I abhorred the Thoughts of it, and intended no more by it, but that it was common in the Town.

Note, When the Biſhop ſpake concerning the Commiſſion, Sir Thomas Clarges ſpake with a loud Voice, ſaying, Well put, well put; my Lord ſpeaks nothing but Truth. There was alſo another Gentleman, Sir John Lowther of Lincolnſhire, who as he was coming away in the Crowd, ſaid, There are ſome who have repreſented me as a Papiſt, but the contrary ſhall appear; I will not be afraid, nor aſhamed, to vindicate my Lord Biſhop's Cauſe before the Commiſſioners themſelves.

TUESDAY, Auguſt 23, 1686.

There being preſent in Council the ſame as in the former Proceedings: The Lord Biſhop attending, the Proceedings were as follow.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, we are now ready to hear your Lordſhip's Anſwer.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, notwithſtanding the Time hath been very ſhort, conſidering the Weightineſs of the Matter, and the Abſence of many of the learned Counſel, I have taken what Advice I could, and have conſulted thoſe that are very learned in the Laws. I hope there will be no Miſinterpretation of my Words, I do not intend any Thing which is derogatory to the King's Supremacy, that is undutiful to his Majeſty, or diſreſpectful to your Lordſhips. My Counſel tells me, that your Proceedings in this Court are directly contrary to the Statute Law, and are here to plead it, if your Lordſhips will admit them.

Lord Chanc. We will neither hear your Lordſhip nor your Counſel in the Matter; we are ſufficiently ſatisfied of the Legality of our Commiſſion, as we often told you.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I am a Biſhop of the Church of England, and by all the Law in the Chriſtian Church in all Ages, and by the particular Law of this Land, I am, in Caſe of Offence, to be tried by my Metropolitan and Suffragans: I hope you Lordſhip will not deny the Right and Privilege of Chriſtian Biſhops.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you know our Proceedings are according to what has been done formerly, and that we have an original Juriſdiction: This is ſtill queſtioning our Court.

Lord Biſhop. It is partly.

Lord Chanc. Nay, it is abſolutely ſo.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I hope you will interpret every Thing in your Commiſſion in Favour of the Perſon that is brought before you: I humbly conceive that your Commiſſion doth not extend to the Crimes laid to my Charge for you are to cenſure Faults which ſhall be committed: This that I am accuſed of, was before the Date of your Commiſſion.

Lord Chanc. I confeſs there is ſuch a Clauſe, but there are general Clauſes, that take in Things that are paſt, as well as thoſe that are to come. Hath your Lordſhip any thing more?

Lord Biſhop. My Lords, proteſting in my own Right to the Laws of the Realm, as a Subject, and the Rights and Privileges of the Church, as a Biſhop, I ſhall, with your Lordſhips leave, give you my Anſwer.

Which was accepted; and the Biſhop withdrew, and left Dr. Sharp's Petition, which the King had refuſed to accept.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, we have read the Paper.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, it is Dr. Sharp's Petition to the King.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, be pleaſed to take it again, we are not concerned in it; will you pleaſe that your Lordſhip's Anſwer be read?

Lord Biſhop. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſe. My Lord, I have this to ſay further, What I did in

in this Matter was Juriſperitorum Concilio. I conſulted my Counſel, who is the Judge of my Courts, as well as others; and the Law ſays, That what is done by the Advice of Counſel, ſhall not be interpreted to be done maliciouſly, or obſtinately. The Law, in this Caſe, requires, that if a Prince require a Judge to execute an Order, which is not agreeable to the Law, he ſhall Reſcribere & Reclamare Principi. Now, my Lord, I conceived I acted in this according to my Duty, for I wrote back to my Lord Preſident, in as becoming Words as I could; and acquainted him, that an Order to ſuſpend before Citation and hearing the Perſon, is againſt Law, and expected his Majeſty's further Pleaſure.

In the next Place, my Lords, I did in Effect what the King commanded to be done, for I adviſed Dr. Sharp to forbear Preaching till his Majeſty had received Satisfaction concerning him; and accordingly he hath forborn in my Dioceſe.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, will you have your Paper read?

Lord Biſhop. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

Which contained the King's Letter, and the Biſhop's Anſwer thereto.

Lord Chanc. Hath your Lordſhip any more to ſay?

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip would hear my Counſel, by whom you may have more clear and full Satisfaction concerning what I have ſaid.

Whereupon the Biſhop was deſired to withdraw, and after half an Hour, he and his Counſel were called in; who were Drs. Oldiſh, Hodges, Price, and Newton. A brief Account of what they pleaded.

Dr. Oldiſh. My Lord, the Queſtion before your Lordſhip is, Whether the Biſhop of London hath been diſobedient to the King's Command; concerning which, it muſt be conſidered, Firſt, What was commanded to be done.

Secondly, What he did in Obedience to it.

Thirdly, What Judgment ought to have been given by him.

It is apparent by the Letter, that the King did not take Cognizance of the Cauſe, for the Words are, Being informed that Dr. Sharp, &c. So that it could not be an abſolute Suſpenſion, for that ſuppoſeth a Proof of the Crime charged upon him: Then let us conſider the Words themſelves:

That you ſuſpend him from Preaching. Now, my Lords, we have no ſuch Thing in our Laws; ſo that the Meaning muſt be Silencing of him. Where there is an abſolute Suſpenſion, there ought to be Citation, Form of Proceeding, Judgment and Decree; to act otherwiſe is contrary to the Law of God, of Nature, of all Nations in all Ages, and was never known in the World.

Lord Chanc. I am loth to interrupt you; but I muſt tell you, this is an unneceſſary Harangue; we know that it was not an abſolute Suſpenſion: But the Queſtion is, Whether the Biſhop could ſuſpend him from Preaching?

Dr. Oldiſh. Then, my Lords, I have gained another Point; if it were only Silencing him, the Queſtion is, Whether the Biſhop did not execute the King's Commands? I think he did, and in ſuch a Method as is obſerved in our Courts.

When any eminent Perſon is accuſed, the Judges ſend to him by a Letter; and if he appears and complies with the Judges Order, the Law is ſatisfied.

Judicium redditur in invitum non in volentem: The Biſhop did ſend for Dr. Sharp, ſhewed him the King's Letter, adviſed him not to Preach till the King had received Satisfaction; in which he promiſed to obſerve his Lordſhip's Command, and hath not preached to this Day; ſo that his Majeſty's Command was, in Effect, fulfilled. My Lord, there is the like Proceedings in the Common Law; for if an Attorney takes a Man's Word for his Appearance, there lies no Action againſt the Attorney.

Lord Chanc. Cujus contrarium: There lies an Action of Eſcape againſt the Attorney ——

Dr. Hodges. My Lords, the Matter of Fact hath been ſtated, and the Queſtion is, Whether the Biſhop hath been diſobedient to the King's Command? It appears, that he has not; becauſe upon the Receipt of his Majeſty's Letter, he required the Doctor not to Preach, and he hath obeyed him in that which the King commanded. To ſuſpend him, the Biſhop could not do, the Act of Suſpenſion is a Judicial Act: The King writes to him as to a Biſhop, to ſuſpend as a Biſhop and as a Judge, which could not be done without the hearing of the Cauſe. If the Prince ſends to a Perſon that is not a Judge, that is only in a miniſterial Office, that Officer is to execute his Commands: But when the King commands a Judge, he commands him to act as a Judge. This is no light Matter the Doctor is accuſed of; it is for preaching Sedition and Rebellion, which requires a ſevere Cenſure. And if the Biſhop, as a Judge, had ſuſpended him, he had begun at the wrong End, for this had been Judgment before Proceſs: In this Cauſe there ought to have been a Citation, our Books giving many Inſtances, which would be too tedious to your Lordſhips —— I will give this one: The Emperor's Proceedings againſt the King of Sicily, upon Information which he had received; and giving him no Citation, the King appealed to the Pope, who declared the Proceedings to be void; and that it was againſt the Law of Nature, which is above all poſitive Laws, to paſs Sentence before Citation. This is the Method of proceeding before all Courts, and I humbly conceive it is, and will be, the Method of this Court; for otherwiſe, the Biſhop need not to have been cited before you. The Biſhop has done what was his Duty, he was bound to return his Reaſon to the King, why he did not do that which he commanded, and to expect his further Anſwer; which was done. I affirm, that if a Prince, or a Pope, command a Thing which is not lawful, it is the Duty of a Judge Reſcribere; which is all he can do, quoting his Author.

Dr. Price. The Queſtion is ut ſupra: A Citation is Jure Gentium, and can never be taken away by any poſitive Command or Law whatſoever: The Biſhop hath obeyed the King ſo far as he could, and did reſcribe, expecting his Majeſty's further Pleaſure. If the Biſhop could have ſuſpended him, it muſt have been done in Aulâ; but in regard it was only ſilencing him, which was required, it might be done in a private Room: The Advice of a Biſhop is in ſome Senſe an Admonition, which is a Judicial Act, dicial Act, and this was given by a Biſhop, and obeyed by the Doctor.

Dr. Newton. My Lord, the Queſtion is not ut ſupra, the Biſhop hath not been diſobedient. As in Nature no Man can be deſired to do that which is impoſſible, ſo no Man can be obliged to do an unlawful Act. (Id non fit quod non legitime fit.) This Rule obliges all Men, at all Places, and at all Times. The Charge againſt Dr. Sharp is of a very high Nature; and he deſired to be heard before he was condemned.

My Lords, the Biſhops are Cuſtodes Canonum, and therefore muſt not break them themſelves. I affirm, the Biſhop was ſo far from being Diſobedient, that he was Obedient to the King: For where he did Reſcribere, and heard not the further Pleaſure of the King returned, he ought to conclude, the King was ſatisfied with what he had written, according to his Duty, and the King had altered his Commands. A Citation, as your Lordſhips have heard, is according to all Laws, in all Places, in all judicial Acts; there is ſomething to be done according to Law, and ſomewhat according to the Diſcretion of the Judges, and for that Reaſon as well as theſe, the Offenders ought to be cited before him; that which was in the Biſhop's Power to do, he hath done, and it was in Effect what the King commanded to be done.

Lord Biſhop. If through Miſtake I have erred in any Circumſtance, I am ready to beg his Majeſty's Pardon, and ſhall be ready to make any Reparation I am capable.

The Biſhop withdrew for Half an Hour, then was called in.

Lord Chan. We will be here again on Wedneſday next, and I deſire your Lordſhip to be here again about Ten in the Forenoon.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I deſire that Care may be taken concerning the Minutes, which are taken by the Clerks, of what hath paſſed, and that I may not be miſrepreſented to the King by the Miſtake of the Penman.

Lord Chan. My Lord, you need not fear it; I hope you have a better Opinion of us; there ſhall be no Advantage taken by them or us.

Biſhop Roch. There ſhall be no Advantage taken, but all imaginable Care taken concerning it.

Note, When the Counſellors were Pleading, Dr. Pinfold, the King's Advocate, ſtood at the Chancellor's Elbow, and took Notes; by which it was expected that he ſhould make a Reply, but he ſaid nothing: and 'tis ſuppoſed that he ſtaid with the Council, when the Biſhop withdrew, and gave them Reaſons for his Silence.

Die Lunæ, 6 September, 1686.

There being preſent in Council the ſame as in the former Proceedings.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, pray ſit down. You were deſired to appear this Day to hear your Sentence, which (to prevent Miſtake) we have ordered to be put in Writing.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, may I have leave to ſpeak before Sentence is read?

Lord Chanc. My Lord, we have heard you and your Counſel ready.

Then the following Inſtrument, whereby the Biſhop of London was ſuſpended, was, by the Commiſſioners Order, read by Mr. Bridgman, their Lordſhips Regiſter.

By his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

WHereas Henry, Lord Biſhop of London, hath been convened before Us, for his Diſobedience, and other his Contempts, mentioned in the Proceedings of this Cauſe; and the ſaid Biſhop being fully heard thereupon, We have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration of the Matter, to proceed to this Our definitive Sentence, declaring, decreeing, and pronouncing, that the ſaid Henry, Lord Biſhop of London, ſhall for his ſaid Diſobedience and Contempt, be ſuſpended during his Majeſty's Pleaſure; and accordingly, We do, by theſe Preſents, ſuſpend him the ſaid Lord Biſhop of London, peremptorily admoniſhing and requiring him hereby, to abſtain from the Function and Execution of his Epiſcopal Office, and from all Epiſcopal and other Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, during the ſaid Suſpenſion, upon Pain of Deprivation and Removal from his Biſhoprick.

Given under our Hand and Seal the 6th Day of September, 1686. Sealed with the Seal of the Court, C. J. 2. Roſe and Crown with this Inſcription round it, viz. Sigillum Commiſſionariorum Regiæ Majeſtatis ad Cauſas Eccleſiaſticas.

Signed by no body at all.

Some Days ſince, one of the Meſſengers attending the Court, deliver'd to the Dean of St. Paul's a Warrant, the Tenor whereof followeth:

By his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

WHereas We have given Sentence of Suſpenſion againſt Henry Lord Biſhop of London, a Copy of which Sentence, under our Seal, is hereunto affixed: We have thought fit, and do hereby enjoin and require you, to cauſe the ſaid Sentence to be affix'd on the Door of that Chapter-Houſe, and on the Place now called the South Door of the ſaid Church; to the End that publick Notice may be taken of the ſaid Suſpenſion. And you are to certify Us, under your Common Seal, of the due Execution of what is hereby required.

At our Council-Chamber at Whitehall, on Tueſday the 28th of this Inſtant September, at Eleven o'Clock in the Morning. Given under our Seal this Day of September, 1686. Sealed with the ſame Seal as the Sentence, but no Perſons Names. Subſcribed to the Dean and Chapter of London.

Dr. Sharp was alſo ſuſpended about the ſame Time, but he was ſoon after reſtor'd to the Exerciſe of his Function; and when the King receiv'd Advice of the Prince of Orange's intended Expedition, the Biſhop's Suſpenſion was taken off.

CXLI. Proceedings againſt Dr. John Peachell, Vice-Chancellor, and the Univerſity of Cambridge *, for not admitting Alban Francis, a Benedictine Monk, to the Degree of Maſter of Arts, April and May 1687, 3 Jac. II.

ON the ninth Day of February, being Aſh-Wedneſday, came a Letter under his Majeſty's Signet Manual, dated the ſeventh of the ſame Month; the Subſtance whereof was, That hearing much in Commendation of one Alban Francis, a Benedictine, the King was pleaſed to command the Univerſity, that they ſhould admit him to the Degree of Maſter of Arts, without adminiſtring to him any Oath or Oaths whatſoever, any Law or Statute to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding, with which his Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd to diſpenſe in the Behalf of the ſaid Alban Francis. On Monday the 21*ſt*, the Vice-Chancellor having ſummon'd a Congregation, read his Majeſty's Letter, purporting as before, and ſuperſcrib'd to Our truſty and well-beloved Vice Chancellor of Our Univerſity of Cambridge, to be communicated to the Senate there; on the reading whereof, the Senate, who made the beſt Advantage they could of the Vice-Chancellor's Delay, in order to get Advice, reſolved to teſtify their common and almoſt unanimous Senſe of the Thing, and in a Matter of ſuch Conſequence and novel Matter to interpoſe; accordingly there was a Paper, it is commonly call'd a Grace, the original Paper whereof I have ſeen drawn up in order to be put to the Vote of the Houſe after the ordinary and uſual Way; but the Conſtitution of that Body being ſuch, that this muſt then of Neceſſity have been firſt propoſed to what we call the Head, which conſiſts of ſix Perſons, each of which has an arbitrary Voice and Power, upon diſlike to ſtop any Proceedings finally, and hinder it being put to the Houſe at all; This Method was laid aſide as impracticable upon that Occaſion; becauſe Mr. Baſſet, a declar'd Roman Catholick, and one that had openly aſſerted Mr. Francis's Cauſe, happened to be one of the ſix who compoſe the Head for this Year; it was therefore preſum'd, with great Appearance of Reaſon, that he would put a Bar to the Proceedings, ſo the Grace not being ſuffered to be offered to the Houſe, the Senate's Senſe could never have been fully and particularly known thereupon.

This Conſideration conſtrain'd them to the Uſe of another Courſe, which was, without the Formality of a Suffrage, voluntarily to teſtify their Concurrence with the Vice-Chancellor, and adviſe him to forbear the admitting Mr. Francis till the King had been petitioned to revoke his Mandate. As ſoon as the Letter came to Town, the Vice-Chancellor wrote a Letter to the Duke of Albemarle, our Chancellor, to beg his Interceſſion with the King, which he returned Word was tried with none Effect, but poſſibly ſuch a Body as the Univerſity concurring and ſigning a Petition, if that could be admitted, might prove better and more ſucceſsful. Now perhaps if every ſingle Man preſent, to the Number perhaps of one hundred and fifty or two hundred, ſhould addreſs in Perſon to the Vice-Chancellor, this might look tumultuary, and it was thought the more quiet, decent, and reſpectful Way to ſend up their Senſe by Meſſengers from each Houſe: To this Purpoſe, Dr. Smoult, Profeſſor of Caſuiſtical Divinity, was made Choice of by the Non Regents, and Mr. Norris, Fellow of Trinity-College, by the Regents. The Subſtance of what they delivered, was, That the Houſe thought the Admiſſion of Mr. Francis without the uſual Oaths, illegal and unſafe, and for that Reaſon adviſ'd the King might be petition'd, in the doing which they were ready to join and make it their Act. The Opinions were given freely to the two Meſſengers of each Houſe, and the thing was ſo unanimouſly approved of, that the only Perſons taking notice of it, were three Papiſts, and one or two beſides; afterwards there was a Gentleman admitted Doctor of Phyſick, having firſt taken the Oaths; and the Eſquire-Beadles and Regiſters were ſent to let Mr. Francis know, that the Senate were ready to admit him alſo, provided that he would ſwear as the Law appointed; but he refuſed, inſiſting on the King's Diſpenſation: and this was the Buſineſs of the firſt Meeting about this Matter.

Immediately upon the Congregation's breaking up, Mr. Francis took Horſe for London, to repreſent at Whitehall what had been done, and the ſame Afternoon the Heads met in the Conſiſtory, to conſult what Letters ſhould be ſent, and to whom: They agreed upon one to the Duke of Albemarle, and another to the Earl of Sunderland, being the Secretary of State, through whoſe Hands the Mandate paſſed: An Eſquire-Beadle was diſpatched preſently to London, who after having waited on the Duke of Albemarle, endeavoured ſeveral times to get Acceſs to the Lord Sunderland, but could not; at laſt having ſent in his Letter, the Main whereof was a moſt humble Submiſſion to his Majeſty, with very ſolemn and unfeigned Proteſtations, that what was now done, proceeded from no Principle of Diſobedience and Stubbornes, but a conſcientious Senſe of our Obligation to Laws and Oaths, and a reſpectful Intimation that we were ready to petition the King that it might be admitted; but not daring to approach Him without ſome Significations, that it would be acceptable, we applied ourſelves to his Lordſhip, deſiring him to do the Univerſity the Favour to mediate for them, &c. He was diſmiſſed without any particular Anſwer: Within a few Days came a ſecond Letter, dated February 24, which by reaſon of the Aſſizes and ſome other publick Buſineſs intervening, was not read in the Senate till Thurſday, March the 11th: The Univerſity and the Vice-Chancellor in the mean Time received a Letter, wherein wherein they found great Satisfaction by the Opinions of ſome eminent Lawyers, who concurr'd in the Approbation of what was already done, and for the future, could adviſe no better Courſe than humbly to repreſent the Caſe to his Majeſty, and entreat him not to think amiſs of ſo Loyal a Body, as always the Univerſity has ſhewed herſelf to be. The ſecond Letter being read the Day aforeſaid, which was exactly the ſame as the former, excepting only the Addition of a Clauſe, to do it at our own Peril; the Senate proceeded as before, to adviſe the Vice-Chancellor to ſome expedient Form, repreſenting the Caſe fully and clearly to the King, as well with reſpect to the Illegality of ſuch Admiſſion, as the many ill Conſequences that were likely to enſue from it: This the Non-Regent Houſe did by Mr. Billers, Fellow of St. John's-College (the publick Orator) and Mr. Newton, Fellow of Trinity-College (the Mathematical Profeſſor) the Regent Houſe by Mr. Henry Finch, Son to the late Lord Chancellor, Mr. Burton of St. John's-College, and Mr. William Bowles of King's-College: All which was done without the leaſt Hurry or Irregularity, without ſo much as aſking an Opinion; but every Man went and gave it quietly and of his own Accord, ſo that no manner of Inducement was put upon any one to declare himſelf in the Buſineſs, but what proceeded meerly from his own Conſcience, and a due Senſe of Things. Another large Letter being prepared for the Duke of Albemarle, wherein was every thing that could be thought of to prevail with his Majeſty, and one likewiſe ſhorter and leſs particular to the Earl of Sunderland; that very Afternoon Mr. Braddock, Fellow of Katharine-Hall, and Mr. Stanhope of King's-College, were deſired by the Vice-Chancellor to go to London with theſe Letters, and other Inſtructions, to apply themſelves to ſeveral Perſons of Quality and Character, that they would join Forces, and think it a common Cauſe; for ſo addreſſing to the King, the Succeſs would be more probable, and the Honour done to the Univerſity the greater. Sunday, March the 13*th*, the two Gentlemen waited on the Duke of Albemarle their Chancellor, who received them with all the Goodneſs in the World, with Aſſurance, that notwithſtanding he had waited on the King before, and knew his Inclinations; nay, though he had been received with ſomething of Diſpleaſure, yet conſidering the Relation he bore us, he would make another Attempt, and thought himſelf obliged to omit no Endeavours for the Univerſity's Safety and Advantage. Monday the 14*th* in the Evening, the Duke of Albemarle waited on the King, and in the Paſſage towards the Bed-chamber, took the two Cambridge Gentlemen into the Anti-chamber, that they might be introduc'd if Occaſion were: The King, on the Duke of Albemarle's acquainting him with the Affair, told him he had not then Leiſure to talk, but he commanded the Letter which the Vice-Chancellor ſent to the Duke of Albemarle, with which in his Hands he paſſed through the Rooms; and making that Evening a Viſit to the Queen Dowager, gave the Duke no further Opportunity of knowing his Pleaſure at that Time. At the Duke's return from the Inner-Room, the Gentlemen deſired him to give leave that they might uſe his Name to procure an eaſy Admittance to the Earl of Sunderland; for they reſolved to deliver their Letter to no Hands but his own, if that might be: The Duke immediately ſent his Gentleman of the Horſe to one of the Lord Sunderland's Secretaries, making it his Deſire that Mr. Braddock and his Companion might ſee the Earl, who accordingly appointed them to attend next Morning, and then conducted them to the Earl of Sunderland's Bed-ſide, who took the Letter, and after ſome further Application to him by Word of Mouth, he promiſed to acquaint his Majeſty, and tell them his Pleaſure. On Thurſday, at that Time when Mr. Braddock and Mr. Stanhope came, the Account they received was only this, That the King had ſeen the Vice-Chancellor's Letter, and was offended at the Proceedings of the Univerſity, and would take Care very ſhortly to give a further Anſwer.

* Burn. Hiſt. Own Times. Vol. I. p. 697.

Saturday the ninth of April, Mr. Atterbury came down with a Summons from the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners to this Effect; That whereas Complaint to them was made againſt the Vice-Chancellor and Senate of Cambridge, for having refuſed to comply with his Majeſty's Royal Letters in Behalf of Mr. Francis; they were therefore commanded to appear, the Vice-Chancellor in Perſon, the Senate by themſelves, and the Deputies before the Lords Commiſſioners, in the Council-Chamber, the 21*ſt* of April, to anſwer to ſuch things as ſhall be objected againſt them in his Majeſty's Behalf upon the Premiſes, &c. Monday April the 11*th*, a Senate was called, and Perſons nominated to repreſent the Univerſity, together with the Vice-Chancellor; all which being unanimouſly approved by the Senate, they empowered them, by an Inſtrument under the Common-Seal, to anſwer in their Behalf, and be their full Actors, Attorneys and Proctors, as to what ſhould ariſe from the Commiſſion upon the late Summons. And Mr. Atterbury having received private Inſtructions to ſtay, and cite every Man that was choſen perſonally, he came accordingly into the Senate-Houſe, and ſummon'd as many as were preſent, waiting on the reſt on a convenient Time. The Perſons deputed by the Senate to repreſent and act were theſe.

Dr. John Peachell Vice-Chacellor, Maſter of Magdalen-College.

Dr. John Eachard, Maſter of Katharine-hall.

Dr. Humfrey Babington, Fellow of Trinity-College.

Dr. Thomas Smoult, Fellow of St. John's-College, and Profeſſor of Caſuiſtical Divinity.

Dr. William Cook, Doctor of Civil Law, and Fellow of Jeſus-College.

Mr. John Billers, Fellow of St. John's-College, and the Publick Orator.

Mr. Iſaac Newton, Fellow of Trinity-College, and Mathematical Profeſſor.

Mr. James Smith, Fellow of Queen's-College.

Mr. George Stanhope, Fellow of King's-College.

L. Chanc. IS Mr. Vice-Chancellor here?——

Which is he?

He ſtandeth over againſt the Lord Chancellor, bowed and ſhewed himſelf.

L. Chanc. Is there any one come from the Senate to attend him?

Mr. Stanhope. Yes, my Lord, we are eight of us here deputed by the Senate to anſwer what ſhall be objected againſt them, according to your Lordſhips Summons.

The Noiſe and Crowd being great, Mr. Bridgman the Regiſter was forced to repeat that again to the Lord Chancellor.

L. Chanc. Read the Summons.

Which was done.

L. Chanc. Now, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, what have you to ſay why you did not obey his Majeſty's Command, in Behalf of the Gentlemen mentioned there?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, you enquire of me why I did not admit Mr. Francis, according to the King's Letters?

L. Chanc. Yes, that's the Queſtion I aſk you.

Vice-Chanc. Is this the only Queſtion your Lordſhip is pleaſed to aſk me?

L. Chanc. Nay, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, we will not capitulate in the very Beginning: Pray anſwer the firſt, and then you ſhall know what we have to ſay more.

Vice-Chanc. It is but a little while ſince we met in Town, and this is a Queſtion of great Concern; I am not prepared to anſwer it on a ſudden.

L. Chanc. Why, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, my Lords ſpecified it in their Summons what would be queſtion'd, on Purpoſe you ſhould not come unprepared; but it may be Mr. Vice-Chancellor did not attend ſufficiently to that Part of the Summons, therefore let it be read to him once more.

Which was done.

L. Chanc. Now, Sir, you hear it is for refuſing to comply with the King's Commands.

Vice-Chanc. My Lords, I beg Time to anſwer you. My Lords, I am a plain Man, not uſed to appear before ſuch an honourable Aſſembly, and if I ſhould anſwer haſtily, it may be I might ſpeak ſomething indecent or unſafe, which I ſhould be afterwards ſorry for; therefore I beg Leave, my Lords, to have Time allowed us for giving in ſuch Anſwer, as may be both for our Safety, and your Lordſhips Honour.

Lord Chanc. [Smiling.] Why, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, as for your own Safety, my Lords are willing you ſhould take all the Care you can; but for what concerns our Honour, do you not trouble your ſelf; we are able to conſult that, without any Interpoſition of your's.

Vice-Chanc. My Lords, I beg your Pardon if I have ſaid any thing unbecoming; I mean only the Honour that is due to your Lordſhip's Quality, my Lord; and therefore being to anſwer before Perſons of Quality, I beg leave to do it with Counſel, and in Writing.

Lord Chanc. Well, withdraw a little, and my Lords will conſider of your Requeſt.

Then all the Company withdrew, and about three Quarters of an Hour after the Vice-Chancellor was ſent for into the Anti-Chamber, where Mr. Bridgman told him, the Lords Commiſſioners had given him Time till Wedneſday next, till Four in the Afternoon, and Leave to put his Anſwer in Writing, and with Counſel, and by what Counſel he would.

When the Counſel had heard the Commiſſioners had granted it, they were ſomething ſurprized, and loth to move in the Thing without a Rule of Court; therefore on Friday Morning Dr. Eachard and Mr. Stanhope went to Mr. Bridgman's Office, to deſire ſuch an Order, or at leaſt a Copy of what had been ſaid to the Vice-Chancellor; but he told them he had no Power to give either; only he repeated the Words over again for the Satisfaction of them and the Counſel, which was the ſame the Vice-Chancellor had related from his Mouth before.

WEDNESDAY, April 27, 1687.

In the Council-Chamber. Commiſſioners preſent as before.

ABOUT a Quarter of an Hour before the Lords met, Mr. Bridgeman came to the Vice-Chancellor, and deſired to know of him, whether he gave his Anſwer in Writing only, or whether any Counſel would appear to argue it; to which the Vice-Chancellor anſwered, That his Anſwer was drawing out in Writing, and that he did not expect any Counſel there that Day. Mr. Bridgman replied, The Lords had commanded him to aſk theſe Queſtions, and would expect to know ſo much before they began to proceed. When the Delegates were called in, the Lord Chancellor ſaid,

L. Chan. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, the laſt Time you were here you deſired Time to put in your Anſwer in Writing: My Lords have indulged you ſo far, now where is your Anſwer?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, here it is——

And gave it to Mr. Bridgman, who, after a Whiſper, put it round the Table.

L. Chanc. Read it.——

[To Mr. Bridgman.]

The Anſwer of the Univerſity and Senate of Cambridge, to the Queſtion, Why they did not admit Alban Francis to the Degree of Maſter of Arts in the ſame Univerſity, according to his Majeſty's Mandatory Letters under his Signet Manual? The Vice-Chancellor and Senate of Cambridge, for, and in Behalf of themſelves, and the ſaid Univerſity, ſay,

'THAT by the Statute made primo Eliz. and 'entituled, An Act to reſtore to the Crown 'the antient Juriſdictions over the State Eccleſiaſti-'cal and Spiritual, and aboliſhing Foreign Power re-'pugnant to the ſame; it is enacted, amongſt other 'Things, That every Perſon that ſhall be promo-'ted to any Degree of Learning in any Uni-'verſity within this Kingdom, before he ſhall 'receive or take any ſuch Degree, ſhall, before 'the Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor of the Uni-'verſity, take the Oath in the Statute menti-'on'd and appointed; purporting, that he doth 'thereby teſtify and declare in his Conſcience, 'that his Majeſty is the only ſupream Governor 'of this Realm, as well in all Spiritual and Eccle-'ſiaſtical Things and Cauſes, as Temporal: that 'no Foreign State or Potentate hath, or ought to 'have, any Juriſdiction, Superiority, or Authority, 'Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual, within this Realm; 'and that therefore he doth renounce and for-'ſake all Foreign Juriſdiction and Authority, and 'promiſe to bear Faith and true Allegiance to the 'King, his Heirs and Succeſſors, and to his 'Power aſſiſt and defend all Juriſdictions and Au-'thorities granted, united or annexed to his Ma-'jeſty's Imperial Crown of England. That by 'the Statute made quinto Eliz. entituled, An 'Act for the Aſſurance of the Queen's Royal Pre-'rogative over all Eſtates and Subjects within her 'Dominions, it is likewiſe enacted, That every

'Perſon

‘ Perſon that ſhall be admitted to any Degree of ‘ Learning in any of the Univerſities, before he ‘ ſhall be allowed or ſuffered to take upon him ‘ ſuch Degree, ſhall take the aforemention'd Oath ‘ before ſuch Perſon or Perſons as ſhall have Au- ‘ thority, by common Uſe, to admit him to ſuch ‘ Degrees.

‘ That by the Statute made by his Majeſty's ‘ Royal Grandfather, King James the Firſt, in the ‘ third Year of his Reign, entitled, An Act for ‘ the better Diſcovering and Repreſſing of Popiſh ‘ Recuſants, another Oath is commonly preſcribed, ‘ the Oath of Obedience; by which Oath, is the ‘ Perſon that takes it, among other things, en- ‘ joined to ſwear, that his Majeſty is lawful and ‘ rightful King of this Realm, and all other his ‘ Dominions and Countries; and that the Pope ‘ neither of himſelf, or by any other Means, hath ‘ Power or Authority to depoſe his Majeſty, or ‘ diſpoſe of him, his Kingdoms or Dominions; or ‘ to authorize any Foreign Prince to invade him ‘ or them, or to diſcharge his Subjects from their ‘ Obedience or Allegiance to his Majeſty, or to ‘ give Leave to bear Arms againſt him; and that ‘ he, with true Faith and Allegiance to his Majeſty, ‘ will defend him to the utmoſt of his Power. ‘ And afterwards, in the Statute made in the ‘ ninth Year of his Majeſty's ſaid Royal Grand- ‘ father, entitled, An Act for adminiſtring the ‘ Oath of Allegiance, in it is enacted, That the ‘ ſaid laſt mentioned Oath ſhall be taken by the ‘ Vice-Chancellor and Principals of Houſes in ‘ the Univerſity, in the Convocation before the ‘ Senior Maſters, and by every other Perſon that ‘ ſhall be permitted or promoted to any Degree in ‘ Schools, before the Vice-Chancellor for the Time ‘ being, in the Congregation-Houſe.

‘ That the Vice-Chancellor, and every Mem- ‘ ber of the Senate, have taken the ſaid Oath, and ‘ the Vice-Chancellor and Senate are entruſted to ‘ put them in Execution in the ſaid Univerſity.

‘ That the Vice-Chancellor, by his Oath of ‘ Office, has alſo ſworn duly to execute his Office, ‘ according to the Laws, and cannot admit to any ‘ Degree without the Senate.

‘ That the ſaid Statutes were made for the Pre- ‘ ſervation of Doctrine and Religion, profeſſed by ‘ the Church of England, and eſtabliſhed by the ‘ Laws of this Realm, and of the Prerogative and ‘ rightful Power of his Majeſty; that upon the ‘ Receipt of his Majeſty's Royal Letters Manda- ‘ tory, the ſame were by the Vice-Chancellor ‘ communicated to the Senate; and in order to the ‘ admitting the ſaid Alban Francis to the Degree ‘ of Maſter of Arts, the ſaid Oaths were offered ‘ to be adminiſtred to the ſaid Alban Francis, if he ‘ would take the ſame, but he refuſed.

‘ That the admitting him without the ſaid Oaths ‘ had been contrary to the ſaid Statutes, and a ‘ Breach of the Truſt in the Vice-Chancellor and ‘ Senate repoſed, and a Violation of their Oaths; ‘ and therefore they could not admit him to the ‘ ſaid Degree of Maſter of Arts: And by humble ‘ Application to his ſacred Majeſty, did, and now ‘ again do, humbly deſire your Lordſhips to re- ‘ preſent this their Caſe to his Majeſty, that they ‘ may not lie under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure upon ‘ any Miſapprehenſion thereof. But whether your ‘ Lordſhips will, as a Court, take Cognizance of ‘ this Matter, they humbly pray your Lordſhip's ‘ Conſideration, ſince that the taking a Degree of ‘ Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity, or the ad- ‘ mitting and refuſing to ſuch a Degree, is not ‘ any Cauſe or Matter Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual, ‘ but of Lay and Temporal Cognizance.

‘ And they further offer to your Lordſhips, that ‘ in the Statute made in the ſixteenth of the Reign ‘ of his Majeſty's moſt Royal Father King Charles ‘ the Firſt, entitled, An Act for repealing of ‘ the Branch of a Statute, Primo Eliz. concern- ‘ ing Commiſſioners for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical; and ‘ whereby the ſaid Branch is repealed, it is enact- ‘ ed, “ That no new Court ſhall be erected, or- “ dained, or appointed within this Realm, which “ ſhall or may have like Power, Juriſdiction, or “ Authority, as the High Commiſſion Court then “ had, or pretended to have; but that all and eve- “ ry ſuch Commiſſions and Grants, and all Pow- “ ers and Authority granted, or pretended to be “ granted thereby, ſhall be void and of none Effect, “ as in and by the ſaid Statutes more fully appears.”

Which being read, my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Is it ſign'd?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Read their Names. ———

Which was done.

L. Chanc. Well, have you any more to ſay?

Mr. Vice-Chanc. No, my Lord, not at this Time.

L. Chanc. Then withdraw.

All the Company withdrew, and about an Hour and a half after the Court roſe; and afterwards Mr. Bridgman deſired to ſpeak with the Vice-Chancellor and Delegates in the Council-Chamber, to whom he ſaid, That their Lordſhips had commanded him to tell them, they put off all further Conſideration of this Matter till Saturday come Sevennight, and then they expected their Attendance again. Mr. Vice-Chancellor aſked him, If Counſel would be expected to plead on their Anſwer? He replied, Their Lordſhips had given him no Commiſſion to ſay any thing to that. So they all withdrew.

SATURDAY, May 27, 1687.

THIS Day it was publickly diſcourſed thro' the Town, that the Lords had received a new Commiſſion; and immediately Lawyers were conſulted, whether it were proper to urge that at this Appearance. What could be gathered thereupon, was to this Effect: That it were a good Plea, if it could be well proved, for in receiving a new Commiſſion in the Midſt of Proceſs, eſpecially if there be any Alteration in it as to the Extent of their Power, would at leaſt be a good Pretence to begin the whole Cauſe again, and gain Time; but that it was by no Means ſafe to alledge the Thing, for a flying Report is no Evidence; and if that Report were falſe, it might be a great Prejudice to them and their Cauſe.

Council-Chamber. Commiſſioners preſent as before.

Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, the laſt Time you were here, you gave in a Paper to my Lords, ſigned by yourſelf, and ſeveral others coming from the Univerſity, which conſiſts of ſeveral Parts; but there is one thing I muſt crave Leave of my Lords to diſcourſe you on, which concerns your ſelf. The Lords took Notice, that you alledge an Oath: That Oath it ſeems hindred you from obeying the King's Mandate. ——— Pray what was the Oath?

Vice-

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, this is a new Queſtion which you were pleaſed not to put before, and I beg Leave and Time to anſwer it.

L. Chanc. Why, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, this requires no Time. My Lords, I tell you, took Notice of an Oath you pleaded for your ſelf, and now they deſire to know what the Oath is.

Vice-Chanc. I beg I may not anſwer haſtily, but that your Lordſhips would let me know what Queſtions you would aſk me, and let me anſwer them in Writing, and by Counſel.

Lord Chanc. Why did you not conſult Counſel when you took your Oath? I am really concerned for the Univerſity of Cambridge, whereof I my ſelf was once a Member, that the Vice-Chancellor, who is the Head, and the Repreſentative of ſo learned a Body, ſhould come here before the King's Commiſſioners, and not be able to give an Account of the Oath by which he acted all this time, but deſires Counſel and Time to tell what the Oath is.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I think I remember the Words of the Oath.

L. Chanc. Nay, good Doctor, how came you, who never were Vice-Chancellor, and ſo never took this Oath, to know it better than one that is Vice-Chancellor, and hath taken it?

Vice-Chanc. I cannot call to Mind the very Words of the Oath, but the Subſtance of it is this, That I ſhould well and faithfully, præſtare, or adminiſtrare munus, or Officium Procancellarii.

L. Chanc. Ay, Munus, or Officium: Well, what then?

Vice-Chanc. And, my Lord, this Office I take to be ſtated by the Statutes of the Univerſity, and the Laws of the Land.

Lord Chanc. Well, and how long has this been the Vice-Chancellor's Oath?

Vice-Chanc. Indeed, my Lord, I am not able to tell you exactly.

Lord Chanc. How long do you think? I will not tie you to any Time.

Vice-Chanc. Ever ſince I knew what belonged to it; ever ſince I was Head of a College.

Lord Chanc. How long have you been Head of a College?

Vice-Chanc. Six or ſeven Years, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Have not other Vice-Chancellors admitted to Degrees without Oaths, who have taken the Obligatory Oath as you have done?

Vice-Chanc. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot tell; I cannot remember every particular Thing that has been done.

Lord Chanc. Well, becauſe we will keep cloſe to the Queſtion, don't you remember any Maſter of Arts made without Oaths?

Dr. Cook. Not under the Quality of an Univerſity Nobleman, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Nay, good Doctor, you never were Vice-Chancellor yet: When you are, we may conſider you.

Vice-Chanc. The Anſwer to your Queſtion will depend upon our Univerſity Book and Records; and if you'll allow us Time to conſult them, we can give your Lordſhip an Account.

L. Chanc. Nay, look you, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, you have given in an Anſwer in Writing already, and becauſe there is ſomething in that my Lords would be further ſatisfied in, they have left it to me to aſk you ſome Queſtions. I aſk you, therefore, if you remember any Maſter of Arts who hath been admitted heretofore without theſe Oaths?

Vice-Chanc. I cannot ſay, I remember any, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Did you never hear of one Dr. Lightfoot?

Vice-Chanc. I think, my Lord, I have heard of ſuch a one.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, I beg leave to ſpeak a few Words.

Lord Chanc. Well, Doctor, what is it you have to ſay?

Dr. Cook. My Lord, Dr. Lightfoot did ſubſcribe.

Lord Chanc. What Subſcription do you mean?

Dr. Cook. To the XXXIX Articles; and the Firſt of them is the King's Supremacy.

L. Chanc. Is Subſcribing Swearing, Doctor? But Mr. Vice-Chancellor, how many have you admitted by Mandate?

Vice-Chanc. Never but one, my Lord, and he took the Oaths.

Lord Chanc. Do you never admit without Oaths them who have ſuch particular Letters Patent from the King?

Mr. Stankope. Never, my Lord.

And as for Dr. Lightfoot, they were aware before of this particular Perſon's being objected, and therefore had provided an Anſwer to it.

Mr. Stankope undertook it, becauſe the Books and Univerſity Papers had been committed to his Inſpection and Care. In anſwer, had he been permitted to ſpeak, he had this to offer, That the Regiſter of Subſcribers was then in Court, and had a Paper ready in his Hands to be produced, where Dr. Lightfoot ſubſcribed with his own Hands to the XXXIX Articles, the firſt whereof is the King's Supremacy; and that he could not refuſe the Oath upon a Principle, becauſe the ſame muſt have hindred his Subſcription. And as a farther Proof, he did offer, they were ready to ſwear this, That two Gentlemen, Roman Catholicks, Servants to the Queen Dowager, did by Virtue of the ſame Letters from the King, at the Time of his coming to Cambridge, deſire their Maſter of Arts Degree. Their Names were Perara and Stephens. Theſe Gentlemen were propoſed and granted, but upon Refuſal to ſwear, were not admitted. Of this they could have produced, Firſt, A Teſtimony upon Oath of a Gentleman then in Court; and beſides that, the Univerſity Papers and Graces, which ſhew theſe Gentlemens Names, among the Perſons paſſed in the Houſe, but wanting in the Liſt of Subſcribers and Commencers. After which they would have referred it to the Court, whether it was probable that the Univerſity ſhould admit one of the Queen's Servants without Oaths, and yet refuſe two more who had the ſame Title every way, becauſe they would not take the Oaths; but the Lord Chancellor would not hear him.

Lord Chanc. Nay, look you now, that young Gentleman expects to be Vice-Chancellor too; when you are, Sir, you may ſpeak, but till then it will become you to forbear. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, When was it pray, that you received the King's Letters? the firſt I mean.

Vice-Chanc. I do not perfectly remember, my Lord; I can't call to Mind the Day of the Month.

Lord Chanc. When were they dated, do you know?

To Mr. Bridgman, my Lord pauſing.

Vice-

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, I remember it was Aſh-Wedneſday.

Lord Chanc. And when was it theſe Letters were publiſhed in the Senate?

Vice-Chanc. It was the Seven-night after, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. What's the Meaning of the Delay, Mr. Vice-Chancellor? The King's Buſineſs uſed to have a quicker Diſpatch.

Vice-Chanc. It was a novel thing, and I was willing to give myſelf and others Time to conſider on it.

Lord Chanc. But when you had read the Letters, why was not the Gentleman admitted?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, the Senate ſent to me, to deſire me, that I would forbear admitting Mr. Francis, till I had petitioned the King to revoke the Mandate.

Lord Chanc. Why, does the King's Mandate uſe to be diſputed? Did you ever ſee a Mandate voted in the Houſe, whether it ſhould be obeyed or not?

Vice-Chanc. No, my Lord, uſually they are not; but the Houſe ſent to me to forbear, for they have not had any of this Nature before.

Lord Chanc. Did you ever know any Mandates of the King's refuſed by the Univerſity before?

Vice-Chanc. After ſome Pauſe ——— Yes, my Lord, ſeveral.

Lord Chanc. Pray give us one Inſtance.

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, one Tatnell.

Lord Chanc. When, pray? How long was that ago?

Vice-Chanc. I cannot recollect juſt the Time, but it was in his late Majeſty's Reign; I believe, about fourteen or ſixteen Years ago.

Lord Chanc. How was that?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, the Mandate was given to one Tatnell, a Non-conformiſt Miniſter, and he refuſed to ſubſcribe and take the Oaths; whereupon, my Lord, the Univerſity petitioned the King, and repreſented the Matter to him, and the King was pleaſed to recal his Mandate.

Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, had not you a Mandate for another Gentleman at the ſame Time with this, which you refuſed?

Vice-Chanc. Yes, my Lord, it was to make a Gentleman Doctor of Phyſick.

Lord Chanc. And he was admitted upon it, was he not?

Vice-Chanc. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Did the Senate vote his Mandate?

Vice-Chanc. No, my Lord, they did not.

Lord Chanc. Why ſhould they interpoſe in the one, and not in the other?

Vice-Chanc. That had no Diſpenſation, my Lord, for the Oath in it.

Lord Chanc. But however, if they did not vote it, nor do any others of the King's Letters, how do you know their Conſent?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, it is preſumed upon their being ſilent, and offering nothing to the contrary.

Lord Chanc. Ay, we have a Proverb, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, Silence gives Conſent, but it ſeems he was admitted immediately, was he not, before you could know whether they conſented to it or no?

Vice-Chanc. No, my Lord, he was not admitted till the Houſe deſired me to forbear in Mr. Francis's Caſe.

Lord Chanc. But, as to this Buſineſs of the Senate deſiring you (my Lords) I hope you will indulge me to ſpeak a little of that; for having been formerly a Member of that Univerſity my ſelf, I think I have ſome ſmall Remembrance of the Manner of the Proceedings there: Pray, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, how was it that you knew their Minds in this Buſineſs?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, the Houſe ſent up their Opinions.

Lord Chanc. How, pray? by whom?

Vice-Chanc. The Non-Regents by Dr. Smoult the firſt Day; and Mr. Billers the Orator, and Mr. Newton the Mathematical Profeſſor, my Lord, the ſecond Day.

Lord Chanc. By whom do you ſay the firſt Day?

Vice-Chanc. By Dr. Smoult, my Lord, from the Non-Regent Houſe, and Mr. Norris from the Regent Houſe.

Lord Chanc. Well: What ſaid theſe two to you?

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, I don't know the very Words, but it was to this Effect, That I ſhould forbear admitting Mr. Francis till the King was petitioned.

Lord Chanc. Is that Dr. Smoult in Court?

Vice-Chanc. Yes, my Lord, he is here ——

Then he ſhewed himſelf.

Lord Chanc. Come, Sir, What was it, I pray you, that you told the Vice-Chancellor?

Dr. Smoult. I have forgot, my Lord, the Words, but it was to the ſame Purpoſe the Vice-Chancellor told you juſt now, that the Houſe deſired me to acquaint him they were petitioning, that the Mandate might be recalled.

Lord Chanc. And pray, Sir, who are you, that you ſhould be thought fit to repreſent a whole Houſe? Why ſhould they chooſe you rather than any Body elſe?

Dr. Smoult. My Lord, I ſuppoſe becauſe I was one of the Seniors.

Lord Chanc. One of the Seniors! If you come to that, why was not the very Senior choſen?

Dr. Smoult. I cannot tell, my Lord, they came to me.

Vice-Chanc. My Lord, he is one of our Profeſſors.

Lord Chanc. Nay, when I aſk you Queſtions, they prompt you, and now you prompt them; but I muſt tell you, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, you ought to take an Account of what is done in the Houſe your ſelf, and not from others.

Vice-Chanc. My Place is at a great Diſtance from the Non-Regent Houſe, and I could not ſee what was done there.

Lord Chanc. But ſhould you take the Senſe of a whole Houſe from one Man?

Vice-Chanc. He came and told me, my Lord, the Houſe was of that Opinion, and I thought I had no reaſon to queſtion what he ſaid.

Lord Chanc. How loud did he ſpeak when he told you this?

Vice-Chanc. Pretty loud, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Was it ſo loud, that all the Houſe might hear it?

Vice-Chanc. No, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Did you ſend afterwards to enquire whether he had told you their Opinions true or not?

Vice-Chanc. No, my Lord, I confeſs I did not.

Lord Chanc. But how came this new Way of giving Opinions; are not the Proctors uſually the the Men that bring the Senſe of the Houſe to the Vice-Chancellor?

Vice-Chanc. Not the Non-Regent, my Lord, they are not admitted into that Houſe, nor have at all to do there.

Lord Chanc. Have you any thing elſe to offer to my Lords?

Dr. Cook. My Lord, if the Anſwer that we gave in the laſt Day be not ſatisfactory, we deſire to have Time allowed us to make a farther Defence, and to do it with Counſel.

Lord Chanc. Have you nothing to ſay beſides?

Dr. Cook. No, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Nor you Gentlemen? —— then withdraw.

After the Vice Chancellor, and three or four of the Delegates were gone off, and the Crowd was retiring, Mr. Billers, being a Perſon engaged in carrying up the Senſe of the Houſe, would have informed the Court (who ſeemed under a Miſtake) more particularly of the Senate's Proceedings; and how it came to paſs that the uſual Way of Suffrages was impracticable at that Time.

Mr. Billers. My Lords, I beg Leave to ſpeak one Word.

Lord Chanc. Who are you?

Mr. Billers. My Name is Billers, my Lord.

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, he is one of the Gentlemen that ſigned the Paper in which was the Anſwer.

Mr. Billers. I am one of the Perſons, my Lord, that ſigned the Paper in which was the Anſwer.

Lord Chanc. Nay, hold Mr. Billers, give me leave to compare your Memory with Mr. Vice-Chancellor's a little; Mr. Vice-Chancellor tells me, Mr. Billers and Dr. Smoult went up both of a Day; then comes Mr. Billers, and ſays, that Dr. Smoult and he went up two ſeveral Days.

Mr. Billers. My Lord, I could not poſſibly go up from the Houſe; I do not belong to the Regent-Houſe.

Lord Chanc. Indeed he ſaid ſo, Sir; indeed he did, my Lords —— Did he not? [To Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Stanhope, behind the Biſhop of Rocheſter. My Lord, under Favour, my Lord Chancellor is miſtaken; the Perſon Mr. Vice Chancellor told your Lordſhip went up from the Regent-Houſe the ſame Day with Dr. Smoult, was Mr. Norris.

Biſhop of Rocheſter. My Lord, I think your Lordſhip forgets; it was Mr. Norris that went up from the Houſe the ſame Day with Dr. Smoult.

Lord Chanc. Well, Sir, was this that you would ſay?

Mr. Billers. I was only juſt acquainting your Lordſhip what was done, and that there was no other Way —

The Thing Mr. Billers intended to urge, was, That the uſual Way of Suffrage could not be practiſed at that Time; ſo the other was taken.

Earl of Sunderland. We heard that before.

Lord Chanc. Ay, Sir, we took both what was done, and what was not done; therefore withdraw.

Then all the Company retired, and after an Hour and a Half's Attendance, they were called in again, and the Lord Chancellor pronounced the Sentence upon Mr. Vice-Chancellor in the following Manner.

Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, the Lords have commanded me to tell you, that they have taken ſome Time to conſider your Anſwer, and are at laſt come to a Reſolution upon it: My Buſineſs is to tell you what the Reſolution is, Mr. Vice-Chancellor. My Lords conſider you have been guilty of an Act of great Diſobedience to the King's Commands, and other Crimes and Contempts, and ſuch, that now you appear before us, you have little to ſay in Excuſe of it; therefore as a Mark of his Majeſty's and their Lordſhips Diſpleaſure, they have thought fit to appoint, that you be henceforth deprived of the Office of Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge. They likewiſe order, that you don't preſume, at any Time hereafter, to meddle with any of the publick Buſineſs of the Univerſity. Likewiſe, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, their Lordſhips conſider you have a Headſhip of a College; and becauſe the Example of ſo ill a Man may be a pernicious Conſequence to all under your Government, they have likewiſe thought fit that you be deprived of it, during his Majeſty's Pleaſure: But becauſe they have a Tenderneſs for the College, for which all along you have ſhewed little Regard, my Lords are pleaſed to appoint, that the Revenues of your Headſhip ſhall go to the Benefit of the Society. This is their Lordſhips Pleaſure, and to this they require your Obedience. There are likewiſe ſome other Gentlemen that have ſigned a Paper here, but my Lords expect their Attendance when they ſit next, which will be on Thurſday next; then we ſhall take them into Conſideration.

On Monday, Dr. Peachell wrote by an Eſquire-Beadle, who attended him, to deſire a Copy of the Sentence; but Anſwer was returned, The Sentence as yet was not committed to Writing, but verbal only, and ſo he could not have a Copy; but he repeated the Heads only with this Alteration, That he was ſuſpended his Maſterſhip, and not deprived; which was an Error in the Lord Chancellor's delivering it.

The Beginning of the next Week was employed in making Enquiries after the new Commiſſion; the Hannaper Six Clerks, and the riding Six Clerks Office knew nothing of it, nor any Court of Record could be directed to. Mr. Bridgman did own there was ſuch a Thing, but did not inſtruct them how to come to the Sight of it. Thoſe that ſpoke beſt of the Commiſſioners, urged the Removal of the Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench to the Common Pleas, as a Thing that made a new Commiſſion neceſſary for rectifying his Title: But a Gentlemen, who pretended to have read it, gave them private Intimations that there were very large Additions, and very conſiderable Alterations in it at my Lord Chancellor's own Houſe. The Servants brought Word, that my Lord would ſpeak with the Perſon himſelf that deſired to ſee it, and appointed him a Time; the Sollicitor went at the Hour, but did not gain Acceſs to my Lord, and ſo they could not ſee it at all, for it was Wedneſday Night, or Thurſday Morning.

THURSDAY, May the 12th, 1688.

Council-Chamber. Commiſſioners preſent as before, the Delegates appear with Dr. Peachell.

Lord Chanc. THE laſt Time you appeared here before us, my Lords thought fit to ſet a Mark of their juſt Diſpleaſure upon the Vice-Chancellor. Gentlemen, you cannot but be ſenſible, and ſo muſt all the World, how pernicious and obſtinate the Univerſity has ſhewn themſelves in refuſing the King's Commands, and ſuch Commands, I muſt tell you, that ought to be obey'd.

There was a Time, you may remember Inſtances, if you do not, I'll turn you to one in the Year 1667, when the Letters were ſo far from being diſputed, that they paſſed for a Law among you, and do this Day ſtand recorded among the ſolemn Acts, and publick Statutes of the Univerſity, Gentlemen, my Lords conſider there is a Difference between the Vice-Chancellor's Caſe and yours, and therefore did not conclude you, who repreſent the Senate, with him, but have required your Attendance at this Time: They impute the Miſcarriage of the Body to the Head Diſeaſe chiefly; though neither are you without Fault, for being ſo much as uneaſy under the King's Commands. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, my Lords underſtand very well the ſly Inſinuations in your Paper, and have commanded me to tell you, That they know upon what Grounds they go, though they do not think fit to deſcend to Particulars: They know too how far that Authority extends, not only to you of the Univerſity, but to the Societies within this Kingdom. Gentlemen, your beſt Courſe will be by a ready Obedience to his Majeſty's Command for the future, and by giving a good Example to others, to make Amends for the ill Example that has been given you. Therefore I ſhall ſay to you what the Scripture ſays, and rather becauſe moſt of you are Divines; Go your way, and ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto you.

The late King's Letters, mentioned by my Lord Chancellor, Anno 1667, concern the regulating ſome of the Publick Exerciſes in the Univerſity; the Meaning whereof is this: The King is their Viſitor, and whenever there is any thing belonging to the local Statutes and Cuſtoms which they think ought to be altered, or any Abuſe which ſhould be rectified and redreſs'd, their way is to beg the King's Royal Injunction in the Caſe, which they keep upon Record, and obey as a Statute. How good an Argument is this againſt them, for not obeying a private Mandate, contrary to four known Laws of the Land; and how parallel the Caſe, is eaſy diſcern'd.

As they were drawing off, he call'd them again, and ſaid,

Lord Chanc. Hold, Gentlemen, I know ſomething more to ſay to you. My Lords require, as a Teſtimony of your Obedience, that you, who repreſent the Senate, ſhould take Care they have the Univerſity Statutes brought to lie before them here.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, we do no longer repreſent the Senate; our Delegation is determined with the Vice-Chancellor's Deprivation, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Well, if your Commiſſion be expired, we will give you a new one; we are able to give you a Commiſſion: We ſuppoſe you had ſufficient Authority for appearing here.

Dr. Cook. Does your Lordſhip expect that we ſhould attend with the Statutes our ſelves?

Lord Chanc. No, no, ſend them up by a proper Officer: You are only to carry a Meſſage from us to the Senate, and tell them what we expect.

Dr. Eachard. In what Time does your Lordſhip expect them?

Lord. Chanc. In a convenient Time; we will not tie you up; but if you be tardy, my Lords will take care to quicken you by an Intimation; I mean only a Copy, not original Statutes. You are now diſcharged from any farther Attendance here.

The Delegates, upon the Vice-Chancellor's Deprivation, being no longer capable of acting as Publick Perſons, and conſequently of deriving any ill Conſequence upon the Body they have repreſented, thought they might venture their own Perſons more boldly: Therefore, in order to ſatisfy the World, they were mighty deſirous to bring about a ſecond Hearing of the ſame Points, which, before the Vice-Chancellor's Sentence, they were not ſuffered to ſpeak to, and which, when the Vice-Chancellor was asking, they had not an Opportunity of anſwering ſo very particular as they could have wiſh'd, confining themſelves to ſuch Queſtions, all the while, as did not concern the Vice-Chancellor ſolely and perſonally, but affected the whole Senate jointly with him: Which Order they had likewiſe obſerved in interpoſing at the Trial. This Anſwer they had ready to offer in Writing, if that could be admitted; but if not, reſolved to argue it by Word of Mouth: The Subſtance of it may be reduced to two Heads:

Firſt, The Buſineſs of admitting others, and particularly Dr. Lightfoot, without Oaths. As to Lightfoot's Caſe, what they intended to have urged in Court, you have ſeen already; but as to others,

I. That Peers are by the very Act of Parliament 5 Eliz. exempted from the Oath.

II. That all ſuch as the Univerſity calls Noblemen, have Time out of Mind enjoyed the Privilege of Peers.

III. That under that Quality they never admit any without Oaths.

IV. That if at any Time, upon the entertaining of a Prince, or any ſuch Solemnity, any one has ſlipped out in the Crowd, which they are not conſcious of, this is to be imputed to Hurry and Inadvertency, and cannot be parallel to this Caſe, where the Senate acted with Leiſure and Deliberation.

V. That even theſe Degrees, given to Noblemen and Strangers, are Honorary and Complemental, and ſo different from what the Statute calls Degrees of Learning, and Men uſe, exerciſe and make a Gain of their Profeſſion.

VI. That ſuppoſing never ſo many to be admitted without Oaths, this they acknowledged to be irregular, and the Breach of a Law in one can be no Precedent for another to follow.

VII. That however, they are very fully and particularly aſſured, no Man was ever admitted, who poſitively refuſed the Oaths, which this Mr. Francis did,

I. That every Man who is a Member of that, or any other Senate, hath ſuch a Right to propoſe, debate, and adviſe, as Occaſion ſhall require, and proteſt againſt any irregular Proceedings in it.

II. That in a Matter contrary to the Laws, and ſo highly concerning their Univerſity and Religion, as the opening ſuch a Gap for the Men of any Perſwaſion to become Members of their Body and Senate (which every Reſident Maſter of Art is) it had been the greateſt Infidelity and Negligence to have ſat ſtill.

III. That their Suffrage not being asked by the common Way, ought not to have been a Bar, becauſe every Man in his Matriculation Oath, obligeth himſelf to be aſſiſting to the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor, and to defend the State, Honour, and Dignity of the Univerſity, according to his Power and Capacity; and this to do Suffragio & Concilio, rogatus & non rogatus.

IV. That repreſenting the whole Houſes Opinions by a few, is a Practice common to all numerous Congregations, and uſual in this, for any ſingle Man, voluntarily to go and addreſs the Vice-Chancellor in Behalf of his whole College, or otherwiſe.

V. That the late King commanded, by his Royal Letters, that all Addreſs to the Vice-Chancellor ſhould be made in the moſt quiet, decent, and reſpectful Manner: And this way was thought more comformable to that Command, than the Hurry of every Man applying himſelf Perſonally.

VI. To give the better Reputation to the Thing, and make it unexceptionable, the Perſons ſent from the Senate to the Vice-Chancellor, were all Men either of Publick Character in the Body, or the Seniors of their Houſes, or ſome way eminently known in the Univerſity; but they being admitted, as you have ſeen, on Thurſday, there was no Opportunity at all of offering a Diſpute.

Animadverſions on WEDNESDAY, April 27.

THIS Day the Plea was given in, and the only Thing needful to be remark'd, is, the uſual way of demurring to the Court's Juriſdiction, which is commonly either the only, or firſt Plea, in ſuch Caſes: But the Delegates look'd upon themſelves as obliged not only to defend their Cauſe, but to ſatisfy the World; therefore they were deſirous that all People ſhould be ſatisfied upon what Reaſons they acted; and to this Purpoſe they firſt inſiſted upon them, which they did not at all doubt but it would be patiently heard; whereas, if the Court's Juriſdiction had come firſt, that would, in all Probability, have occaſioned the whole Plea to be ſtifled and over-ruled.

SATURDAY, May 14. 1687.

MR. Atterbury came to Cambridge, with two Orders under the Commiſſioners Seal; one to the Proctors to proceed in the Choice of a new Vice-Chancellor, and the other to Magdalen-College Fellows: To each of which was annexed a Copy of the Sentence to be fixed upon the School-Doors, and Magdalen College Gates: And on Thurſday, May the 17th, Dr. Balderſon, Maſter of Emanuel College, ſucceeded in the Office of Vice-Chancellor.

A Copy of Dr. Peachell's Sentence, as it was fix'd on the Publick School-Doors, and Magdalen College-Gates.

WHEREAS John Peachell, Doctor of Divinity, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, Maſter of Magdalen College, in the ſaid Univerſity, has been conven'd before us, for his Diſobedience to his Majeſty's Royal Letters Mandatory, and other his Contempts; and the ſaid Dr. John Peachell having been fully heard thereupon, we have thought fit, after mature Conſideration of the Matter, to Declare, Decree and Pronounce, That the ſaid Dr. John Peachell, ſhall, for the ſaid Diſobedience and Contempts, be deprived from being Vice Chancellor of the ſaid Univerſity, and from all Power of acting in the ſame: And alſo, that he be Suſpended ab Officio & Beneficio of his Maſterſhip of the ſaid College, during his Majeſty's Pleaſure; and accordingly we do by theſe Preſents deprive him the ſaid Dr. John Peachell, from being Vice-Chancellor of the ſaid Univerſity, and from all Power of acting in the ſame. And we alſo Suſpend him ab Officio & Beneficio of his Maſterſhip of the ſaid College, peremptorily admoniſhing and requiring him hereby, to abſtain from the Function of Maſter of the ſaid College, during the ſaid Suſpenſion, under Pain of Deprivation from his Maſterſhip. And we alſo farther Order and Decree, that the Profits and Perquiſites belonging to his ſaid Maſterſhip, ſhall, during the ſame Suſpenſion, be applied to the Uſe and Benefit of the ſaid College.

CXLII. Proceedings againſt St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon. for not Electing ANTHONY FARMER Preſident of the ſaid College, June, &c. 1687, 3 Jac. II. *.

A Narrative of the Election of Dr. Hough, Preſident to St. Mary-Magdalen College, Oxon, 1687.

THE Preſidentſhip of St. Mary-Magdalen College, in the Univerſity of Oxon. being void by the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, late Preſident of the ſame, the Vice-Preſident, Dr. Aldworth, gave notice to all the Fellows preſent in the Chapel, on Thurſday the 31ſt of March, 1687; where it was unanimouſly agreed to proceed to the Election of a Preſident on Wedneſday the 13th of April following, at Nine o'Clock in the Morning, in the Chapel: And in order thereto, the Vice-Preſident cauſed a Citation to be fix'd on the Chapel Door of the ſaid College, ſignifying the Vacancy, Time and Place of the Election; according to the Direction of the Statutes. But before the Day of Election, being credibly informed that his Majeſty Majesty had been pleased to grant his Letters Mandatory in Behalf of Mr. Anthony Farmer, they most humbly represented to his Sacred Majesty, in their Petition bearing Date April the 9th, That the said Mr. Farmer was uncapable, by their Statutes, of being President; and therefore did most humbly pray his Maiesty to leave them to a free Election, or recommend such a Person to them, as was capable by their Statutes. Monday April the 11th, his Majesty's Letters Mandatory were delivered by the Hands of Mr. Robert Charnock *, Master of Arts, and Fellow of the said College, directed to the Vice-President and Fellows of Magdalen-College in Oxon. requiring them forthwith to Elect the said Mr. Farmer, and admit him President: Which Letter the Vice-President read in the Chapel of the said College, between the Hours of four and five o'Clock in the same Day, after Evening-Service, before the Fellows of the College, there present, and asked them, Whether they in Obedience to his Majesty's Letters, would forthwith elect and admit Mr. Farmer President? Who all agreed, in Consideration to Mr. Farmer's not being qualified, and the Danger of Expulsion to any of the Fellows that should be absent from the Election, and that the Time of Election, according to the Citation, was so near, to defer their Answer till Wednesday following: Whereupon the Vice-President required all the Fellows to be present in the Chapel the said Wednesday Morning at nine o'Clock. All the Fellows being then met, the Vice-President read the Statute De Electione Presidentis; and the Statute 5 Eliz. against corrupt Elections was read also: After which the Vice-President read the King's Letter in Behalf of Mr. Farmer, and the second Time demanded an Answer of the Fellows thereto. Their Answer was to this Effect: That having a Petition now lying before his Majesty, they ought not to proceed to Election, till they had received his Majesty's Answer to the same: And thereupon they all agreed (except Mr. Charnock) that the Election should be deferred; which was accordingly done, until the next Morning nine o'Clock.

Thursday April the 14th, at nine o'Clock in the Morning, all the Fellows being met, the Vice-President told them, That the Election of a President had been deferred upon account of their Petition to his Majesty; in answer to which, they had not then received his Majesty's Pleasure; that the next Day was the utmost Time they could defer the Election by the Statutes, and therefore it was necessary they should come to some Resolution. He told them farther, That the King had commanded them to elect Mr. Farmer, and asked their Sense therein: Which was unanimous (except Mr. Charnock) that the Election should be deferred till the next Morning eight o'Clock; and in order thereunto, the Sacrament to be administred first; and accordingly it was adjourned.

Friday, April the 15th, at nine o'Clock in the Morning, the Vice-President and Fellows being met, Dr. Thomas Smith and Captain Bagshaw, two of the Fellows, acquainted the rest, from my Lord-President of the Council, That in Answer to their Petition, his Majesty had sent his Letter to the College, that he expected to be obeyed. After which, the Vice-President read again the King's Letter to them, and ask'd, whether, in Obedience thereunto, they would elect and admit Mr. Farmer President? They answered, That they desired they might proceed to an Election. Then the Vice-President having proposed, whether having received his Majesty's Pleasure in Answer to their Petition, they would make any further Address? The Vice-President, Dr. Fairfax †, Dr. Pudsay, and Dr. Thomas Smith, were for a second Address; but all the rest declared immediately for proceeding to the Election.

Then the Vice-President proposed, whether they would go to an Election Viva voce, or by Scrutiny? The Vice-President, Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Charnock, were for proceeding to an Election Viva voce; all the rest were for going to an Election by Scrutiny, except Dr. Thomas Smith, who was not for going to Election, until the King should again be petitioned.

This therefore being the Sense of the Majority, That they ought to proceed to the Election of a President, according to the Statutes, and this the last Day limited for Election. In order thereunto, the Holy Sacrament was solemnly taken by all except Mr. Charnock. Then the Statute De Electione Præsidentis, and 5 Eliz. against corrupt Elections, was read by the Vice-President. Every one took the Oath prescribed in the Statutes to be taken, in order to the Nomination of a President (except Mr. Thompson and Mr. Charnock, who refused it) And the two Senior Fellows were sworn Scrutators in the Scrutiny of the whole Society. For the Nomination of a President, Mr. Hough § and Mr. Maynard had each of them the major Part of all the Voices; and were accordingly pronounced by the Senior Scrutator, Nominati in Ordine ad Electionem Præsidentis. Then the thirteen Senior Fellows being met to elect one of these two President; and every one of them sworn according to the Statute; eleven of them elected Mr. Hough, who was accordingly pronounc'd President of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon. by the Senior Scrutator, in the Presence of all the Fellows: And Mr. Maynard was appointed by the thirteen Senior Fellows to present the said President Elect to the Visitor, in order to his Admission. After this, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Charnock declared Viva voce for Mr. Farmer, according to his Majesty's Letter.

Saturday April the 16th, Mr. Hough, President elect, was presented to the Visitor ‖ by Mr. Maynard, who at the same Time delivered to his Lordship an Instrument under the College-Seal, containing the Proceedings of the Election: After a Sight whereof, Mr. Hough was sworn and admitted President by his Lordship, according to the Statutes.

Sunday, April the 17th, Mr. Hough, at his return to the College, took the same Oath again before the Society, and afterwards as President took his Seat in the Chapel, at four o'Clock Prayers in the Afternoon.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty,

The Humble Petition of the Vice-Preſident and Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen-College in Oxon.

Moſt humbly ſheweth,

WE have been credibly informed, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, who was not of our Foundation, has obtained your moſt excellent Majeſty's Recommendation to be Preſident of your Majeſty's College, in the room of Dr. Henry Clark deceaſed.

We therefore, with all Submiſſion, as becomes your moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, moſt humbly repreſent to your Sacred Majeſty, That the ſaid Mr. Farmer is a Perſon in ſeveral Reſpects uncapable of that Character, according to our Founder's Statutes: And do moſt earneſtly beſeech your Majeſty, as your Majeſty ſhall judge fitteſt in your moſt Princely Wiſdom, either to leave us to the Diſcharge of our Duty and Conſciences, according to your Majeſty's late moſt gracious Toleration, and our Founder's Statutes, or to recommend ſuch a Perſon who may be more ſerviceable to your Majeſty, and to this your Majeſty's College:

A Copy of the Lord Sunderland's Letter to the Fellows.

Gentlemen,

THE King being given to underſtand, That notwithſtanding his late Mandate ſent to you, for electing Mr. Farmer to be Preſident of your College, you have made Choice of another Perſon; his Majeſty commands me to tell you, He is much ſurprized at theſe Proceedings, and expects you ſhould ſend me an Account of what paſſed on that Occaſion, and whether you did receive his Majeſty's ſaid Letters Mandate, before you choſe Dr. Hough. I am,

Gentlemen,
Your Affectionate and Humble Servant.
SUNDERLAND.

The Caſe of the Vice-Preſident and Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen-College in Oxon. in their late Election of a Preſident.

UPON Notice of the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, late Preſident of St. Mary-Magdalen-College in Oxon. the Vice-Preſident called a Meeting of the Fellows, in order to appoint a Day for the Election of a new Preſident. The 13th of April was the Day prefix'd with Power to prorogue the Election to the 15th, as they ſhould ſee Cauſe, beyond which time it was not in their Power to defer the ſame. This being agreed, a Citation or Premonition was fix'd upon the Chapel-Door of the College, ſignifying the ſame; and ſummoning all the abſent Fellows to repair home to the enſuing Election, as the Statute in that Caſe directs. After this, upon the 11th of April, they receiv'd his Majeſty's Letter in Behalf of Mr. Farmer, requiring them to elect and admit him Preſident: But he having never been Fellow of that College, nor New-College, in which are the only Perſons capable of being choſen by the Statutes; and wanting likewiſe ſuch perſonal Qualifications as are required in the Character of a Preſident, they did not imagine it was, or could be his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that they ſhould act ſo directly contrary to the expreſs Words of their Statutes, to which they are ſtrictly and poſitively ſworn: But did humbly conceive they were bound in Duty to believe, that his Majeſty had been miſinformed in the Character and Capacity of Mr. Farmer. And therefore on the 15th of April, the laſt of thoſe Days within which they were confin'd to finiſh the Election, they proceeded to a Choice; and having firſt received the bleſſed Euchariſt, and taken an Oath, as the Founder enjoins, to chooſe a Perſon ſo qualified, as is there ſpecified, they did elect the Reverend Mr. John Hugh, Batchelor in Divinity, who is a Perſon every way qualified by the Statutes of the ſaid College: And if it ſhall be objected that his Majeſty did in his Letter for Mr. Farmer graciouſly diſpenſe with all the Statutes that rendered him uncapable of being elected; and that therefore they might have obeyed without Breach of their Oaths: They humbly beg leave to repreſent, that there is an expreſs Clauſe in that Oath, which every Man takes when he is admitted Fellow of the College; wherein he ſwears, not to procure, accept, or make uſe of, any Diſpenſation from his Oath, or any Part thereof, by whomſoever procured, or by what Authority ſoever granted. As to their former Practice, when they have elected in Obedience to the King's Letter heretofore, it has been always in ſuch Caſes where the Perſons recommended have been every way qualified for the Office by their Statutes: In which Caſes they always have been, and ever will be, ready to comply with his Majeſty's Pleaſure; it not being without unſpeakable Regret, that they diſobey the leaſt of his Commands. They know how entirely their Welfare depends upon the Countenance of their Prince; nor doth any thing more deeply affect and grieve their Souls, than when they find themſelves reduc'd to this unfortunate Neceſſity, of either diſobeying his Will, or violating their Conſciences by notorious Perjuries.

A Copy of a Letter to the Duke of Ormond, April the 18*th*, 1687.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

WE the Preſident, and Fellows of Magdalen-College in Oxon. ſenſible of the Benefits and Honour we enjoy under your Grace's Patronage, and how much it imports us to have your Advice in all the Difficulties wherewith we are preſs'd; having, as we fear, diſpleaſed his Majeſty in our Election of a Preſident; do humbly beg Leave to repreſent to your Grace, a true State of our Caſe, and hope you will pleaſe to inform the King how uncapable we were to perform his Commands.

His Majeſty was pleaſed, on the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, Preſident of St. Mary-Magdalen College, to command us, by his Letter, to elect and admit Mr. Anthony Farmer in that Office, a Perſon utterly uncapable of it by our Statutes, as we are ready to make appear in many Particulars; and ſince we have taken a poſitive Oath of Obedience to them, and that excluſive to all Diſpenſations whatſoever; we humbly conceive we could not obey that Command in Favour of Mr. Farmer, unleſs he had brought thoſe Qualifications with him, which our Founder requires in the Perſon of the Preſident; and being confined as to the Time of Election, we have been forced to proceed to the Choice of one, who has approved his Loyalty in the whole Courſe of his Life, and whom we think ſuitably qualified for the Place. ——

May it therefore pleaſe your Grace to interpoſe with his moſt Sacred Majeſty for us, that we may not lie under the Weight of his Diſpleaſure, for not being in a Capacity for obeying his Commands. We know him to be a Prince of eminent Juſtice and Integrity, and cannot think he will value any Inſtance of Duty to himſelf, which manifeſtly breaks in upon the Obligation of our Conſciences. And your Grace's extraordinary unblemiſhed Loyalty to the Crown; and that Regard which, we aſſure ourſelves, our moſt honoured Lord and Chancellor has to the Peace and Welfare of this Place, induceth us to preſume your Grace will omit no Endeavours to ſet before his Majeſty the true Reaſon and Neceſſity of our Proceedings. That God Almighty protect your Grace, ſhall be the daily Prayers of,

May it pleaſe your Grace, &c.

The Biſhop of Winton*'s Letter to the Lord Preſident of the Council.*

My Honoured Lord,

THE Obligation I have upon me as Viſitor of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon, occaſions this Addreſs: For I am inform'd that great Endeavours are uſed with his Majeſty to recommend one Mr. Farmer, who is not at preſent, nor ever was Fellow of the College, to be Preſident of it; which is directly contrary to the Statutes of the Founder. (as I am confident ſome, who promote Mr. Farmer's Intereſt, cannot be ignorant of) And were there not many Perſons now actually Fellows, and ſeveral who have been (in particular the Biſhop of Man, and Dr. Jeſſop) very eminent for Learning and Loyalty, and every way qualified according to the Statutes, I ſhould not preſs your Lordſhip to lay the Concern of the College (which hath upon all Occaſions expreſs'd its Zeal and Forwardneſs in Defence of the Crown, and, as I particularly know, in the great Affairs of the Succeſſion) before his Majeſty; who, I hope, will leave them to their Rules, as the Statutes, which have hitherto (excepting in the Times of Rebellion) been conſcientiouſly obſerv'd, and which will be the higheſt Satisfaction to the truly Loyal Univerſity, and promote his Majeſty's Service; which has always been the Endeavour of,

Your Lordſhip's moſt Humble Servant.

A Copy of the Citation to the Vice-Preſident and Fellows, for to appear at Whitehall, June the 6th, 1687.

By his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and for the Viſitation of the Univerſities, and of all and every Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges, &c.

COmplaint having been made unto Us, that the Vice-Preſident and Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon. have refuſed to comply with his Majeſty's Letters Mandatory, for electing and admitting Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſame College, in the room of Dr. Clark deceaſed, and that, notwithſtanding his Majeſty's Letters, they have elected Mr. John Hough Preſident of the ſaid College: You, and either of you, are hereby required to cite and ſummon the ſaid Vice-Preſident and Fellows, requiring them, or ſuch of the ſaid Fellows as they ſhall depute in their Behalf, to appear before Us in the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, upon Monday the 6th of the next Month of June, at Four in the Afternoon, to anſwer to ſuch Matters as ſhall be objected againſt them, concerning the Premiſes; and of the due Execution thereof, you are to certify Us then and there.

Given under Our Seal the 28th of May, 1687.

To THOMAS ATTERBUY,
and
ROBERT ELDOWS;

Or to either of them.

The Anſwer of the Vice-Preſident, and other Fellows, of Magdalen College in Oxon. who were deputed by the ſaid College, to the Queſtion propounded by the Right Honourable and Right Reverend the Lords Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, viz.

Why they did not obey his Majeſty's Letter, requiring them to elect and admit Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſaid College?

THE ſaid Vice-Preſident, and other deputed Fellows, anſwered and ſaid, That the ſaid College of St. Mary-Magdalen in Oxon. is a Body Corporate, governed by local Statutes, granted and confirmed to them by his Majeſty's Royal Predeceſſor, King Henry VI. for him and his Heirs and Succeſſors, under the Great Seal of England; which are alſo ſince confirmed by ſeveral other Patents of others of his Majeſty's Royal Predeceſſors, under the Great Seal of England. That by the ſaid Statutes of the College (to the Obſervation of which each Fellow is ſworn) it is ordered, that the Perſon elected Preſident thereof, ſhall be a Man of good Life and Reputation, of approved Underſtanding and good Temper, diſcreet, provident, and circumſpect, both in Spiritual and Temporal Affairs. And at the Time of Election of a Preſident, the ſaid Fellows are bound by the ſaid Statutes to take an Oath, that they ſhall nominate none to that Office, but ſuch as are, or have been Fellows of the ſaid College, or of New-College in Oxon. or if they are not actually Fellows at that Time of Election, that they be ſuch as have left their Fellowſhips in their reſpective Colleges upon credible credible Accounts. And when two qualified Perſons ſhall be nominated at the Time of Election, by the greater Number of all the Fellows, to the ſaid Office of Preſident, the thirteen Seniors alſo ſwear that they will elect one of them, whom in their Conſciences they think moſt proper and ſufficient, moſt diſcreet, moſt uſeful, and beſt qualified for the Place; without any Regard to Love, Hatred, Favour, or Fear. And every Fellow, when he is firſt admitted into his Fellowſhip in the ſaid College, ſwears that he will inviolably keep and obſerve all the Statutes and Ordinances of the College, and every thing therein contained, ſo far as does or may concern him, according to the plain, literal, and grammatical Senſe and Meaning thereof, and, as much as in him lies, will cauſe the ſame to be kept and obſerved by others; and that he will not procure any Diſpenſation contrary to his aforeſaid Oath, or any Part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which it relates, or any of them; nor will he endeavour that ſuch Diſpenſation ſhall be procured by any other, or others, publickly or privately, directly or indirectly. And if it ſhall happen that any Diſpenſation of this ſort, of whatſoever Authority it ſhall be, whether in general or particular, or under what Form of Words ſoever it be granted, that he will neither make uſe of it, nor in any ſort conſent thereunto. That upon Notice of the Death of Dr. Clark, late Preſident of the ſaid College, the Vice-Preſident called a Meeting of the ſaid Fellows, in order to the appointing a Day for the Election of a new Preſident, and the 13th of April was the Time prefixed, with Power to prorogue the ſame as they ſhould ſee Cauſe, till the 15th, beyond which Time they could not ſtatutably defer their Election; and in Purſuance thereof a Citation or Premonition was fixed upon the Chapel-door of the ſaid College, ſignifying the ſame; and by which the abſent Fellows were ſummoned to repair Home, as the Statute in the Caſe requires. And the ſaid Vice-Preſident and other deputed Fellows farther ſay, that on the 11th of April aforeſaid, they received his Majeſty's Letters Mandatory, to elect and admit the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſaid College: But foraſmach as the ſaid Vice-Preſident and Fellows apprehended the Right of Election to be in them, and believed his Majeſty never intended to diſpoſſeſs them of their Rights: And foraſmuch as the ſaid Mr. Farmer had never been Fellow either of Magdalen or New College in Oxon. and had not thoſe Qualifications, which in and by the ſaid Statutes of the College are required in the Character of a Preſident, as they in their Conſciences did, or do verily believe; and in regard that they could not comply with his Majeſty's Letter, without the Violation of their Oaths, and Hazard of their legal Intereſt and Property, wherewith they are by their Statutes poſſeſſed, and which by their Oaths they are bound to maintain, they repreſented the ſame by their humble Petition to his Majeſty. And having deferred their Election of a Preſident to the laſt Day limited by their Statutes, then they proceeded to Election, and having firſt received the Euchariſt, and taken the ſaid Oaths, as the Statutes enjoin, to chooſe a Perſon ſo qualified as before expreſſed, they did elect the Reverend Mr. John Hough, B. D. and one of the Fellows of their College, a Perſon every way qualified to be Preſident, who has been ſince confirmed by the Biſhop of Winton. their Viſitor, as the Statutes of the ſaid College direct.

And that they might not lie under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure by their Proceedings, they did, on the 18th of April, make an humble Repreſentation thereof to his Majeſty, by his Grace the Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxon. ſetting forth their indiſpenſable Obligations to obſerve their Founder's Statutes.

All which Matters the Vice-Preſident, and other deputed Fellows, do humbly offer to your Lordſhips, and pray to be diſmiſſed with your Lordſhips Favour.

This Anſwer was ſigned but by five of the deputed Fellows, Dr. Fairfax not conſenting to it, who deſired their Lordſhips to hear him apart, and take his Reaſons, why he could not ſubſcribe. After the reading of the Anſwer, the Lord Chancellor Jeffereys being in Hopes he would ſubmit, gave him Leave to ſpeak, ſaying, Ay, this looks like a Man of Senſe, and a good Subject; let's hear what he will ſay. But finding his Miſtake, and that Dr. Fairfax chiefly inſiſted, "That in Eccleſiaſtical Courts there ſhould be a Libel given "to the Party appealed, that he might know what "he is accuſed of; that he deſir'd that Libel, and "did not know what he was called there for; and "that the Matter did not lie in that Court, but "in Weſtminſter-Hall." The Chancellor endeavoured to baffle his Plea, by telling him, He was Doctor of Divinity, but not of Law. To this the Doctor replied, That he deſired to know by what Commiſſion and Authority they ſat: Which put Jeffereys into ſuch an exceſſive Paſſion, as made him cry out, Pray what Commiſſion have you to be ſo impudent in Court? This Man ought to be kept in a dark Room. Why do you ſuffer him without a Guardian? Why did not you bring him to me to beg him? Pray let the Officers ſeize him.

Then the Fellows were ordered to withdraw, and after an whole Hour's Debate, the Vice-Preſident was called in alone, and ordered to attend the Court, with the reſt of the deputed Fellows, on Wedneſday the 23d of the ſame Month. On the appointed Day the Fellows attended, and gave in the following Reaſons againſt Mr. Farmer.

WHereas the Vice-Preſident, and other deputed Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon. have, in their Anſwer to your Lordſhips, ſet forth, that by the Statutes of the ſaid College it is ordered, That the Perſon to be elected Preſident thereof, ſhould be a Man of good Life and Reputation, and of good Manners and Temper; and likewiſe, that Mr. Anthony Farmer hath not thoſe Qualifications, which in and by the ſaid Statutes are required in the Character of a Preſident, as they in their Conſciences did and do verily believe. They humbly crave Leave to repreſent to your Lordſhips ſome of thoſe Reaſons which induced them to ſuch Belief; viz.

That Mr. Farmer did miſbehave himſelf in Trinity College in Cambridge: That he received Admonition from the Maſter of the College, in order to his Expulſion; which remains in the Regiſter of the ſaid College, under his own Hand.

That having left Cambridge, he taught School at Chippenham in Wiltſhire, under a Nonconformiſt Miniſter, without Licence.

That in September, 1683, the ſaid Mr. Farmer was entred into St. Mary-Magdalen Hall in Oxon. where where ſuch frequent Complaints were brought againſt him to the Principal, for his troubleſome Humour and unquiet Temper, that, to preſerve the Peace of the Society, he was deſired to leave the ſaid Hall.

That after his leaving Magdalen Hall, he was admitted into Magdalen College; where diſcourſing about Religion, he declared, That there was no Proteſtant but would cut the King's Throat. Notwithſtanding which, at other Times, he declared to ſome of the Fellows of the ſaid College, That whatſoever he pretended, he was really a Member of the Church of England; and that he made an Intereſt with ſome Roman Catholicks, only to get Preferment by their Means, and for that Reaſon was willing to be thought of their Religion.

That at the very Time when his Majeſty's Letter came to the College in his Behalf, the ſaid Mr. Farmer was at Abington in very ill Company, where he continued drinking to Exceſs two or three Days and Nights together; and amongſt other Diſorders, was one of thoſe that then in the Night Time threw the Town-Stocks into the River: And that in general, the ſaid Mr. Farmer hath had the Unhappineſs to lie under an ill Fame, as to his Life and Converſation, as by ſeveral Letters and Certificates, ready to be produced, will more largely appear.

I. I Anthony Farmer, Batchelor of Arts, and Scholar of this College, do confeſs, That I have behaved my ſelf very unlike a Member of this College, and even a Chriſtian, at the Dancing-School: For which I humbly aſk Pardon, and do acknowledge before the Seniority, that I have deſervedly received of the Maſter my firſt Admonition in order to Expulſion.

II. THESE are to certify, that Mr. Anthony Farmer was Uſher to Mr. Benj. Flower, a Non-conformiſt Preacher in the Town of Chippenham in the County of Wilts, for the Space of Half a Year or upwards, the ſaid Mr. Flower keeping School without Licence from the Biſhop, and the ſaid Mr. Farmer continuing his Uſher for the Time mentioned, without any Licence alſo. III. MR. Anthony Farmer was entred of St. Mary-Magdalen Hall in Oxford, September, 1683. Where, after he had been ſome Time, frequent Complaints were brought to me by ſome of the Maſters, that he raiſed Quarrels and Differences among them; that he often occaſioned Diſturbances, and was of a troubleſome and unpeaceable Humour. Whereupon, that Love and Friendſhip might be preſerved and continued in the Society, as it is uſed to be, I adviſed the ſaid Mr. Farmer to make Trial if he could live more eaſily and quietly in ſome other Houſe. Accordingly he did voluntarily leave the Hall, July the 13th, 1685, and got himſelf admitted into Magdalen College.

WILLIAM LEVET, Principal.

IV. I Do certify, That Mr. William Bambrigg, Gentleman Commoner of Magdalen Hall, Oxon. did ſay, that Mr. Anthony Farmer, Maſter of Arts, did entice him from his Studies in the Univerſity to go to London, where he the ſaid Mr. Farmer did attempt to draw the ſaid Mr. Bambrigg into ſeveral Debaucheries, both at Taverns and Bawdy-houſes. Witneſs my Hand, John Ryland, Maſter of Arts of Magd. Hall.

V. I Do certify, That Mr. William Bambrigg, Gentleman Commoner of Magdalen Hall, did ſay, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, Maſter of Arts of the ſaid Hall, did receive Money of him and other Gentlemen, publickly to expoſe unto him a naked Woman; which he accordingly did. Witneſs my Hand, Richard Clerk, Maſter of Arts of Magd. Hall.

VI. I Am very willing to juſtify any thing I have formerly ſaid, relating to ſo ſerious a Matter as this is you enquire after.

Mr. Farmer, one Night in the Cloiſter, aſked me why I did not get a Commiſſion: I told him truly, I had not Friends to do it for me. He then aſked me, what I would do for one? I told him, I would fight for my King, and whatſoever he ſhould command me. He then aſked me, if I would fight for the King's Religion? I told him, there would be no Occaſion for that, nor would it ever be required of me. He aſked me of what Religion I was: I told him a Proteſtant. And then he ſaid, there was no Proteſtant but would cut the King's Throat; and that he ſhould loſe three thouſand Pounds for being of that Religion he intended to be of; which he ſaid was a Papiſt. This, to the beſt of my Remembrance, is the full of what he ſaid. If I have omitted any thing, it is my Care not to write more than I would honeſtly and juſtly ſwear to. I am,

SIR,
Your moſt obliged, and moſt humble Servant,
JOHN BRABOURN.

VII. IN or about January laſt, 1687, Mr. Anthony Farmer declared before us, That the Report of his being a Papiſt was falſe; but that he was willing to be thought ſo, becauſe it might do him a Kindneſs: That the Reaſon of his Acquaintance with Mr. Brent and Mr. Walker, was to get Preferment by their Intereſt: That he had not forſaken the Proteſtant Religion; adding, we ſhould call him a Rogue, if ever he did: That he would not make any publick Declaration of this, but would declare it amongſt Friends, when and where he pleaſed.

VIII. I Do hereby certify, That Robert Gardiner, Porter of St. Mary-Magdalen College, did tell me, that Mr. Farmer did very often come into the College late at Night, ſo much in Drink, that he could ſcarce go or ſpeak. Witneſs my Hand, this 9th Day of June, 1687.

GEORGE FULHAM.

IX. UPON Monday, April the third, Mr. Farmer came to the Lobſter in Abington with Mr. Clerk, Mr. Gravener, and Mr. Jennyfar, about eight in the Morning, and ſtaid ſome time in the Houſe, and went from thence to the Tavern; returned again about eleven at Night, and ſat up till one in the Morning: The next Day they went to the Buſh Tavern and ſent for a Quarter of Lamb for their Supper, and there Mr. Farmer, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Gravener, and two Troopers and others, continued till paſt eleven at Night, and ſo returned to the aforeſaid Place, and ſat up till paſt three in the Morning. This I do aſſert, was the Company that the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer kept, and theſe were the unſeaſonable Hours. In witneſs whereof, I am ready to ſwear, whenever a Subpœna ſhall be ſent to me.

GEORGE MORTIMER.

X. MRS. Mortimer is ready to aſſert, That when Mr. Anthony Farmer returned to the Lobſter about eleven at Night, he came much concerned in Drink, and was for kiſſing the ſaid Mrs. Mortimer, which, he being a Stranger, ſhe permitted him to do; but in doing of it, he the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer put his Tongue in her Mouth, which was ſuch a Rudeneſs, that ſhe immediately went out of his Company and would not come nigh him any more.

MARTHA MORTIMER.

XI. BEing in Company with William Hopkins of Abington, the 12th of June laſt 1687, I heard him declare, That himſelf, with one Mr. Farmer of the Univerſity of Oxon. and ſome others, did in a Frolick, at an unſeaſonable Time of Night, take away the Town Stocks from the Place where they conſtantly ſtood, and carried them in a Cart a conſiderable Way, and threw them into a Pool, commonly called Mad Hall's Pool. Witneſs my Hand, the Day and Year above written.

CHARLES PEACOCK.

Some Clauſes of particular Statutes to which the Caſe relates.

IN their Statutes concerning their Election of a Preſident, his Character is thus deſcribed; That he muſt be a Man of good Reputation, and good Life, and circumſpect both in ſpiritual and temporal Affairs.

In the ſame Statutes the Oath which every Fellow is obliged to take, before he can give his Vote in the Nomination of a Preſident, is this; viz.

That he will name one or two of St. Mary-Magdalen-College, or of thoſe who have been Fellows there, or have left their Places upon a legal and credible Account: Or that he will name one or two of the Fellows of St. Mary-Wincheſter College, commonly called New College in Oxon. or of thoſe who have been formerly Fellows there, and have left their Places upon a credible Account. After this, the thirteen Senior Fellows ſwear, That out of the two thus nominated, they will, with all Speed, elect one to exerciſe the Office of a Preſident, whom in their Conſciences they think moſt proper and ſufficient, moſt diſcreet, moſt uſeful, and beſt qualified for it, either without any regard to Love, Hatred, Favour, Fear, &c. as in the fore-mentioned Statute is more largely expreſſed.———

Part of the OATH which every Fellow takes when admitted.

Item. I Do ſwear, that I will not procure any Diſpenſation contrary to my aforeſaid Oath, or to any Part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which they relate, or any one of them; nor will I endeavour that ſuch Diſpenſations be procured by any other or others, publickly or privately, directly or indirectly: And if it ſhall happen that any Diſpenſation of this Sort ſhall be procured, or freely granted or obtained, of what Authority ſoever it be, whether in general or particular, under what Form of Words ſoever it be granted, I will neither make uſe of it, nor in any Sort conſent thereto.

So help me GOD.

WHereas it appears to us, that Mr. John Hough, B. D. hath been unduly elected Preſident of Saint Mary-Magdalen College, in the Univerſity of Oxon. We have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration thereof, that the ſaid Election be declared void, and the ſaid Mr. John Hough be amoved from the ſaid Preſidentſhip; and accordingly we do hereby declare and decree, that the ſaid Election is void; and do amove the ſaid Mr. John Hough from the Place of Preſident of the ſaid College.

WHereas Charles Aldworth, Doctor of Laws, Vice-Preſident of St. Mary-Magdalen College, Oxon. and the Deputies, Fellows of the ſame Houſe, have been conven'd before us, for their Contempt in not obliging his Majeſty's Letters Mandatory, for Electing and Admitting Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſaid College; and the ſaid Dr. Aldworth and Deputies having been heard thereupon, We have thought fit to declare, pronounce, and decree, That the ſaid Dr. Aldworth ſhall for the ſaid Contempt be ſuſpended from being Vice-Preſident of the ſaid College: And that Henry Fairfax, Doctor of Divinity, one of the Fellows of the ſaid College, ſhall for the ſaid Contempt be ſuſpended from his Fellowſhip; and accordingly We do hereby ſuſpend Dr. Charles Aldworth from being Vice-Preſident of the ſaid College, and the ſaid Dr. Henry Fairfax from his Fellowſhip in the ſaid College.

TRuſty and Well-beloved, We Greet you well: Whereas We are informed, That a Sentence or Decree lately made by Our Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, touching an Election in that our College, hath not been obeyed, Our Will and Pleaſure is, no Election or Admiſſion be made of any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, into any Fellowſhip, Demyſhip, or other Place or Office in Our ſaid College, till We ſhall ſignify Our further Pleaſure, any Statute, Cuſtom, or Conſtitution to the contrary notwithſtanding. And ſo, expecting Obedience herein, We bid you farewel.

TRUSTY and Well-beloved, We Greet you well. Whereas the Place of Preſident of Our College of St. Mary-Magdalen, is now void, Our Will and Pleaſure is, and We do hereby authorize and require you forthwith, upon Receipt hereof, to admit the Right Reverend Father in God, Samuel Lord Biſhop of Oxon. into the ſaid Place of Preſident, to hold and enjoy the ſame, with all the Rights, Privileges and Profits, Emoluments and Advantages thereunto belonging, any Statute or Statutes, Cuſtom or Conſtitution, to the contrary, in any wiſe, notwithſtanding, wherewith We are graciouſly pleaſed, and do accordingly hereby diſpenſe in his Behalf: And ſo expecting your ready Obedience herein, We bid you Farewel.

THE King having been pleaſed by his Letters Mandatory, to require the Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen College, to admit the Lord Biſhop of Oxon. Preſident of that College; his Majeſty commands me to let you know, That immediately upon the Receipt hereof, he would have you aſſemble the Fellows, and communicate to them his Majeſty's ſaid Letters: And I am further commanded to tell you, That his Majeſty expects a ready Obedience to be paid to his Pleaſure herein. I deſire you would ſend me an Account of your Proceedings, as ſoon as you can, that I may acquaint his Majeſty therewith. I am,

A Copy of the Biſhop of Oxon's Letter to the Senior Fellow of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon. or, in his Abſence, to the Senior Fellow reſiding there.

SIR,

YOU will receive herewith his Majeſty's Mandate to admit me Preſident of your College of St. Mary-Magdalen in Oxon. together with a Letter of my Lord Sunderland's, purſuant to his Majeſty's Commands. I am indiſpoſed, as I have been for ſome Time, and not in a Condition as yet to travel; and therefore my Requeſt to you is, That upon Receipt of the King's Pleaſure, you would do me the Favour to admit me by Proxy (i. e.) either the next Senior Fellow under your ſelf, Reſident, or either of my Chaplains, Mr. William Wickens or Mr. Thomas Collins, whom I depute in my ſtead, which is as valid in Law, as if I were preſent my ſelf; and is the moſt uſual and cuſtomary Practice. And by ſo doing, you will oblige.

Your very loving Friend, and Brother,

SAMUEL OXON.

OXON, September 4th, 1687.

The Lord Sunderland ſent an Order to the Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen College, to attend the King at Chriſt-Church, at Three in the Afternoon. They attended accordingly.

King. WHAT's your Name? Are you Dr. Pudſey?

Dr. Pudſ. Yes, may it pleaſe your Majeſty.

King. Did you receive my Letter?

Dr. Pudſ. Yes, Sir, we did.

King. Then you have not dealt with me like Gentlemen; you have done very uncivilly by me, and undutifully.——

Here they all kneeled, and Dr. Pudſey offered a Petition, which his Majeſty refuſed to receive; and ſaid,

King. Ye have been a ſtubborn turbulent College; I have known you to be ſo theſe ſix and twenty Years. You have affronted me in this. Is this your Church of England Loyalty? One would wonder to find ſo many Church of England Men in ſuch a Buſineſs! Go Home, and ſhew your ſelves good Members of the Church of England. Get you gone; know I am your King, I will be obey'd, and I command you to be gone. Go and amit the Biſhop of Oxon. Head, Principal, what d'ye call it, of the College —— [One who ſtood by, ſaid Preſident] I mean Preſident of the College. Let them that refuſe it look to it; they ſhall feel the Weight of their Sovereign's Diſpleaſure.

The Fellows going out of the Lodgings, were called back.

King. I hear you have admitted a Fellow of the College, ſince you received my Inhibition. Is this true? Have you not admitted Mr. Holden Fellow?

Dr. Pudſ. I think he was admitted Fellow. But we conceive——

Mr. Cra. May it pleaſe your Majeſty, there was no new Election, or Admiſſion, ſince your Majeſty's Inhibition, but only the Conſummation of a former Election. They always elect to one Year's Probation, then the Perſon elected is received or rejected for ever.

King. The Conſummation of a former Election! 'twas downright Diſobedience; and 'tis a freſh Aggravation. Get you gone Home, I ſay again; go, get you gone, and immediately repair to your Chapel, and elect the Biſhop of Oxon. or elſe you muſt expect to feel the Weight of my Hand——

The Fellows offered again their Petition on their Knees.

King. Get you gone, I will receive nothing from you till you have obey'd me, and admitted the Biſhop of Oxon.

Upon which they went immediately to their Chapel, Dr. Pudſey propoſing, Whether they would obey the King, and elect the Biſhop of Oxon? They anſwered in their Turns, They were as ready to obey his Majeſty in all Things that lay in their Power, as any of the reſt of his Subjects. But the electing the Biſhop of Oxon. being directly contrary to their Statutes, and the poſitive Oaths they had taken, they could not apprehend it in their Power to obey him in this Matter.

A Copy of the Petition offered at Oxford, September 4th, 1687.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, &c.

Humbly ſheweth,

THAT upon the 27th of Auguſt we received your Majeſty's Letters Mandatory, dated Auguſt 14th, requiring us to admit the Right Reverend Father in God Samuel Lord Biſhop of Oxon. to be our Preſident; and diſpenſing with all Statutes and Conſtitutions to the contrary. It is an unexpreſſible Affliction to us, to find our ſelves reduced to ſuch an Extremity, that either we muſt diſobey your Majeſty's Royal Command, contrary to our own Inclinations, and that conſtant Courſe of Loyalty which we have ſhew'd in all Inſtances hitherto upon all Occaſions whatſoever, or elſe break our Founder's Statutes, and deliberately perjure our ſelves.

For our Founder hath obliged us under Oath, when we came in Fellows, inviolably to obſerve his Statutes, and one Clauſe therein enjoins us never to admit or make uſe of a Diſpenſation granted by any Authority whatſoever, whereby we may be abſolved from the ſame. In this Statute for the Election of a Preſident, he commands us upon Oath to elect ſuch a Perſon into the Place of Preſident within fifteen Days after the Vacancy, who either is, or has been Fellow of our own, or New College: Which we repreſented to your Majeſty in our humble Petition, ſigned April 9th, wherein we offered our ſelves ready to elect any Perſon capable of the ſame, who your Majeſty ſhould be pleaſed to recommend; and having waited the utmoſt Time limited by our Statutes, and receiv'd no Anſwer to that Effect, we did then, according to the Exigence of our Statutes (having firſt taken the Holy Euchariſt, and our ſeveral Oaths to that Purpoſe) nominate and elect ſuch a Perſon as we in our Conſciences did believe to be every way qualified for the Place. By which Act of ours we have conveyed all that Right to him which our Founder hath entruſted us with, and it does not lie in our Power to admit any other. Our Founder in another Statute obligeth us, under the Pain of Perjury, a dreadful Anathema, and eternal Damnation, not to ſuffer any of his Statutes to be altered, infringed, or diſpenſed with, and commands us under the ſame ſacred Obligations, not to execute any Orders or Decree whatſoever, contrary or repugnant to the ſaid Statutes; by which ſaid Statutes and Oaths, we are utterly incapacitated to admit the ſaid Reverend Father in God to be our Preſident.

May it pleaſe your ſacred Majeſty, to give us Leave to lay this our Caſe, and our ſelves, with all Submiſſion, at your Royal Feet, moſt earneſtly beſeeching your ſacred Majeſty, to extend to us your humble Petitioners, that Grace and Tenderneſs which your Majeſty hath vouchſafed to all your other Subjects, and not to believe us guilty of any Obſtinacy or Undutifulneſs, Crimes which our Souls abhor; but to receive us into your Majeſty's Grace and Favour, the greateſt Temporal Bleſſing which our Hearts can wiſh.

And your humble Petitioners ſhall always (as in Duty bound) pray to Almighty God, to bleſs your Majeſty with a long and happy Reign over us, and afterwards to receive you to an immortal Crown of Glory.

A Copy of the Addreſs which the Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen College gave to the Lord Preſident of the Council, Sept. 6, 1687; and which was delivered his Majeſty at Bath.

WE your Majeſty's moſt humble, and moſt dutiful Subjects, the Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon. being deeply afflicted with the late Senſe of your Majeſty's heavy Diſpleaſure, grounded, as we in all Reaſon humbly preſume, upon a moſt unkind Miſrepreſentation of our Actions, in relation to an Election of a Preſident into your Majeſty's ſaid College; do humbly beg Leave to proſtrate our ſelves at your Royal Feet, offering all real Teſtimonies of Duty and Loyalty. And as we have never fail'd to evidence both our Principles and Practices to be truly loyal, in Obedience to the Commands of your Royal Brother, and your ſacred Self, in Matters of the like Nature; ſo whatſoever way your Majeſty ſhall be pleaſed to try our Readineſs to obey your Royal Pleaſure in any Inſtance that does not interfere with and violate our Conſciences, which your Majeſty is ſtudious to preſerve, we ſhall moſt gladly and effectually comply therewith. A ſtubborn and a groundleſs Reſiſtance of your Royal Will and Pleaſure, in the preſent, and all other Caſes, being that which our Souls eternally abhor, as becomes,

Your Majeſty's moſt Loyal and moſt Obedient Subjects, &c.

A Copy of a Letter directed to Dr. Bayly, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon. ſuppoſed to be writ by Mr. William Penn.

SIR,

UPON an Inquiry made of your preſent Fellows of Magdalen College, I am informed that you are a Perſon eminent in that learned Body, for your Temper, Prudence, and good Conduct in Affairs; and therefore very fit to be addreſſed to by me, who do not ſend you this to trapan you and your Brethren, but out of a paſſionate Concern for your Intereſt, to perſwade you either to a Compliance with his Majeſty's Letters Mandatory, or to think among your ſelves of ſome Expedient to prevent the Ruin of your College, and your ſelves:

And to offer it to his Majesty's Royal Consideration, that the Order for the Quo Warranto against the College may be recall'd, before it be too late; for you cannot be sensible how highly his Majesty is incens'd against you, neither can you give one Instance whether ever that Sort of Proceeding was judged against the Crown. Your Cause most think it very hard; but you are not in Prudence to rely on the Goodness of your Cause; but to do what the present Instant of Affairs will permit, and in Patience to expect a Season that will be more auspicious to Persons of your Character. Every Mechanick knows the Temper of his present Majesty, who never will receive a Baffle in any thing that he heartily espouseth; and that he doth this, yourselves have had too late and manifest an Instance, to doubt of his Zeal in the Affair.

Where there are so many Statutes to be observed, 'tis impossible but some must be broken at one time or another; and I am informed by the Learned of the Law, that a Failure in any one Point, forfeits your Grant, and lays your College open to the Royal Disposal.

I could give many other prudent Arguments that that might possibly incline you to a speedy Endeavour of putting an end to your Troubles, almost at any rate; but I shall suggest this one thing to you, that your fatal Overthrow would be a fair Beginning of so much aimed at Reformation, first of the University, then of the Church, and administer such an Opportunity to the Enemy, as may not perhaps occur in his Majesty's Reign.

Your affectionate Servant, &c.

The Answer to the afore-mentioned written Letter, dated October 3, 1687.

THE enclosed Paper is a Copy of a Letter, which, by the charitable Purpose of it, seems to be writ by you, who have been already so kind as to appear on our Behalf, and are reported by all that know you to employ much of your Time in doing good to Mankind, and using your Credit with his Majesty, to undeceive him in any wrong Impressions given him of his conscientious Subjects, and where his Justice and Goodness have been thereby abused, to reconcile the Persons injured to his Majesty's Favour, and secure them by it from Oppression and Prejudice. In this Confidence, I presume to make this Application to you, desiring your Excuse for not subscribing it: For if you did write the Letter, you know to whom it was directed; and if you did not, I hope your Charity will induce you to make such use of your Light you have by it, into the Affairs of our College, as to mediate for us with his Majesty, to be restored to his good Opinion, as the only thing which is desired by us, who are zealous, above all earthly Things, for his Felicity and Glory.

We are not conscious of ever giving his Majesty any just Offence, as it will appear with you, when you shall have perused the enclosed Papers; and have therefore no reason to fear the issuing out of a Quo Warranto against us. And though you are pleased to apprehend it, no Instance can be given of a Judgment against the Crown, upon the Process of that Writ: The Learned in the Law tell me, there is nothing more common, and whereof many Cases are reported by Kellaway, from Page 128, to Page 152, of his Book of Reports: And I think I have heard of a Case in Coke's ninth Report of the Abbess of Prata Marcella, which evinces the same; wherein also there is a Recital of Judgment given against Roger Mortimer for the King, upon a Quo Warranto in Court of Eyre, revers'd for Error in the King's-Bench. We hope, though we have many Statutes, it will be found that we have not wilfully transgress'd any of them; for all our present Troubles are derived to us from our Adherence to them, and our Fear to offend God, and blemish our Consciences, by departing from them.

His Majesty is intentionally righteous and just in all his Proceedings; he will never knowingly invade any Man's Property, as he was solemnly pleased to declare in his excellent Speech made in Council, on the 6th of February, 1684, at his Accession to the Government; which is again repeated in his gracious Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, of the 4th of April last past. It is upon his sacred, inviolable, and Royal Word and Promise, we must depend; not doubting but when his Majesty shall be rightly inform'd of our Case, in reference to both his Mandatory Letters to our College, his Anger towards us will be totally extinguished. Our Compliance to the first (which was Mr. Farmer's Election) would have involved us in the Guilt of manifest Perjury, and the wilful Violation of our Statutes: And we are confident his Majesty would never have granted the second on the Behalf of my Lord Bishop of Oxon. if he had known we were then possess'd of a President duly elected according to our Statutes, and confirmed by the Bishop of Winton. our Visitor (as the Statutes require) and if he is thereby invested with a Lay-Freehold under the Protection of his Majesty's Laws, which we cannot undo, or attempt to invade, without subjecting ourselves to Suits at Law, and doing an apparent Injury to the President, who doth not conceive himself to be affected with the Sentence of the Lords Commissioners (to which he was no Party) whereby his Place is declared void, without any Citations, Summons, or hearing of him.

I believe no Instance can be given of a Quo Warranto brought against a College or Hall in the Universities, from the first Foundation of them to this Day, or any other Ecclesiastical Corporation: For the Abuses of some Constitutions or Franchises in them, and the Misdemeanors of particular Persons, will not destroy a College: And if the Corporation of a College should be dissolv'd, the Revenues thereof will return to the Founder's Heirs, and not devolve to the Crown. And if our College must be the first Example of that kind, we shall be better justified by the strict Observation of our Statutes (at least to God and our own Consciences) than we could have been by a voluntary and deliberate Breach of them.

It was Loyalty and Conscience, that, in the Reign of King Charles I. made thirty-four of our forty Fellows, and most of the Scholars of our Foundation, rather quit their Places, and embrace Misery and Ruin, than to submit to the Government of the Usurpers of the Crown. And in Monmouth's Rebellion, the same Inducements prevailed on us to raise a Company at our own Charges, under the Command of one of our Fellows, to engage against him. And we hope that these, and many other the like Instances, which may be given of the Loyalty and Zeal of our Society to the Royal Family, will be received as Evidences thereof, and that our good and gracious Sovereign will not exclude us from that Liberty of Conſcience which he was pleas'd to extend to all his Subjects.

SIR, I am your moſt affectionate Servant.

Some QUERIES ſent to the Fellows of Magdalen College from Windſor, September 15, 1687.

Firſt, WHether, waving your Election of the Biſhop of Oxon. you cannot, without Violence to your Conſcience, ſignify to his Majeſty, or the above Reverend Biſhop, your Willingneſs to admit the Lord Biſhop Preſident of your College?

Secondly, Whether it be not more Intereſt to the Proteſtant Religion, to have a ſuſpected Popiſh Preſident, than to have all the Places of the College refilled, by the King's ſole Authority, with Popiſh Novices and Prieſts?

Thirdly, Whether you are not under a Miſtake, in thinking you ſhould render yourſelves more acceptable to the Proteſtant Nobility and Gentry, by your being turned out of your Fellowſhips by Injuſtice and Violence, as you conceive; or rather will not they be very cautious how they receive you into their Families, for fear of giving Offence?

Fourthly, Whether his Majeſty, as ſupream Viſitor of the Univerſity, cannot place or diſplace there ad libitum; or whether you have a right Notion of the Proceedings which have been practiſed againſt you? Whether you ſuppoſe that the Lords Commiſſioners proceeded againſt you as Lords Commiſſioners, or Viſitors? Which Notion, I am ſure, will overthrow ſome body's Plea and Exception againſt their Authority.

Fifthly, Whether you acted like Men ſkilled in Buſineſs, when you refuſed Mr. Penn's Mediation, who you may be ſure had good Authority for what he did? You could not but know that Man, and therefore muſt needs be fore-armed againſt any Wiles that could be offered to you. Whether an unanimous Subſcription for an Expedient (which indeed I think you ought not to refuſe in good Manners, ſince the King was pleaſed to propoſe it) preſented to his Majeſty by Mr. Penn, or another Favourite, would prevent the Deſtruction of the beſt Foundation in Europe?

Laſtly, Whether you be not drawn beyond your Knowledge by ſome hot-headed Adviſers, which never conſider the preſent State of his Majeſty's Court of Juſtice?

An Anſwer to ſeveral QUERIES to the Vice-Preſident and Fellows of Magdalen College in Oxon. ſent from Windſor, dated the 25th of September, 1687.

To the Firſt. WE cannot, without Violence to our Conſciences, and deliberate Perjury, admit any Perſon to be Preſident of our College, that is not elected thereunto, and qualified according to our Statutes; whereby the Biſhop of Oxon. is in no Sort capable; nor is there any Memorial in all our Regiſter of any Admiſſion of a Preſident without Election, but of one Dr. Nicholas Bond, whoſe Caſe was as followeth; viz. Upon the Death of Dr. Lawrence Humphreys, about the 30th or 32d of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, the Queen recommended Dr. Bond (being a Fellow of our College) to be elected Preſident. Many of the Fellows inclin'd in their Judgment to elect one Smith (another of the Fellows) and at their meeting for Election, the Contention was ſo great, that they roſe without Electing, and the Obſtinacy continued till the Place became laps'd: And there being no Proviſion in our Statutes to direct us what to do in ſuch a Caſe, the Queen, by her Letters Patents, conſtituted the ſaid Dr. Bond to be Preſident; and therein declared, That her Majeſty being inform'd that the Fellows had neglected to make Election of a Preſident in due time (as their Statutes required) and thoſe Statutes having made no Proviſion for ſuch an Omiſſion, ſhe, out of her Princely Care for the Place, and Indulgence for thoſe Perſons who had been guilty of that Neglect, did, by Advice of the Biſhop of Winton. their Viſitor, conſtitute Dr. Bond their Preſident; with Proteſtation nevertheleſs, that ſhe did not thereby pretend to ſuperſede their Statutes, or invade their Right of Election, which was thereby inveſted in them, but took this Courſe as the only means left to ſupply their Defect of Election.

To the Second. We muſt not make ourſelves guilty of deliberate Perjury, for any Conſiderations whatſoever, both in reſpect to our Conſciences, and that we may not, by ſuch a Breach upon our Statutes, expoſe our Conſtitution to a Forfeiture, nor do Evil that Good may come on it.

To the Third. We conceive we ſhall be more acceptable to all good Men, for acting honeſtly according to our Conſciences, than for voluntarily and unjuſtly departing from our Right.

To the Fourth. We pretend not to make it a Queſtion, whether his Majeſty, by his Authority Royal, as ſupream Viſitor, can grant a Commiſſion for Viſitation of any College that has a local Viſitor by their Statutes, and are not Royal Foundations: But we are adviſed, that no Commiſſion can be granted under the Great-Seal to Viſitors, to place and diſplace Members of Colleges (whoſe Places are Freeholds) ad libitum, or diſcretum; but they muſt proceed according to legal Diſcretion, that is, by the Laws and Statutes of the Land, and the local Statutes of the College: And Places concern'd for the Headſhips and Fellowſhips of Colleges, are temporal Poſſeſſions, and cannot be impeach'd by ſummary Proceedings. One Dr. Thomas Loveney, Preſident of our College, was deprived in Queen Elizabeth's Time, by the Biſhop of Winton. the legal Viſitor thereof, eſtabliſhed by Royal Authority, and he appeal'd to the Queen: But by the Advice of all the Judges, it was held, that the Queen, by her Authority, as ſupream Viſitor, could not meddle in it, but he muſt bring Weſtminſter-hall, becauſe Deprivation was a Cauſe meerly Temporal. The King has a great Authority Spiritual as well as Temporal; but no Commiſſioners can be authorized by the Crown to proceed in any Commiſſion under the Great Seal or otherwiſe, but according to Law; in Spiritual Cauſes by the Canon Law, in Temporal, by the other Laws and Statutes of the Land. And wherein the Proceedings in ſome Commiſſions are directed to be ſummariè & de plano, &c. thoſe Words are to be applied to ſhorten the Forms of Proceſs, and not for Matter of Judgment: For Magna Charta provides for our Spiritual Liberties, as well as our Temporal.

An

An Account of the Viſitation of St. Mary-Magdalen College in Oxon.

ON October 19, Mr. Atterbury, the King's Meſſenger, fixed a Citation on the College and Chapel-Doors, requiring the pretended Preſident and Fellows, and other Members of the College, to appear before the Lords Commiſſioners, Biſhop of Cheſter, Lord Chief Juſtice Wright, and Mr. Baron Jenner, in the Chapel, at Nine of the Clock on Friday Morning, November 21.

On Thurſday the Lords Commiſſioners came to Oxon. attended with three Troops of Horſe, which quarter there.

On Friday Morning at Nine they went into the Chapel: The Preſident and Fellows thinking they had deſigned to ſit in the Choir, made no Preparation of Seats in the outward Chapel: Upon which their Lordſhips adjourned to the Hall, where their Commiſſion was then read, which in general, was the ſame with the former: Theſe three being added to the other Lords Commiſſioners, and particularly impowered to viſit Magdalen College only.

This done, the Names of the Preſident and Fellows were called over, Dr. Hough being firſt called. All in Town appeared (except Dr. Fairfax) and Excuſes were made for the abſent.

Then a Speech was made by the Biſhop of Cheſter, and in it his Lordſhip was ſevere againſt Diſloyalty and Diſobedience. He urg'd, that the Church of England taught an unconditionate and unlimited Obedience: He ſpake of the King's gracious Promiſes to Archbiſhops and Biſhops, &c. which had deſerved Thanks on bended Knees, notwithſtanding the Oxon. Reaſons to the contrary, which they knew beſt who was the Author thereof. He told them, that it could not be expected, but that the King would give all Encouragement to thoſe of his own Religion, which could be done without Severity and Cruelty, which his Majeſty abhorred, and without injuring the Church of England, which was at preſent eſtabliſhed by Law: He told them, that this Corporation, as well as others, were the Creatures of the Crown; and that it was Inſolence in their local Statutes to ſpurn againſt their Maker.

That their Diſtempers had brought this Viſitation upon them, the Conſequences of which might be ill to the Church and Univerſities: That however they might eſcape in this World, theſe Sins were to be accounted for above their other Sins in the next. He exhorted them by the Bowels of Chriſt to conſider theſe Things: He told them, that the Eyes of the World were upon them, and they ought to take Care that their Practices might not influence their deluded Admirers. In ſhort, the whole Deſign of the Speech ſeemed to be Promiſes and Threats, to aim at the inducing them to a Compliance.

The Court was then adjourned till Two in the Afternoon.

In the Afternoon were called over the Names of the Demies, Chaplains, Clerks, Choriſters, and College Servants. The Preſident then interpoſed, deſiring Leave to ſpeak before they proceeded any further; which being granted, he told their Lordſhips, That,

Preſident. THE Time betwixt your Citation and Appearance was ſo ſhort, that the Society had not Time to adviſe with Counſel how to behave themſelves on this Occaſion; therefore deſired of your Lordſhips a Copy of the Commiſſion, and Time to conſider of it.

Biſh. Cheſter. 'Tis upon Record; you may have it above.

Preſ. Is it the ſame the other Lords Commiſſioners had?

Biſh. Ch. Yes, for the moſt Part it is.

Preſ. Then, my Lord, I do aſſure you (and will make Oath, if you pleaſe) that I have often endeavoured to get a Copy of it, and could not procure it.

L. C. J. Have you not heard it read, or will you hear it again?

Preſ. I am not capable of making a Judgment of it my ſelf; but it is poſſible there may be Errors and Defects in it, ſuch as the Society may make uſe of to their own Advantage; and I am confident, it is neither his Majeſty's Intention, nor your Lordſhip's, we ſhould be debarred from it.

A Copy was then denied.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, will you ſubmit to this Viſitation?

Preſ. My Lords, I do declare here in the Name of myſelf, and the greater Part of the Fellows, that we ſubmit to the Viſitation, as far as it is conſiſtent with the Laws of the Land, and the Statutes of the College, and no further. I deſire your Lordſhips that it may be recorded.

This was twice repeated.

L. C. J. You cannot imagine that we act contrary to the Laws of the Land; and as to the Statutes, the King has diſpenſed with them: Do you think we come here to act againſt Laws?

Preſ. It does not become me, my Lords, to ſay ſo; but I will be plain with your Lordſhips, I find that your Commiſſion gives you Authority to change and alter the Statutes, and make new ones as you think fit: Now, my Lords, we have an Oath, not only to obſerve theſe Statutes [laying his Hand on the Book] but to admit of no new ones, or Alterations in theſe: This muſt be my Behaviour here; I muſt admit of no Alteration from it, and by the Grace of God never will.

Biſh. Ch. Do you obſerve all theſe Statutes?

Preſ. Yes, my Lord, I hope we do.

Biſh. Ch. You have a Statute there for Maſs, why don't you read Maſs?

Preſ. My Lord, the Matter of this Oath is unlawful; and in ſuch a Caſe no Man is obliged to obſerve an Oath: Beſides, the Statute is taken away by the Laws of the Land.

Biſh. Ch. By what Law?

Dr. Stafford. By that which obliges to ſay Common-Prayer.

Biſh. Ch. What, the Act of Uniformity? I have often conſidered it, and don't remember one Word of Maſs in it.

Dr. Staff. But that obliges us to uſe the Liturgy of the Church of England in all Collegiate Churches and Chapels. And, I hope, my Lords, you do not imagine that we can ſay Common-Prayer and Maſs together.

Biſh. Ch. Do you allow that Act of Parliament can free you from the Obligation of a Statute?

Preſ. I do not ſay but that his Majeſty may alter our Statutes, nor do I know but a Parliament may do the ſame; I diſpute not their Power; only this, My Lord, I ſay, that I, who already have have taken an Oath to obſerve theſe Statutes as they now ſtand, and am ſworn not to admit of any Change or Alteration by any Authority whatſoever [And then turning to the Oath, where they were to obſerve thoſe Statutes and no other, according to the Literal and Grammatical Senſe, &c. and reading it to their Lordſhips] can obey none: But then thoſe who come after ſuch Limitations and Reſtrictions are made, are not obliged to obſerve them; and that, my Lords, is our Caſe, as to the Statutes of the Maſs.

Then the Decree of the 22d of June was read, declaring the Preſident's Election null and void.

Biſh. Ch. Did you know of this Commiſſion, &c.?

Preſ. Yes, my Lord, I have heard of it.

Biſh. Ch. Why then did you not obey it?

Preſ. I was never cited before their Lordſhips, nor was either heard by them in Perſon or Proxy; and I think I am the only Inſtance that is extant, of any Man that was ever deprived of a Freehold, wherein he was legally inveſted, and of which he was quietly poſſeſſed, without being ſummoned or heard.

Here Mention was made of Dr. Fairfax's Suſpenſion.

Preſ. My Lord, he is abſent, and if your Lordſhips give me leave, I have ſomewhat to ſay on his Account; your Lordſhips may pleaſe to obſerve in that Decree, that the Reaſon given why Dr. Fairfax was ſuſpended from his Fellowſhip, was, becauſe he had not obeyed his Majeſty's Command, in not electing Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the College: Now the Charge of Immorality given in againſt Mr. Farmer by the College-Delegates was made out, and their Lordſhips fully ſatisfied in it, on the 29th of July; notwithſtanding which, this Decree for Suſpenſion of Dr. Fairfax was fixed on the College-Gates, Auguſt 2d.

Biſh. Ch. The King hath for the moſt part recommended to the Preſidentſhip of this College.

Preſ. I am the twentieth Preſident, and only four of that Number have been recommended by the Kings and Queens of England, whereof three were every way qualified for that Office.

Biſh. Ch. Who were thoſe?

Preſ. My Lord, there was one in the Time of Edward VI, one in Queen Elizabeth's, and two in the late King's Reign.

Biſh. Ch. Was there never a one in King Charles the Firſt's Reign?

Preſ. Not that we know of.

Biſh. Ch. What think you of Dr. Oliver?

Preſ. It doth not appear to us, my Lord, that he ever had a Mandate.

Biſh. Ch. But it appears to us, and that I will bring you one to ſwear, that he had a Mandate.

Preſ. The Truth is, we have loſt the Regiſter of Dr. Oliver's Election and Admiſſion; the Regiſter betwixt the Year 1640, or thereabouts, and ſixty, being taken away by thoſe who were turned out of the College at that Time; but I believe, my Lord, we are able to prove that he was elected and admitted according to the Statute.

Biſh. Ch. Was Dr. Clark a Statutable Perſon?

Preſ. Yes, my Lord.

Biſh. Ch. Do not the Statutes require that he ſhould be in Orders? Was he in Orders?

Preſ. My Lord, the Statutes only require that he ſhould be Doctor of Divinity, Phyſick, Law, or Maſter of Arts. There is indeed one Statute, which ſays, The Preſident or Senior-Fellow ſhould read Prayers upon ſuch certain Days; from whence we conclude, that the Founder ſuppoſed we might have a Preſident that might not be in Orders; and in ſuch a Caſe he takes Care that the Senior-Fellow ſhould do his Duty.

Mr. Char. My Lord, will you be pleaſed to aſk Dr. Hough, whether Dr. Clark was married, or not?

Preſ. No, Sir, he was a Widower.

Then a Petition was read from the Society to his Majeſty, ſigned the 9th of April, and preſented the 10th to the Earl of Sunderland, by the Hands of Dr. Thomas Smith, and Captain Bagſhaw, wherein 'twas ſet forth, that having heard that his Majeſty would recommend Mr. Farmer to them, a Perſon uncapable, they did humbly beſeech him, either to leave them to a free Election, or to recommend a qualified Perſon.

Biſh. Ch. Was this the Petition?

Anſwer. Yes.

Biſh. Ch. Why then did you not ſtay for his Majeſty's Anſwer?

Preſ. My Lord, We did till the very laſt Day wherein we are limited to finiſh the Election; and my Lord Sunderland returned in the King's Name this Anſwer, That his Majeſty expected to be obeyed. Now, my Lord, we did no longer defer the Election, becauſe our Statutes enjoin us within ſuch a Time, and we ſtaid to the utmoſt: Nor could we chooſe the Perſon his Majeſty did recommend, knowing him to be ſo unfit, as we afterwards made him appear to be. The Society was therefore to proceed to the Election of another Perſon, and did agree on ſuch as you ſee.

Biſh. Ch. A Mandate always implies an Inhibition.

Preſ. My Lord, I cannot conceive that.

Biſh. Ch. But I can; and if you queſtion it, here's the King's Counſel ready to argue it.

Preſ. My Lord, whilſt the Perſon his Majeſty recommends appears duly qualified for the Place, it ſeems indeed to imply that we ſhould not proceed to the Election of another; but when he is known to be utterly uncapable, it ſeems to be the ſame as if there were no Letter at all.

Some other Things and Queſtions leſs material were put, and then the Court was adjourned to Saturday the 22d, at Nine in the Morning, to the Common Room, the Hall being, as they ſaid, too publick and incommodious.

SATURDAY, October 22, 1687.

As ſoon as their Lordſhips met in the Common Room, and the Society before them, the firſt Word was, Withdraw; and after a little Time, the Preſident was called in alone.

Biſh. Ch. DO you ſubmit to the Decree of the Commiſſioners, whereby the Election is declared Null?

Preſ. As to that Decree of the Lords above, it is a Nullity in it ſelf from the Beginning to the End, as it relates to me, I never having been cited, nor having ever appeared before them, either in Perſon or Proxy. Beſides, my Cauſe itſelf was never before them; their Lordſhips never enquiring or aſking one Queſtion concerning the Legality or

or Statutableneſs of my Election; for which Reaſons (as I am informed) that Decree was of no Validity againſt me, according to Methods in the Civil Law: But if it were, I am poſſeſſed of a Freehold, according to the Laws of England, and the Statutes of the Society, having been elected as unanimouſly, and with as much Formality as any one of my Predeceſſors, Preſidents of this College, and afterwards admitted by the Lord Biſhop of Winton. our Viſitor, as the Statutes of the College require; and therefore I cannot ſubmit to that Sentence, becauſe I think I cannot be deprived of my Freehold, but by Courſe of Law in Weſtminſter-Hall, or by being ſome ways incapacitated by the Founder's Statutes.

Biſh. Ch. Will you deliver up the Keys of the Preſident's Office, and Lodgings, to the Uſe of that Perſon whom the King has appointed your Preſident, as the Statutes require?

Pref. I will immediately do it, if that appears.

Biſh. Ch. Turn to that Part of the Preſident's Oath, where he promiſeth to ſubmit quietly if he ſhall be expelled, either for his own Fault, vel ob aliam Cauſam.

Pref. My Lord, that Statute only concerns me, if I am expelled for any Fault committed by me.

Biſh. Ch. Vel ob aliam Cauſam?

Pref. Then, my Lord, to be ſhort, here is no Cauſe at all.

Biſh. Ch. I aſk you again, Will you deliver up the Keys to the Preſident whom his Majeſty hath appointed?

Pref. There neither is, nor can be a Preſident ſo long as I live, and obey the Statutes of the College; and therefore I do not think fit to give up my Right, the Keys and Lodgings.

Biſh. Ch. We may demand them of you as Viſitors.

Pref. My Lords, we never deliver up the Keys to the Biſhop of Winton. and we own no greater Viſitorial Power than his; he hath the King's Authority. 'Tis by Virtue of a Royal Charter that we live together, and enjoy the Benefit of this Place, that empowered our Founder to give us a Rule, and obliged us by Oath to act ſuitable unto it: And the Biſhop of Winton. is hereby conſtituted to be our Viſitor; and all this we own from the King's Authority. The Biſhop of Winton. is our ordinary Viſitor; the King (I preſume) our extraordinary. But your Lordſhips know it hath been controverted, Whether the King can viſit a private College or not? The Authority of the Preſident is made by delivering up the Statute-Book, and Keys; and therefore I look upon them as an eſſential Badge of my Office.

But I humbly beg that I may aſk your Lordſhip one Queſtion.

Your Lordſhip is pleaſed to demand of me to give up theſe Things: Does your Lordſhip own my Right? For if not, What is it your Lordſhips would have me give up?

Biſh. Ch. No, we look upon you as an Intruder.

Pref. If I am an Intruder, the Biſhop of Winton. made me one; and I thank God for it. My Lords, the Time we have been allowed for this Appearance, has been very ſhort; but one Day betwixt it and the Citation. We are Men ignorant in the Laws, and I muſt confeſs it of my ſelf in particular, that I have endeavoured to give your Lordſhips a plain ſatisfactory Reply to ſuch Queſtions as your Lordſhips have been pleaſed to put to me. It is very probable, that through Ignorance and Inadvertency, I may expreſs my ſelf unwarily. If ſo, I beſeech your Lordſhip let no Advantage be taken of it; my Intention has been always to expreſs myſelf with all imaginable Duty to the King, and Reſpects to your Lordſhips. If I have done otherwiſe, I beſeech your Lordſhips Candour in a favourable Interpretation of what I ſaid, that nothing may be taken amiſs, where all was dutifully intended. And now, my Lords, thus far have I appeared before you as Judges; I now addreſs to you as Men of Honour, and Gentlemen; I beſeech you to repreſent me as dutiful to his Majeſty to the laſt Degree, as I always will be, ſo far as my Conſcience permits me, to the laſt Moment of my Life; and when I am diſpoſſeſſed here, I hope your Lordſhips will intercede that I may no longer lie under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, or be frown'd upon by my Prince, which is the greateſt Affliction can befal me.

Upon this the Preſident was ordered to withdraw, and after a little Time, he and the Fellows were called in again. Then the Biſhop repeated this Queſtion.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, Will you deliver up the Keys, and quiet Poſſeſſion of the Lodgings, to the Perſon whom his Majeſty has appointed Preſident? [To which no Anſwer was returned.] The Biſhop repeated a ſecond Time, Pref. My Lords, I have neither ſeen nor heard any thing to induce me to it.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, Will you deliver up the Keys, and quiet Poſſeſſion of the Lodgings, to the Perſon whom his Majeſty has appointed Preſident?

Whereupon the King's Proctor ſtood up and accuſed Dr. Hough of Contumacy. Then the Biſhop of Cheſter admoniſh'd him in theſe Words, three Times.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, I admoniſh you to depart peaceably out of the Lodgings, and to act no longer as Preſident, or pretended Preſident of this College.

Which being ſo done, they ſtruck his Name out of the Book, and admoniſhed the Fellows, and others of the Society, that they ſhould no longer ſubmit to his Authority.

SATURDAY, October 22, 1687.

OXON.

Dr. Fairfax's Caſe before the Commiſſioners.

AT the firſt Seſſions Dr. Fairfax purpoſely abſented himſelf; but Mr. Atterbury making Affidavit he was in Town, and that he adviſed him to appear, the Doctor accordingly did ſo the next Day. The Doctor being called in alone, and the Doors immediately ſhut, he begged of their Lordſhips ſome Company might be let in, becauſe, as all had obſerved, the Biſhop in his Speech, at the opening their Commiſſion, promiſed to tranſact every thing in the Face of the World. The Biſhop complained of the Crowd. The Doctor then deſired to fetch in but two or three, at length but one, and him at the Door, viz. the College-Steward, a Publick Notary.

Bar. Jen. You muſt not think to preſcribe to the Court.

Biſh.

Biſh. Ch. What's the Cauſe of your Contempt, in not appearing at either Seſſions Yeſterday?

Dr. Fairf. No Contempt, my Lord, but for theſe enſuing Reaſons. Firſt, I thought my Suſpenſion above had eaſed me of that Trouble. [The Doctor tendring a Copy of it, which was read by the Commiſſioners.] The Doctor inſiſted very much on the Reaſons their Lordſhips at White-Hall gave for this Suſpenſion; viz. for not obeying his Majeſty in electing Mr. Farmer, he tendring a Copy of Articles made good againſt him; and yet their Lordſhips ordered his Suſpenſion to be fix'd on the College-Gates five Days after that famous Hearing. Second Reaſon for his Non-appearance, That upon the firſt Day of the enſuing Term, he intended to meet the Lord Chief-Juſtice, at his Court of King's-Bench, for Relief againſt the Sentence, his Fellowſhip being a Freehold; witneſs Coveny's Caſe.

Biſh. Ch. You will find but little Favour there.

Dr. Fairf. My Lord, in Courts of Judicature, I only expect Juſtice [and turning to the Lord Chief Juſtice] I have my ſelf, ſaid he, been above four Years in all the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, and found excellent Juſtice, and I will ſee how it is now.

L. C. J. You ſhall have Juſtice.

Dr. Fairf. But your Lordſhip may ſave me the Labour of two Journies and my Charges, by improving your Lordſhip's deſerved Intereſt with my Lords Commiſſioners there, and get them now to take off my Suſpenſion: It is ill travelling at this time of Year; and beſides I am not rich.

Bar. Jen. To ſue in Weſtminſter-Hall requires a Purſe.

Dr. Fairf. My Lord, I did not ſay I was poor.

L. C. J. You muſt make your Supplication and Submiſſion to the King.

Dr. Fairf. My Lord, they tell me, that this Buſineſs lies in your Lordſhip's Court, and only there (beſides the Trouble I am otherwiſe to give your Lordſhip) what a Noiſe will the Cauſe make that Dr. Fairfax is ſuſpended for this very Reaſon? viz. not obeying the King, in electing Anthony Farmer, ſuch a Virtuoſo and under Correction, your Lordſhips are obliged to take off my Suſpenſion, to take off the Shame from that Body, whoſe Number, by a common Adjunct you your ſelves have lately increaſed.

Bar. Jen. We muſt not endure theſe Reflections on the Court.

Biſh. Ch. But will you ſubmit to this Viſitation?

Then Dr. Fairfax read a Paper, ſubſcribed by him, dated October the 22*d, in theſe Words:* "My "Lords, I have been ſummoned, and appear-"ed in this Cauſe before the Lords Eccleſiaſtical "at White-Hall, with whom your Lordſhips "are now joined in Commiſſion; and then gave "in my Anſwer: I have nothing to add to it, "and find no Reaſon to retract it."

HENRY FAIRFAX.

Biſh. Ch. Will you admit of the Biſhop of Oxford?

Dr. Fairf. I am ſuſpended.

Biſh. Ch. Have you done no Collegiate Act ſince your Suſpenſion?

Dr. Fairf. My Lord, I have gone into the Hall, and laid in my Chamber: I did not think their Lordſhips, when they ſuſpended me, ever intended that I ſhould not eat, drink, or ſleep.

Biſh. Ch. If your Suſpenſion was off, would you ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxford?

Dr. Fairf. Truly, my Lord, I cannot do it.

Then all the Fellows were called into Court.

The Preſident being withdrawn, the Biſhop put the Queſtion to all the Fellows; viz. Whether they would aſſiſt at the Admiſſion of the Biſhop of Oxford to be inſtalled Preſident, by Virtue of the King's Mandate? To which was anſwered by all the Fellows, to this Effect (except Dr. Pudſey, and Dr. Thomas Smith, who anſwered doubtfully, and Charnock, that he would aſſiſt) That they were under Oaths to the contrary, and therefore could not do it.

Then all were ordered to withdraw; and Dr. Pudſey being called in alone, they asked him concerning the Manner and Form of Inſtalling a Preſident; which he inſtructed them in.

The Court adjourn'd till two in the Afternoon.

AS ſoon as they met, a Letter from the Earl of Sunderland to Dr. Pudſey, was read, dated the 2d of Auguſt, ſignifying, that the Society in Anſwer to his Majeſty's Letter, commanding them to admit the Biſhop of Oxford, agreed unanimouſly in this Anſwer, That the Place was full. Their Lordſhips were pleaſed to aſk the Fellows ſingly, whether that was their Anſwer? And as many as were there, owned that it was.

During this Examination, the Preſident came into Court, and having waited until it was ended, and their Lordſhips, at a Pauſe, he made his Application to them: 'My Lords, if your Lord-'ſhips pleaſe to give me leave, I would gladly 'ſpeak a few Words.' They were all pleaſed to put off their Hats, and ſay he might. Whereupon he ſaid, 'My Lords, you were pleaſed 'this Morning, in Purſuance to a Decree of the 'Lords Commiſſioners at London, to deprive me 'of my Place of Preſident of this College, and 'to ſtrike my Name out of the Buttery-book: 'I do hereby proteſt againſt all your Proceedings, 'and againſt all that you have done, or here-'after ſhall do, in Prejudice of me and my 'Right, as illegal, unjuſt, and null; and there-'fore I appeal to my Sovereign Lord the King 'in his Courts of Juſtice.' Upon which, the Strangers and young Scholars in the Room gave a Hum; which ſo much incenſed their Lordſhips, that notwithſtanding all the Proteſtations the Preſident and Fellows could make, the Preſident in particular offering to purge himſelf by Oath, that he was no way acceſſary to, or abetting of it, and declared that he was heartily aſhamed and troubled at it; yet the Lord Chief Juſtice was not to be pacified, but charging it upon the Preſident, bound him in a Bond of 1000 l. and Security to the like Value, to make his Appearance, at the King's-bench Bar, the 12th of November. At the ſame time Baron Jenner took Occaſion to pun on the Preſident (Hough's) Name, ſaying to him, Sir, you muſt not think to huff us.

After this, was read the Anſwer the Fellows returned to his Majeſty upon his Command to them, upon the 4th of September, to elect the Biſhop of Oxford: The Anſwer was under the Hand of a Publick Notary, ſubſcribed by all the Fellows then preſent, except Mr. Charnock. The Biſhop of Cheſter was pleaſed to charge the Fellows lows of Unmannerlineſs, for ſending ſuch an Anſwer to their Prince after ſuch a Manner.

So they adjourn'd till Tueſday the 25th, at Eight in the Morning.

TUESDAY, October the 25th, 1687.

WHEN the Court met, Dr. Stafford offered a Paper in Anſwer to what was objected on Friday, that a Mandate implied an Inhibition; which their Lordſhips having peruſed, would not ſuffer to be read publickly, but aſked the Fellows whether they would ſign it, bidding them to do it at their Peril.

Then the Fellows had Leave to withdraw into the Hall, and not being ſatisfied that it was neceſſary to ſign a Plea, which their Lordſhips refuſed to have argued, they returned the Paper into the Court, ſubſcribed only by Dr. Fairfax and Dr. Stafford. The latter, after ſome Debate, deſired to withdraw, but Dr. Fairfax ſtood to it.

A Copy of Dr. Stafford's and Dr. Fairfax's Plea.

To the Right Reverend and Right Honourable his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for the viſiting St. Mary-Magdalen-College in Oxon.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

ON Friday laſt in the Afternoon you ſeem'd to inſiſt very much on this; viz. That his Majeſty in commanding the Fellows of the ſaid College to elect Mr. Farmer Preſident, did thereby inhibit them to elect any other Perſon whatſoever; which has not yet been made appear to be Law, either out of the Books of Civil, Canon or Common Law: Neither is it agreeable to Reaſon, that a Command to elect a Perſon uncapable, ſhould include in it an Obligation not to elect a Perſon capable, that being a kind of Contradiction in terminis. Yet this being granted, it cannot in the leaſt affect the ſaid Fellows, or invalidate their Election of Dr. Hough, notwithſtanding his Majeſty's Mandate in Behalf of Mr. Farmer, who being incapable of the Place, the Fellows cannot be ſaid to be guilty of any Diſobedience or Diſloyalty, in proceeding to the Election of another Perſon who was qualified according to the Statute, being forced to make an Election. For they are obliged by the Statutes of their College (when call'd together) to elect a Preſident, or any Officer, under Pain of perpetual Expulſion from the College, to meet and make an Election; which Puniſhment they incur ipſo facto, who either refuſe to meet when ſo call'd, or being met, to nominate or elect a Perſon into the Office void, as appears by the Statutes of the ſaid College: Titulo de numero Scholarium & electione Præſidentis. Now according to the Founder's Direction in the ſaid Statute, on the 15th of April laſt, the Fellows were called together by the Vice-Preſident to elect a Preſident in the Place of Dr. Clark deceaſed, and the Oath deſired to be taken before the Election was adminiſtred by the Vice-Preſident to them, whereby they are oblig'd to nominate and elect a Perſon that either is, or has been Fellow of Magdalen-College, or New-College in Oxon. Which Oath, when the Fellows had taken, it was not in their Power to elect Mr. Farmer; and yet they were then oblig'd to make an Election, under Pain of perpetual Amotion from the College; as appears by the forecited Statute. And it cannot be imagined, that his moſt ſacred Majeſty did expect that the Fellows ſhould be either perjur'd, or forfeit their Right to their Fellowſhips, rather than diſobey his Command; his Majeſty having moſt graciouſly declared, that Conſcience ought not to be forced, and that none of his Subjects ſhould be moleſted in the Enjoyment of their Rights and Privileges, &c. Now, that our Proceedings at the Election cannot lay any Imputation of our Diſobedience or Diſloyalty upon us, will thus be made appear. Either we had the Power to elect a Preſident, or we had not: If we had not, to what End or Purpoſe did his Majeſty command us to elect one? If we had, our Power was either reſtrain'd to Perſons ſo and ſo qualified, or we were at Liberty to chooſe whom we pleas'd: But we could not do the latter, as appears by our Statutes; and therefore we could not elect Mr. Farmer, being not inveſted with any Power to elect a Perſon unqualified. And if we had ſo done, our Election would have been null and void in itſelf, and the Perſon elected liable to be turn'd out by our Viſitor.

As for the Decree of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners (in Purſuance of which your Lordſhips have admoniſh'd Dr. Hough to recede from the Place of Preſident, and quietly to reſign the Keys of his Office, and have his Name ſtruck out of the College-Book) we humbly conceive it to be null and void in itſelf, to all Intents and Purpoſes, Dr. Hough being thereby depriv'd of Freehold for Life (of which he was duly and legally poſſeſs'd) without ever being called to defend his Right, or any Miſdemeanor objected againſt him. Wherefore we humbly beg leave of your Lordſhips, that Dr. Hough may be permitted to defend his Right and Title to the Preſidentſhip at Common-Law, before any other Perſon is put in Poſſeſſion of the Place.

THOMAS STAFFORD,
HEN. FAIRFAX.

After this, Mr. Wiggins, Chaplain to the Biſhop of Oxford, was called in, who delivered a Paper, impowering him, as Proxy, to be inſtalled Preſident for his Lord; which being read, together with the King's Mandate for the Biſhop of Oxon, the Queſtion was put to two or three of the Seniors, Whether they would aſſiſt at this Inſtalment? Which they refuſing, the Court adjourned to the Chapel, where the Biſhop of Cheſter put Mr. Wiggins into the Preſident's Stall, where he took the Oath which the Statutes enjoin the Preſident at his Admiſſion, and the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; the latter of which he was ordered to take upon his Knees, which he accordingly did. Then their Lordſhips conducted him to the Door of the Preſident's Lodgings, where knocking three times, and the Door not being opened, they returned to the common Room, and commiſſion'd Atterbury, and a Tipſtaff, to fetch a Smith to force it open; which was done, their Lordſhips being preſent all this while: None of the Fellows, except Mr. Charnock, aſſiſting, or being ſo much as preſent at either of theſe Performances. Then the Commiſſioners being returned to the common Room, Dr. Fairfax deſired Leave, at their Leiſures, to ſpeak; which was granted.

Dr. Fairf. My Lords, your Lordſhips have been doing of what I can by no Means conſent to.

Biſh. Ch. You are big to be delivered of your own Deſtruction. Will you ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxon, as now inſtalled Preſident, by Virtue of the King's Mandate?

Dr. Fairf. I will not; I cannot; becauſe we have a ſtatutable and legal Preſident already.

Then the ſame Queſtion was put to the Society, which being a Buſineſs of Moment, they deſired Time till the Afternoon to conſider it.

Then the Court adjourned till Three o'Clock; at which Time the Anſwer was given in by the Society (except Dr. Fairfax, who had given his in the Morning) That whereas his Majeſty hath been pleaſed, by his Royal Authority, to cauſe the Right Reverend Father in God Samuel Biſhop of Oxon, to be inſtalled Preſident; we whoſe Names are hereunto ſubſcribed, do ſubmit, as far as is lawful and agreeable to the Statutes of the College, and no way prejudicial to the Right and Title of Dr. Hough.

This Anſwer was accepted, except the laſt Clauſe, which the Lord Chief Juſtice, and Baron Jenner declared, as Judges, to be inſignificant, ſince nothing they could do, could any way invalidate Dr. Hough's Title; but left them ſtill at Liberty to be Witneſſes for him, or any other way be ſerviceable to him in the Recovery of his Right. Upon this Aſſurance, the Society was prevailed with to leave out the laſt Clauſe.

Then all were commanded to withdraw: And Dr. Fairfax being called in, the Biſhop aſked him what he meant by his Paper above-mentioned, dated October the 22d, and whether he did ſubmit to the Authority of the Court?

Dr. Fairf. As I have denied it above, ſo I do here.

Then the Court was opened, and the Doctor complained before them all, that he was twice cloſeted; and being aſked, Whether he would obey the Court, and Biſhop of Oxon? he plainly denied both. Upon which the Buttery-Book was called for, and the Biſhop of Cheſter commanded his Name to be ſtruck out, and this Sentence paſſed; viz.

Forasmuch as you have denied the Authority of the Court, and refuſed to obey the Biſhop of Oxon, whom the King hath made your Preſident, and taken Commons after your Suſpenſion; We declare your Place void, and command you quietly to depart the College within fourteen Days.

Dr. Fairf. My Lords, all the huge Calamities that have befallen me, are on the ſole Account of a religious and conſcientious Obſervation of our pious Founder's Statutes, whoſe Bread I have eaten almoſt theſe thirty Years.

L. C. J. No Speeches: Beſides, if you have any Papers, inſtead of reading them, leave them in the Court.

Then, with much ado, the Doctor prevailed with them to let him read his Proteſtation, which he left in the Court.

I Henry Fairfax, Fellow of St. Mary-Magdalen-College, do under my former Anſwer heretofore made, and to the Intent it may appear that I have not conſented, nor agreed to any thing done againſt me, and to my Prejudice, I proteſt that your Sentence given here againſt me, is Lex nulla, and ſo far as it ſhall appear to be aliqua; I do ſay it is iniqua & injuſta, and that therefore I do from it, as iniqua & injuſta, appeal to our Sovereign Lord the King, in his Courts of Juſtice, as the Laws, Statutes and Ordinances of the Land will permit in that Behalf.

Subſcribed,

October 25th, 1687. HENRY FAIRFAX.

This Proteſtation was over-ruled, and a Copy of the Sentence denied, though moſt earneſtly deſired at the Inſtance of Dr. Hedges, and Mr. Vice-Chancellor, two Days after.

At the Cloſe of the Seſſions, their Lordſhips declared, that they were very well ſatisfied with the Anſwer the Society had given them; and though before they had laid a Libel to their Charge, yet that Night they declared, they had met with nothing from them but Civility, and that they ſhould receive the ſame from them; that they had ſhewn themſelves Men of excellent Tempers this Day and before; and that they would repreſent it faithfully Above to their Advantage, and that if it any way lay in their Power to ſerve them, they ſhould be very ready to do it.

Then they adjourned till Wedneſday Morning, ordering them to bring in their Anſwer to the following Queſtions.

I. What Gifts and Proviſions have you for Entertainment of Strangers?

II. What is the Value of it?

III. How is it applied?

IV. And where is the Place of Entertainment?

WEDNESDAY, October 26th, 1687.

IN the Morning they made it appear to their Lordſhips very ſatisfactorily, that they were obliged to give in Charity-Money, 2 l. 3 s. 4 d. and that beſides that, they gave, communibus annis, almoſt 100 l. as appeared by a Paper they then delivered in. Upon this their Lordſhips were pleaſed to expatiate upon their generous Bounty and Liberality, ſaying the Complaint of this Account was groundleſs, and that it would induce the King to a better Belief of them in all other Matters.

Then a Petition of Dr. Rogers, late Organiſt, was given in, deſiring to be reſtored, which was read; but ſeveral Miſdemeanors being proved againſt him, it was thrown out, and he adviſed to reſt ſatisfied with 30 l. per Ann. which the College had beſtowed on him, when they turn'd him out of his Place.

THURSDAY, October 27th, 1687.

THIS Morning they received a Liſt of Leaſes, &c. which had been renew'd two Years laſt paſt. Mr. Charnock, the new Convert, aſked their Lordſhips, whether thoſe Leaſes ſtood good, which had been ſealed ſince Dr. Hough's Election? The Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, Yes; for Corporations always ſtick by their Seals. Then their Lordſhips peruſed the College-Regiſters, and finding nothing in them to object againſt, they were returned, and the Court adjourned till the Afternoon. At which Time their Lordſhips told them, That having received no Expreſs from Above, as they they expected, they would adjourn till Friday at Eight in the Morning.

FRIDAY, October 28*th*, 1687.

THE Commiſſioners being ſeated, all were commanded to withdraw: Then only the Fellows were called in, and the Biſhop of Cheſter ſaid, they had repreſented them fairly to the King, but his Majeſty expected ſome farther Submiſſion, which they adviſed them to make, by acknowledging their Contempt to his ſacred Majeſty in Perſon, and to his Letters; and that they ſhould promiſe to behave themſelves Loyal for the future; and that they ſhould ſome Ways own the Proceeding and Legality of the Court, and implore his Majeſty's Pardon, and lay themſelves at his Feet.

The Fellows making a little Pauſe, the Biſhop of Cheſter told them, they might Word it themſelves; or, if they thought fit, Mr. Tucker ſhould aſſiſt them in a Form. Then all the Fellows withdrew into the Hall, and drew up the following Anſwer.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

WE have endeavoured in all our Actions, to expreſs our Duty in all Humility to his Majeſty; and being conſcious to our ſelves, that in the whole Conduct in the Buſineſs before your Lordſhips, we have done nothing but what our Oaths and Statutes indiſpenſably oblige us to, we cannot make any Declaration, whereby we acknowledge that we have done any thing amiſs, having acted according to the Principles of Loyalty and Obedience, ſo far as we could, without doing Violence to our Conſciences, or Prejudice to our Rights (one of which we humbly conceive the Electing a Preſident to be) from which we are ſworn upon no Account whatſoever to depart. We therefore humbly beg your Lordſhip to repreſent this favourably, with our utmoſt Duty to his Majeſty, whom God grant long and happily to reign.

Upon their Lordſhips peruſing of the Anſwer, they expreſſed their Diſlike of it, ſaying, It did not come up to the Addreſs ſent to his Majeſty at Bath, which was read. To this it was replied, That they hoped their Behaviour ſince had been every way anſwerable to what they had therein promiſed. Then their Lordſhips ſaid, That it did not come up to what they delivered in on Tueſday.

Dr. Bayly. My Lords, we have acted conformable to ourſelves; and truly, my Lords, I cannot poſſibly confeſs any Crime.

Biſh. Ch. We do not expect of you to confeſs any capital Crime, only to make ſome acknowledgment.

Mr. Fulham. My Lord, we were ordered to addreſs ourſelves, as having acted in Contempt of his Majeſty's Authority, which, my Lord, I look upon as ſo great a Crime, that on no Account I would be guilty of it. My Lord, we have endeavoured to obey his Majeſty to the utmoſt of our Power, and ſeeing your Lordſhips were pleaſed to accept our Anſwer on Tueſday, I humbly conceive your Lordſhip's Honour is engaged, that nothing further be required of us.

Biſh. Ch. You are a very forward Speaker, and abound in your own Senſe.

Mr. Fulh. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will give me leave to ſpeak, when our Fortunes are ſo conſiderably at Stake.——

Then Dr. Bayly deſired of their Lordſhips to give him Leave to explain what he meant by the Word ſubmit, in his Anſwer on Tueſday; becauſe (ſaith he) I hear your Lordſhips underſtood more than was meant, and leaſt your Lordſhips ſhould go away under a Miſtake, by the Word ſubmit, in the former Anſwer, I did not intend any future Obedience to the Biſhop of Oxford; but meant it in Reference to the King's Authority, inaſmuch as I did not oppoſe or reſiſt the Biſhop of Oxford's Inſtalment.

Upon this, a freſh Queſtion was put to the Fellows, Whether they would obey the Biſhop of Oxford, as their Preſident, in licitis & honeſtis? To which all, except one or two, anſwered, They could not obey the Biſhop of Oxford as their Preſident.

Then Mr. Fulham was particularly aſked the Queſtion.

Mr. Fulh. Dr. Hough being duly elected and admitted Preſident, doth thereby obtain a Right, which I am not ſatisfied he hath any Way forfeited, and therefore can obey no other Perſon as Preſident.

Biſh. Ch. Will you obey the Biſhop of Oxford as in Poſſeſſion?

Mr. Fulh. I cannot, becauſe the Biſhop hath not lawful Poſſeſſion.

Then he was aſked, wherein?

Mr. Fulh. He had not Poſſeſſion in due Form of Law, nor by proper Officers. I am informed that the proper Officers to give Poſſeſſion of a Freehold, is the Sheriff with a Poſſe Comitatus.

L. C. J. Pray, who's the beſt Lawyer, you or I? Your Oxford Law is no better than your Oxford Divinity. If you have a Mind to a Poſſe Comitatus, you may have one ſoon enough.

Mr. Fulh. My Lords, I intend nothing but Reſpect to your Lordſhips, and have endeavoured to ſpeak and behave my ſelf with due Reverence; and I hope your Lordſhips will put a favourable Conſtruction on what I ſaid.

Then all were commanded to whithdraw, and the Buttery-Book was called for, and after that, Mr. Fulham was ſent for in; and by the Biſhop of Cheſter ſuſpended as followeth.

Biſh. Ch. Mr. George Fulham, We have thought fit to ſuſpend you from the Profits of your Fellowſhip during his Majeſty's Pleaſure, for your Contempt and opprobious Language.

Then they adjourned till Wedneſday the 16th of November, ordering the abſent Fellows to be ſent for Home againſt that Time. So they immediately went for London.

WEDNESDAY, November 16*th*, 1687. at Nine in the Morning.

THE Lords Commiſſioners being ſat, the firſt Thing they did, ſent for the Buttery-Book; then called for Mr. Joyner and Mr. Allibone, and entred them actual Fellows: The former in the Room of Dr. Fairfax, whom they had expelled; the latter in Place of Mr. Ludford, lately deceaſed: All Oaths being diſpenſed with, beſides that of a Fellow. That done, the Fellows being called, and the Reaſons given in for thoſe that were abſent, the Biſhop of Cheſter ſpoke a Speech to this effect.

GENTLEMEN,

YOUR many Contempts and wilful Disobedience have occasioned this Visitation, which will end at last in your Ruin. This Society of yours has been long exercised in the Methods of Quarrelling; has always been troubled with factious Spirits, and testy Mutineers, ever since the Restoration of the late King: You have encourag'd Quarrels among yourselves; Quarrels between yourselves and President; Quarrels, at length, between yourselves and Visitor. For I have often heard your late Visitor complain, that this Society was ever stocked with an unquiet and turbulent Generation. By these Steps, from quarrelling with the President and Visitor, you have at last advanced to the highest Pitch of Insolence, to quarrel with your Prince, and affront his Sacred Majesty. I endeavour'd before, at the Opening our Commission, to make you sensible of the Scandal that your Disobedience will bring upon your Religion; how much you Stain and Dishonour your liberal and ingenuous Education in this Society.

You cannot but know his Majesty is your supream Ordinary. You cannot but have read in Bracton, who was twenty Years Lord Chief Justice under King Henry III. Nemo presumat de factis ejus disquirere, ne dum contra factum ejus venire: All Disobedience emplies Pride: For no Man can disobey his Governor, but he who thinks himself wiser. The Reputation and Honour of a Prince at home, and his Respect abroad, are chief Standards of a Government. But these Pillars, as much as in you lies, you have endeavour'd to shake. And unless his Majesty's Honour and Right be vindicated by us, He can neither be feared at home nor observed abroad. Your Punishment must be as publick as your Crime. It cannot be conceived but his Majesty, in Justice, in Honour, in Clemency, and in his Royal Tenderness, could have proceeded otherways than he has done. On the first of April it was published that Dr. Clark was dead: On the Eleventh a Mandamus was directed to you, for choosing Mr. Farmer. On the Ninth you presented a Petition to the Lord President; wherein you laid yourselves prostrate at his Majesty's Feet, representing to him the Incapacity of Mr. Farmer, desiring the Benefits of his gracious Declaration for preserving your Rights and Properties, and beseeching him to nominate another Person qualified according to your Statutes, in the Election of whom you would shew your ready Obedience. So said and so done, Gentlemen, had been very well.

But immediatily after the Delivery of the Petition, you, not waiting his Majesty's Answer, proceeded on April the 15th to an Election of Dr. Hough: So that by this Act, which was plainly contrary to his Majesty's Authority, whose Mandate did certainly imply an Inhibition, you directly confronted your former Promises of ready Obedience, and were resolved to give the King nothing but good Words: When you had done this, as Men of ill Designs are always in haste, for a Confirmation of it, you immediately went and surprized your Visitor, and by that means persuaded him to confirm Dr. Hough, that very Day he received an Order from the Lord President to the contrary.

Upon this News the King was much amazed, and required an Account of your Proceedings; therefore the Lords Commissioners issued out a Citation; and after hearing the Plea, upon mature Consultation with the Learned of both Laws, judged the pretended Election of Dr. Hough to be void and null, and him to be removed, by an Instrument dated the which was affixed on the Gate. After this a Mandate was sent on the to you to elect the Bishop of Oxon. Upon which Terms his Majesty was graciously pleased to dispense with your Disobedience hitherto. But this being disobeyed, his Majesty in Person, on the 4th of September, sent for you to Christ-Church, and required you immediately to elect the Bishop of Oxon, President. You went strait to the Chapel, a Place one would think should have inspired more Devotion and Awe of his Sacred Majesty in you; and there contemptuously subscribed and signed a Paper, directly thwarting his Majesty's Command. The Ground of your Disobedience you pretend that you could not elect him, whereas you could not but know by a written Mandate, that lay by you, that Admission would have satisfied his Majesty. Conscience, the stale Topick of Rebellion, was here brought to vindicate your petulent and contumacious Behaviour. You pretended that you were obliged by Oaths, and I am sorry that at the same Time you forgot that of Allegiance. And indeed there is not a greater Sign of Hypocrisy, than partial Obedience. Had you any Respect to the Father of your Country, and your Mother the Church, you would have sacrificed your pretended Scruples, as a Peace-Offering to the King. The best of us, I am sure, have Reason to beg God and the King's Pardon. But you, as if his Majesty reigned by Courtesy, would have a King under you, but none over you. You urged the Observance of your Statutes, of which, as it hath appeared, you have not been so constant Observers; when your own Humour prompts you to a Dispensation, then you can readily embrace it; witness but that of being served per Masculos, by which great Scandals have come to this Society by reason of Bastards.

But when the King interposed, in whose Power alone it is to dispense with them, then you presently act according to such Methods as these. None of these Pretences will ease you with wise and sober Men.

This was the only Opposition his Majesty in his Progress receiv'd: Wherever his Sacred Majesty came, he worked a miraculous Conversion, except in Oxford; and so far satisfied every one with the Equity of his Proceedings, that none went away discontented from his Presence, unless it was for this Reason, that they could not enjoy it any longer.

October the 20th, We came down, and upon opening our Commission, I took care to represent to you the Heinousness of your Offence, and to persuade you to a serious Repentance; but all in vain.

For on Saturday Morning we required you to admit and instal the Bishop of Oxford; which all, except three, refused: In the Afternoon Dr. Hough having been deprived, and by us commanded to depart the College, came unto us without any leave, but not without great Attendance; Circumstances, I think, much unbefitting a Man pronounc'd expelled; and there entered a Protestation against all that we had done, or hereafter should do, as illegal, unjust and null; which he delivered not in Writing, but by Word of Mouth; a Thing repugnant to the Nature of all Appeals: And which was worse, without the usual Salvo to his Majesty's supream Power. When he had spoken it, there followed such a tumultuous, sedetious and insolent HUM, which if you yourselves had not applauded, or at least consented to, it was impossible but that you would have discovered some of those Mutineers. However, since his Carriage and Language gave occasion to it, 'twas thought fit that he only should be obnoxious; and accordingly he was bound over.

On Tueſday we our ſelves cauſed the Biſhop of Oxon to be inſtalled by his Proxy; after which we propoſed to you, whether being now inſtalled, you would ſubmit to him in licitis & honeſtis? To which you gave an Anſwer under your Hands in the Affirmative. You then alſo deſired of us to repreſent your Caſe favourably to his Majeſty, giving all Aſſurance of your Loyalty and Obedience. But this Aſſurance of Submiſſion laſted not long; for on Thurſday, being required of us to ſubſcribe ſuch a Submiſſion to his Majeſty as we thought agreeable to our Duty, you required Time to conſult of it; and after Deliberation, ſigned ſuch a Paper, which ſeemed rather to be a Proteſtation againſt your former Submiſſion, than an Acknowledgement of your Crime. Upon this we might juſtly then have proceeded to an Expulſion: But we thought fit, in Compaſſion to you, to take a Journey to London, and acquaint his Majeſty with your Diſobedience and ungrateful Behaviour. His Majeſty was extremely amazed that his Clemency ſhould be deſpiſed; but yet, to your Comforts be it ſpoken, his Patience and Goodneſs extends as far as your Provocations can: But if you ſtill perſiſt in your Obſtinacy, thoſe that are too tall to ſtand, and too ſtubborn to bend, deſerve to be broken. And now, I think, I have ſaid enough to let you know, that the Fig-leaves you have ſo artificially ſtitched together, are not ſufficient to cover your Nakedneſs. I wiſh to God you had the ſame Tenderneſs for your Concern, as his Majeſty's Commiſſioners have for you. But if you ſtill perſiſt to oppoſe the Royal Power of the King, We, who are come to vindicate the Right and Honour of his Majeſty, reſolve to diſcharge our Conſciences and Duties to God and the King, without any Reſpect of Popularity; that's but the Paradiſe of Fools, and Scorn of wiſe Men: And therefore, as for us, we have no more regard to Peoples Diſlike, than what they dream. By reaſon therefore of your late hypocritical Submiſſion, the Commiſſioners have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration, to draw up an Inſtrument, which ſhall be read to you, to which, if you ſhall immediately ſubſcribe, before you leave the Room, we ſhall leave you to his Majeſty's Pardon. And this we expect from you all, except Dr. Tho. Smith, and Mr. Charnock, with whoſe Behaviour the King is ſo well ſatisfied, that he expects no more from them.

Then all the Fellows being called in, their Lordſhips tendered a Form of Submiſſion to them to be ſigned. Which take as followeth:

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

The humble Petition and Submiſſion of the Fellows of St. Mary-Magdalen-College in the Univerſity of Oxon, whoſe Names are ſubſcribed.

WE Your Majeſty's moſt humble Petitioners, have a deep Senſe of being juſtly fallen under your Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, for our Diſobedience and Contempt to your Majeſty, and to the Authority of your Majeſty's Commiſſioners and Viſitors: We do in all Humility proſtrate our ſelves at your Majeſty's Feet, humbly begging Your Pardon for our ſaid Offences, and promiſing that we will for the future behave ourſelves more dutifully; and, as a Teſtimony thereof, we do acknowledge the Authority of your Majeſty's ſaid Viſitors, and the Juſtice of their Proceedings; and we do declare our entire Submiſſion to the Lord Biſhop of Oxon, as our Preſident.

To which Paper all (except Dr. Thomas Smith and Mr. Charnock) refuſed to ſubſcribe.

Dr. Aldworth, as Vice-Preſident, was firſt called in to ſign the Paper which had been read to all the Fellows.

Vice-Pref. My Lords, we deſire Time to conſider of it, and to give our Anſwer in Writing.

Biſh. Ch. No, you muſt every one ſign, or refuſe, as you are called.

Bar. Jenn. There is no Anſwer to be given, but ay or no.

They all moved again for Time, but it was refuſed.

Vice-Pref. My Lords, this is the firſt Time of my Appearance before your Lordſhips, ſince your ſitting here; and therefore I pray to be heard.

My Lords, I am as ready to comply with the King's Pleaſure as any Man living; neither do I know, that we have ever in this Place been diſobedient to the King, where it was in our Power to obey his Commands. Our Founder in the firſt Clauſe of the Oath we take at this Election, has provided, that no one ſhall be Preſident of his College, but who was bred in it, or in the College where he himſelf was bred. Now for us who have elected Dr. Hough, a Perſon qualified according to our Statutes, who has been inſtalled, ſworn, confirmed, and approved of in all the Ways and Manner preſcribed in the Statutes for us; my Lords, to accept and admit of a Stranger, and a Foreigner in his Place, is, to the beſt of my Underſtanding, a giving up the Rights of the College to other Uſes than the Founder deſigned it.

Here he was interrupted.

Biſh. Ch. Your Statutes are over-ruled by the King's Authority.

Vice-Pref. My Lords, your Lordſhips ſit here as the Viſitors; which implies, there are certain Laws and Statutes we are bid to obſerve, and by which we are to be governed; and if it ſhall appear to your Lordſhips, that we have acted conformably to theſe Statutes, I hope we ſhall neither incur the King's Diſpleaſure nor your Lordſhips. The whole Tenour of our Statutes run, That we ſhould inviolably maintain our Rights, and obſerve the Rules of our Founder; he has laid his Curſe upon us if we vary from them. [Here he repeated the Words of the Founder, Ordinamus ſub pœnâ Anathematis, & indignationis Omnipotentis Dei, &c. Item, ſub interminatione Divini Judicis interdicimus.]

Biſh. Ch. Are you not to obey the King as well as the Founder's Statutes?

Vice-Pref. My Lord, I ever did obey the King, and ever will: Our Statutes, which we are ſworn to obſerve, are confirmed by ſeveral Kings and Queens before and ſince the Reformation, and as we keep them, are agreeable to the King's Laws both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil; and ſo long as we live up to them, we obey the King.

Biſh. Ch. Your Statutes were never confirmed by his preſent Majeſty.

Dr. John Smith. My Lord, neither have they been repealed by his Majeſty; and what is not repealed is confirmed.

Then their Lordſhips preſſing to ſign or refuſe, the Vice-Preſident ſaid:

Vice-Pref. My Lords, I'll then deal plainly, in regard to my Oath and the Statutes, to the Right of all our Succeſſors and of Dr. Hough, whom I believe to have been as fairly elected, and as legally poſſeſſed as ever any ſince the Foundation of the College: I cannot ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxon as Preſident.

So he was ordered to withdraw.

Then the ſame Queſtion was put to all the other Fellows ſingly, who all refuſed to ſign the Submiſſion, except Dr. Tho. Smith and Mr. Char-

Charnock, who were not preſs'd, for the Reaſon above.

Mr. Thompſon being called in to ſign the Paper, ſaid:

Mr. Thompſon. My Lords, I have been always obedient to his Majeſty's Commands; I was not concerned in the Election of Dr. Hough; I voted for Mr. Farmer, and am ready to ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxon.

Biſh. Ch. Did you not put your Hand to this Petition? Is not this your Hand?—Read the Petition—[It was read]—In which the Fellows deſired his Majeſty, to nominate any qualified Perſon, and to retract his Mandate granted for Mr. Farmer.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I conceive the Petition not to be diſobedient. We had not yet received the Mandate; as ſoon as it came, I humbled my ſelf.

Bar. Jen. Then why can't you humble your ſelf again; is there any Hurt in it?

Mr. Thompſon. This Paper requires me to own my Diſobedience to his Majeſty: I am not conſcious of any, and therefore I cannot ſubſcribe.

After a ſhort Time, all who refuſed to ſign the Submiſſion were called in, and by Sentence of their Lordſhips, expelled the College for Contempt, &c. (except as before.) After Sentence, all that were expelled ſpoke to this Effect: 'My 'Lords, we profeſs all Duty to the King, and 'Reſpect to your Lordſhips, but muſt beg leave 'to declare; That we think our ſelves injured in 'your Lordſhips Proceedings, and therefore pro-'teſt againſt them, and ſhall uſe all juſt and legal 'Ways of being relieved.'

After a ſhort Time, an Inſtrument was fixed on the College-Gates, in theſe Words:

By his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, &c. particularly authorized and impowered to viſit St. Mary-Magdalen-College in the Univerſity of Oxon.

WHereas, in our Viſitation of the ſaid College, it appeareth unto us, That Doctor Charles Aldworth, Dr. Alexander Pudſey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Thomas Bailey, Dr. Thomas Stafford, Mr. Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hamond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobſon, Mr. James Bailey, Mr John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagſhaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joſeph Harwar, Mr. Thomas Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyſton, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. John Yerbury, Mr. Robert Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, Fellows of the ſame College, have been ſeverally guilty of Diſobedience to his Majeſty's Commands, and obſtinately contemned his Royal Authority, and do ſtill perſiſt in the ſame: We have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration thereof, to Declare, Pronounce, and Decree, That the ſaid Dr. Charles Aldworth, &c. and every of them, be deprived and expelled from their reſpective Fellowſhips. And we do by this our Sentence and Decree, Deprive and Expel them of and from their ſaid ſeveral and reſpective Fellowſhips.

Given under our Seal, this 16*th Day of* November, 1687.

WHITE-HALL, December 10, 1687.

HIS Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and for viſiting all Cathedral and Collegiate Churches and Colleges, &c. met this Day; and taking into their Conſideration all that had paſſed in the Buſineſs of St. Mary-Magdalen-College in Oxford, and the contemptuous and diſobedient Behaviour of Dr. John Hough, and ſeveral of the Fellows of that College throughout the whole Proceeding, their Lordſhips declared, decreed, and pronounced, That Dr. Hough, Dr. Charles Aldworth, Dr. Henry Fairfax, Dr. Alexander Pudſey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Thomas Bailey, Dr. Thomas Stafford, Mr. Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hamond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobſon, Mr. James Bailey, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagſhaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joſeph Harwar, Mr. Thomas Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyſton, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. Edward Yerbury, Mr. Henry Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, ſhould be uncapable of receiving, or being admitted to any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, Benefice, or Promotion: And ſuch of them who are not yet in Holy Orders, were adjudged uncapable of receiving or being admitted into the ſame. All Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Officers and Miniſters within the Kingdom of England, being required to take Notice of the ſaid Sentence and Decree, and to yield Obedience thereunto.

THE 17th of January, 1687, being the Day that the thirty Demies of Magdalen-College were, by Summons from the Biſhop of Oxen, the now Preſident commanded to appear before him; and none appearing, Mr. Charnock the new Vice-Preſident, called for the Buttery-book, and ſtruck out the Names of Mr. Holt. Mr. Adams Senior, Mr. Veſey, and Mr. Brabourn Maſters of Art; Mr. Hyde, Mr. Woodward, Mr. Fulham, Mr. Watkins, Mr. Stacy, Mr. Sherwin, and Mr. Kenton, Batchelors of Art; Mr. Croſs, Mr. Buſh, and Mr. Wells, Under-Graduates, Which Fourteen were then reſident in the Univerſity, and three more, who eſcaped Expulſion at that time.

Afterwards, when the King had certain Intelligence of the Prince of Orange's Deſign, viz. October 12, 1688, he ordered the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Viſitor of Magdalen-College, to ſettle that Society regularly and ſtatutably; accordingly, October 16, the Biſhop of Wincheſter cauſed a Citation to be fixed on the Gate of the College, to recal Dr. Hough, and the former Fellows of this Society, by the Second of November following; but an Account coming that Poſt of the Prince of Orange's Fleet being diſabled by a Storm, the Biſhop was recalled to London, and the Reſtoration of the College put off: But when it appeared that the Fleet was ready to ſail again, then the Buſineſs of the College was reſumed, and effected November 24.

INTRAN.

Philip Standsfield, eldest lawful Son to Umquhile Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, Prisoner within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, Indited and Accused at the Instance of Sir John Dalrymple Younger of Stair, his Majesty's Advocate for his Highness's Interest: That where notwithstanding by the Law of God, the Common Law, Law of Nations, Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and constant Practice thereof, the expressing of malicious and seditious Words to the Disdain of his Sacred Majesty's Person, and Contempt of his Royal Government, such as drinking or wishing Confusion to his Majesty, is High-Treason, particularly by the 2d Act. 2d Sess. Par. 1st King Charles II. of ever glorious Memory: The Plotting, Contriving or Intending Death or Destruction to the King's Majesty, or any bodily Harm, tending to Death or Destruction, or who shall by Writing, Printing, or other malicious Plotting, and advised Speaking, express and declare such their treasonable Intentions, after such Persons being legally convicted thereof, they shall be deemed, declared and adjudg'd Traitors: And the Cursing, Beating, Invading, or Assassinating of a Parent by a Child, above the Age of sixteen Years, who is not mad and furious, is punishable by Death, and Confiscation of Moveables: And of all other Murders, Parricide is the most atrocious and unnatural; and Murder under Trust, is punishable as Treason with Forfaulture of Life, Land and Goods, and particularly by the 20 Act. 1st Sess. 2d Par. King Charles II. The King's Majesty and Estates of Parliament, considering how great and atrocious a Crime it is for Children to beat or curse their Parents, and how the Law of God hath pronounced just Sentence of Death against such as shall either of these Ways injure either of their Parents; therefore the King and Estates of Parliament did Statute and Ordain, That whosoever, Son or Daughter, above the Age of sixteen Years, not being distracted, shall beat or curse either their Father or their Mother, shall be put to Death without Mercy. And sicklike by the 51 Act. 11 Par. King James VI. It is Statuted and Ordained, That the Murder or Slaughter of whatsomever of the Leidges, where the Party slain under the Trust, Credit, Assurance, and Power of the Slayer, all such Murder or Slaughter to be committed in time coming, the same being lawfully tried, and the Person dilated found guilty by an Assise thereof, shall be Treason, and the Person found culpable shall forfault Life and Goods; as in the said Laws and Acts of Parliament at more length is contained. Nevertheless it is of Verity, that the said Philip Standsfield shaking off all Fear of God, the Bonds and Ties of Nature and Christianity, Regard and Obedience to the said Laws and Acts of Parliament, did dare and presume to commit the said horrid and detestable Crimes, in swa far as, upon the first, second, third, or one or other of the Days of the Months of June, July, August, or September last, by past, one or other of them, he did, within the House and Kitchen of New-Milns, call for Ale to drink some Healths, and in the Presence of John Robison, then his Father's Servant, Agnes Bruce, likewise his Father's Servitrix, and several others, he did as a most villanous and avowed Traitor, presume and dare to begin a Health to the Confusion of his Sacred Majesty, his native Soveraign, and did drink off the same, and caused others in his Company to do the like. And sicklike Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns his Father, having caused Educat and bring him up Decentlie, and in Plenty conform to his Rank and Quality, and having left no means unessayed for his Literature, Education and Subsistence; yet he being a profligate and debauched Person, did commit, and was accessory to several notorious Villanies, for which, both at home and broad, he was apprehended and detained Prisoner, as in the Marshalsea-Prison in Southwark, in the publick Prisons of Antwerp and Orleance, and several other Places: And though his Father, out of his natural Compassion to him, did cause release him out of these Prisons, in which he was so justly confined, he no sooner had his Liberty, than he of new invented and went about his villanous Practice and Debauches: And his Father at last perceiving that nothing could reclaim him from these and the like Proceedings, having signified his Inclinations to disherish him, and in order thereto, having disponed his Estate in Favours of John Standsfield his second Son; the said Philip did thereupon conceive, harbour and entertain ane hellish Malice and Prejudice against the said Sir James Standsfield his Father, and most barbarously did declare, threaten and vow at several Times, that he would cut his Throat: And particularly upon the first, second or third, or remanent Days of the Months of the Year 1680, within the House of James Smith in Nungate or Haddingtoun; and upon the first, second, or third, or one or other of the Days of the Months of January, February, March, and remanent Months of the Year 1687, within the House of James Baikbie Fermorer in New-Milns; and within his Father's own House of New-Milns; and in the House of William Scot there; and upon the first, second, third, third, or one or other of the Days of the Months of January, February, March, and remanent Months of the Year of God 1683, 1684, and 1685 Years, when he was both in Bruſſels and Breda, and ſeveral other Places, both in Holland and Flanders, and in Priſons, within which he was detained in the City of London and Southwark, or upon one or other of the Days, of one or other of the Months of the ſaid Years, or either of them moſt wickedly, unnaturally, and bitterly rail upon, abuſe and curſe the ſaid Sir James Standsfield, his natural and kindly Parent. And being tranſported with Rage and Malice, he did, contrary to the Light and Tyes of Nature, nor once, but often, and frequently curſe his Father, by bidding, and praying the Devil to take him, and the Devil rive him. God damm him, and ſwear, if he had a Sword, he would run it through him, and if ever he came to Scotland, he would be avenged upon him. And particularly upon the Day of November laſt, which was the laſt Time his Father went to Edinburgh, he did moſt impiouſly, and unnaturally imprecate God let him never return, and God let him never ſee his Face. And frequently when he ſaw his Father's Diet taken to him, he uſed to ſay, God grant he may choak upon it; and at other Occaſions, when his Father refuſed to eat, he was in uſe to ſay, God let never more be in his Stomach than was in it then. And upon the firſt, ſecond, or third, or one, or other of the Days of the Months of September, October, or November, laſt by paſt, or one or other of them, his Mother being recovered out of a Swond, and having ſaid to him, Philip, ye will ſhortly want your Mother, which will be a gentle Viſitation to Sir James your Father. To which he did anſwer: By my Soul, my Father ſhall be dead before you, Mother; and about eight Days after, he upon the like Occaſion did renew the ſame Words: As alſo he was in uſe to declare, that though at preſent he had neither Cloaths nor Money, yet ſhortly (and no body did think how ſoon) he would be Laird of all, and then would uſe other Perſons as they did him now: And at other times declared, that before Chriſtmas he would be Laird of all; which Curſes and Imprecations, he the ſaid Philip Standsfield, by a continual Habit, uſed, and repeited theſe ſeveral Years by paſt; and lately, ſome few Months or Weeks before his Father's Murder. And not ſatisfied therewith, the ſaid Philip did proceed to that Degree of unnatural Cruelty, and malicious Spite and Enmity againſt his Father, that upon the firſt, ſecond, third, or one or other of the Days of the Months of January, February, March, and remanent Months of the Years of God, 1680, 1681, 1682, 1683, and 1684 Years, or one or other of the Days, of one or other of the Months, of one or other of the ſaids Years, he did attempt to aſſaſſinate, and offered Violence to his Father's Perſon, and did chaſe and purſue him upon the King's Highway at Lothian-burn, and did fire Piſtols upon his Father: And likewayes upon one or other of the Days of one or other of the Months, of one or other of the Years of God above ſpecified, he did attempt to aſſaſſinat his Father for his Life, at Culterallors; and did fire Piſtols upon him: And his Father being afraid of his Life, and under the Apprehenſion of Violence, from the cruel and bloody Hands of the ſaid Philip, his unnatural Son, he did, to ſeveral Perſons both of Quality and entire Reputation, declare, that the ſaid Philip his Son, had both attempted to aſſaſſinate, and offered violence to his Perſon, and that he was deviſing and contriving his Death. And the ſaid Sir James Standsfield his Father, having upon the Day of November laſt, gone from the City of Edinburgh, to his own Houſe of New-Milns, and about ten o'Clock at Night, or thereby having gone to his own Chamber, in order to his Reſt, and being alone in the Room, under the Credit, Truſt, and Aſſurance of the ſaid Philip his Son, and his own Servants within his own Family; the ſaid Philip did conſult, and adviſe, and correſpond with ſome other Perſones, within and about the Houſe for the Time, to aſſaſſinat and cruelly murder his ſaid Father, and perticularly with George Thomſon in New-Milns, and Helen Dickſon his Spouſe, and Janet Jonſtoun Spouſe to John Nicols, there, in the Houſe of the ſaid George Thomſon many Times, particularly the Saturday's Night immediately preceeding the Murder, where he curſed his Father, and ſaid he ſhould ſhortly make an end of him, and be Maſter of all: And accordingly he and they did murder and ſtrangle him in his Bed-Chamber, and in the dead Time of the Night, did carry and tranſport him from the ſaid Room, to the Water, near by the Houſe, and laid his Body down upon the Water-ſide, and tied a Stone about his Neck, to make him ſink in the Water; and before he was throwen therein, he went back with his Accomplices to a little Kiln near by, and conſulted and adviſed, whether it was more fit to throw him in the Water with the Stone about his Neck, to make him ſink, or to take away the Stone, leaſt when he ſhould be found, it might thereby appear that the Stone had been tied by ſome other Hand than his own; and at laſt reſolved to take away the Stone, and throw his Body in the Water, which they returning, did accordingly: And ſome Perſons being accidentally lying in the Houſe at the Time, they did hear a Noiſe of many Tongues and Voices, to their great Terror and Amazement; and the next Morning very early, ſome of the Servants in the Houſe having come to the Room where his ſaid Father did lie, and having miſſed him out of the Room, gave notice thereof to ſome others of the Servants. He declared that he had been ſeeking him about the Water-Pools; and a Noiſe and a Cry having ariſen, Search and Enquiry was made for his ſaid Father (and by him ſeemingly amongſt the reſt) And after ſome Time his Body was found in the Water hard by his own Houſe, and being dead, and his Neck broken before he was thrown in the Water, his Body did neither ſink to the Ground, nor receive Water (as all drowned Bodies are in uſe to do) and he knowing where his Father's Body had been put, went on the Sabbath-Morning directly to the Place where his Body was in the Water, and ſtood a conſiderable Space on the Water-ſide, directly oppoſite to the Body, with his Eyes fixed on the ſame, before his Body was found or knowen to any others than the Murtherers; and when John Topping (a Stranger) paſſing that way, and ignorant of the whole Matter, or that Sir James was amiſſing, called to him, and aſked, who that was in the Water? He made no Anſwer, but went away from that Place ſtrait to New-Milns, and gave no Intimation to him, or any other Perſon what he had ſeen in the Water, but appeared ſurpriſed when his Body was found there by other Perſons; and his Father's Body being taken out of the Water, the ſame was, by his Order, carried to a dark Out-houſe; and though he was deſired by the Friends and Servants preſent, to ſuffer his Father's dead Body to be carried to his own Houſe, and kept therein, and not to be buried till his Friends in Edinburgh, and elſewhere, and Phyſicians in Haddingtoun, or near by, might ſee the ſame. Yet he refuſed ſo to do, and cauſed bury the dead Body of his Father privately, and in haſte. And the Noiſe having ſpread abroad, that his Father had been barbarouſly murdered by him, and his Accomplices, Order was given by theſe in Authority, to cauſe open the Grave, that Phyſicians and expert Chirurgions might inſpect his Body, and make Report anent the Truth of the Matter: And accordingly, by the Report of the ſaids Chirurgions who inſpected the Body, it did appear, that his ſaid Father was cruelly ſtrangled and murdered, and not drowned, and that he had been caſt in the Water of Purpoſe to conceal the ſame. And when his Father's dead Body was ſighted and inſpected by Chirurgions, and the clear and evident Signs of the Murder had appeared, the Body was ſewed up, and moſt carefully cleaned, and his neareſt Relations and Friends were deſired to lift up his Body to the Coffin: And accordingly James Row, Merchand (who was in Edinburgh in the Time of the Murder) having lifted the Left-ſide of Sir James his Head and Shoulder, and the ſaid Philip the Right-ſide, his Father's Body though carefully cleaned, as ſaid is, ſo as the leaſt Blood was not on it, (did according to God's uſual Method of diſcovering Murders) blood afreſh upon him, and defiled all his Hands, which ſtruck him with ſuch a Terror, that he immediately let his Father's Head and Body fall with Violence, and fled from the Body, and in Conſternation and Confuſion, cryed, Lord, have Mercy upon me! and bowed himſelf down over a Seat in the Church (where the Corps were inſpected) wiping his Father's innocent Blood off his own murdering Hands upon his Cloaths. By all which it is manifeſt, that he did moſt traiterouſly expreſs his Hatred and Malice to his Majeſties ſacred Perſon, by wiſhing and drinking to his Confuſion, and cauſing others to do the ſame. And likewiſe, that he did not only unnaturally curſe, invade, attempt to aſſaſſinate or beat his ſaid Father, but under Truſt and Aſſurance, barbarouſly and treaſonably did ſtrangle, kill and murder him in manner forſaid, and is Actor, Art and Part of the forſaids Crimes, or one or other of them, which being found by an Aſſyſe, he ought to be puniſhed for the treaſonable Crimes above ſpecified, with forefaulture of Life, Land and Goods, and for the other Crimes above-mentioned, Capitally, and with the Pains of Death and Confiſcation of Moveables, to the Terror and Example of others to commit the like hereafter.

PURSUERS.

Sir John Dalrymple, younger, of Stair, his Majeſties Advocat.
Sir George Mackenzie, Advocat.

PROCURATORS in Defence.

Sir David Thoirs,
Sir Patrick Hume,
Mr. William Moniepenny.
Mr. William Dundaſs.

The Pannal's Procurators produced two Warrands of Privy Council, commanding them to compeir and plead the Pannal's Defence.

SIR Patrick Hume for the Pannal (always denying the Indytement, and whole Members and Qualifications thereof) alleadges, That as to the firſt Part of the Indytement, in relation to the drinking an Health to the Confuſion of his ſacred Majeſty, as it is moſt calumnious, ſo it is not to be ſuppoſed, that any Man in his right Wits would have been guilty of ſuch a Thing: And it is poſitively offered to be proven, that at, or about the Time libel'd, and ſeveral Times before and after, the Defender did moſt heartily and chearfully in ſeveral Companies drink the King's Health, and upon all Occaſions he was ready to teſtify his Loyalty to the King, and particularly the Time of the Invaſion by the late Duke of Monmouth in England, where he did enter himſelf voluntarily a Souldier in the Earl of Dumbarton's Regiment, and continued in the King's Army till the Rebels were defeat, and the Voluntiers diſmiſſed.

As to the ſecond Part of the Libel, in relation to the Pannal, his alledged committing, and being guilty of, and acceſſory to many notour Crimes abroad, and being detained Priſoner in London, Antwerp, Orleance, &c. and that he vented and entertained Malice againſt his Father, and that he declared many times that he would cut his Throat, and that he did rail againſt, and curſe his Father, by many Imprecations.

It is anſwered, primo, That it is abſolutely deny'd, that the Pannal was guilty of, or acceſſory to any notorious Crime abroad, or put in Priſon upon that Account, nor is there ſo much as any Crime condeſcended upon.

2. The Defender could not conceive any Prejudice againſt his Father, upon the Account of diſponing his Eſtate to his ſecond Son; for he knew nothing thereof till after his Father's Deceaſe, that one Alexander Ainſlie told him that his Father had made ſuch a Diſpoſition.

3. As to the pretended Expreſſions, that the Defender ſhould have had of Railing, Curſing, and uſing Imprecations againſt his Father, in ſo far as the ſaymen are libel'd to have been done Abroad, in England, Holland, or other Places, he cannot be lyable to the Puniſhment inflicted by the Law of this Kingdom, becauſe when a Party commits a Crime in another Nation, he is only to be puniſhed according to the Law of the Place where the Crime was committed, and not according to the Law of the Nation where he is a Subject, or has his Dwelling: As is clear by the Common Law, Authentick Cod. Ubi de criminibus agi oportet. Qua in provincia quis delinquit, aut in qua pecuniarum aut criminum reus ſit, ſive de terra, ſive de terminis, ſive de poſſeſſione, ſive de proprietate, ſive de hypotheca, aut de alia qualibet occaſione, vel de qualibet re fuerit reus, illic jure ſubjaceat, quod jus eſt perpetuum. In that Nation where any Perſon commits a Crime, or is liable to anſwer upon any account whatſomever, he is to be judged by the Law of that Place, which is eſtabliſhed as a perpetual Law; and Mattheus de Criminibus, in his Title, De Pœnis, is expreſs of the ſame Opinion.

4. As to all thoſe pretended Expreſſions of railing, curſing, and threatning, libel'd, that were before March, 1685, the Defender is ſecured by the Act of Indemnity, by which all Crimes are indemnified, preceeding that time, againſt the Government and Laws.

5. As to any pretended Expreſſions of railing and curſing ſince that Time, they being but Injuries alledged done to the Father, he might and did remit the ſamen, in ſo far he did not challenge and purſue the ſame in his own Time; and this is clear from the Common Law, Carpzov. Part. 2. Queſt. 65. Actio autem injuriarum nec activè nec paſſivè in Hæredes tranſit, etiamſi mortuus illatas injurias ignoraverit. Inſtitut. lib. 4. tit. 12. par. 1. de perpetuis temporalibus action. Leg. 10. par. 2. ff. ſi quis cautionibus in judicio ſiſten. And leg. 13. ff. de injuriis, injuriarum actio neque hæredi neque in hæredem datur: As alſo it is a Principle in Law, that diſſimulatione tollitur injuria; and if it could be made appear, that the Pannal had any ſuch Expreſſions, the Father did diſſimulat and paſs from the ſame, in ſo far as by a Letter, dated in June laſt, written by the Father to the Pannal, he orders him to take in his Chamberlain Accompts of the Rents of his Lands, and of any Money he had received from the Tenements, or for the Corns ſold, and that he expects he will do the ſame exactly, and recommends to him, to be careful of all his Affairs, and ſubſcribes himſelf to be his loving Father. By which it is evident, that all former Differences (if any were) betwixt them, were then taken away.

As to the third Part of the Indytement, in relation to the ſeveral Acts and Qualifications inſiſted upon; to inferr, that the Defender had Acceſſion to his Father's Death: It is anſwered, (primo) That the Indytement, in ſo far as it is founded upon the 51. Act. Par. K. Ja. VI. in relation to the Murder under Truſt, which is declared to be puniſhable as Treaſon, is not relevant: Becauſe the Father cannot in Law be ſaid to be under Truſt and Aſſurance of the Son, and that Act of Parliament takes only Place in Caſes where a Man is invited to his Neighbour's Houſe, or of an Traveller being in an Inn, and that he be murdered under that Truſt; and the ſame Act of Parliament being founded on in the Caſe of Swinton, who killed his Wife, in the Year 1666, the Indytement was reſtricted to ſimple Slaughter. And in the Caſe of Maſter James Oliphant, in the Year 1665, the Lords of the Seſſion found, that a Son's killing his Mother, was not Murder under Truſt, and ſo he was not puniſhable by that Act of Parliament, as guilty of the Crime of Treaſon.

2. The Acts and Qualifications condeſcended on to infer the Defender's Acceſſion to his Father's Death, are but very remote and uncertain; for as to that Expreſſion, That the Defender is alledged to have threatned his Father's Death, it is the Opinion of all Lawyers, who have written upon the Subject, that that is but a very remote Preſumption. And as Carpzovius expreſſes it, Part. 3. Queſt. 121. Numb. 51. Quod eſt indicium admodum periculoſum, quippe cum homines ſæpe nil minus faciant quam quod minas exequantur & iracundia agitatus minas de crimine perpetrando ſæpe jactet, ipſo tamen animo fervore paulo poſt diſcuſſo, cohibeat manus, & abſtineat a facinore illo quod forſan ab alio poſtea committitur. And Paris de puteo gives an Inſtance in his Tractat. de Syndicatu upon the Word Tortura; and Boverius, That a Woman ſeeing a Perſon going by her Window, againſt whom ſhe had a Prejudice, and that another having a Hatred againſt her, and hearing that ſhe had threatned to cut off that Perſon's Legs, the Party that did hear the Woman uſe the Threatning, did the Thing; upon which the Woman that did threaten, being challenged, and put to the Torture, did confeſs; yet thereafter it was found, that ſhe was altogether innocent, and that another had done it.

3. As to the pretended Acts of the Defender's alledged purſuing, and invading his Father, and firing Piſtols at him, at Lothian-burn and Culteral-lors, in Annis 1683, and 1684. As it is moſt groundleſs, ſo, if need were, it could be made appear by the Perſons who were in Company with him at that Time, that the Defender and his Father were then in entire Friendſhip all alongſt the Journey, and he was ſo far from making any ſuch Attempt, that it can be made appear, that the Defender did behave himſelf towards his Father with all the Submiſſion and Reſpect that became a Son to have to his Father: But as to theſe, and all other Acts, preceeding March 1685, the Defender is ſecured by the Act of Indemnity; and as the Defender cannot be purſued for any Crime preceeding that Time, neither in Judgment nor out with the ſame, they in effect being no Crimes, being taken away by the Act of Indemnity, they cannot be ſo much as made Uſe of as Qualifications or Aggravations, to infer another Crime poſterior thereto.

4. As to that pretended Qualification, that when the Defender did touch his Father's dead Body after it was taken out of the Grave, the Corps did bleed.

It is anſwered, That this is but a ſuperſtitious Obſervation without any Ground either in Law or Reaſon. And Carpzovius relates, Part 3. Queſt. 122. Numb. 31. That ſeveral Perſons upon that Ground had been unjuſtly challenged, and that he in his own Experience had ſeen a dead Body bleed in Preſence of the Perſon who was not guilty; as alſo that he has ſeen the Body not bleed in Preſence of the Perſon that was guilty. And Matthæus de Criminibus, is of the ſame Opinion, Tit. 16. de Quæſtionibus, Numb. 12. de Sanguine porro de Cadavere profluente quod dicitur id de plurimis experimentis comprobetur, tamen cum experimenta falſa ſint; ratio vero idonea nulla reddi poſſit, non putaverim indicium ad torturam ſufficiens eſſe; non enim ſapientis Judicis eſt incerto experimento credere quod certa ratione dirimendum eſt. And the Truth is, the Occaſion of the dead Body's bleeding, was, that the Chirurgions that came out to viſit the Body, did make an Inciſion about the Neck, which might be the Occaſion of the bleeding; and alſo the very moving of the dead Body, when it was taken out of the Grave, and out of the Coffin, might occaſion the bleeding; eſpecially ſeeing the Body did not bleed for ſome time after, which certainly was made by the Motion, and by the Inciſion: As alſo a further Evidence, that it could not be the Defender's touching the Body, the Chirurgions did likeways touch the Body as well as he, and ſeveral others preſent; ſo that the bleeding could no more be aſcribed to his touching, than the touching of the other Perſons preſent.

5. As to the other Articles lybel'd, relating to the pretended Murder, they are but meer Stories, and the Truth is, and it is offered to be proven, that the Defender having gone to his Chamber and Bed the Night before his Father's Death, he did not ſtir out of his Bed, nor out of the Roum, till the next Morning that John Robertſon his Father's Servant came to his Chamber, where he was in Bed, and told him, that he had been in his Maſter's Roum, and that he could not find him. Upon which the Defender immediately aroſe, and put on his Cloaths, and went

went out to ſee where his Father was. And ſhortly after Word being brought him by ſome Perſon in the Town, that they did ſee his Father's Body lying in the Water, and it being generally concluded by all, that he had thrown himſelf in the Water, and the Body being taken out, and laid in a low Roum, it was thought fit by all the Neighbours about, that he ſhould be buried the next Day.

6. The Particulars lybel'd, to infer the Defender's Acceſſion to his Father's Death, being but remote and uncertain Conjectures, it is a certain Principle in Law, that ex præſumptionibus & conjecturis nemo criminaliter condemnari poteſt, eſpecially as to a Capital Puniſhment: As is clear from the Common Law, Leg. 5. Digeſt. de pœnis, ſed nec de ſupplicationibus debere aliquem damnari, ſatius enim eſt Impunitum relinqui facinus nocentis quam Innocentem damnari. And which is the Opinion of all Lawers, writing upon the Subject: As Bartol, upon the foreſaid Law, and Farin. Part. 3. Oper. Crim. Queſt. 86. and the Lawers by him there cited. And Muſcard de prob. Concluſ. 223, layes it down as a certain Concluſion, quod Argumenta quantumcunque urgentiſſima, etiamſi eſſent talia quæ mentem indicantis adeo coactarent quod aliud credere non poſſit, non tamen ſufficerent ad condemnationem pœnæ corporalis ſed duntaxat pecuniariæ.

7. The Preſumptions and Qualifications lybel'd, cannot be ſuſtained even to infer an Arbitrary Puniſhment: Becauſe they may, and are taken off by other Preſumptions, that either the Father was not murdered, but that in a Frainzie, or melancholy Fit, he had thrown himſelf in the Water: Or, at leaſt, if he was murdered, that the Defender had no Acceſſion thereto, and the Preſumptions condeſcended upon in Behalf of the Defender, eleid the Preſumptions contained in the Inditement, are theſe. That it is notourlie known, that his Father was ſubject to melancholy Fits, and that in the Year 1679, the Time of Bothwell-Bridge, it is offered to be proven, that he was in a Fit of Diſtraction; and at another Time in his Houſe at the Nether-bow, he was going to throw himſelf out over the Window, if one Thomas Lindall had not come in at the Time and pulled him back by the Legs, when his Body was half out at the Window. And ſome few Days before he went out of Edinburgh laſt, he came to George Sterling, Chirurgion, and deſired him to draw Blood of him, for a Diſtemper in his Head, which he refuſed, unleſs he had Advice from a Phyſician. As alſo a Day or two before he went out of the Town, he was ſeen reading upon the Book of Burtoun's Melancholy. And that Day when he went out of the Town in Company of Mr. Bell the Miniſter, and Aiton, Merchant in Haddingtoun, they obſerved him to be melancholy, diſordered, and more troubled than ordinary; or if it could be made appear, that the Father was murdered, yet it cannot be preſumed that the Defender had any Acceſſion thereto, or that he would have committed ſuch an Act againſt the very Ties and Light of Nature. As alſo it appears by the foreſaid Letter, written to the Defender by his Father, that they were in entire Friendſhip; as alſo when the Surmiſe went Abroad, that his Father had been murdered, if he had been conſcious to himſelf that he had any Acceſſion thereto, he would have certainly fled the Country, and gone away. But he was ſo far from that, that upon the firſt Rumour of it, he came preſently into England, and ſeveral Days thereafter, it being told him, that he was ſuſpected to have Acceſſion to his Father's Death, he came voluntarily and entered himſelf in Priſon, that he might undergo the ſtricteſt and ſevereſt Trial: Which alone is ſufficient, if it were no more, to take off all the Preſumptions lybel'd, and to convince the World of the Defender's Innocence; and it being a Principle in Law, that una præſumptio tollit aliam, the Preſumptions adduced for the Defender ought to be preponderat, Muſcard. Concluſ. 1205, is poſitive, That præſumptiones quæ ſtant pro reis prævalent. As alſo that præſumptio affectionis naturalis prævalet contrariis præſumptionibus. So that upon both theſe Conſiderations, the Preſumptions alledged for the Defender ought to be ſuſtained, to take away the Preſumptions lybel'd, and to free him from the Crime.

His Majeſties Advocate anſwers, That the Libel conſiſts of three Articles, (Primo) Treaſon, by the Pannal's drinking the King's Confuſion, and by the Murder under Truſt. 2°. The curſing of a Parent. 3°. The Qualifications inferring the Pannal's Acceſſion to the Murder of his Father.

As to the firſt, it cannot be denied, but that the drinking or wiſhing Confuſion to his Majeſty, is the higheſt Act of Contempt, Malice, and Diſdain to his Royal Perſon; and as the Relevancy of this Article is not expreſly contraverted, ſo the Atrocity of the Act, and the forcing others to do the ſame upon the common Grounds of Law, does clearly infer Treaſon, and it cannot be expected, that ſuch extravagant Words ſhould either be expreſs'd, or particularly provided againſt by any Law in expreſs Terms; but the Nature of the Words in expreſs Terms of our Law diſcharging all Speeches to the Diſdain of his Majeſty, the Contempt of his Authority, do clearly and naturally comprehend the Words lybel'd, and by the common Law, Ad leg. jul. Maj. crimen læſæ Majeſtatis ad exemplum legis ſcriptæ eſt vindicandum.

And whereas it is pretended, that theſe Words were inadvertantly ſaid, and that it appears by the Tract of the Pannal's Life, and his Readineſs to engage in his Majeſties Service, that the Words could not be deliberat and malicious. It is replied, That it is offered to be proven, that the drinking Confuſion to the King, was openly and plainly propoſed; and that the Pannal did deliberately ſend out for Ale to drink certain Healths, and that this Health to the King's Confuſion was the firſt or ſecond, and that it was no Lapſe or Miſtake in the Expreſſion; but that he forced others to pledge and drink that ſame Health. And the Malice and Diſloyalty is evident, by the Health's Subſequent; viz. Antichriſt's, &c. and it is not at all relevant (after the reiterate and deliberat expreſſing of theſe Words) that he had retracted or drank the King's Health; for a Crime once committed, is not retracted or taken off by ſuch inconſiſtent and unconſequential Speeches; but to ſhew the Senſe the Pannal had of the Importance of his own Words, the Pannal being informed, that ſome of the Perſons preſent had divulged his having drunk the King's Confuſion, the Pannal did conjure them to Secrecy, and did menace the Witneſſes with a great Cane, that he would beat and brain them if ever they told it.

Whereas it is answered in general, as to all Crimes committed without the Kingdom, that they cannot be cognosced or punished here: It is replied, That as to Crimes against Nature, or the Law of Nations, as every Party is competent to be an Accuser, so every Judicature is competent; and therefore as to the Crimes of Treason, or cursing of Parents, wherever committed, they are punishable by the Justices: But because in relation to the Crimes committed abroad, there is not positive Probation, but Declarations and Testimonies; therefore as to these Crimes, his Majesties Advocate does not insist on them as distinct Crimes per se, but as Qualifications, Documents, and Evidences of the habitual Debauchery, and unnatural Malice expres's'd by the Pannal against his Father for a Tract of many Years.

Whereas it is answered, That as to all Crimes preceding 1685, they are taken off by the Indemnity: It is replyed, The Indemnity 1685, is no general Indemnity, neither as to Persons nor Crimes, but particular Crimes are remitted, and particularly enumerat without any general Clause: And as cursing of Parents is not particularly enumerat, so by the Nature of that Crime, it cannot be included or comprehended in any general Indemnity: And the Words of the Act of Parliament, 20 Act. 1. Par. K. Ch. II. bears expresly, That the Cursers of Parents shall be put to Death without Mercy. So that a general Act of Indemnity, or Mercy, without a special Remission, could not include this Crime, which, as the Act of Parliament bears, is expresly against Nature, and the Law of God: And by the Opinion of all Lawers, general Indemnities do not extend to all Crimes; but these Crimes which are called in Law Crimina excepta, are never intended to be indemnified, nor such Crimes, where the Interest of Parties is more than the Interest of Publick Justice, and in all former and general Indemnities, Murder and other Crimes are particularly excepted with a general Clause, excepting all such Crimes as use not to be comprehended in general Acts of Indemnity: So that this so horrid a Crime, wherein the Parent was more interested than the Publick, neither was, nor could be comprehended under a general Indemnity: As also that restricted, limited Indemnity, bears expresly an Exoneration for all Persons below the Degree and Quality of an Heretor, Wodsetter or Burgess; and whether the Pannal were an Heretor or not, yet it cannot be said, that he is below the Degree and Quality of a Wodsetter or Burgess; and therefore the Act of Indemnity is of no use to him.

Whereas it is answered, That Sir James was reconciled with the Pannal, and wrote kind Letters to him, whereby, dissimulando, former Injuries were taken off: It is replied, That Injuries are only taken off dissimulando, which are not attrocious, but never specifick Crimes, wherein the Discharge or expres's Renunciation of the Party injured cannot liberat à vindicta publica, the Punishment of Crimes, especially in Capital Punishments, belonging to the Magistrat; and the privat Party has not the sole Interest, nor can dispense with Capital Punishments: But the Letter founded upon, does not in the least infer the Party's Forgiveness or Dissimulation of the Injury. And a Father ordering his Son to call in for Chamberlain Accompts, without impowering him to discharge the same, is not the least Evidence of Confidence in his Son, much less a remitting of his Crime.

As to the second Article, in relation to the Cursing, it is positively offered to be proven, not in single Acts, but by a Tract and Habit of cursing his Father in the most abominable Termes imaginable.

As to the third Article, in relation to the Murder, that this Matter may be clear, & ut constet de Corpore delicti, these undoubted Qualifications are offered to instruct, that Sir James Standsfield was murdered and strangled, and that he did not drown himself. 1. It is offered to be proven by the Minister, that was that Night in the House, that long after ten o'Clock at Night, and that Sir James had retired to the Chamber, where he lay alone, the Minister heard the confused Whispers, Murmurs, and Noise of several Persons, both Men and Women, which affrighted him, and that he heard the Noise go away by the backside of the House, which leads directly to that Pool where Sir James his Body was thrown in the Water.

2. Sir James's Body was found swimming above the Water, and albeit it appeared by the Ice upon the Top of his Cloaths, that he had been several Hours in the Water, yet there had no Water entred in his Body; which is a Demonstration, that he was dead before he was thrown into the Water; for a Person thrown alive into Water, drawing in of Air and Respiration, being in the Water, he must draw in Water; and if the Person drawes in as much Water as fills his Concavitie, he becomes heavy, having so much more Weight of Water, and therefore he sinks: But if a Person be thrown dead into the Water, when the Clap of his Throat is shut, the Water cannot enter, and there being so much Emptiness, the Body is light, and supported by more Parts of Water, than the Gravity of the Body can depress. 3. There being several Chirurgeons and others sent out by Order from Authority to take up and inspect the Body, to see whether there was any Evidence of Strangling, or other Symptoms of Murder upon the Body; it did appear to all these Persons, who did depone before a Committee of the Privy-Council, That from the one Jugular Vein to the other round the Neck, there was a Tumour of congealed black bruised Blood, three Inches broad, and that there was congealed Blood in the Throat; upon which Matter of Fact, the College of Physicians have given an unanimous Testimony in Writing, that Sir James Stansfield was strangled, and not drowned: And the Deaconry of the Chirurgeons being conveened, have emitted a Declaration in Writing, concurring and agreeing with the Report of the Physicians: So that it is as clear as the Light of Day, that Sir James Standsfield was murdered.

3. For the Qualifications, that the Pannal was the Murderer, or accessory to the Murder of his Father, these clear Evidences are offered, which makes his Crime without possibility to be palliat or denied. 1. It is notorious, that the Pannal is a most debauched, vitious, pernicious Person, and has been Prisoner, or condemned to die in all the Places or Societies he ever haunted. He entered a Soldier in the Scots Regiment, where he was condemned to die at Treves, but made his Escape; and his being in Prison, in the the Marſhalſea-Priſons, Orleance, and Bruſſels (which makes the Circuit of his Travels) are not denyed; and his profligat Life and conſtant Drunkenneſs, ſince he came to the Priſon, is offered to be proven by the Keepers: And as it is unneceſſar to trace all his Debauches; ſo there is one material Point offered to be proven, That upon the leaſt Provocation, either by Man or Woman, the Pannal uſed to ſwear by horrid Oaths, that he would take their Lives, though he ſhould die in the Graſs-mercat for it.

3. Sir James Standsfield for theſe Debaucheries having diſheriſhed the Pannal, and diſponed his Eſtate to his ſecond Son; it is poſitively offered to be proven, That in the Nungate of Haddingtoun, in James Smith's Houſe, the Pannal being told, that his Father would diſheriſh him, he with horrible Oaths vowed to cut his Father's Throat.

And whereas it is anſwered to this Qualification, That the ſaying that a Son would cut a Father's Throat, is but a remot Circumſtance: It is replied, That the Law, and all Lawers do agree, That Minæ præcedentes & damnum ſequutum, is a moſt pregnant Qualification of that Party's Crime, eſpecially where the Threats were to cut a Father's Throat, which of itſelf was ſo horrid and unnatural a Villany, that it cannot be doubted he who durſt vow it, wanted but an Occaſion to act it. And it is acknowledged, that though this be the cleareſt Preſumption, yet per ſe, it is not full Probation: For though the Son had both vowed, and reſolved, yet by an Accident he might have been prevented; but the Preſumption at leaſt lays the Burden, that except the Pannal could condeſcend, and document, that ſome other Perſon killed his Father, he muſt be reputed the Murderer.

3 It is offered to be proven, That Sir James Standsfield, who was a Perſon of eminent Sobriety and Veracity, did declare to ſeveral Perſons, that his unnatural Son had attempted his Life, and offered Violence to his Perſon, and particularly, that he had purſued him on Horſeback, and fired Piſtols on him; and that ſame Friday before Sir James was murdered, he did declare that it was not his Debts, or any thing under Heaven that troubled him, but that his Son and Family were plotting and contriving his Deſtruction, and the next Night he was murdered.

3. It is offered to be proven, That the Pannal's Mother declared, That her Son had vowed to be his Father's Death, and that he was a vindictive Perſon, and that ſhe did apprehend he had murdered him. So as to this Article, there is a Concourſe of the Pannal's own Oaths, to murder his Father, and of his Father and Mother's Declarations, that he had attempted, and was ſtill plotting the ſame.

The ſecond Qualification is, that, that Saturdays-Night Sir James Standsfield came home, the Pannal would not come where his Father was, either to Supper, or Prayer; and being expreſly deſired by ſeveral Perſons, to go to his Father, and ſpeak with him; he declared (that ſame Night he was murdered) he could not endure to ſee, or look upon his Father; and he had been all that Day cloſs with Thomſon and his Wife, and Janet Johnſton. So after ten Hours at even, after the Family was gone to Bed, he came out to Thomſon's Houſe, which is hard by the Gate, and there in Preſence of Thomſon, his Wife, and Janet Johnſton, he declared that his Father would neither give him Money, nor Cloaths, and curſed his Father, and declared that he would ſhortly make ridd of him, which agrees with what he had ſeveral Times ſaid in other Companies, that he was to be Laird before Chriſtmas; and that he was ſhortly to be Maſter of all, and none can think how ſoon. As alſo, ſhortly before Sir James's Death, the Pannal's Mother falling in a Swound, it was ſaid to him, Philip, ye will ſhortly want your Mother; to which he anſwered, By God, his Father ſhould be dead before her: And eight Days after, his Mother falling again ſick, he repeated the ſame Words; whereby it is evident the Murder was deliberate and determined.

3. On the Sunday Morning, before Sir James's Body was found, Philip came to the Miniſter's Chamber, and told him that his Father was gone out in the Night, and that he had been ſearching for him about the Pools, and Water-ſide; and when the Miniſter reproved him for making ſuch Inſinuations againſt his Father, he laughed at him, and went away to the Pool, and ſtood looking upon his Father in the Water, but made no Diſcovery; and thereafter a Stranger coming by upon the Highway likeways, ſeeing Sir James's Body in the Water, he came back and diſcovered the Matter; at which Philip ſeemed ſurpriſed, and told that he had ſeen his Father's Body in the Water before, but he did not think fit to be the firſt Diſcoverer, which ſhews, that he was conſcious of his own Guilt; otherways, upon the firſt Sight of his Father in the Water, he would have gone to him; but on the contrary, he never laid a Hand upon his Father's Body, either to pull him out of the Water, or to carry him into the Houſe, for the Dread of ſome extraordinary Diſcovery, and did not allow the Corps to be brought within his Father's Gates, but cauſed carry the Corps to the Wake-Miln, where, to carry the Appearance of Strangling upon his Body, he entruſted Janet Johnſton with the Care of woonding him, who was known to be a Perſon ſo odious to Sir James, that he could not ſee her for her Baſeneſs with the Pannal, and ſhe did acknowledge, that ſhe had not been for three Quarters of a Year within the Houſe before; and yet this infamous Strumpet, who has been tortured by order of the Privy-Council, as acceſſory to the Murder, was chiefly intruſted to ſee the naked Body, and the Cloaths put on!

4. The Pannal did refuſe to ſend for a Chirurgion, and to let his Father's Body be ſighted, though the Miniſter and others did expreſsly demand it; and the Engliſhmen in the Manufactory, who were acquainted with the Crowner-Laws, they made a Mutiny anent the Burial, till the Corps were ſighted; yet the Pannal cauſed bury the Corps that ſame Night without ſhewing them.

The Corps being raiſed by Order, and Inciſion being made, whereby the Strangling did clearly appear, and the Corps being dreſſed clean, and Linnen put on, there did appear no Bloud; but to take off Suſpicion, the Corps were lifted up, and the Night-Cap being wrong put on, it was altered and changed, and thereafter the Corps were laid down without any Bloud upon the Linnen; and the Pannal (who to this time had never touched his Father's Corps) being required to aſſiſt to lift the Body into the Coffin, having taken his Father by the Right-ſide of the Head with his left Hand, James Row bearing the left, the Pannal's Hand was altogether blooding, as if his Hand had been put into a Veſſel of Bloud; which, notwithſtanding of all his impudent Reſo-ution to the contrary, had that horrible Impreſſion, and Conviction upon him, that he let his Father's Head fall to the Ground, and cried out, O God, and run away and went to a Deſk in the Church, where he lay groaning and in Confuſion, but durſt never return to touch the Corps; and as there can no natural Reaſon be given, but an ordinar and wonderful Providence of God, in this kind of Diſcoveries of Murder; ſo the Fact was never more evident, and ſure: Though Half a Dozen of Perſons were bearing the Corps, no Man's Hands were bloody but the Pannal's, and the Corps being two intire Days in the Grave, in that Weather and Seaſon, the Blood by the Courſe of Nature was become ſtagnat and congealed; ſo that the former toſſing and lifting of the Corps, and even the Inciſion itſelf had occaſioned no ſuch Effuſion, but only ſome Water or Gore; but upon the firſt Touch of the Pannal the Murderer, there appeared Abundance of liquid florid Bloud: And though this per ſe might not be ſufficient, and as Mattheus is cited, it ſhould not infer Torture; yet Mattheus acknowledges that moſt Part do ſuſtain this, as a violent Preſumption oft times experimented; yet in his Opinion it is not ſufficient for Torture, becauſe Torture being in itſelf a Puniſhment, it cannot be uſed, except where there is ſemiplena probatio, or where the Conſcience of the Judge is ſatiſfied, as to the Truth of the Crime, and therefore uſes an extraordinar Courſe, to extort a Confeſſion, which proves that this Preſumption is ſemiplena probatio per ſe, according to their own Grounds.

And whereas it is alleged, that capital Puniſhment cannot be inferted from Conjectures, but from clear and poſitive Teſtimonies; it is anſwered, that the Lex ult. Cod. de probationibus, clearly ſtates that Probation is either, Teſtibus tabulis inſtrumentis documentis & indiciis. And Mattheus ſtates a particular Title upon this ſingle Queſtion, Cap. 6. Titulo 15. de probationibus, and does moſt poſitively determin that Crimes are to be proven Documentis, Argumentis & Indiciis. And it is moſt evident, that the Probation which ariſes from the Nature of the Thing, which is incapable to be ſoffiſticate, or impoſed upon, as Witneſſes may be, that kind of Probation is the ſureſt, becauſe it is always the ſame, and admits no Variation. It's true, and it is acknowledged, that Argumenta & Indica muſt be clara & evidentia, and Probation being Quod facit fidem Judici, every Man's Experience tells him, that the Complication and Conjunction of ſo many evident Qualifications, though none of them per ſe were ſufficient, yet being all of them joined, it induces a greater Certainty, than two Witneſſes poſitively deponing upon the Fact. And therefore the Evidence of the Probation belongs to the Inqueſt, and the Relevancy that theſe Articles conjoined, or any Part of them, are ſufficient to infer the Crime, belongs to the Judge.

As to the Preſumptions offered for the Exculpation of the Pannal, they are not at all relevant; for though ſo horrid a Murder is not to be preſumed againſt Nature, yet being proved, or ſo ſtrongly evinced, it does but conclude the Pannal's greater Guilt: And ſuppoſe that Sir James Stansfield was formerly Melancholy, and had been Frantick in the Year 1679, yet it is known he recovered his Health, and was of a compoſed, ſedat Temper of Mind for many Years thereafter, and was as capable and diligent about his Affairs, theſe many Years, as he had been formerly, and was ſo conſidered and employed by the wiſeſt Men in the Kingdom; and at the Time of his Death there was no Sickneſs, or returning of Frenzie upon him, but all that Week he had compoſedly done his Affairs; and did upon the Saturday, when he went Home, diſcourſe rationally upon all the Subjects that occurred: But it being ſo clearly documented and proven that he was ſtrangled, it is a ridiculous Conceit, and there remains no Poſſibility that after he was ſtrangled, he walked out and drowned himſelf. And as to that Preſumption, that the Pannal rendered himſelf Priſoner, it was indeed ſuitable to the reſt of his Impudence, and he did not render himſelf till after the Order to apprehend him was intimate to him, when he could not eſcape, and when he was under Obſervation; and there did not want Project in fixing upon this Impudence when he could not eſcape, as a Qualification of Innocence, that he would render.

Sir David Thoirs without Repetition of the Replyes made by his Majeſties Advocat, doth make his Duply to the foreſaids Replyes, and every Member thereof, in order as follows; viz.

TO the firſt, Anent the treaſonable Words, the Pannal's Procurators oppon their former Anſwers, and the Act of Parliament whereupon that Part of the Ditty is founded, being only in order to ſuch treaſonable Speeches adviſedly ſpoken. The conſtant Tract of the Pannel's Life, in drinking his Majeſties good Health at Occaſions, and offering to adventure his Life in his Service in the laſt Rebellion, ſufficiently demonſtrats, that if any ſuch Expreſſion did eſcape the Pannal, as it is denyed, the ſame was only raſh and unadviſed, and not deliberat and adviſed, as is required by the Act of Parliament, to infer the Pains lybelled; and the Qualifications added by my Lord Advocat, bearing, that the Pannal did conjure the Perſons then preſent to Secrecy, demonſtrats that the Pannal was ex incontinenti heartily ſorrowful and penitent for the ſame. And it's clear by that excellent Law of the Code, the Words whereof are, Si quis Imperatori maledixerit, ſi ex inſania miſerando, ſi ex temeritate, & petulantia temn nda, ſi ex animo injuriandi ad principem remittendum, which demonſtrats, that by the Common Law, ſuch an raſh and unadviſed Expreſſion was never to be laid hold on to infer a capital Puniſhment, where the Perſon alledged, Expreſſer thereof, was not otherways ſuſpect of Diſloyalty.

2. Repeats the Defence as to Crimes alledged committen abroad, and it were againſt Reaſon and Equity, that Perſons for one and the ſelf-ſame Crime, ſhould be ſubject to the Puniſhment of ſeveral Juriſdictions, where the Puniſhment of the ſaids Crimes, are different: But ſeeing my Lord Advocat declares he hath no Probation for theſe alledged Crimes, but Certificats and Affidavits, they cannot be obtruded as a Part of the Libel, becauſe the ſaids pretended Certificats and Affidavits, are neither inſert in the Libel, or given out to the Pannal, and all Crimes are to be proven teſtibus, non teſtimoniis; and if the Cuſtom of Affidavits ſhould be introduced in this Court, all Pannals (how innocent ſoever) might be murdered, by being ing deprived of their unanſwerable Objections againſt the Granters of theſe Affidavits, &c. and therefore they cannot be ſuſtained as a Qualification to load the Pannal, or make the Inqueſt have a prejudicat Opinion of him.

3. As to my Lord Advocat's Reply anent the Act of Indemnity, the former Defence and Act of Indemnity is opponed, and bears expreſly Murders, Robberies, Slaughters, and all other Crimes committed againſt his Majeſty, and Laws of the Kingdom, either by Word, Writ, or Deed; which undoubtedly excludes all alledged Crimes, ſaid, done, or committed by the Pannal before that Time; and this Favour, & gratia principis, is to be ampliat and extended, and not reſtricted, and all his Majeſties Judges and Officers of State are commanded to ſuſtain the ſame, according to the moſt ample Interpretations for the Pannal, that the Words will allow.

4. The Pretence that the Pannal was of the Quality of a Burger, or a Baron, is moſt irrelevant, the Pannal having no viſible Fortune at the ſame time; and as my Lord Advocat himſelf acknowledgeth, no Expectation of any Fortune whatſoever: So that if Barons, Burgers, Life-renters, Woodſetters, and likewiſe theſe who have nothing in Poſſeſſion at the Time, ſhall be ſecluded from the Benefit of that Indemnity, it is ſcarce intelligible to whom, and from what Cauſe the ſame was granted. 5. And as to that Part of the Reply, bearing, that this was a privat Injury, and ſo not comprehended within the Act of Indemnity, the former Defence is opponed, and all Pretence of privat Injury was taken away by Diſſimulation or Death.

As to the Pretence that the Reconciliation can be no Defence againſt the Lybel, as to vindicta publica, and that the Letter whereupon the Defence is founded doth not import a Diſſimulation; it is duplyed, That the Act of Parliament being an Comminatory Law, and principally intended in Favours of Parents, the ſame was never yet made uſe of, and it were very hard to make uſe of the ſame to deprive a Parent of his Child, for any raſh or paſſionate Expreſſion; eſpecially, where upon Repentance the Father had remitted the Injury; but the Father being in effect Judge of the Injury, his remitting the ſame ought at leaſt to aſſoilzie the Child from any capital Concluſion. And as to the alledged habitual Curſing, the ſame is denyed, and the former Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity, is repeated and opponed, and the Lybel is opponed, which doth not bear habitual Curſing, but particular Acts at particular Times.

And as to the Qualifications alledged by my Lord Advocat, for clearing that the Defunct Sir James Standsfield was murdered, the Pannal is truly ſorry, that for his own Defence, and for clearing of his own Innocence, his Lawers ſhould be neceſſitated to plead any thing relating to his Father's Infirmities, or Way and Manner of his Death. But it is duplyed, That the whole Preſumptions adduced by my Lord Advocat are allanerly fallacious Conjectures, and can neither be ſeparatim, or complexly relevant to infer any ſuch thing, becauſe, 1. That the Miniſter did hear a whiſpering Noiſe, and was thereby terrified, his Terror and Conſternation having (as he himſelf pretends) put him in a Diſorder and Confuſion, he was thereby rendered incapable to obſerve or judge of any thing that happened. 2. That the Body was ſwimming above Water, imports nothing, the Defunct having a great Coat of thick Cloth about him, which was ſufficient to keep him floating above. 3. The Pretence that there was no Water in the Defunct's Body when the Chirurgions viſited the ſame, imports nothing, becauſe the Defunct's Body having been ſeveral times ſtirred before that time, by which the Water might have run out, as it actually did (in caſe there was any Water within it).

4. Albeit where a Man is drowned unwillingly, and endeavours to breathe, ſo long as he can, his Breathing may ſuck in the Water: Yet if a Man intend to drown himſelf, he will certainly endeavour all Means for quick Diſpatch of himſelf, and thereby keep in his Breath; and the keeping in of the Breath after that Manner was ſufficient, both to keep the Body floating, and the Water from coming in.

5. To put the Matter beyond all Queſtion, the Defunct was laying in the Water a conſiderable Space from the Bank; and albeit the Ice was not ſo ſtrong as to have carried a Child, yet the Ice was whole and entire betwixt the Defunct and the Bank, which demonſtrats, that the Defunct had jumped in from the Bank, to that Place where he was lying. 6. As to that Pretence, that there was Blood about the Defunct's Neck, all lapper'd and bruiſed before Inciſion was made, the Defunct being pulled out of the Water, by an great Cleik, the touching of the Neck with the Cleik, when his Breath was juſt gone out, was ſufficient to have made the Blood where that Part was, to lapper and congeal. 7. As to the Declarations of the Phyſicians and Chirurgions, they are only Declarations ex auditu, and upon Report of one or two Chirurgions, and hath no Foundation, but the Ignorance or Knowledge of the ſaids two Reporters; neither can any ſuch Declarations be obtruded againſt the Pannal, becauſe not given out with the Lybel: But whatever may be inferred from theſe Preſumptions, whether the Defunct was murdered or not, the ſame does not concern the Pannal, unleſs his Acceſſion to the Murder were inſtructed, as is impoſſible it can be.

As to the Qualifications alledged by my Lord Advocat, for fixing the Murder, or Acceſſion thereto upon the Pannal; it is duplyed to the firſt, That the Pannal's alledged vitious Life, and the Story at Treves, his being drunk in Priſon, and threatning to cut Throats upon ſmall Provocations, the ſame are extrinſick to the Libel, and cannot be reſpected. 2. As to the alledged Threatning uſed in James Smith's Houſe, the Lybel is opponed, bearing theſe Expreſſions, to have been uſed in the Year 1684, or ſome Year preceeding; and therefore the former Defence founded upon the Indemnity, is repeated, and opponed. And whereas my Lord Advocat pretends, that minæ præcedentes cum damno ſequuto, is ſufficient either to fix the Guilt upon the Perſon who uſed the Threats, or at leaſt to burden him with the Probation, that another committed the Crime. It is duplyed, 1. That my Lord Advocat's Poſition is abſolutely denyed, unleſs he can inſtruct ſome other poſitive Acceſſion againſt the Pannal; and theſe pretended Threats being taken away, not only by the Act of Indemnity, but likeways by Diſſimulation, which is not only offered to be inferred from the Letter made mention of in the Defence, but likeways by the Defunct's owning, receiving, intertaining, furniſhing, and providing for the Pannal, in every thing ſuitable as his eldeſt Son, the ſame doth undoubtedly take away all Pretence that can be founded

founded upon threatning, ſo many Years preceeding; and by no Law can the Pannal be burdened to prove who were either Actors, or in Acceſſion to his Father's Murder.

As to the ſecond Qualification bearing, that the Defunct ſaid to ſeveral Perſons, that the Pannal offered to invade him (denying the ſame) the Father's Aſſertion could not infer a Crime againſt the Pannal, unleſs the Crime it ſelf were otherways proven by Witneſſes, and the ſame is libel'd to have been ſaid by Sir James before the Act of Indemnity. And Sir James's other Aſſertion, that he was in Trouble, for fear of Prejudice from his Family, cannot infer a Crime, eſpecially againſt the Pannal; and far leſs can it be proven by the Relict and the other Son, who in Sir James's Apprehenſion were deſigning Miſchief againſt him, and for their own Vindication, they would certainly depone partially againſt the Pannal. And the ſame is repeated againſt the other Expreſſions alledged ſpoken by the Mother; and Witneſſes cannot be received to prove what another Witneſs ſaid.

As to the Pretence, that the Pannal refuſed to ſup with his Father the Night before his Death. It is duplyed, the Pannal was not at all in uſe to ſup, except on Sundays-Night. And the Pannal had no Kindneſs for the Miniſter, becauſe he and others of his Gang had endeavoured to keep up Diſcord betwixt him and his Father.

As to the alledged Bleeding of the Corps, the former Defences are opponed; and albeit the Pannal did help to lift his Father's Corps before the Inciſion, yet no Blood did appear till long thereafter that the Inciſion was made, and the Pannal did fall to grip that Part of his Father's Head where the Inciſion was. So that the Blood falling from the Wound, can neither be a Ground nor Preſumption for Guilt; and though the Pannal was ſurpriſed to ſee his Father's Blood, yet the ſame did only proceed from natural Duty and Affection, and not from any Apprehenſion of Guilt. And theſe Qualifications being all libel'd and debated upon, it is humbly deſired for the Pannal, that the Lords of Juſticiary would give a ſeparat Interloquitor upon every particular Qualification.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal adds, That as to the Point of Treaſon, It is offered to be proven, that it was when he was drunk, and after Cups, and is ſo preſumed, eſpecially it being, as it is acknowledged by the Libel, in a drunken Company.

2. As to the Act of Indemnity, it is extended to all Crimes except the Archbiſhop's Murder, and exceptio firmat, regulat, &c. And the Act bears not that Clauſe excepting other Crimes, which uſes to be excepted.

3. As to the Qualifications condeſcended on in my Lord Advocat's Anſwer, either they are libel'd, and ſo oppones the former Anſwer; and if they be not libel'd, they cannot be conſidered as Qualifications.

4. Whereas it is alledged, that the Pannal was in uſe to threaten to cut Throats, when in Paſſion, the Argument is retorted, for though he threatned, nothing followed; and ſo his Threatnings were but verba jactantia.

5. As to the Citation out of Mattheus, that Parties may be puniſhed upon Preſumptions, it is anſwered, that the Caſe there ſtated is where the Perſon who committed the Slaughter was apprehended in the Place where it was committed, That he was all bloody, and with a bloody Sword, anſwerable to the Wound, and that he became pale when he was apprehended, and that he had made no Anſwer, but in Terrour fled away; which are ſuch Acts as do evidently make appear the Slaughter, and could admit of no other Conſtruction; but that cannot be pretended in this Caſe, where all the Preſumptions are remote and extrinſick, and even in the Caſe inſtanced by Mattheus, and others of that Nature, they are only to take Effect in order to an Arbitrary, but not a Capital Puniſhment, which is the Opinion of all Lawers who ever wrote upon the Subject, and particularly Muſcard, de prob. concluſ. 123. Numb. 20, and 31. where the Queſtion is ſtated, An plures præſumptiones conjunguntur? in order to inferr a capital Puniſhment: And he concludes in the Negative, as a general Concluſion by all Lawers, but only to inferr an arbitrary Puniſhment.

As to the bleeding of the Body, it is offered to be proven, that the Pannal touched his Father's Body before the Inciſion, and it did not bleed.

The Lords, Juſtice-General, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, having conſidered the Libel, purſued by his Majeſties Advocat againſt Philip Standsfield the Pannal: And the firſt Part thereof, anent the Treaſon libel'd, they find the ſamen as it is libel'd, relevant to inferr the Pain of Treaſon.

And as to the Pannal's curſing of his Father, mentioned in the Indytement; They find theſe Expreſſions, or either of them, viz. The Devil take him, the Devil rive him, God damn him, relevant to infer the Pain of Death: And repells the Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity, and finds the Pannal is not under, or below the Quality therein ſpecified.

As to the Pannal's murthering of his Father mentioned in the Indytement, they found the Libel as it is libel'd and qualified relevant to inferr the Pain of Death, and remits the ſame with the Qualifications libel'd to the Knowledge of the Aſſiſe, and allowes Witneſſes to be led for the Pannal's proving his Father to have been melancholy the Day before the committing of the Murder, and remits to the Aſſiſe to conſider the Import thereof, if it be proven, and repells the whole other Defences proponed for the Pannal.

The Lords continues the Dyet againſt the ſaid Philip Standsfield, till To-morrow at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon; and ordains him to be carried back to Priſon, and the Witneſſes and Aſſiſes to attend, ilk Perſon under the Pain of 200 Merks.

Edinburgh, the Seventh of February, 1687.

PHilip Standsfield, Priſoner, being this Day entered on Pannal, dilated, indyted and accuſed for the treaſonable drinking of the King's Confuſion, curſing his Father, and for the cruel and unnatural murdering of him in Manner mentioned in this Ditty.

The Interloquitor above-written was this Day read again in Preſence of the Pannal, and the Aſſiſers after-named, viz.

The Aſſize lawfully ſworn, no Objection of the Law in the contrary.

His Majeſty's Advocat for Probation adduced the Witneſſes deponing, viz.

John Robertſon, late Servitor to Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, aged twenty-four Years, unmarried, purged of Malice, Prejudice, Hatred, Ill-will, and partial Counſel, and ſolemnly ſworn, Depones, A little time before Harveſt laſt, the Pannal being in the Kitchin of New-Milns, in the deceaſt Sir James Standsfield's Houſe, where the Deponent was likewiſe preſent, he ſaw the Pannal, Philip Standsfield, take a Cup of Ale, and heard him ſay, there is the Pope's Confuſion, the Antichriſt's, the Chancelour's, and the King's Confuſion, and put the Cup to his Head, and drank a little, and then gave it to Samuel Spofforth, and commanded him to drink it on his Knees; depones, that there were likewiſe beſides Samuel Spofforth, Jeremy Smith, Agnes Bruce, and Elſpeth Jameſon; and depones, that Philip Standsfield, the Pannal, was not drunk at the time; depones, that at the naming of the ſeveral Confuſions above-mentioned, he ſtill drank a little of the Cup; and this is the Truth as he ſhall anſwer to God: The Deponent further depones, that he ſaid to the Pannal, after the drinking of the ſaid Confuſions, that it was Treaſon, and he anſwered, ye Dog, what are you concerned; ye do not underſtand to whom ye ſpeak.

Sic ſubſcribitur, JOHN ROBERTSON.

Agnes Bruce, Servant to the deceaſed Sir James Standsfield, aged twenty-four Years, unmarried, purged and ſworn, depones, That a little before Harveſt laſt, ſhe being in the Kitchin of New-Milns with Philip Standsfield, the Pannal, ſhe ſaw him take a Cup of Ale, and drank the Confuſion of the Pope and the King, and heard him bid Samuel Spofforth ſit down on his Knees and drink the ſame, which accordingly he did; after this the Deponent went up Stairs, and knows no more what paſt at that Time, but heard they drank more Confuſions. Depones, that about a Week after it being talked in the Houſe, that he had drank the Confuſions aforeſaid, he ſaid to the Deponent, God damn him, if he knew who divulged it, he would be their Death: And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God. Depones ſhe cannot write.

Sic ſubſcribitur, LINLITHGOW.

Samuel Spofforth, late Servitor to Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, aged 19 Years, unmarried, purged and ſworn, depones, That a little before Harveſt laſt, the Deponent was in the Kitchin of New-Milns with Philip Standsfield, the Pannal, where he heard him drink a Confuſion to the Pope, Antichriſt, and the King, and to the Devil; and the Pannal preſt the Deponent to drink the ſame Confuſions upon his Knees. Depones, John Robertſon, Agnes Bruce, Jeremy Smith, and Elſpeth Jameſon were all likewiſe preſent at that time, and that theſe Confuſions were drunk ſeverally: And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Sic ſubſcribitur, SAMUEL SPOFFORTH.

John Robertſon, above-deſign'd, being re-examined, purged and ſworn, depones, That the Deponent being at Morum-Caſtle after Harveſt laſt, in order to give a Call to a Miniſter, the Deponent having met with Philip Standsfield, the Pannal, he ſaid to him, Ye are a wiſe Lad; if ye have ſubſcribed that Bond, the Devil take him, and particularly the Devil take his Father, and named his Father. Deponed, that at another time, in the midſt of Harveſt laſt, the Deponent and Sir James Standsfield, the Pannal's Father, being going to Smeitoun with a Miniſter, the Pannal aſked him, where he and his Father was going? and the Deponent anſwered, that he was going to Smeitoun with his Father; and the Pannal, Philip Standsfield, ſaid, Devil, let never one of them come back again, Horſe nor Man. Depones further, That ſeveral times, and frequently, when the Deponent had been ſeeking the Pannal to come to Dinner with his Father, the Pannal's ordinar Anſwer was, the Devil dame him, and you both, and Devil rive him, for I will not go to him, and if he had a Sixpence a Day, he would not go near him, for his Father girned upon him like a Sheeps-head in a Tongs, and that he has heard him ſay ſometimes, God damn his Father: And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Sic ſubſcribitur, JOHN ROBERTSON.

William Scott, Clothier in New-Milns, aged thirty Years, married, purged and ſworn, depones, That between Michaelmaſs and Martinmaſs laſt, the Pannal, Philip Standsfield, having come to the Deponent's Shop, and aſked for ſome Tobacco, the Deponent ſaid to Philip, his Father would not let him want for Money to buy Tobacco; and the Pannal, Philip, ſaid, the Devil take him and his Father both, for there never came an honeſt Man out of Yorkſhire. Depones, his Wife was preſent with him, when that Diſcourſe paſt. Depones he cannot write. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Sic ſubſcribitur, LINLITHGOW.

Agnes Bruce, above-deſigned, being re-examined, purged and ſworn, depones, That ſhe did hear the Pannal uſually vow and ſwear he would kill any Perſon that offended him; and that the Pannal did haunt much with Janet Johnſtoun, George Thomſon and his Wife, and that he went frequently out of his Father's Houſe after Supper to theſe Perſons; and further depones, that ſhe has heard the Pannal frequently curſe his Father, and bid the Devil damn him, and rive him, and ſwell him; and that ſhe has frequently heard him expreſs his Hatred and Abhorrence of his Father, and that he could not abide to ſee his Father. Further depones, that the Monday at Night before Sir James came to Edinburgh, the laſt time he was in it, being about a Fourthnight before his Death, the Deponent was ordered to call the Pannal to his Mother, after he was gone to his Chamber, and that accordingly ſhe did it; and when the Pannal came down, the Deponent left him with his Mother alone; and when ſhe was without the Door, ſhe heard him ſay to his Mother ſeveral times, God damn him, if he did it not; and deſired his Mother to take a good Heart, for as long as he had, ſhe ſhould not want. Depones, ſhe knows not what he meaned by theſe Words, but knows there had been a little Quarrel betwixt Sir James and his his Lady that ſame Night. Further depones, that on Tueſday thereafter, when Sir James Standsfield was going into Edinburgh, ſhe did hear Philip Standsfield, the Pannal, ſay in his Mother's Chamber (his Father not being preſent) God let him never return, God let him never ſee his Father's Face again, the Devil go with him, the Devil rive him, and take him away; and that there was no body in the Room at the Time, but the Pannal and his Mother, and the Deponent was at the Door. Further depones, that about a Month before, Sir James having reproved the Pannal, upon the Occaſion of an Accompt given in by William Anderſon, Brewer, ſhe did hear the Pannal ſay, in his Mother's Chamber, (Sir James not being preſent) God damn him, if he ſhould not do ten times worſe, and that he could not endure to ſee his Father's Face, and that he had hated his Father theſe ſix or ſeven Years. Further depones, that about a Fourthnight or twenty Days before Sir James his Death, it being ſaid that Philip was to go to Town with his Father, ſhe heard him ſay, he would be hang'd e'er he went with him; let him go, the Devil go with him, and let him never return; and this likewiſe in his Mother's Chamber, and in her Preſence. Depones, the Pannal did ordinarly ſhift Occaſions of being in his Father's Company. Depones, that the Friday before Sir James his Death, ſhe knows the Pannal and Janet Johnſtoun were a conſiderable Time together in the Pannal's Chamber, where the Deponent heard Janet Johnſtoun's Tongue, but doth not know if George Thomſon and his Wife were with them. Depones, that on the Wedneſday before Sir James his Death, Philip having curſed ſome of the Servants, the Deponent ſaid to him, God be thanked, he was not their Maſter; and that he anſwered her with an Oath, ſhe knew not how ſoon he might be their Maſter: And further depones, that ſhe thought Sir James not ſo merry as his ordinar the Night before his Death, but that he conveyed Mr. Bell to his Chamber, and thereafter came down to his own; and the Deponent having deſired to ſpeak with Sir James, his Servant, John Robertſon, told her ſhe could not, becauſe his Chamber-Door was ſhut, and he was gone to Bed; and that ſhe did then ſee Light in his Roum, and when ſhe was going away, found the Hall-Door, which was without his Chamber-Door, ſhut, and that the Hall-Door was not uſually cloſed in the Night time, except Sir James had done it himſelf, and which he did but once in two or three Nights. Depones, that on the Saturday's Night when Sir James came Home, he did go to his Ladies Chamber, where he ſtayed not a Quarter of an Hour, and that his Lady fell a quarreling of him for going to another Houſe before he came there, and that the Deponent came out of the Chamber, and knows not what more paſt there. Depones, the next Morning, when Sir James was miſt, the Deponent went into his Roum to put on a Fire, and found the Bed better ſpread up than it uſed to be, and the Curtains more drawn about it, and the Candle, which uſually was at the Bed-head, ſhe found it ſtanding on a Chair at the Bed-foot. And further depones, that when the Defunct's Body was bringing up to the Houſe, the Deponent would have had him brought to his own Chamber; but Philip ſwore that the Body ſhould not enter there, for he had not died like a Man, but like a Beaſt. Depones, that the Body was then put in the Walk-Miln (but knows not if Philip cauſed do it) and that the Body from that was brought to a Cellar within the Cloſs, where there was very little Light. Depones, that ſhe did not ſee any Water come out of his Mouth, and that when the Deponent lifted up the Linnen-ſheet, which was over him in the Cellar, ſome of them cauſed let it down again, for it was not fit to let the Body be ſeen. Depones, that Janet Johnſtoun was preſent with the Body in the Cellar with the reſt, and though it was known that neither Sir James nor his Lady would look upon her for a good Time before, nor was ſhe openly ſeen about the Houſe, yet that Morning ſhe went to the Ladies Chamber, as ſoon as the Body was taken out, and the Deponent was preſent and ſaw her come in, and well enough taken with. Depones, ſhe heard Philip, after his Father's Death, Greet and Cry, but ſaw no Tears. Depones, immediately after his Father's Body was found, he would have forced his Father's Chamber-Door, it being ſhut; but the Key being gotten, it was opened, and he entred in, and firſt took his Father's Gold and Money out of his Pocket, and then got the Keys, and ſearched the Cabinet; and that within an Hour after his Father was brought from the Water, he got the Buckles of his Father's Shoes, and put them in his. Depones, that on the Monday after Sir James's Death, the Lady and Janet Johnſtoun having quarrelled together about ſome Remains of the Holland of the Woonding-ſheet, Philip came down out of his own Chamber, and the Deponent heard him ſay to Janet Johnſtoun, Hold your Peace, when I command you, for he would reward her well for the Kindneſs ſhe had done to him at that time. Depones, that when the Order came from Edinburgh to raiſe the Corps again, the Deponent did meet George Thomſon the Taylor, and perceived him ſhaking and trembling, and aſked him what troubled him? And that his Anſwer, was, he heard the blackeſt News that ever he heard in his Life, for Sir James's Body was to be raiſed again, and ſaid he would ſew no more in the Houſe of New-Milns for the World, and carried the Mournings to his own Houſe. Depones, ſhe knows nothing of falſe Keys made uſe of about the Houſe, only ſhe heard the Lady ſay, that there were. Depones, Philip had no lockfaſt Place in the Houſe, except a little Coffer, and that it once being opened, the Deponent did ſee ſeveral Keys within it, and that he offered once the Key of one of the Roums to the Deponent, but the Deponent took it not, becauſe ſhe had the ordinar Key of the Roum. Depones, that Philip was in uſe to ly alone, but that after his Father's Death, he would not ly in a Roum alone at New-Milns, and that he declared to the Deponent, that he was afraid to be alone in a Roum, either Night or Day, and that he ſleept not the Night after his Father died, and that he ſhould not go into the Roum where his Father lay, if once he had the Cabinet out of it. Depones, that a ſhort time before Sir James died, the Lady having fallen in a Swond, and the Deponent having told Philip of it, Philip came to his Mother's Chamber, and that his Mother told him then, that he was like in a ſhort Time to loſe his Mother; and that he anſwered, in the Deponent's hearing, that his Father ſhould be dead firſt: And depones, that ſome few Days thereafter, in his Mother's Chamber again, and in the Deponent's hear-hearing, he renewed the ſame Words with an Oath: Further depones, that two Nights after Sir James's Death, the Lady told to the Deponent, that ſomething then came in her Mind which ſhe had heard, to wit, that Philip, before he went to London, when he was in his Pomp, having heard that Sir James was to give his Eſtate to his ſecond Son, in the Houſe of James Smith in the Nungate, had vowed to kill his Brother, and the like, or little leſs to his Father; and that thereafter when they were coming into Edinburgh, the Lady renewed again to the Deponent the ſame Words, and added, what if they ſhould put her Bairn in Priſon? And this is the Truth, as ſhe ſhall anſwer to God. Depones ſhe cannot write,

Sic ſubſcribitur, LINLITHGOW.

John Shand, ſometimes Servitor to Sir James Standsfield, aged 43 Years, unmarried, purged, and ſworn, depones, That a little after Philip Standsfield, the Pannal's Marriage, the Pannal and Deponent being in James Smith's Houſe, in Nungate of Haddingtoun, the Pannal did expoſtulat with the Deponent, that his Father dealt too narrowly with him, he being then married; and the Deponent told the Pannal that his Father was in Straits, and exhorted him to be dutiful to his Father; thereafter the Pannal ſaid, if I knew my Father would give his Eſtate to my Brother John, I would cut his Throat; and the Landlord of the Houſe being by, and preſent, and ſurprized, cryed out, God preſerve me, what means the Man! the Landlord underſtanding by the Word His, his Father: And though the Deponent took the Expreſſion in the ſame Senſe as James Smith did, yet the Deponent endeavoured to excuſe it, by ſaying it was not his Father that he meaned, but his Brother, or his Man Donald; and the Pannal being preſent, ſaid nothing for clearing of the Expreſſion; whereupon the Deponent went away, and left the Pannal, and could not endure to ſtay longer in his Company: Depones, the Night before Sir James's Death, being the Friday, the Deponent was with Sir James in his Chamber, in Edinburgh, where the Defunct was reading a Sermon-Book, and appeared to be ſad, and ſaid to the Deponent, I have no Comfort in my Wife and Family. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Sic ſubſcribitur, JOHN SHAND.

Mr. Roderick Mckenzie, Advocate, being ſolemnly ſworn and purged, depones, That about eight Dayes before Sir James Standsfield's Death, the Deponent and he having met in the Parliament-Cloſs, the Defunct invited him to take his Morning-Draught. And when they were gone to Mr. Sheil's Houſe, the Deponent perceiving him to be in ſome Concern, the Deponent aſked him, what troubled him? The Defunct anſwered, that he had no Satisfaction at Home: Whereupon the Deponent ſaid, that People reported that he was partly the Occaſion of it, having diſheriſhed his Son the Pannal, and acquainted him therewith: And the Defunct anſwered, ye do not know my Son, for he is the greateſt Debauch in the Earth: And that which troubles me moſt is, that he twice attempted my own Perſon: And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Archibald Dunbar, Merchand in Edinburgh, aged 26 Years, married, purged, and ſworn, depones, That the Deponent having met with the deceaſt Sir James Standsfield at Culter; but he does not remember poſitively the Time, but it was either in the Year of this King's Parliament, or the Harveſt before; and Sir James and the Deponent, and ſome other Company being in an Roum, Sir James was diſcourſing of his Son's Undutyfulneſs, and within a little while having heard a Shot at the Utter-door of the Houſe, and the Deponent and others offering to go out to ſee what the Matter was, Sir James was unwilling to let them, leſt they ſhould come to hazard. And thereafter having heard another Shot, they did offer to go down again, and Sir James ſtill diſſwaded them, and ſaid, that it might be his diſtracted Son Philip. And they having enquired if he was in the Country, and how he came to fear any harm from him, Sir James ſaid, he believed he was in the Country, and that in his going South, he had followed him to Lothian-burn, and ſhot two Piſtols, firſt one, and then another at him; and if it had not been that Sir James was well horſed, and his Son Philip upon a Work-Horſe, he had killed him. And Samuel Menzies having ſaid, he was ſure there could not be Ball in them; Sir James ſaid, he had gotten too many Proofs of his Son's Unnaturality to him, that he had no will to be in his Reverence. Depones, that Sir James all that Night went not to Bed, and the Deponent ſat up with him, and conveyed him into Edinburgh. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Mr. William Clerk, Advocat, purged, and ſworn, depones, That having frequent Occaſions to be with Sir James Standsfield, and he having deſired him to draw a Diſpoſition of his Eſtate to his Son John, Sir James did complain of his Son Philip's Undutyfulneſs to him: And the Deponent having diſſwaded him to do it, ſince his Son Philip might be reclaimed; Sir James ſaid, no, for he had no Expectation of it; for when he was at the Lead-hills, there was ſome Piſtol ſhot at him, which he was ſure came from his Son Philip. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Follows the Tenor of the ſaid Declaration.

The Declaration of Mr. John Bell, in anſwer to ſeveral Interrogatories propoſed by his Majeſties Advocat before the Lords of the Committee of the Council.

Imprimis, I declare, that at Sir James Standsfield's earneſt Deſire, I went from this Town with him to New-Milns; and that by the Way I diſcerned nothing but ſound Judgment, and Reaſon in Sir James, for his Diſcourſe was both rational and pertinent, and that both at Supper that Night, and after Supper, his Diſcourſe was rational, and his Carriage moſt civil, and was pleaſed to accompany me to my Chamber, and ſat with me there (as I ſuppoſed) until it was about ten o'Clock at Night, diſcourſing pertinently, and to good Purpoſe.

2. I declare, that having ſlept but little, I was awakened in Fear by a Cry (as I ſuppoſed) and being being waking, I heard for a Time a great Dinn, and confuſed Noiſe of ſeveral Voices, and Perſons ſometimes walking, which affrighted me (ſuppoſing them to be evil wicked Spirits) and I apprehended the Voices to be near the Chamber-door ſometimes, or in the Tranſe, or Stairs, and ſometimes below, which put me to ariſe in the Night, and bolt the Chamber-door further, and to recommend myſelf by Prayer, for Protection and Preſervation to the Majeſtie of God: And having gone again to Bed, I heard theſe Voices continue, but more laigh, till within a little Time they came about to the Chamber-Window; and then I heard the Voice as high as before, which increaſed my Fear, and made me riſe again to look over the Window, to ſee whether they were Men or Women; but the Window would not come up for me, which Window looked to the Garden, and Water, whither the Voices went on till I heard them no more, only towards the Morning I heard walking on the Stairs, and in the Tranſe above that Chamber where I was lying.

3. I declare, that I told the Women who put on my Fire in my Chamber that Sabbath-Morning, that I had reſted little that Night, through Dinn I heard; and that I was ſure there were evil Spirits about that Houſe that Night.

4. I declare, that about an Hour after Day, Philip came to my Chamber, and aſked if Sir James came to that Chamber this Morning, and told me that he had been ſeeking him upon the Bank of the Water: Unto which I replyed, I have not ſeen your Father; but what mean ye by the Banks of the Water? Whereupon Philip, without anſwering, went down Stairs immediately, and within a little Time I followed to ſee what he meaned; and having gone without the Gate, and up the Cawſey that leads to the Manufactory, one came running, and ſaid, they had found Sir James lying in the Water: Whereupon I was ſtricken with ſuch Aſtoniſhment, Fear, and Trembling, that I could go no further, but returned trembling to the Chamber; and having ſitten down on the Bed-ſide, I ſaid to an honeſt Man, who accompanied me, this is the ſaddeſt Day that ever I ſaw: My Affrightment in the Night was terrifying to me, but this is more grievous. And having gone to an honeſt Man's Houſe, where I took Horſe that Morning, I ſaid, if the Majeſtie of God did ever permit the Devil and his Inſtruments to do a honeſt Man wrong, then Sir James Standsfield has received Wrong, this laſt Night, which the Lord will diſcover in his good Time.

5. I declare, that after my return from Morum, that Sabbath-Evening, Philip told me that he had advertiſed ſeveral Friends at Edinburgh, and that he was expecting the Commiſſary amongſt others that Night: Whereupon I commended what he had done, in ſending for ſuch intelligent Perſons, and that for two Reaſons. (1.) becauſe it was neceſſary his Father's Body ſhould be ſighted; (2.) becauſe they could adviſe him about his Burial. Philip anſwered, that he was ſeen by theſe that took him out of the Water. But I replyed, that was not enough, for the Murder committed was either a violent Murder, or a diſtracted Murder; and having deſcribed what a diſtracted Murder was (upon Philip's relating ſome Diſtemper his Father had been in ſome Years formerly) I ſaid, that I conceived no Perſon could come to ſuch a high Act of Frenzie, to do ſuch a Thing, but it would be known on him many Hours, yea ſome Days before; but I could teſtifie, that Sir James was in his right Reaſon at ten o'Clock; wherefore I inclin'd to think it was a violent Murder committed by wicked Spirits; and ſo adviſed that the Corps might be ſighted by the neareſt Phyſicians and Friends, and the honeſt Men living in that Town: Nevertheleſs, they went and buried Sir James that Night, without either acquainting me, or ſeveral honeſt Perſons who lived in the Place. Mr. John Bell depones his above written Declaration in Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

Sir Robert Sinclair of Steinſtoun, purged and ſworn, depones, Sir James Standsfield being at the Deponent's Houſe, told the Deponent, that he regrated that his Son Philip had miſpent his Time and Money; and when he came home from London, he was aſhamed to tell how he came on him in his Chamber at London; and this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

James Murehead, Chirurgion, aged 32 Years, married, purged and ſworn, depones, That after the Deponent and James Craufurd, Chirurgion, had opened the Corps about the Neck, and ſewed it up again, and removed the foul Linnen, and put on again the clean Linnens, in doing whereof they were obliged to ſhake the Body to and fro, and move the Head back and forward, the Deponent deſired that the Friends might lift the Body, and put it in the Coffin, and that the Pannal, having come and lift up the Head, he did let it fall upon the Table ſuddenly, and that it made a conſiderable Noiſe at falling, and that the Pannal retired back quickly, rubbing his Hands on his Breaſt, and crying, O God! O God! and ſome ſuch other Words; and that the Deponent being aſtoniſhed thereat, looked to the Corps, and as the Pannal did take away his Hand from it, did ſee it darting out Blood through the Linnen, from the left Side of the Neck which the Pannal touched, and that the Deponent was amazed at the Sight, partly through the darting out of the Blood, and partly through the Apprehenſion he had of the Murder. Depones, he ſaw no body touch the left Side of the Defunct's Head the Time it bled, but the Pannal. Depones, that as ſoon as the Deponent recovered out of his Amazement, he cryed to the Boy, to give the Pannal ſome Triacle-Water, which he did; but depones he did not ſee Philip the Pannal return again to the Body of his Father. Depones, when the Deponent and the other Chirurgion were putting on the clean Linnens, and ſtirring and moving the Head and Craig, he ſaw no Blood at all. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

James Murehead, and James Craufurd, Chirurgions, give in their Report and Declaration in Write, anent the Murder of Umquhile Sir James Standsfield, which they renewed upon Oath, in Preſence of the Juſtices and Aſſiſers, and whereof the Tenor follows:

Edinburgh, December 1, 1687. { November 30, 1687. We viewed the Corps in Morum Church.

We, under Subſcribers, James Craufurd and James Murehead, Chirurgions in Edinburgh, having Order from Sir John Dalrymple, his Majeſties Advocat, to go to Morum, and there to take up the Corps of of Sir James Standsfield, and to ſight and view the ſame exactly, and, if need were, to open up the Body, and to conſider whether there appeared any Evidence of Wounds, Bruiſes, or Strangling upon the Corps, beſides what might have happened by his falling or drowning in the Water, &c. In Obedience thereto, we cauſed take up the ſaid Corps, and in Preſence of Philip Standsfield, Mr. Andrew Melvil, Miniſter of Morum, James Hamilton, Writer to the Signet, James Row and Alexander Campbel, Merchands in Edinburgh, Umphray Spurway, James Dick, James Mitchel, and John Robertſon, Indwellers in New-Milns, and ſome others, having with all poſſible Exactneſs viewed the Corps, we obſerved the Face a little ſwelled, and inclining to a dark reddiſh Colour, ſome Fulneſs of ſome capillarie Veins in the Pallat of the Mouth towards the Uvula, as alſo a large and conſpicuous Swelling, about three Inches broad, of a dark red or blae Colour, from one Side of the Larinx round backwards to the other Side thereof; we obſerved the Jugular Veins on both Sides the Neck very large and diſtended, and full of Blood; there was a large Swelling under and betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis; there was alſo a little Scratch below the left Mandibula, which had rankled the Cuticula, and made ſome little Impreſſion on the Cutis: Having made Inciſion from the Chin down about the Larinx, and croſs upon the Swelling of the Neck, we found a greater Laxneſs and Diſtance (as we think) than ordinary betwixt the Cartilago Scutiformis and Os Hyoides; we found the Tumour on the Neck, containing bruiſed, like dark or blackiſh Blood; the Jugulars, when cut, bled conſiderably, eſpecially that on the left Side.

Having opened his Breaſt, we found the Lungs diſtended to the filling up their Capacities, but free of Water: his Stomach, Liver, &c. were all in good Condition; we found no Water within the Corps; the Corps had no Smell at all; the Breaſt, Belly, Privy-Parts, &c. were all well coloured, there was no Swelliag in his Belly, nor any thing by ordinary to be ſeen on his Head. This we atteſt, and ſubſcribe with our Hands.

Follows the Chirurgions of Edinburgh their Opinion anent the ſaid Murder.

WE, under Subſcribers, Chirurgions in Edinburgh, having fully conſidered the Report made by James Craufurd, and James Murehead, concerning the Condition of the Corps of Sir James Standsfield, and though it be not uſual to declare more than Matter of Fact, yet in Obedience to your Lordſhips Commands, where ye deſire to be informed, if theſe Symptoms, found upon the Body, do import Drowning or Strangling; we humbly offer our Opinion, ſo far as our Art or Experience will allow. And whereas the Report informs us, that there was found a Swelling, and preternatural Redneſs in the Face, a large conſpicuous Tumour, about three Inches broad, of a dark red, or black Colour, from the one Side of the Larinx round backwards to the other Side thereof, a large Swelling betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis, the Jugular Veines, on both Sides very large and diſtended; and when Inciſion was made downwards, betwixt the Os Hyoid and Larinx was obſerved a Laxnes, and Diſtance between the Os Hyoid and the Cartilago Scutiformis, Inciſion was made croſs alongſt the Tumour, it was found full of bruiſed Blood; the Jugulars likeways, when opened, yielding a conſiderable Quantity of Blood, eſpecially on the left Side, no Smell or Corruption appearing in any Part of the Body. It is very probable theſe Parts have ſuffered ſome external Violence, which hath made them appear ſo far different from their natural Figure and Colour, and could not be cauſed by Drowning ſimply. As to the other Part of the Report, the Breaſt and Belly being opened, the Lungs found diſtended, the Bronchi full of Air, without any Water, nor any Water found in the Stomach or Inteſtines, a Body, when drowned, being generally found to have much Water in it, with other Circumſtances of the Report conſidered, gives juſt Ground to think he was not drowned. This we ſubſcribe at Edinburgh, the 3d Day of February, 1687. Sic ſubſcribitur,

Follows

I Umphray Spurway of New-Milns, Clothier, being ſummoned to appear before the Lords of his Majeſties Privy-Council in Edinburgh, the 6th of December 1687, to declare my Kuowledge of what I had ſeen, and heard, relating to the Death of Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, did then and there declare before the ſaids Lords, as hereafter followeth: And after declaring what I had to ſay, was commanded to commit to writing my ſaid Declaration, under my own Hand, which I the aforeſaid Umphray Spurway do hereby humbly offer to the above-ſaid Lords of his Majeſties Council, ſubſcribing the ſame with my own Hand.

About ſix Weeks before the Death of Sir James Standsfield, after Night I went to pay my Reſpects to Sir James, as I uſually did when he was at New-Milns, at which time I found him not ſo free for Diſcourſe, nor ſo pleaſant as at other times: Inſomuch that I uſed that Freedom with him, to Quere the Reaſon why his Honour was ſo melancholy? Who, with a great Sigh, wringing his Hands together, with Tears trickling down his Cheeks, ſaid, Mr. Spurway, I have great Cauſe for it; I have born my own Burden, without complaining to others, but I have a very wicked Family, and it's very ſad, that a Man ſhould be deſtroyed by his own Bowels; but let me be never ſo ſparing in my Expence, both at home and abroad, yet they at home of my Family conſume me; condeſcending on ſome Particulars, of ſome extravagant Sums of Money, monethly brought in to him, that his Family had expended beſides what he allowed for them, which was very ſufficient: But that which grieved him moſt was, that his youngeſt Son, whom he had ſome comfortable Hopes of, and upon whom he had ſettled his Eſtate upon, his juſt Debts being firſt payed, and that to the Knowledge of his Son; but now he was fruſtrated of his Hopes of that Son too; for his eldeſt Son had debauched his youngeſt Son, who had ſeveral Times of late come in drunk, as the other: This he declared to me with very great Grief of Heart. But the Saturday's-Night after Sir James, and a Miniſter, one Mr. Bell, came to New-Milns from Edinburgh, I came in at the Houſe of one James Marr, where I ſaw Sir James and Mr. Bell ſitting by the Fire, before he had been at his own Houſe, which I wondred at, having never known the like done by him before; but ſince, I have had my Thoughts, that he had a Fear upon him (good Gentleman) of going to his own Houſe; but having ſat ſome time with him, he deſired Mr. Marr to ſend one of his People at his Houſe, to know, if they had kindled a Fire for him; and upon the Return, the Meſſenger gave this Anſwer, May it pleaſe your Honour, your Fire is kindled for you; upon which Sir James, and the Miniſter aroſe, and took their leave of Mr. Marr; and I alſo accompanied Sir James and the Miniſter half the Way toward his Home, and ſo took my leave of him, wiſhing his Honour a good Night. But the next Morning, being Sabbath-Day, after the Light well appeared, one Agnes Bruce came at my Chamber-door, and knocked. I went and opened the Door. Says ſhe, Sir, Sir James is gone out of his Lodging-Roum this Morning, and we have ſought all the Roums of the Houſe for him, but cannot find him. She goes off, I immediately followed her, and when I came out of my Door, I met with Mr. Philip Standsfield, and James Dick. Mr. Standsfield declares to me, Lord, Mr. Spurway, what ſhould be the Cauſe of this Man's Diſcontent, that he ſhould thus leave his Lodgings, and walk out? To which I replyed, Sir, do you wonder the Cauſe of his Diſcontent, who never gave him Content, but had been the Cauſe of grieving him, from one to the other of them, ever ſince I knew the Family? But he turned his Back upon me, and made no Reply at all; however I went at Sir James's Houſe, but could not procure the Keys of neither of the Gardens, and I ſent abroad of Sir James's Servants, and of my own, ſome on Horſeback, and ſome on Foot, to inquire after him: At laſt a Servant of mine, one William Bowman, found him in the River, a little be Weſt the Town. I went at the Place, and ſaw him lying about two Yeards, or eight Foot from the Brink of the River, lying upon his Belly, juſt at the Top of the Water, as it were floating, only his Coat and Weſtcoat looſe about him, and a Shirt on him that I ſaw. I ſaw the Place at the Brink of the River, where ſome one had ſtood all beaten to maſh with Feet, and the Ground very open and mellow, although a very hard froſty Morning; ſo I gave Order to ſome to get a Ladder, and to ſet one End into the River, as near the hinder Part of Sir James as they could, and the other End of the Ladder to fall at the Top of the Brae, which was very ſteep, and ſo they might get him out eaſily; ſo I came away from the Place, and deſired Mr. Marr to ſee the Body landed, declaring that I would go home, and write to Mr. George Hume, Merchand in Edinburgh, of the ſad Sight which I had ſeen, deſiring him to communicat the ſame to my Lord Advocat, with Deſire to know by the Meſſenger his Lordſhip's Pleaſure, what of Advice or Direction he would be pleaſed to give concerning it, and it ſhould be followed: But the Meſſenger that I ſent, after he had delivered my Letter to Mr. Hume, and Order given by Commiſſary Dalrymple how to proceed further with the Body of Sir James, which Order was directed to myſelf by a Letter, which when I read the Letter, the Contents was: That I ſhould endeavour to procure two or three diſcreet Perſons of New-Milns to myſelf, and we together view the Body of Sir James; and if we found no Grounds to believe that his Perſon had been wronged by others, that then with all ſpeed he ſhould be buried, and that as privatly, and with as little Noiſe as could be: But this Letter which was the Commiſſary's Order to me, was ſent by the Hand of one James Mitchel, Kinſman to Sir James; for that Horſe that the Expreſs rode on to Edinburgh, was taken out of the Stable, where he was ſet up: And one Mr. Patrick Smith, the Brother-in-Law of Sir James Standsfield, mounted on him to come for New-Milns: So that my Expreſs was thereby diſabled to bring me the Anſwer of my Letter; and the ſaid James Mitchel, who brought my Letter, came home at the Place by Nine of the Clock that Sabbath-Day at Night, and gave an Account of the Letter that he had for me; but they diſſwaded him from bringing it me, ſo that I had it not till three Hours after Sir James was buried. But upon Monday Morning, I aroſe about three or four of the Clock; and coming out of my Houſe, I ſaw great Lights at Sir James's Gate, which occaſioned my going down to ſee what the Matter was; and as I went, I met with one William Robinſon, coming up of Home; I aſked what the Meaning was of theſe Lights, and of the Horſes that I then ſaw at Sir James's Gate? Who anſwered me, That Sir James's Corps were brought out at the Gate, and that they were carrying it at Morum, to be buried, having received Orders from my Lord Advocat for that Purpoſe. At which I returned to my Houſe, thinking it very ſtrange thus to proceed without having had the Corps viewed by ſome Perſon, as I well knew was cuſtomary in England in ſuch Caſes. The next Step, to my Remembrance, was, That upon the Tueſday Night following, after I was in Bed, one Mr. Alexander Campbell in Edinburgh, with one Mr. James Row, and an Gentleman, one Mr. Hamilton, with two Chirurgions, came at my Houſe, and cauſed me to riſe out of my Bed, ſhowing me an Order, which they had from my Lord Advocat, for the taking up again the Body of Sir James Standsfield, and commanded me to make ready to go with them; and having ſeen the Order, readily ſubmitted thereunto, and when coming upon the Place at Morum, cauſed the ſaid Grave to be opened, and the Coffin taken up. It was carried into the Church, and there opened; and as ſoon as Sir James's Grave-Cloaths were taken off him, and all his upper Parts uncovered, home to his Privy-parts, methought his Face looked not as I expected, nor as others had inſinuated, that were at the dreſſing of him at firſt; for they ſaid, that his Body and Face was very fair and freſh; but I found his Face, at firſt View, of another Complexion, being blackiſh, with ſome Strakes of red, like ſtanding, or rather ſtrangled Blood; and under his left Ear I ſaw a ſwelling home to his Throat, of a blackiſh red Colour. After this I ſaw the Chirurgions opening his Body, beginning at the Top of his Chin, and ſo down to the Pit of his Stomach, and then cut his Skin on both ſides his Throat, towards each Ear, and coming at the Place near his left Ear, that I ſaw ſwoln, I there ſaw of corroded or congealed Blood, lying a Lump of a great Thickneſs, and two or three Inches long, which proved to me he had been ſtrangled: And one Thing more I obſerved, that when Mr. Murehead put off his Cap at firſt from his Head, in ſlipping it back, Sir James's Eye-lids opened, and his Eyes appeared, but his Eye-lids much ſwoln, and very red, which did alſo prove to me a Symptom of Strangling.

This being done, and his Breaſt opened, ſo that his Intrals appeared, and to me ſeemed in good Order, and no Appearance of Water in his Body, neither then, nor when firſt he was taken out of the River: The like, I think, has not been ever known by any Man that caſt himſelf, or that has been caſt into a River alive, and not to have his Body full of Water; nor that ever a dead Man ſhould lie at the Top of the Water, where no running Stream is, but a ſtill Water, of about five Foot deep: But to me in this it ſhowes, that as God is a Wonder-working God, ſo he has in this ſhowen no leſs, to convince Men, that this worthy Gentleman murdered not himſelf, but was murdered.

But my laſt Obſervation was of a Wonder more, that the Lord did ſhow, when the Chirurgions had cauſed the Body of Sir James to be by their Servants ſewen up again, and his Grave-Cloathes put on. A Speech was made to this purpoſe; It is requiſit now, that thoſe of Sir James Standsfield's Relations, and neareſt Friends, ſhould take him off from the Place where now he lyes, and lift him into his Coffin. So I ſaw Mr. James Row at the left Side of Sir James's Head and Shoulder, and Mr. Philip Standsfield at the right Side of his Head and Shoulder; and going to lift off the Body, I ſaw Mr. Philip drop the Head of his Father upon the Furm, and much Blood in Hand, and himſelf flying off from the Body, crying, Lord, have Mercy upon me! or upon us! wipeing off the Blood on his Cloaths, and ſo lay himſelf over a Seat in the Church, ſome ſuppoſing that he would ſwarff or ſwoun away, called for a Bottle of Water for him. After this we went for Morum-Caſtle, where Mr. Philip Standsfield, my ſelf, and ſeveral others, ſtayed until it was Day: In which time I challenged Mr. Philip for his Unkindneſs to me, by his not inviting me to accompany the Corps of his Father, when firſt buried, knowing the Intimacy that there was betwixt his Father and my ſelf; and that of all the People in or about the Town, his Father delighted in no one's Company as in mine; and that he did not give me Notice of his Burial, that I might do my laſt Office of Love and Service to him, by accompanying his Body to his Burial-place; I took it very ill from him. So then Mr. Philip ſwore, that he had ſent two of his Servants to invite me, but if thoſe damn'd Rogues would not do it, what could he help it? and yet did declare, as is proved, and as himſelf ſince confeſs'd before my Lord Advocat, that he would not invite me, aſſigning this as his Reaſon, ſuppoſing that my ſelf and James Marr had been Inſtruments of ſetting his Father againſt him, which was a falſe Suggeſtion. All which Particulars I have before the Lords of his Majeſties honourable Privy Council declared: So, by their Command, I have in this Sheet of Paper written it over with my own Hand, and do hereby ſubſcribe my Name, the ſixth of December, 1687.

John Topping in Monkrig, aged twenty-five Years, married, purged, and ſworn, depones, That upon the Sabbath-Morning after Sir James Standsfield's Death, the Deponent coming from Monkrig to New-

New-Milns, by the ſide of the Water, he diſcovered a Body floating, and ſaw Philip Standsfield looking to that Place of the Water where the Body was, and the Deponent aſked the Pannal, whoſe Body that was in the Water? And the Pannal made no anſwer; and when he came to New-Milns, he heard that Sir James's Body was found in the Water. Depones, he ſaw the Body taken out of the Water, and went alongſt with it, near to the Walk-Milns, but obſerved no Water come from the Body. This is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God. Depones he cannot write.

James Dick, in New-Milns, aged fourty-ſeven Years, married, purged and ſworn; depones, That the Pannal, Philip Standsfield, and the Deponent, being at Morum, after taking up of the Corps, and diſcourſing about the finding of the Body in the Water, the Deponent ſaid to the Pannal, that he ſaw ſomething in the Water, when they were ſearching after Sir James, but he did not ſuppoſe it to be Sir James's Body, and the Pannal ſaid, I ſaw him before any of you. Depones, that he ſaw the Body after it was taken out of the Water at the Brink of the Brae, and went alongſt with the Body a Piece of the Way, and obſerved no Water come from the Mouth. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to God.

His Majeſties Advocat deſired that James Thomſon, Son to George Thomſon in New-Milns, and Anna Mark, Daughter to Janet Johnſtoun, Spouſe to the ſaid James Thomſon, might be examined as Witneſſes againſt the Pannal, for proving his Acceſſion to his Father's Murder. And the Procurators for the Pannal having alledged, that the foreſaid Perſons were but Children, and ſo not by Law capable to be Witneſſes, the Boy not being above thirteen Years of Age, and the Girl not above ten Years.

The Lords Juſtice General, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, refuſed to receive them as Witneſſes; but in regard the Perſons on the Inqueſt earneſtly deſired the ſaid James Thomſon and Anna Mark might be examined, anent their Knowledge of the Pannal's Acceſſion to the forſaid Murder, they allowed the forenamed Perſons their Declarations to be taken for clearing of the Aſſiſe. And accordingly the ſaid James Thomſon being examined in Preſence of the Juſtices and Inqueſt, declared as after follows; That Janet Johnſtoun came to George Thomſon's Houſe betwixt nine and ten at Night, and Philip Standsfield, the Pannal, came there ſhortly thereafter: and the Houſe being dark, the ſaid Philip gave the Declarant a Turnor to buy a Candle, which he did in the neighbouring Houſe, and after the Declarant returned with the Candle, his Mother ordered him to go to his Bed, which was in the ſame Roum, and beat him becauſe he did not preſently obey. Declares he heard one come to the Door, and enquire for Janet Johnſtoun, and deſired her to come home, and give her Child ſuck. Declares, he knew by the Voice that the Perſon who came was Agnes Mark, the ſaid Janet's Daughter, and that Janet ordered her to go away, and ſhe ſhould follow her. Declares, ſhe ſtayed a conſiderable Time thereafter, and the ſaid Thomſon's Wife was deſired to go for a Pint of Ale, and Philip took out a handful of Money to ſee if he had any ſmall Money, and finding he had none, the Ale was taken on upon Truſt. Furder declares, that the ſaid George Thomſon and his Wife, and Janet Johnſtoun did ſtay together, and whiſper ſoftly a conſiderable Time. Declares, he heard Philip Standsfield complain that his Father would not give him Money, and pray the Devil take his Father, and God damn his own Soul, if he ſhould not make an End of his Father, and then all would be his, and then he would be kind to them. Declares, Philip Standsfield and Janet Johnſtoun went away about Eleven, and ſhortly after his Father and Mother came to the Bed where the Declarant was lying croſs the Bedfoot; and the Declarant in the Night-time perceived his Father and Mother riſing out of the Bed, and going out of the Houſe, and that they ſtayed a conſiderable Time away, about an Hour and an half, or two Hours, and that the Declarant was perfectly awake when they went and were away, and he wondred what they were going about. Declares, his Mother came in firſt, and came ſoftly to Bed, and within ſome time after his Father came in, and put a Stool to the back of the Door, without locking it, for the Lock made always a great Noiſe when they locked the Door, and the Declarant's Father called to him whenever he came in, but the Declarant made no Anſwer, that it might be thought he was ſleeping; and his Mother aſked, what had ſtayed his Father? And thereupon his Father and Mother did fall a diſcourſing of ſeveral things, and particularly his Father ſaid, that the Deed was done, and that Philip Standsfield guarded the Chamber-door, with a drawen Sword and a bendet Piſtol, and that he never thought a Man would have died ſo ſoon, and that they carried him out towards the Water-ſide, and they tyed a Stone about his Neck, and leaving him there, came back to the little Kiln, and reckoned whether they ſhould caſt him in the Water with the Stone about his Neck or not, and whether they ſhould caſt him in far in or near the ſide, and at length they returned and took away the Stone from about his Neck, and threw him in the Water. Declares, his Father ſaid, that yet he was afraid, for all that, that the Murder would come out, and his Mother anſwered, Hout, Fool, there is no Fear of that; it will be thought he has drowned himſelf, becauſe he will be found in the Water. Declares, when Sir James was miſſing in the Morning, the Declarant's Mother ſaid to his Father, Riſe quickly, for if ye be found in your Bed, they will ſay, that ye have a Hand in the Murder. Declares, the Coat and Waſtecoat which were upon Sir James when he was found in the Water, were ſent to Thomſon's Houſe, and Thomſon's Wife ſaid to her Huſband and Janet Johnſtoun, in Preſence of the Declarant, that ſhe was affrighted to ſee the ſaid Coat and Waſtecoat, for ſhe thought that ſome evil Spirit was in it, and deſired her Huſband to ſend it away, which he would not: And further, that his Mother ſaid to her Huſband, in the Declarant's hearing, that ſhe was affrighted to be in the Houſe alone after Night fell; and, accordingly, when ever her Huſband went out, ſhe went out with him, which was not her ordinary. Declares, the ſaid George Thomſon did go into Edinburgh ſeveral Days before the Declarant's Mother was brought in, and ſhe did immediately after he came into Edinburgh ſend away Sir James's Coat and Waſtecoat, and that ſhe was never in her own Houſe after after Night, ſince her Huſband came in, but did lie in Janet Johnſtoun's Houſe.

Sic ſubſcribitur, LINLITHGOW, I.P.D.

Anna Mark, Daughter to Janet Johnſtoun, declares, that on the ſaid Saturdays-Night Philip came up to her Mother's Houſe, and ſent for George Thomſon and his Wife, and thereafter he ſent her to ſee if Sir James was come Home; declares, that ſhe ſaw Philip; with his Hat off, give a low Salutation to George Thomſon when he came up to him; and when ſhe returned and told that Sir James was come, Philip did take a drink, and runs down to New-Milns; that about eleven o' Clock that Night, her Good-father ſent her to ſeek her Mother, and that ſhe found her Mother with Philip in George Thomſon's Houſe, and that her Mother bad her go Home, and ſhe would come after her, and that her Good-father thereafter, finding her Mother did not come, ſent her for Margaret Iſles to give Suck to the Child, and went Home again; but that her Mother did not come long after that, as ſhe thinks, about two in the Morning, and that ſhe heard her Good-father ſay, Bitch and Whore, where have you been ſo long? And ſhe anſwered, Wherever I have been, the Deed is done, and then went to Bed; and that after that, ſhe heard them ſpeak together, but could not know what they ſaid: She declares alſo, that her Mother ſaid, ſhe was ſtill feared, and would not abide alone, nor lie alone in the Bed, but ſaid, ſhe was afraid.

Edinburgh, February the 7th, 1687.

The ſaid Anna Mark being examined in Preſence of the Aſſiſe and Juſtices, declares affirmativè, conform to the above-written Declaration in all Points.

Sir George M'kenzie's Speech to the Inqueſt.

Gentlemen of the Inqueſt,

I Am glad to ſee ſo ſtrong and univerſal a Propenſity for Juſtice in my native Country, that every Man upon firſt hearing this Death, concluded it a Murder, and trembled leaſt it ſhould not have been diſcovered. Every Man became Sollicitor in it, wiſhed to be of the Inqueſt; and ardent Prayers were generally put up to Almighty God for this End, with as much Earneſtneſs as uſes to be for removing general Plagues. And the Almighty, in return of thoſe, did firſt make ſo clear Impreſſions on all Mens Spirits of Philip's being the Murderer, that he had fallen by theſe: But his divine Majeſty, who loves to ſee juſt things done in a legal Way, furniſhed thereafter a full Probation in an extraordinary Manner, whereby we might not only convince our ſelves, but all ſuch as are not wicked enough to have been the Authors. You will diſcern the Finger of God, in all the Steps of this Probation, as evidently as Philip's Guilt; and this extraordinary Diſcovery has been made, as well to convince this wicked Age, that the World is govern'd by divine Providence, as that he is guilty of this Murder. He is accuſed before you for three Crimes, Treaſon, the Curſing of his Father, and the Murdering him: Crimes in great Affinity, and naturally ſubſervient to one another; for to pray Confuſion to the King, who is Pater patriæ, is a Curſing our great Parent; and what can prove better a Deſign to murder his Parent, than the malicious Hatred that prevails over a Son to curſe him? What reſtrains vitious Men from murdering thoſe, by whoſe Death they may expect licentious Liberty, and an opulent Succeſſion, ſave the Fear of the Laws of the Land, or at leaſt an innate Awe of the Law of Nature? But here you ſee in the Treaſon, a Contempt of the Laws of the Land, and in the Curſing, an Abhorrence of the Laws of Nature.

There is no Reaſon to ſuſpect our Zeal in this Caſe from any State Deſign; for we took Pains to ſhun a Probation of the Treaſon. It was forced upon us, and not ſought by us; ſo violent were, and are we in the Search of the Murder, that even Treaſon was not able to divert us: Nor preſs I it at this Time, but to let you ſee there is nothing ſo wicked or dangerous, which this Pannal durſt not attempt. He not only wiſhes the King's Confuſion, but drinks it openly; and not only drinks the King's Confuſion himſelf, but he forces others to do ſo; nor needed he to be drunk, to be guilty, for this was the firſt Step of his drinking; and to convince you that he knew it was a Crime, it is proved that he took his Complices ſworn never to detect it; the fatal Encouragement which always tempts him to commit his Villainies. The Curſing his Father is not from meer Humour or Diſſoluteneſs, but it becomes yet probable by a previous Deſign to have his Eſtate, and from the Reſtraint he found from him, of being debarred from the raviſhing Hopes of a boundleſs Liberty. The Expreſſions are various and execrable, ſuch as, Devil take him, drown him, rive him, let him never come back, let him never eat more, &c. and theſe Expreſſions, which ſhould never have been once ſpoke, were frequently repeited, and are proved, not by ſuſpected Perſons, or Strangers, but by his Father's, and his own Servants, and ſuch of them too as were Philip's own Favourits, and who think themſelves very unhappy in being obliged to depone againſt him.

You are then, Gentlemen, in the third Place to judge, how far this Murder and Parricide are prov'd; in which you need to be the leſs ſcrupulous, that the Son, who is accuſed of it, is to die however; for either of the two former Crimes are ſo far prov'd beyond all Doubt, that though he ſhould eſcape this, he cannot theſe. And as to the Probation of this Crime, I muſt firſt repreſent to you, that in occult or atrocious Crimes, the Law has relaxed, and remitted much of its Scrupulouſneſs in Probation, becauſe in theſe the ordinary Probation cannot be had; and to admit none but ſuch, were to reject all: And therefore in Hameſucken, which is the beating a Man in his own Houſe, but much more the murdering a Man by way of Hameſucken in his own Houſe, wherein all Means are uſed to cover, and few can be got for diſcovering, you muſt not expect two Witneſſes who ſaw the Murder committed, but only ſuch Probation as can before God convince you, that this Murder was committed by that Man. No Inqueſt ever failed to find the Murder of Children to be clearly prov'd, though there were no Witneſſes that ſaw it committed; and the murdering Parents is a more atrocious Crime, becauſe we owe more Duty to our Parents, than any Parent does to a Child, and never Son ow'd more than this did, nor can be more believed to have killed a Parent. For clearing whereof you are to conſider firſt, that he did not drown himſelf, as was pretended, but was murdered by ſome Perſons; and, as the Law violently preſumes, that no Man would murder himſelf, ſo, without the Help of this Preſumption, it is prov'd moſt convincingly, by ocular Inſpection, that he was ſtrangled; the Marks of Strangling, viz. the congealed Blood, the Diſlocation of one of the Vertebræ in his Neck, &c. being viſible Signs prov'd in the ordinary Way, and we have added to this the Opinion both of the Chirurgions and Phyſicians, who at once declared, that he was not drowned, and that he was ſtrangled; the outward Marks likewiſe of his not being drowned appearing as viſibly as that he was ſtrangled: So you muſt conclude, that he was ſtrangled, except you can think, that after he had ſtrangled himſelf, and broke his own Neck, he drowned himſelf.

In the next Place, who could have murdered this innocent and obliging Gentleman, except ſome Perſon who had Acceſs to his Houſe, wherein he was murdered, and had Malice againſt himſelf? And theſe two can meet in no Perſon, but this unnatural barbarous Son; for one of the things that heightens his Guilt is, that he ſhould abhor a Father, who engaged meer Strangers to love him as a Friend! And we have prov'd that he not only hated his Father, and that he had done ſo for many Years, but that he vowed he would take away his Life before Chriſtmas next; and that in many various, but clear Expreſſions, and at many ſeveral Times; for ſometimes he ſwore, if he made a Diſpoſition to his ſecond Son, he ſhould take his Life; ſometimes, that he ſhould be Maſter of all before Chriſtmas, and he ſhould uſe the Servants as they uſed him: That though his Mother was like to die, that his Father ſhould die before her: And he ſcarce ever ſpoke of his Father, without ſwearing he would ſtrike a Sword to his Heart: Nor would his Paſſion ſo much as ſuffer him to diſſemble, this, even to his Mother; and he who durſt own it to her, durſt certainly do it whenever he had Occaſion.

I proceed now to clear to you, that I have proved, that he not only deſign'd and vow'd in Paſſion, that he would murder his Father, but that he actually attempted to murder him; and for this I have led theſe Witneſſes, who prove, that when his Father came from the Leaden Mines, he fled into Culter, as a trembling Partridge purſued by a Haulk, telling ſome Gentlemen, that he had been purſued ſeven Miles by his unnatural Son, who accordingly came to the Houſe, and ſhot ſeveral Piſtols in at the Windows; whereupon the Gentlemen who now depone, were forc'd to watch with his Father all the Night, and were forc'd to convoy him the next Day near to Edinburgh. We have alſo produced other Gentlemen, to whom his Father declared, that he attempted againſt his Life; and who will not believe the beſt of Fathers deponing againſt the worſt of Sons? Nor could any thing have drawn this from the Father, ſave the terrifying Danger to which he was hourly expoſed. All the Supream Courts of Europe have found the Attempt to kill ſufficient to infer Parricide: This is a higher Degree of Guilt than Curſing, and yet that infers Death; and to attempt to kill a Father is more villainous than to kill a Stranger. What ſhall be ſaid then of frequent and deliberate Attempts? And thus you have this Son again prov'd guilty of Death, and even Parricide. That which haſtened the perpetrating this Crime, was, that his Father, wearied out with his Villainies, was at laſt forc'd to diſpone his Eſtate to his ſecond Son; and though there be nothing more ridiculous than to aſk, what Reaſon the Son had to kill his Father, as he now does; for there can be no Reaſon for ſo barbarous an Action; yet this was a Motive to him, and may be a Proof to you; for ſo kind a Father, who had tryed all Means and Methods to reclaim his licentious Son, had never proceeded to this, unleſs he had been driven to it by thoſe frequent Attempts made by his Son upon his Life, in hopes to enjoy his Eſtate by the Death that he was to give. To diſappoint which Hopes, his Father deſigned to ſettle his Eſtate on the ſecond Brother; after which Settlement, he could gain nothing but the Gallows, by killing his Father: Whereupon he, to prevent the Delivery of the Diſpoſition, did aſſociat to himſelf Thomſon, whom himſelf uſed to call the Devil's Taylor, Thomſon's Wife, and Janet Johnſtoun, who was his own Concubine, and his Father's known Enemy, whom he could never have frequented, except upon ſo barbarous a Deſign. Thomſon denyed that he was in the Houſe for Eight Days before, and yet it is proved he was in Sir James's Houſe the Night the Murder was committed. Johnſtoun denyed alſo before the Council, that ſhe was out of her Houſe after Nine o'Clock that Night, and yet it is prov'd, that ſhe ſtayed Abroad till after Twelve, ſo that her Huſband was forced to ſend for a Stranger to give Suck to her Infant. Why did they both deny, or ſhe abandon her Child, at ſo ſuſpect a Time? And it is ridiculous to pretend, as they do, that they forgot ſo extraordinary a Circumſtance, in ſo extraordinary a Night, eſpecially being examined upon it within two or three Days thereafter. By their Aſſiſtance the Murder was deſigned to be upon Saturday, the Day of January; but God, to diſcover, and revenge a Murder (which he thought fit to ſuffer to be committed for the Puniſhment of ſo many preceeding horrid Crimes) inſpired Sir James to bring with him that Night, a devout Miniſter, for preparing the Father, and proving againſt the Son; and this pious and grave Man, whoſe Merit may be laid in Ballance with many Witneſſes, depones, that he heard that Night the Noiſe of many People within the Houſe, which was inconſiſtent with Sir James's drowning himſelf without it: And depones, That his Attention followed this Noiſe until it died out towards the River, into which he was thrown by them; and the Brink is prov'd to have been broken, and beat by many Feet, which fortifies much this Depoſition. It is alſo proved, that he refuſed that Night to come to publick Prayer with his Father, ſwearing, that he could not look upon him, and that the next Morning, when all went to find out his Father, he confeſſed he had firſt found him; but that he came away without diſcovering that he had found him, nor did he ſhew the leaſt Grief when he was found by others; whereas, if Nature had not been quite devoured by Vice and Guilt, he had certainly thrown himſelf upon his dead Father, and had lamented that fatal Death, which no Man, except he, ſaw with dry Eyes;

but

but whilſt others were mourning for his Father, this Miſcreant would not ſuffer him to be carried in to his own Houſe, ſaying, that he died like a Dog. O criminal Moderation! that never appeared in this paſſionate Creature, ſave upon the Death of his Father. O curſed Juſtice! never ſhowen, or pretended to, ſave in aſſerting, that his Father deſerved no Reſpect, becauſe he drowned himſelf. Upon this villainous Pretext, he cauſed throw him into a remot Houſe, where none were allowed to ſee the Body, ſave his own Accomplices, to prevent all Diſcovery by Inſpection of it: and for the ſame Reaſon cauſed bury him very ſuddenly, in ſpight of a Countermand from his Friends at Edinburgh. But they, fully perſwaded that Sir James was murdered by his own Son, ſent out ſome Chirurgions and Friends, who having raiſed the Body, did ſee it bleed miraculouſly upon his touching it. In which God Almighty himſelf was pleaſed to bear a Share in the Teſtimonies which we produce; that divine Power, which makes the Blood circulat during Life, has oft-times, in all Nations, opened a Paſſage to it after Death, upon ſuch Occaſions, but moſt in this Caſe; for after all the Wounds had been ſewed up, and the Body deſignedly ſhaken up and down, and which is moſt wonderful, after the Body had been buried for ſeveral Days, which naturally occaſions the Blood to congeal; upon Philip's touching it, the Blood darted and ſprung out, to the great Aſtoniſhment of the Chirurgions themſelves, who were deſired to watch this Event; whereupon Philip, aſtoniſhed more than they, threw down the Body, crying, O God! O God! and cleanſing his Hand, grew ſo faint, that they were forced to give him a Cordial. But leaſt any Shadow of Difficulty might remain with you, his Divine Providence, which oft-times reveals it ſelf by the Mouths of Babes and Sucklings, has brought us two little Witneſſes, whom, as no body could be ſo unworthy as to corrupt, ſo none can be ſuch Infidels as not to believe, eſpecially ſince they depone againſt their own Parents, and have owned firmly in their Preſence, what they now depone in yours. From them we have an Account, how Philip that Night came into the Houſe of their Parents, and there ſwore, He would be rid of his Father that very Night: How they went out at Midnight, and after their Return made their Reflections, how eaſily Sir James had died, and how briſkly Philip had behaved, by guarding the Door with a Piſtol in his one Hand, and a Sword in the other; how they had hung a Stone about his Neck, but had thereafter taken it away, and how the Mother durſt not ſtay in her own Houſe, while Sir James's Coat was there; and if you had ſeen this little Boy upon his Knees, begging his Father to confeſs, with ſo much Affection, ſo much Judgment, ſo much Piety, you had needed no other Probation but himſelf. The Father himſelf, before his Death, was convinced, and frequently foretold, that his Son would kill him; and the Mother, how ſoon ſhe heard of her Huſband's Death, and ſome of the Circumſtances now inſiſted upon, and remembred what ſhe had heard her Son ſay to her ſelf, and what he had ſaid at Nunland, concluded he was the Murderer, in ſpight even of that criminal Kindneſs which ſhe had for him; almoſt the whole Nation was convinced of this before any Probation was led: And the Lords of the Privy Council, among whom many of our Judges ſit, did declare, that they thought that half of the Probation which was led before them, ſufficient to convince an Inqueſt. How then ſhould the leaſt Scruple remain with you, before whom ſo full, ſo clear, and ſo legal a Probation has been led, that like a Bend, every Part of it ſupports another, and like a Chain, every Link draws on another?

I need not fortifie ſo pregnant a Probation, by laying out before you how often he and his Complices have contradicted one another, and even how often he has contradicted himſelf in the moſt obvious and material Points, and how he denyes every thing with Oaths, and with equal Confidence, though never ſo clearly prov'd: Albeit ſuch as theſe are the chief things that make up the Probation in other Caſes; nor how he ſuffered the greateſt Indignities imaginable from his Complices in Preſence of the Privy-Council; though this convinced many of their Lordſhips, that he was at the Mercy of thoſe Complices, who were too far upon his Secrets, not to be ſlaviſhlie ſubmitted to. But I cannot omit, how that ſince he came into Priſon, he has lived ſo impiouſlie, and atheiſticallie, as ſhewes, that he had no Awe upon his Spirit, to reſtrain him from committing any Crime from a Love to God, or a Fear to Hell; and that he conſtantly filled and kept himſelf drunk from Morning till Night, thereby to drown the Voice of his Conſcience, and to make himſelf inſenſible of the Terrors of the Almighty.

The Judges have declared what was neceſſary to be prov'd, and you are only to judge, if we have prov'd what they thought neceſſary; and therefore there is no Place to doubt, if a Man's Life may be taken upon meer Preſumptions; for the Judges have eaſed you of that Scruple, by finding the Grounds in this qualified Libel relevant; and his own Advocates have acknowledged this Probation to be ſo ſtrong and unanſwerable, that before the Half of it was led, they went away and deſerted a Client, whom they found they could not defend; nor ſhould any Man doubt of a Probation, which one's own Advocats think invincible. If then ſuch amongſt you as are Fathers, would not wiſh to be murdered by your own Children; or ſuch of you as are Sons, would not wiſh the World to believe that you are weary of your Fathers, you will all concur, to find this Miſcreant guilty of a Crime that God has taken ſo much Pains to detect, and all Mankind had ſuch Reaſon to wiſh to be puniſhed. May then the Almighty God, who form'd your Hearts, convince them; and may this poor Nation cite you, as the remarkable Curbers of Vice, to all ſucceeding Ages.

Thereafter his Majeſties Advocat proteſted for an Aſſiſe of Error againſt the Inqueſt, in caſe they ſhould aſſoilzie the Pannal.

The Perſons who paſt upon the Aſſiſe of Philip Standsfield, return'd their Verdict in Preſence of the ſaids Lords; whereupon the Tenor follows.

The whole Aſſiſe called upon the Jury of Philip Standsfield, upon the three Points following, particularly lybel'd againſt him; to wit, the Crime of Treaſon, the Curſing of his Father, and Acceſſion to his Father's Murder; they unanimouſly, in one Voice, by the Mouth of William Baillie of Lamington, their Chancelor, finds the Pannal guilty of the forſaid Crimes.

Sic ſubſcribitur, WILLIAM BAILLIE, of Lamington, Chancelor.

THE Lords Juſtice General, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, having conſidered the Verdict of the Aſſiſe returned againſt Philip Standsfield, they, by the Mouth of John Leſlie, Dempſter of Court, decerned and adjudged the ſaid Philip Standsfield to be taken upon Wedneſday next, being the 15th of February inſtant, to the Mercat-Croſs of Edinburgh, and there, betwixt two and four a-Clock in the Afternoon, to be hanged on a Gibbet till he be dead, and his Tongue to be cut out, and burnt upon a Scaffold, and his right Hand to be cut off, and affixt on the Eaſt-Port of Haddingtoun, and his Body to be carried to the Gallowlie betwixt Leith and Edinburgh, and there to be hanged up in Chains; and ordains his Name, Fame, Memory, and Honours to be extinct, his Arms to be riven forth, and delet out of the Books of Arms, ſwa that his Poſterity may never have Place, nor be able hereafter to bruik or joyſe any Honours, Offices, Titles, or Dignities, within this Realm in time coming, and to have forfaulted, amitted and tint all and ſundry his Lands, Heretages, Titles, Offices, Tacks, Stedings, Roums, Poſſeſſions, Goods and Gear whatſomever pertaining to him, to our Soveraign Lord, to remain perpetuallie with his Highneſs in Property; which was pronounced for Doom: Whereupon his Majeſties Advocat aſked, and took Inſtruments.

At the Council-Chamber in White- " Hall, this eighth Day of June, 1688. And this " is the Cauſe of the taking and detaining, &c." L. C. J. Well, what do you deſire, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray for the King, that the Retorn may be filed.

L. C. J. Let it be filed.

Mr. Att. Gen. By this Retorn your Lordſhip obſerves what it is my Lords the Biſhops were committed to the Tower for; it is by Warrant from the Council-Board, where, when their Lordſhips appeared, they were not pleaſed to give their Recognizances to appear here, as they were required by the King to do; and thereupon they were committed to the Tower, and now come before the Court upon this Retorn of the King's Writ of Habeas Corpus; and by the Retorn it does appear, it was for Contriving, Writing, Framing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt his Majeſty and the Government. My Lord, it is our Duty, who are the King's Counſel, purſuant to our Orders, to proſecute ſuch Kind of Offences; and when the proper Time ſhall come for us to open the Nature of the Offence, your Lordſhips will then judge what Reaſon there is for this Proſecution; but in the mean Time, what we are now to offer to your Lordſhip is, The Officer of this Court has an Information againſt his Grace the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, which we deſire may be read to them, and pray that they may plead to it, according to the Courſe of the Court.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip to ſpare us a Word for my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray for the King the Information may be read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We deſire to be heard a Word firſt.

Sir William Williams. Mr. Soll. Gen. We oppoſe your ſpeaking any thing, till the Information hath been read.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But what we have to offer is proper before it be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Time is not yet come, Sir Robert.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, this is our proper Time for what we have to ſay, and therefore we move it now, before there be any other Proceedings in this Matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is irregular to move any thing yet: Pray let the Information be read firſt.

Mr. S. Pemberton. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare us, we will offer nothing but what is fit for us to do.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And now is our proper Time for it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Gentlemen, You do know the Way of Proceeding in ſuch Caſes better than ſo: I am ſure, as for you, Sir Robert Sawyer, you have often oppoſed any ſuch Motion as irregular; and I hope the Caſe is not altered, however you may be, the Courſe of the Court is the ſame.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. With Submiſſion, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare me a Word, that which I would move, is, to diſcharge my Lords the Biſhops upon this Retorn, and from their Commitment upon this Warrant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Surely theſe Gentlemen think to have a Liberty above all other People: Here is an Information, which we pray my Lords the Biſhops may hear read, and plead to.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Certainly, Sir Robert Sawyer, you would not have done thus half a Year ago.

Sir. Rob. Sawyer. What would not I have done? I move regularly (with Submiſſion) to diſcharge my Lords the Biſhops from their Commitment; if they are not here legally impriſoned, now they are before your Lordſhips upon this Writ, then you will give us leave to move for their Diſcharge, before any thing elſe be ſaid to them; and that is it we have to ſay, to demand the Judgment of the Court upon this Retorn, whether we are legally impriſoned?

Mr. Att. Gen. Under Favour, my Lord, neither the Court, nor they, are ripe for any Motion of this Nature yet.

Mr. S. Pemberton. If we do not move it now, it will afterwards (I fear) be too late.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen are very forward, but certainly they miſtake their Time; this is a Habeas Corpus that is brought by the King, and not by the Priſoners; and therefore they are too ſoon, till they ſee what the King has to ſay to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip cannot as yet be moved for your Judgment about the Legality of this Commitment, becauſe this Writ was granted upon our Motion, who are of Counſel for the King, and upon this Writ they are brought here: And what is it we deſire for the King? Certainly nothing but what is regular. We have here an Information for the King againſt my Lords, and we deſire they may plead to it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Good my Lord, will you pleaſe to hear us a little to this Matter.

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, we will not refuſe to hear you by no means, when you ſpeak in your proper Time, but it is not ſo now; for the King is pleaſed, by his Attorney and Solliciſor, to charge theſe noble Perſons, my Lords the Biſhops, with an Information; and the King's Counſel call to have that Information read, but you will not permit it to be read.

Mr. S.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, ſpare us a Word: If we are not here as Priſoners regularly before your Lordſhip, and are not brought in by the due Proceſs of the Court, then certainly the King's Counſel, or the Court, have no Power to charge us with an Information; therefore we beg that you will hear us to that, in the firſt Place, whether we are legally here before you?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen will have their proper Time for ſuch a Motion hereafter.

Mr. Pollexfen. No, Mr. Sollicitor, this is, without all Queſtion, our only Time for it; we ſhall have no Time afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, you will, for what do we, who are of Counſel for the King, now aſk of the Court, but that this Information may be read? When that is done, if we move to have my Lords the Biſhops plead, then they may move what they will; but before we make that Motion, they cannot break in upon us with their Motion; and, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, whether my Lords the Biſhops were duly committed, is not yet a Queſtion.

Mr. Finch. But it is, and this is the fitteſt Time for it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray will you hear us quietly what we have to ſay, and then anſwer us with Reaſon, if you can: I think we are in a proper Way, but they are not, my Lord; for (as I ſaid) my Lords, the Biſhops are brought by the King's Writ upon our Motion for the King, not upon theirs; and now we have them here before the Court, We for the King will charge them with an Information; which Information, that they and the Court may know what it is they are charged with, we pray it may be read to them by the Clerk; and when it is read, let theſe Gentlemen ſay what they will for them, they ſhall have their Time to ſpeak; but certainly they ought not to obſtruct the King's Proceedings, nor oppoſe the Reading of the Information to theſe noble Lords, who are brought here in Cuſtody into Court, to this very Purpoſe, that they may be charged with this Information.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But we have ſomewhat to ſay before you can come to that, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ought not to be heard as yet.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Under Favour we ought to be heard.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, Mr. Sollicitor has oppoſed our being heard, but we now deſire he would hear our Anſwer to it, and that which we have to ſay, is this, That my Lords the Biſhops are not here regularly in the Court to be charged with an Information; and if the Law be not with us in this Point, as we doubt not to make appear it is, no queſtion but when your Lordſhip has heard what we have to ſay, you will give a right Rule in it. My Lord, we ſay, that by the Rules of Law, no Man ought to be charged with an Information or Indictment, by the expreſs Statute of Edward the Third, unleſs he come into the Court by legal Proceſs: That is a ſtanding Rule, and the Practice of this and all other Courts is purſuant to it. Now in this Court you have ſeveral Proceſſes that go out of this Court, and he that comes as taken by Virtue of a Capias, or an Attachment after a Summons, or by Venire in the Nature of a Subpœna: I ſay, he that comes in upon theſe Proceſſes, may be charged with an Information; but where a Perſon is in Priſon, committed by another Juriſdiction, and another Authority, than that of this Court; when the Priſoner is brought here by Habeas Corpus, the firſt Thing the Court has to do, is to enquire whether he be legally committed; to that End the Retorn is filed, and the Party has leave to make his Exceptions to it, as we do in this Caſe. My Lords are brought here upon a Habeas Corpus, the Retorn of which has been read, and now the Retorn is filed, we are proper to move, that my Lords may be diſcharged; for you now ſee what they are committed for; it is for a Miſdemeanor in making and publiſhing a Libel, that's the Matter for which they are committed; and it appears by the Retorn likewiſe, that they who are thus committed are Peers of the Realm; for ſo my Lords the Biſhops all are, and for a Miſdemeanor they ought not by Law to have been committed.

L. C. J. You go too far now, Sir Robert Sawyer; I would willingly hear you whatſoever you have to ſay; but then it muſt be in its due Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. This very Diſcourſe (indeed I have heard) has paſs'd up and down the Town for Law; we ſee now whence they had it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I know it has heretofore been urged by me, but denied by them who now urge it, and I am glad that they now learn of me to tack about.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, do not fall upon one another, but keep to the Matter before you.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So we would, my Lord, if the King's Counſel would let us. Firſt, we ſay, we being brought here upon a Retorn of a Habeas Corpus, there was neither at the Time of the Commitment Cauſe to impriſon us, nor was there by the Warrant any Cauſe to detain us in Priſon; and for that, beſides what has been hinted at, we ſay further, that here it is returned, that we were committed by ſuch and ſuch Perſons, Lords of the Privy-Council; but the Retorn doth not ſay, that it was done by them, as Lords of the Privy-Council, which muſt be in Council; for if it be not in Council, they have not Power to make ſuch a Warrant for the Commitment of any Perſon, and that we ſtand upon. Here is a Retorn that is not a good Retorn of a legal Commitment, and therefore we pray my Lords may be diſcharged.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a Word; that is the Thing we humbly offer to your Lordſhip's Conſideration; and, under Favour, I think we are proper both as to the Matter, and as to the Time: The Retorn is now filed before you; if by this Retorn there appears to have been ſuch a Cauſe to commit theſe Lords to Priſon, as is legal, then we acknowledge they may in a legal Courſe be brought to anſwer for their Offence; but, with Submiſſion, it appears not by any thing that is in this Retorn, that my Lords the Biſhops were committed by the Order of the Privy-Council. All that is ſaid, is, That they were committed by my Lord Chancellor, and thoſe other Perſons, named Lords of the Privy-Council; which we conceive is not a good Retorn; for they can do nothing as Lords of the Privy-Council, except only as they are in Council, and by Order made in Council; except that do appear, they have no Power to commit: Then take the Caſe to be ſo; here is a Man committed by one that has no Authority to commit him, and he is brought by Habeas Corpus into this Court, what ſhall the Court do with him? Shall they charge him with an Information? No, it does appear that he was in Cuſtody, but under under a Commitment, by thoſe who had no legal Power to commit him; and therefore he muſt be diſcharged; and that we pray for my Lords the Biſhops. What the King's Counſel may have to ſay to them afterwards, by Way of Information or otherwiſe, they muſt take the regular Methods of the Law, to bring my Lords the Biſhops to anſwer; but as the Caſe ſtands here before you, upon this Retorn, it does appear, they had no Authority to commit them, by whoſe Warrant they were committed; and therefore this Court has nothing to do but to diſcharge them.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordſhip's leave to ſay one Word farther on the ſame Side: I think, with humble Submiſſion, this is the moſt proper Time for us to make this Motion; for here is a Habeas Corpus returned; this Retorn is filed, and then the King's Counſel move to charge my Lords the Biſhops with an Information. That Motion of theirs (we ſay) is too ſoon, unleſs my Lords are here in Court, I mean legally in Court; for no Man is in Court ſo as to be liable to be charged with an Indictment, or Information, that is not brought into Court by legal Proceſs, or as a Priſoner upon a legal Commitment: Then, my Lord, with humble Submiſſion, we ſay, that it doth appear by this Retorn, that my Lords the Biſhops are not here legally in Court, becauſe this Commitment of theirs was not a legal Commitment; and two Objections we have to it, the one is, that the Perſons committing had no Authority to commit; for the Retorn ſays, that it was by Virtue of a Warrant under the Hands of ſuch and ſuch, being Lords of the Council, and they (we ſay) have no Authority to do this. The other Objection is, that the Fact for which they were committed, they ought not to have been impriſoned for: The Fact charged upon them is in the Nature of a bare Miſdemeanor, and for ſuch a Fact it is the Right of my Lords the Biſhops (as Peers of the Realm) that they ought to be ſerved with the uſual Proceſs of Subpœna, and not to be committed to Priſon. Theſe are the two Objections that we have to this Retorn, and this is, under Favour, the proper Time for us to make this Objection, before the King's Counſel can charge my Lords the Biſhops with an Information.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. With Submiſſion, my Lord, theſe Gentlemen have out of courſe, and preposterouſly, let themſelves into this Diſcourſe; and, when all is done, we muſt recur to that which we moved to your Lordſhip before, to deſire that your Lordſhip would order the Information to be read; and when we call my Lords to plead to the Information, then will be their proper Time to make this Objection; for 'tis a ſtrange Thing, certainly, for Men to make Objections before they know what it is they are charged with! They ſay, the Ground of their Motion is, becauſe my Lords the Biſhops are here in Court upon the Retorn of an Habeas Corpus; and therefore they come in upon a Commitment (as they ſay) for that which they ought not to be committed for at all, and we cannot charge them, unleſs they be properly in Court. Now for that, it is true, if that Commitment of theirs were the only Thing that was here before the Court, then the Court would, if that Commitment were illegal, diſcharge them of that; but when a Man is preſent here in Court, brought into Court, let him come how he will, he is not to have any longer Time than that Inſtant to appear to, and be charged with the Information. 'Tis true, upon a Subpœna, which is in the Nature of a Summons, there a Man hath, as it were, an Eſſoyn, and may make his Excuſe, and he ſhall have Time; but when he is preſent in Court, either as a Perſon privileged, as an Officer, or as a Priſoner, he ſhall be charged preſently; and theſe Gentlemen are not to let themſelves into Invectives againſt the Commitment, thereby to keep off their being charged with the Information. Beſides that, it is ſtrange theſe Gentlemen ſhould know the Privilege of my Lords the Biſhops as Peers, better than all the Lords of the Council, who are moſt of them themſelves Peers; and they that make the Objection ſhould have conſidered, whether theſe Lords that made the Commitment, did not think themſelves concerned in all the Privileges of Peerage, as well as theſe ſeven Noble Lords!

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is this an Anſwer to our Objection, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſay, it is a ſtrange Objection, and I anſwer, 'tis out of due time; for this we ſay, that my Lords the Biſhops being now here in Court as Priſoners upon a Commitment, and we deſiring to charge them with an Information, you are not to examine the Matter of their Commitment, and therefore I do inſiſt upon it, that the Information ſhould be read, and then you will conſider, whether they are not bound to plead to it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I hope Mr. Attorney-General will not think legal Objections to be Invectives.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly I know not what you call legal Objections; I do not think yours are ſo, nor do I think legal Objections are Invectives; but I uſed that Expreſſion, as very proper for what you urged againſt the Commitment.

L. C. J. Nay, Gentlemen, don't quarrel about Words.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we would not willingly have Words given us to quarrel at.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, the Queſtion is, whether we are in the right Method of Practice, as to the Courſe of the Court, or they? It may be theſe Gentlemen think to make us angry, and take Advantage of our being in a Paſſion.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sollicitor, we deſire to have our Objections anſwered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, if you begin to be angry, Gentlemen, we can be angry too.

L. C. J. I would have neither of you be angry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It ſeems they would have an Anſwer to their Objections, but will not ſuffer us to give it; they would firſt examine whether my Lords the Biſhops have been duly committed; that, we ſay, is not to be done by the Court as yet: Your Lordſhip ſees they are actually in Cuſtody, by a Commitment of the Lords of the Council, that appears by the Retorn before your Lordſhip, and for what they were committed. What do we now pray for the King? Firſt, we move for a Habeas Corpus, then that this Information may be read, and all is in order to bring this Fact, for which they were committed, to a Trial. 'Tis ſaid upon the Retorn, they were ſent to the Tower, for Contriving, Writing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt the King's Perſon and Government, which, I think, is Crime enough for a Man to deſerve to be committed for: They would have you

you to diſcharge theſe Lords from this Commitment (the Retorn as they ſay, being not legal) before the Information be read: But we think their Motion is irregular; for here is a Crime charged in the Commitment, and upon that Commitment they are here now as Criminals before your Lordſhip; and Mr. Attorney has exhibited an Information for the King, which is in the Nature of a Declaration at the King's Suit; and that in this Court, which is the ſupreme Court now in Being for the Trial of Matters of this Nature. We will come to that Queſtion, whether they were legally committed, when there is a proper Time for it? But now we find my Lords the Biſhops in Court, upon a Commitment for a great Crime: I repeat it again; it is for Contriving, Writing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt the King's Perſon, and againſt the King's Government; and whether the King's Counſel ſhall not have Leave to make out this Charge by an Information, ſure can be no Queſtion at all in this Court. I hear them mention the Statute of Edward the Third; but that is not at all to the Purpoſe; that is but what was offered in another Caſe that may be remembred, and offered by Way of Plea, and preſſed with a great deal of Earneſtneſs, but rejected by the Court; and now what could not be received then by Way of Plea, theſe Gentlemen would, by their Importunity, have you receive by Way of Parole at the Bar. I ſuppoſe the Deſign is to entertain this great Auditory with an Harangue, and to perſwade the weak Men of the World (for the Wiſe are not to be impoſed upon) that they are in the Right, and we in the Wrong. Under Favour, my Lord, we are in the Right for the King; we deſire this Information may be read, and let them plead what by Law they can to it, according to the Courſe of the Court: But that which they now urge, is untimely, and out of Courſe.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we offer this to your Lordſhip ———

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, Gentlemen, you have been heard before your Time already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to anſwer what the King's Counſel have objected.

L. C. J. The King's Counſel have anſwered your Objections, and we muſt not permit Vying and Re-vying upon one another: If you have no more to ſay, but only as to the Matters that have been urged, you have been heard to it on both Sides already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would, if you pleaſe, anſwer what has been objected by the King's Counſel, and ſtate the Caſe aright.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother Pemberton, I do not apprehend that the Objection you make againſt this Commitment has any Weight in it. The Objection (as I take it) is this, that theſe Lords were not legally committed, becauſe they were committed (ſays the Retorn) by ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Council particularly named; and it does not ſpecify them to be united in the Privy-Council: Now truly, with me, that ſeems to have no Weight at all; and I will tell you why. If my Lord Chief Juſtice do commit any Perſon and ſet his Name to the Warrant, he does not uſe to add to his Name, Lord Chief Juſtice, but he is known to be ſo, without that Addition. And would you have a different Retorn from the Lieutenant of the Tower to a Habeas Corpus, than the Warrant it ſelf will juſtify? the Lords do not uſe to write themſelves Privy-Counſellors; they are known to be ſo, as well as a Judge, who only writes his Name, and does not uſe to make the Addition of his Office.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to be heard to this; I think truly it is a weighty Objection; for, under Favour, we ſay, it muſt upon the Retorn here appear, that they were legally committed, before you can charge them with an Information. I do not take Exceptions to the Warrant, becauſe it is ſubſcribed by ſuch Lords, and they do not write themſelves Lords of the Council; they need not do that: And the Retorn has averred that they are ſo; but the Retorn ought to have been, that it was by the Order of the Privy-Council, and ſo it muſt be, if they would ſhew my Lords to be legally committed, that they were committed by Order of the Privy-Council, and not by ſuch and ſuch particular Perſons, Lords of the Privy-Council; ſo in the Caſe put by Mr. Juſtice Allybone, of a Commitment by your Lordſhip, or any of the Judges, it muſt be returned to be by ſuch a Warrant, by ſuch a one Chief Juſtice, for that ſhews the Authority of the Perſon committing, and then your Lordſhip's Name to it, indeed, is enough, without the Addition: But if it does not appear by the Retorn, that there was ſufficient Authority in the Perſon to commit, your Lordſhip cannot take it to be a legal Commitment. But now in this Caſe they could have no Authority to commit but in Council; and this Retorn ſeems to make it done by them as particular Perſons, and that's not a good Retorn, with your Lordſhip's Favour, upon which theſe Reverend and Noble Lords can be detained in Priſon. But what do they on the other Side ſay to this? Why, we ſhall be heard to it anon: But, my Lord, they very well know, it would be too late for that Effect which we deſire of our Motion, and therefore we lay the Objections before you now in its proper Time (ſay we) you ought not to read any Information againſt us, becauſe we are not legally here before the Court; and ſure, that which was ſaid by the King's Counſel, that your Lordſhip may charge any one that you find here in Court, which way ſoever he comes in, cannot be legal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ever ſaid ſo?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I apprehend you ſaid ſo, Mr. Attorney, or elſe you ſaid nothing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, You of that Side have a Way of letting yourſelves in to ſay the ſame things over again, and of making us to ſay what you pleaſe.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Truly I did apprehend you laid down that for Doctrine, which I thought a very ſtrange one; for we ſay, with your Lordſhip's Favour, he that is in Court without a legal Proceſs, is not in Court ſo as to be charged with an Information.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, It is not the Body being found here that intitles the Court to proceed upon it, but the Perſon accuſed is to be brought in by legal Proceſs: Then if we be not here by legal Proceſs, the Information cannot be charged upon us; and if we ſuffer it to be read, it will be too late for us to make this Objection.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. That you have all ſaid over and over, and they have given it an Anſwer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Serjeant, will you make an End: You have repeated your Objection over and over, I know not how often, and will never be contented with our Anſwer.

Mr. J. Allybone. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you ſaid in Anſwer to the Caſe I put, methinks does not anſwer it: For if the Retorn be as good, that it was by a Warrant from ſuch an one, Lord Chief Juſtice, as if my Lord Chief Juſtice had added the Title of his Office to his own Name, when he ſubſcribed the Warrant; then this Retorn, That this was done by ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Council, muſt be as good as if they had added that to their own Names.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That is not our Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Objection has been heard, and anſwered; we pray the Information may be read.

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, we are not come to that yet.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Pray, would you have an Averment by the Lieutenant of the Tower, in his Retorn to an Habeas Corpus, that it was done by them in the Council-Chamber?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, the Difference is this, with Submiſſion; a Commitment by Sir Robert Wright, Chief Juſtice, is a good Commitment, and a Retorn of that Nature were a good Retorn, becauſe he is Chief Juſtice all over England, and hath Authority to commit wherever he is; but a Commitment by ſuch an one, or ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Privy-Council, cannot be a good Retorn of a Commitment; becauſe, though they be Lords of the Council, yet neither ſingle, or apart, nor all together, have Authority to do ſuch an Act, unleſs they be aſſembled in the Privy-Council: There their Authority is circumſcribed; ſo that that muſt needs be a great Difference between a Commitment made by a Judge, who is always ſo, and a Commitment by a Lord, or ſo many Lords, by the Name of Lords of the Privy-Council, who carry not their Authority about with them, but are limited to their Aſſembly in Council.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Mr. Finch, Indeed your Objection is worth ſomething, if my Lord Chief-Juſtice could not act but as under the Character of Chief Juſtice; for you are now arguing, that theſe Lords could not do this Act, but as Lords of the Council in Council: The ſame (ſay I) may be ſaid of a Commitment by the Lord Chief Juſtice; he cannot do it but under the Formality of his Authority, as he is Chief Juſtice, unleſs you will make it impoſſible for him to do any thing but as Chief Juſtice, or unleſs you make it impoſſible to ſeparate his Perſon from his Authority.

Mr. Finch. Sir, the Difference lies here; the Authority of the one is general and univerſal, and goeth with him wherever he goes; the others Authority is limited to a particular Sphere.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Why, would you have it averred, that they did it, being aſſembled in Council?

Mr. Finch. Under Favour, they cannot juſtify any thing that was done by them as Lords of the Council, but in the Privy-Council.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Truly, my Lord, for my Part, I think there is no ſuch great Neceſſity of Haſte in this Matter: Here are Exceptions taken to this Retorn; and the Matter tranſacted now before us, appears to me to be of very great Weight; peradventure a greater or a weightier has not been agitated in this Place in any Age: It concerns theſe Noble and Reverends Lords in Point of Liberty: It comes ſuddenly upon us, and therefore, my Lord, I think it very fit we ſhould conſider a little of this Matter, and conſult the Precedents of Retorns, how they are; for there are Multitudes of Retorns of Writs of Habeas Corpus in this Court; therefore it were requiſite, that we did conſult the Forms of other Retorns, and how the Precedents, as to this Matter, have always been: If they are according as this is, then all is well, but if they be otherwiſe, it is fit we ſhould keep to the uſual Forms.

L. C. J. What's your Opinion of it, Brother Allybone?

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. I am ſtill of the ſame Mind I was, my Lord, That he could make no Retorn but this Retorn he has made; and if his Warrant was inſufficient upon this Account, that theſe particular Perſons, Lords of the Privy-Council, did this Act without ſaying, that they did it in Privy-Council; then 'tis not his Retorn that could mend it; and truly I do not know that there does need any Precedent for this; for every one knows where the Lords of the Council are; and 'tis a ſufficient Averment, this that is in the Retorn.

Mr. Pollexfen. They are Lords of the Council every where, but they do not act as Lords of the Council any where but in Council.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. So my Lord Chief Juſtice is Chief Juſtice every where.

Mr. Finch. And he can do judicial Acts, as ſuch, every where; but the Lords of the Council cannot act but in the Council.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Nor is it to be preſumed that they do it.

Mr. Finch. It is not a Preſumption that is to make any thing in this Caſe, but the Queſtion is, whether here be a legal Retorn of a legal Commitment?

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Such Publick Perſons, in ſuch publick Acts, can never be preſumed to act in their ſeparate private Capacities.

Mr. Finch. But, with Submiſſion, your Lordſhips can judge only what is before you in this Retorn, whether it be a good Retorn, and whether here be a good Authority aſſerted in the Perſons that did commit my Lords the Biſhops.

L. C. J. Truly, as to this Objection and Exception that has been made by them, I have conſidered of it, and what has been ſaid on all Sides, and I think 'tis the uſual Way of Commitment; I never ſaw any other; all the Warrants that ever I ſaw, are of this Form; if there were any Precedents, they ſhould be ſhewn of that Side.

Sir Robert Sawyer. There are Multitudes of Precedents otherwiſe, and none of this Form.

L. C. J. I confeſs, 'tis a Caſe of great Weight, and the Perſons concerned are of great Honour and Value; and I would be as willing as any Body to teſtify my Reſpects and Regards to my Lords the Biſhops, if I could ſee any thing in it worth conſidering of.

Mr. Soll. Gen. There's no Colour for it, if they do but look upon the Statute of the 16th and 17th of the late King, which arraings the Proceedings of his Privy-Council: That tells you what Things belong to the Cognizance of the Privy-Council, and what not; and there you have all the Diſtinctions about Commitments by the King and Council, and by the Lords of the Council: And that Act will ſhew, that this is a Commitment according to the uſual Form. They know very well what the common Stile of the Orders and Commitments of Council is, as in other Places, and other Commitments. By ſuch an one, Chief Juſtice, that is the Stile that is very well known for ſuch Warrants: So a Commitment by ſuch and ſuch, naming them particularly, Lords of the Council, that's an Order made by the Lords in Council; and that Statute diſtinguiſhes between Commitments of one Sort and the other; and it does it, becauſe ſometimes Warrants run in one Form, and ſometimes in another; but they all come within the Direction of that Statute. My Lord, we are in a plain Caſe, my Lords the Biſhops come regularly before you, upon a Commitment by the Council; and therefore we pray they may be charged with this Information.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, will your Lordſhip give us leave to have that Statute look'd into, which Mr. Sollicitor ſpeaks of; and then we ſhall ſee whether it be to his Purpoſe.

L. C. J. Let the Statute be read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If it be Keeble's Book, it is the 16th of Charles the Firſt; if it be the old Book, it is the 16th and 17th of Car. towards the End.

Clerk reads. Provided always, and be it enacted, that this Act, and the ſeveral Clauſes therein contained, ſhall be taken and expounded to extend only to the Court of Star-Chamber; and to the ſaid Court holden before the Preſident and Council in the Marches of Wales, and before the Preſident and Council in the Northern Parts.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is the Paragraph before that.

Clerk reads. And be it alſo provided and enacted, That if any Perſon ſhall hereafter be committed, reſtrainer of his Liberty, or ſuffer Impriſonment, by the Order and Decree of any ſuch Court of Star-Chamber, or other Court aforeſaid, now, or at any time hereafter, having, or pretending to have the ſame, or like Juriſdiction, Power, or Authority to commit, or impriſon, as aforeſaid; or by the Command or Warrant of the King's Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors, in their own perſons; or by the Command or Warrant of the Council-Board, or of any of the Lords, or others of his Majeſty's Priv-Council, that in every ſuch Caſe, every Perſon ſo committed, reſtrained of his Liberty, or ſuffering Impriſonment, upon demand——

Mr. Soll. Gen. That is all: Your Lordſhip ſees theſe ſeveral Diſtinctions of the Stile of Commitment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, pray favour us a little. My Lord, I think theſe Gentlemen will not deny, but that the Lords of the Council can commit. I muſt confeſs, they ask that which was pretty reaſonable, if the Caſe was as they would make it. They would have my Lords the Biſhops diſcharged, becauſe there is not a Retorn of a good Commitment, and that ſtands upon this Preſumption, that what is here ſaid to be done by all theſe Lords, at the End of whoſe Names this is added, Lords of the Privy Council, was done by them out of Council, which, I ſuppoſe, your Lordſhip will not preſume, but will take it, that they did this as Lords of the Council in Council; and no Man can ſay, but the Lords in Council can commit.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You may as well preſume upon a Warrant made by my Lord Chief Juſtice, becauſe it is not ſaid where he did it, and therefore he did it in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſay again, unleſs your Lordſhip will preſume that which is not to be preſumed, this muſt needs be a very good Retorn.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Truly (as Mr. Sollicitor ſays) you may as well deſire us to preſume, that my Lord Chief Juſtice would commit a Man in Ireland or Scotland; I can ſee no imaginable Difference.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which we pray, is, not that your Lordſhip would preſume, but that you would not preſume, but take the Retorn as 'tis before you; and then ſee whether it can be thought to be a Commitment by the Lords in Council?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, ſpare us a little in this Matter: Here has been the Clauſe of a Statute read to you, from whence Mr. Sollicitor would conclude, that all Commitments by ſeveral Sorts of Perſons there named, are legal; or elſe the Enumeration of the ſeveral Sorts of Commitments, ſignifies nothing to this Purpoſe. But I pray your Lordſhip would conſider this, that the very Scope and End of that Act of Parliament is, to relieve againſt illegal Commitments and Oppreſſions; then the ſeveral Commitments therein named, can never all be called legal; ſo that this ſignifies nothing to our Purpoſe. My Lord, they tell us we ſtand upon Preſumption: No, we do not ſo; we ſay your Lordſhip ought not to preſume the one or the other, but to judge upon what is before you: But here is nothing before you but this Retorn of a Commitment of theſe noble Perſons, my Lord the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt of the Biſhops, which is ſaid to be by theſe particular Lords. Now if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to give us Time to look into it (for this is an Exception we take at the Bar upon hearing the Retorn read) we would ſhew the conſtant Way has been quite otherwiſe than this Retorn makes it; therefore we deſire Leave to ſatisfy your Lordſhip concerning the uſual Form of Precedents, and thereby it will appear, that it ought to have been, that they were committed by Order of the Privy-Council, and then he ſhould have ſet forth the Warrant itſelf, which would have ſhewn the Names of the Privy-Counſellors, and he needed not to have put their Names in the Retorn, as the particular Perſons that committed them: But now, my Lord, this does not appear to be an Order made in Council, as it ought to be, and the Retorn is that which is before you, and you are to judge only upon what is before you.

L. C. J. So we do.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, would the Saying of a Governor of the Tower, in his Retorn to a Writ of Habeas Corpus, alter the Nature of the Commitment?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are in your Lordſhip's Judgment.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. I ſay, Brother Pemberton, would any collateral Saying of the Lieutenant of the Tower alter the Nature of the Thing, his Retorn in this Caſe is only an Inducement to the Warrant Warrant of Commitment, and his ſaying one way or t'other would neither vitiate nor mend the Commitment.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Your Lordſhip cannot take Notice of the Commitment but from the Warrant.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Retorn is the Fact upon which you are to judge.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Certainly we muſt judge of the Record, and nothing elſe, and the Retorn is the Record now, being filed.

L. C. J. The Retorn is as certain, I think, as can be.

Mr. Soll. Gen. By the Retorn it appears, the Biſhops were committed by the Warrant of ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Council, and that which is before you now is, whether you will not intend it to be done by them in Council.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. We can intend nothing, but muſt take the Retorn as 'tis.

L. C. J. The Warrant is good enough, I think truly, and ſo is the Retorn.

Mr. Pollexfen. I think in all the Habeas Corpus's that have been ſince the King's Return, of Perſons committed by the Council, the Retorns have been quite otherwiſe than this Retorn is. We do all pretty well agree (for ought I can perceive) in theſe two Things, We do not deny but the Council-Board has Power to commit; they on the other Side do not affirm, that the Lords of the Council can commit out of Council.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, they may, as Juſtices of the Peace.

Mr. Pollexfen. This is not pretended to be ſo here.

L. C. J. No, no, that is not the Caſe.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, my Lord, with Submiſſion, I will compare it to any thing elſe of this Nature. I deny not but that the Council may commit, but the Queſtion is, whether this Retorn of their Commitment be right. Suppoſe there ſhould be a Retorn to a Habeas Corpus, that ſuch a one was committed by Sir Robert Wright, and three others by Name, Juſtices of this Court, for a Contempt, without ſaying, that it was done in Court, this would be an ill Retorn: Although they had Power in Court to commit for a Contempt, yet it muſt appear, that it was done in Court, or it cannot be a good Retorn. If I had thought, or foreſeen, that ſuch a Retorn would have been made, I could eaſily have made out our Objection; but we could not fotetel what they would return, and therefore we can only make this Objection now upon the hearing of it read. In all the Debates that have been heretofore in the great Caſe of the Habeas Corpus concerning my Lord Hollis, and thoſe other Gentlemen who were in Priſon upon Commitments by the Privy-Council, the Retorns are, that they were committed by Order of the Privy-Council, as near as I can remember. I will not take it upon me to be poſitive in it, but I believe, if your Lordſhip thought fit to give us a ſhort Time to look into it, we ſhould be plainly able to ſhew you, that all the Retorns of Commitments of this Nature, are ſaid to be by Order of the Council-Board, and never any of them naming the Lords; for that may be true, and yet not a legal Commitment.

L. C. J. I have ſeen ſeveral Precedents of Commitments in this Form, and if you make no Exception to the Warrant, you can make no Exception to the Retorn, becauſe that only ſets forth the Warrant.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Commitment you are to judge of, is upon the Retorn, with Submiſſion, and ſuppoſing the Warrant to be right and good, yet the Retorn is not legal.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſay, in common Underſtanding, it cannot be but a Commitment in Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But common Underſtanding and legal Underſtanding are two Things, and we pray the Judgment of the Court.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And ſo do we, my Lord, and pray your Rule in it.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. You may by the ſame Reaſon ſay, That upon all Commitments by Warrant from Juſtices of the Peace, that the Commitment was out of the County, if the Party does not alledge in the Warrant, or Retorn, that the Commitment was in the County. 'Tis an Objection that would put us upon preſuming what we have no Reaſon to preſume.

L. C. J. If you would have our Opinions, let my Brothers declare theirs, I will ſoon tell you my Mind.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray let the Retorn be read again [which was done].

Mr. Att. Gen. So that the Retorn ſays, they were committed by Virtue of a Warrant of ſuch and ſuch by Name, Lords of the Council, and whether this be a Warrant of the Council is the Queſtion, and we think it is plain enough, that 'tis a good Retorn.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I have given you my Thoughts already: I think we ought to conſult Precedents in a Caſe of this Weight and Nature; and truly I will not take upon me to ſay, whether it be a good Retorn or not a good Retorn, without looking into Precedents.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. For my own Part, it does not ſtick at all with me, for the Reaſons I gave before. When any Man that has an Authority to commit, does commit a Perſon to an inferior Officer, and that Officer has an Habeas Corpus brought to him, it is enough for him to return his Warrant, by which the Party was committed, and whatſoever he ſays by the Bye, cannot have any Influence, one way or other, to alter the Nature of the Thing. Now unleſs you would make every Man that is a Juſtice of the Peace write his Name, and ſtile himſelf Juſtice of the Peace, this muſt be a good Commitment. Every Commitment ſhall be preſumed to be purſuant to the Power of the Perſon committing; and I am ſure, take theſe Lords ſeparately, and they had no Power to commit, and conſequently ſuch a Warrant would be no Authority to the Lieutenant of the Tower to receive them: But when they ſend ſuch a Warrant as this, we ſhall preſume it to be according to the Power they have, and not according to the Power they have not. This Warrant is returned by the Officer, and I cannot but preſume that it is all very well.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. My Lords, I am very deſirous and willing your Lordſhips ſhould have all the Right and Juſtice done you that can be, and by the Grace of God, I will endeavour it all I can. I ſee in this Caſe it is agreed on both Sides, that the Council have a Power to commit, and the Commitment is here certified in the Words of the Warrant, and the Lieutenant has made his Retorn, that they were committed by Virtue of this Warrant, If the Lieutenant of the Tower had returned any other Commitment, you would have blamed him for a falſe Retorn; but now you find Fault with his Retorn, becauſe he does not ſay, the Warrant was made by the Lords of the Council, and in Council: That is a thing ſo notoriouſly known to all the Kingdom, that my Lords were ſent to the Tower by the Council, that no body doubts it; and being thus ſent by this Warrant, I do not ſee but that this is a very good Retorn, and my Judgment is, that the Information ought to be read.

L. C. J. I told you in the Beginning, after you had made your Objections, that I thought it was as all other Retorns are; and I am of the ſame Opinion ſtill, I find no fault with the Warrant, nor with the Retorn.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is no Objection to the Warrant at preſent upon this Queſtion.

L. C. J. Neither do I take upon me to ſay any thing, nor is there any thing now to be ſpoken of touching the Fact for which theſe Noble Lords were committed.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray, my Lord, the Information may be read.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. There is no Queſtion about the Fact; but whether this be a good Retorn which is here made, that they were commited by ſuch and ſuch Lords of the Council.

L. C. J. I would do as much to give my Lords the Biſhops Eaſe, and ſet them at Liberty, as I could poſſibly by Law; but we muſt not break the Rules of Law for any one.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray read the Information.

Mr. Finch. No, my Lord, we oppoſe the reading of it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Why! Will not you be ſatisfied with the Opinion of the Court?

Mr. Finch. We have another Thing to offer, which we muſt have the Opinion of the Court in, before this Information can be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let us hear what it is?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we did humbly offer one Objection more to your Loadſhip againſt the reading of the Information: The former Objection was concerning the Perſons committing, in that it does not ſufficiently appear upon the Retorn, that they were committed by the Lords in Council; the Court have given their Opinion in that: But the other Objection ſtill remains, whether they ought to have been committed at all; and therefore when they now appear upon this Habeas Corpus, we ſay they were not legally committed to Priſon, becauſe a Peer ought not to be committed to Priſon in the firſt Inſtance for Miſdemeanor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you pleaſe you may ſpeak to that by and by; but that is not proper now for you to offer, or for the Court to determine, whether a Peer may be committed upon an Accuſation for a Miſdemeanor.

Mr. Finch. With Submiſſion, that is ſuch a Difficulty that lies in the way againſt the reading of the Information, that you muſt get over it, before you can come at the reading of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will have your Time for all this Matter by and by; but certainly you cannot be admitted to it yet.

L. C. J. Truly I think you are too early with that Exception.

Mr. Finch. With Submiſſion, we think this is the proper Time, and I will tell your Lordſhip the Reaſon why.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, certainly every thing in the World that can be ſaid, you will ſay for your Clients, and you ſhall be heard; for we are very willing to deliver theſe noble Lords, if we can by Law, and if the Exceptions you make be legal.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we do not doubt your Juſtice; and therefore we deſire to offer what we have to ſay in this Point: The only Queſtion (now it ſeems) is about our Time of making our Exception. Mr. Attorney (we apprehend) did ſay one thing which was certainly a little too large; that however any Man comes into Court, if the Court find him here, they may charge with an Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ſays ſo? I ſaid no ſuch thing.

Mr. Finch. Then I acquit Mr. Attorney of it, he did not ſay ſo: Then both he and I agree the Law to be, That a Man that does come into Court, if he does not come in by legal Proceſs, he is not to be charg'd with an Information: Then ſince we do agree in that Propoſition, certainly we muſt be heard to this Point, whether we are here upon legal Proceſs, before you can charge us with this Information?

Mr. Att. Gen. You think you have ſaid a fine thing now, and take upon you an Authority to make me agree to what you pleaſe.

Mr. Finch. Certainly the Conſequence is plain upon your own Premiſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you undertake to ſpeak for me?

Mr. Finch. I am in the Judgment of the Court, and to them I leave it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know you thought you had got an extraordinary Advantage, by making me ſay what you pleaſe; but there has been very little ſaid, but what has been grounded upon Miſtakes all along. This is that I do ſay, If a Man comes in voluntarily upon any Recognizanee, though he be not in Cuſtody; or if he comes in upon any Proceſs, if the Court find him here, though that Proceſs be not for the thing charged in the Information, yet the Court is ſo much in Poſſeſſion of the Perſon, that he ſhall plead to any Information; and that I do ſay, and will ſtand by.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we are here in a very great Auditory, and this Court is always a very great Court, (but here is a greater and nobler Aſſembly than uſually we have here) and theſe Gentlemen, to ſhew their Eloquence and Oratory, would, by converting Propoſitions otherwiſe than they are delivered, put another Meaning upon them, and ſo draw ſtrange Inferences from them. But theſe Arts, we are ſure, will not prevail here; we ſay plainly, and we are ſure the Law is ſo (let them apprehend what they will) that your Lordſhip cannot exhibit an Information to any Man that you find accidentally here in Court. Then, ſays Mr. Finch, we are agreed: But withal (ſay I) take my other Propoſition; If a Perſon be brought into Court by legal Proceſs, or upon any Contempt whatſoever, by an Attachment or Warrant, or upon a Habeas Corpus after a Commitment, being thus found in Court, your Lordſhip may certainly charge him with an Information. When theſe Gentlemen, who are ſo eager on the other ſide, did preſide here, and ſtood in the Places where Mr. Attorney and I now are; I can name them abundance of Caſes of the like nature with this, when Men have been compelled to appear to Informations, and plead preſently: They are the

Perſons

Perſons that made the Precedents; they made the Law for ought I know: I am ſure I find the Court in Poſſeſſion of this as Law, and we pray the uſual Courſe may be followed.

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, ſpare us a Word in this Matter: I do agree with Mr. Attorney in this Matter, but I do not agree with Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You do not agree with yourſelf.

Mr. Finch. I hope I do, and always ſhall agree with myſelf; but I do not agree with your, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You do not in 1688, agree with what you were in 1680.

Mr. Finch. Says Mr. Attorney, a Man that comes voluntarily in, cannot be charged with an Information; with him I agree. Says Mr. Sollicitor, a Man that comes in, and is found in Court by any Proceſs, may be charged with an Information: I ſay no, if the Proceſs be wholly illegal; for he cannot be ſaid to be legally in Court. Suppoſe a Peer of the Realm be taken upon a Capias, and is committed to the Marſhalſea, and is brought up upon a Habeas Corpus, I would fain know, whether you could declare againſt him.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we cannot.

Mr. Finch. And why is that, but becauſe the Proceſs is illegal, and he is not truly in Court: Then is it a proper Time now to make this a Queſtion, Whether my Lords here were legally committed, before you can lay any Thing to their Charge by way of Information? For if the Commitment be illegal, it is a void Commitment; and if the Commitment be void, the Proceſs is void, and then my Lords are not legally in Court.

L. C. J. That ſure is but returning again to the ſame Queſtion that has been determined already.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If your Lordſhip will permit them to go over and over the ſame things, we ſhall never have an End.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we pray theſe Gentlemen of the King's Counſel may be a little cool with us, and then they will find, we do not talk the ſame things over and over again, nor meddle with that which the Court have given their Judgment in.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we ſay it is the Privilege of the Peers of England, that none of them ſhall be committed to Priſon for a Miſdemeanor, eſpecially in the firſt Inſtance, and before Judgment. This (we ſay) is the Right of my Lords the Biſhops, and that which they claim as Lords of Parliament. Now it appears upon this Retorn and the Warrant, that the Council-Table hath committed them (for your Lordſhip and the Court hath rul'd it, that this Commitment muſt be taken to be by Order of the Privy-Council, and we meddle not with that further) but we ſay that the Council-Table may commit a Man unjuſtly, that is certain. There has been Relief often given in this Court againſt Commitments by the Council-Table: And that they were unjuſtly committed, depends upon that Point of their Privilege as Peers.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we ſay, that the Lords of the Council have illegally committed theſe Noble Perſons, who are Peers of the Realm, and ought to have the Privilege of their Peerage, which is not to be committed for a Miſdemeanor; that the Council ought not to have done: For the Peers of England ought no more to be committed for a Miſdemeanor, and to be impriſoned, eſpecially upon the firſt Proceſs, than they may be in a Caſe of Debt. It is true, in the Caſe of Treaſon, Felony, or the Breach of the Peace, the Peers have not ſuch a Privilege; they may be committed: But for a Miſdemeanor (as this does appear to be in the Warrant of Commitment) they ought not to be committed. But they were committed by the Lords of the Council; and we now complain of this to your Lordſhip as illegal, and therefore pray my Lords may be diſcharged.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to favour me a Word on the ſame ſide, for my Lords the Biſhops. It muſt be agreed to me, that if a Peer be brought into Court, as taken by a Capias, he cannot be charged with a Declaration; and the Reaſon is, becauſe the Proceſs is illegal: Then, my Lord, with Submiſſion, when a Peer comes upon a Foreign Commitment, and is brought in Cuſtody upon a Habeas Corpus, this is either in the Nature of a Proceſs, or a final Commitment, as a Judgment; they will not ſay, that this is a good Commitment, ſo as to amount to a Judgment; for the Council-Board could not give a Judgment in the Caſe; beſides, the Commitment is illegal, becauſe it is not a Commitment till they find Security to anſwer an Information here, but 'tis a Warrant to keep them for a Miſdemeanor: Beſides, there is another thing we have to ſay to this Warrant (for I am making Objections againſt the Validity of this Commitment) it does not appear that there was any Oath made, and therefore the Court muſt adjudge that there was no Oath made, and then no Men ought without Oath to be committed, much leſs a Peer. But that which we chiefly rely upon is, That my Lords ought not to have been committed for this, which is but a Miſdemeanor at moſt: And if they uſe it, as Proceſs, to bring my Lords the Biſhops to anſwer an Information, we ſay, by Law no ſuch Proceſs can be taken out againſt the Perſons of Peers for bare Miſdemeanors. I do agree, that for Felony, Treaſon, or Surety of the Peace, the Perſons of Peers may be committed; and that which is called Surety of the Peace in our Books, Mr. Sollicitor knows very well, in ſome of the Rolls of Parliament, is called Breach of the Peace, but it is all one; and the Meaning, in ſhort, is, that it is ſuch a Breach of the Peace, as for which a Man by Law may be obliged to find Sureties for the Peace. If it ſhould mean a Breach of the Peace by Implication, as all Treſpaſſes and Miſdemeanors are ſaid to be contra Pacem in the Indictment, or Information, then it were a ſimple thing to enumerate the Caſes wherein Privileges did not lie; for there could be no Information whatſoever, but muſt be contra Pacem, and ſo there could be no ſuch thing as Privilege at all. And beſides, we ſay, the very Courſe of this Court is contrary to what they would have; for in the Caſe of a Peer, for a Miſdemeanor, you go firſt by Summons, and then you do not take out a Capias as againſt a common Perſon, but the next Proceſs is a Diſtringas, and ſo ad infinitum. And I do appeal to them on the other ſide, and challenge them to ſhew any one Precedent, when a Peer was brought thus into Court, to be charged with an Information, without it were in the Caſe of an apparent Breach of the the Peace; for he muſt be charged in Cuſtody, and there muſt be a Committitur to the Marſhal, to entitle the Court to proceed. Your Lordſhip will find but very few Precedents of Caſes of this Nature about common Perſons; for till within theſe fourteen or fifteen Years there was no ſuch thing ever done againſt a common Perſon: But this was the Rule: Firſt there went out a Subpœna, and then an Attachment, and when the Party was taken upon the Attachment, he is taken to come in upon Proceſs, and then the Court would charge him preſently; but if he did appear upon the Summons, they would not charge him, but he had Time to take a Copy of the Information, and an Imparlance of courſe, till the next Term, before he could be compelled to plead. But in the Caſe of a Peer, there never was any ſuch Precedent as the Attaching his Perſon, but only a Summons and Diſtreſs: And I would be glad the King's Counſel would ſhew, that ever there was any ſuch Proceſs taken out againſt the Perſon of a Peer, for a meer Miſdemeanor. My Lord, 'tis plain, what Breach of the Peace means in every Information; and I only ſpeak this to acquaint the Court how the conſtant Proceedings in all theſe Caſes have been. Theſe Informations were antiently more frequent in the Star-Chamber; and what was the Proceſs there? Not the common Proceſs of a Subpœna, that was not the Courſe there; but the Proceſs was a Letter from the Chancellor; that if the Party upon that Letter did not appear, in a common Caſe, there went out an Attachment; but in a Peer's Caſe never: And ſo it appears by Crompton's Juriſdiction of Courts, Tit. Star-Chamber 33. This appears likewiſe by the Proceedings in Chancery againſt the Peers, till the Queen's Time. They did not ſo much as take out an Attachment after Default upon a Subpœna, but they would then, in the Queen's Time, be ſo bold as to take out an Attachment againſt a Lord for not appearing; but that Courſe was condemned as illegal; ſo we find in my Lord Dyer.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was at a common Perſon's Suit.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But the Proceedings in the Star-Chamber were at the King's Suit, and I am ſure Mr. Sollicitor knows that the Peers Privileges reach to Informations; but, as I was ſaying, it was ſo adjudged as to the Chancery in my Lord Cromwell's Caſe, 14 Eliz. Dyer, 315.

L. C. J. You take a great Compaſs, Sir Robert Sawyer; but pray remember what you laid down at firſt, for the Ground of your Diſcourſe, That there was never any Commitment of a Peer for a bare Miſdemeanor: You muſt keep to that; that is the Point you are to look after.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I will ſo; I do not cite theſe Caſes but for this Purpoſe, to ſhew, that in all Courts the Peers have particular Privileges; and I am ſure they can produce you no Precedents for any ſuch Proceedings againſt a Peer. In my Experience of theſe Matters, I never knew any ſuch; nay, I knew it always to be otherwiſe, that in Informations for Miſdemeanors, there did never iſſue out a Capias againſt a Peer: And Mr. Attorney knows very well, it was ſo in the late Caſe of my Lord Lovelace; for that Caſe of my Lord Devonſhire, that it was an expreſs Breach of the Peace, though it was debated and diſputed then; ſo that I take it, theſe Noble Lords cannot be charged with this Information, becauſe they do not come in by legal Proceſs; and unleſs they can ſhew me any Caſes, where a Peer did ever come in upon ſuch a Commitment, and anſwered to an Information upon that Commitment, it muſt certainly be allowed not to be the legal Courſe; though if ſuch a Precedent could be ſhewn, that paſs'd ſub Silentio, without Debate or ſolemn Determination, that would not do, nor could bind the reſt of the Peers. If one Man would loſe a particular Benefit he has, all the whole Body muſt not loſe it; and the Benefit is not ſmall, of Time to make his Defence; of Imparling, of taking a Copy of the Indictment, and preparing himſelf to plead as his Caſe will bear; and indeed a common Perſon has uſed to have theſe Privileges, though in ſome Caſes of late, they have taken the other Courſe; and if a Capias went out (which we ſay cannot go againſt a Lord) and the Party were brought in, he was to anſwer immediately. Now, my Lord, I take it, that the Privileges of Peers is in all Times the ſame with the Parliamentary Privilege in Parliament-Time, which reacheth to Informations, as well as other Actions. My Lord Coke is expreſs in this Point, in the 4 Inſtit. 25. If that Objection ſhould hold good, that every Information being contra Pacem, that ſhould be a Breach of the Peace, then (as I ſaid before) Privilege will hold in no Information, which is contrary to that and all our other Books: 'Tis only ſuch a Breach of the Peace, as for which Security of the Peace may be required. But further, that this is a Privilege enjoyed by the Peers, Spiritual as well as Temporal, I ſuppoſe will not be denied; for I think they will not queſtion, but that the Biſhops and Abbots that were Lords of Parliament were Peers; and we find in our Books, when the Court has been moved for a Capias againſt an Abbot, if he were a Mitred Abbot, and ſat in the Lords Houſe, it was always ſaid, that no ſuch Proceſs ought to go; and ſo it is in the Caſe of Biſhops: But indeed for other Noblemen, the Difference is this: Where it does not appear upon Record, that they are Lords in Parliament, there the Courts have put them to bring their Writs of Privilege; but where it does appear upon Record, that they are Peers, the Court is to allow and take Notice of their Privilege; and there needs no ſuch Writ. Now that the Parliament Privilege, and the Privilege of Peers (as to their Perſons) is the ſame, appears by the Form of the Writ in the Regiſter, Fol. 287. Fitz. Herb. Nat. Brev. 247. The Words of the Writ are theſe, That if ſuch a one be ſued at the Suit of another, the Writ commands, that a Peer out of Parliament-Time ſhould have the ſame Privilege with thoſe ſummoned by the King to the Parliament; and I know not any Difference that can be put between them; and it cannot be denied, that all Informations whatſoever, unleſs ſuch as are for Breaches of the Peace, for which Surety of the Peace may be required, are under the Controul of the Parliament Privilege: So that upon theſe Grounds, I do preſs that my Lords the Biſhops may be diſcharged. If there be any Information againſt us, we are ready to enter our Appearance, to anſwer it according to the Courſe of the Court: But if the Information be for no other thing than what is contained in the Warrant of Commitment, then their Perſons ought to be privileged from Commitment.

Mr. Pollexfen.

Mr. Pollexfen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to take it altogether, you will find it a Caſe very well worth your Conſideration, it being the Caſe of all the Peerage of England.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, theſe Gentlemen have taken a great deal of Liberty, and ſpent much of your Time in making long Arguments, and after all, truly, I do not know where to have them, nor can underſtand what they would be at. It ſeems they agree, that for Treaſon, Felony, and Breach of the Peace, a Peer may be committed.

L. C. J. That is, ſay they, ſuch a Breach of the Peace, as for which Surety of the Peace may be required.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then all the Learning they have been pleaſed to favour us with, is at an End; for if here be any thing charged upon the Biſhops, for which Sureties of the Peace may be required, then this is a good Commitment.

L. C. J. That they muſt agree upon their own Arguments.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can then any Man in the World ſay, that a Libel does not require Sureties of the Peace? For we muſt now take it as it is here upon this Retorn. How my Lords the Biſhops will clear themſelves of it, is a Queſtion for another Time; but the Warrant ſays, they were committed for Contriving, Framing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libel againſt his Majeſty, and his Government: Is there a greater Miſdemeanor? Or is there any thing on this Side a capital Crime that is a greater Offence? Is there any thing that does ſo tread upon the Heels of a capital Offence, and comes ſo near the greateſt of Crimes that can be committed againſt the Government? Not to enlarge at this Time upon what the Conſequences of ſuch Things may be; is there a greater Breach of the Peace than ſuch Seditious Practices? No doubt, any Man may be committed for it, and may be bound to find Sureties for his good Behaviour.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I ſay Sureties of the Peace, not of the good Behaviour.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray my Lord, would you conſider where we are; we are going towards France, I think, or ſome farther Country: They have ſet us out to Sea, and I do not ſee after this rate, when we ſhall come to Land. Certainly, theſe Gentlemen are mightily out of the Way, and would fain have us ſo too! We are here upon a ſingle Queſtion, as this Caſe ſtands before your Lordſhip, upon the Retorn. Here is a Libel, a Seditious Libel, ſaid to be contrived, made and publiſhed againſt the King and his Government, by theſe Noble Lords the Priſoners. This is the Accuſation; ſuppoſe this be true, that is to be proved hereafter; I hope they are innocent, and will prove themſelves ſo: But ſuppoſe it to be true, that they have made a Seditious Libel againſt the King and his Government, will any Man ſay, that this is not done Vi & Armis? This is a Libel with a Witneſs; nay, two or three Degrees more will carry it to High-Treaſon, and all the Informations that were exhibited by Sir Robert Sawyer, when he was Attorney-General (and he exhibited a great many for Libels) conſtantly theſe Words were in, Vi & Armis & contra Pacem.

Biſhop of Peterborough. Was it ſo in your own Caſe, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Yes, it was ſo in my Caſe, and you were one of them that proſecuted me, for ought I know; or if you did not proſecute me, you preached againſt me; or if you did not, ſome of your Tribe did: But ſo, my Lord, it was in many other Caſes, within Time of Memory. Sir Robert Sawyer has paſs'd a Complement upon me, of my great Skill in Parliament Matters; but truly there needs no great Skill in Matters where the Law is ſo plain. A Peer they agree may be in Priſon for Treaſon, Felony, or Breach of the Peace; but that Breach of the Peace, ſay they, is where the Law requires Sureties of the Peace: But is there any Certainty where Sureties of the Peace ſhall be required, and where not? Then I would put this Caſe; Theſe Lords have contrived and publiſhed a Seditious Libel againſt the King and His Government; and whether this be not ſuch a Breach of the Peace, as will require Sureties of the Peace, is the Queſtion before you: And it plainly appears to be ſo, in Sir Baptiſt Hicks's Caſe, in Hobart. If a Man write a private Letter provoking another to fight, although there be no Fighting, this is a Breach of the Peace. Now a Letter can do no Wrong in that kind, but as it incites and ſtirs up to Fighting, which may occaſion Blood-ſhed; and I think there cannot be a greater Breach of the Peace, than for a Man to come to the King's Face, and publiſh a Libel againſt him, and yet, according to their Doctrine, this Man ſhall go away, and you ſhall not take him up, but take a Subpœna againſt him, and wait for the Delay of all the ordinary Proceſs; and they tell you another Thing, that a Capias does not lie upon an Information againſt the Perſon of a Peer, and that there is no Precedent of any ſuch Thing; but I would pray them to remember the Caſe of my Lord Lovelace, about ſome three Years ago, for breaking a Foot-man's Head. It ſeems, if a Man libels the King in his own Preſence, that is not ſo great a Matter as a little Correction to an inſolent Foot-man; but there he was bound in a Recognizance to appear there in this Court, and accordingly he did appear, and was charged with an Information; and as to that Precedent, I do believe Sir Robert Sawyer and Mr. Finch won't contradict me. This was in the firſt Year of this King. There was likewiſe my Lord of Pembroke's Caſe, who went to a diſorderly Houſe, and there frightned ſome People: We moved the Court, and had an Attachment againſt him for a Miſdemeanor, and he was glad to compound the Thing, or it had not ended ſo ſoon as it did; and yet if a Lord comes to the King's Perſon, and affronts Him to his very Face, will not an Attachment lie againſt him for it? Certainly it will. My Lord, we have gone out of the Way too much already, and theſe Gentlemen will lead us farther; but we hope your Lordſhips will reduce us to the Methods of the Law. Here is an Information which we deſire may be read; if they have any thing to plead to it, their Time for that will come after it is read: If they think they have been illegally impriſoned, it appears plainly upon this Retorn, who they were that did commit them. Here are a great many Noble Lords to anſwer an Action of falſe Impriſonment, if theſe Lords think fit, and may have theſe learned Gentlemen, that are very well able to adviſe them what they ſhould do in it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We pray your Lordſhip's Judgment, whether the Caſes put by Mr. Sollicitor are like our Caſe?

Mr. Soll. Gen. They are as like, as Sir Robert Sawyer is to Mr. Attorney that was.

Sir

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Thoſe Caſes are of apparent Breaches of the Peace; ſo likewiſe was my Lord of Devonſhire's Caſe; but certainly that was not at all like this.

Mr. Finch. With our Lordſhip's Favour, I would add but one Word, and I would repeat nothing of what has been ſaid: All that I ſhall ſay is this; There is a great deal of Difference between an actual Breach of the Peace, and that which in the bare Form of an Information is a Breach of the Peace, by Conſtruction of Law, it being contra Pacem. Suppoſe it be laid that a Man did Vi & Armis ſpeak Words, will that make the Words a Breach of the Peace?

Mr. Soll. Gen. It muſt be Vi & Armis, and certainly is a Breach of the Peace.

Mr. Finch. If a Man write a Petition, are the Pen and Ink that he uſes the Arms?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I hope, Mr. Finch remembers what I heard him ſay in Algernoon Sidney's Caſe, ſcribere eſt agere.

Mr. Finch. I think it is ſo, Mr. Sollicitor, but every Action is not a Breach of the Peace.

L. C. J. Well, let my Brothers deliver their Opinions, I will give you mine.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. The ſingle Queſtion now is, Whether or no that which Mr. Sollicitor was pleaſed to name as the Crime, and lay it to the Charge of my Lords the Biſhops, that is a Seditious Libel, be a Breach of the Peace. I do confeſs that there is little of Argument to be drawn from Forms of Indictments; and I ſhall put no great Streſs upon the Words, Vi & Armis, where the Fact will not come near it; but if a Commitment may enſue (as they ſeem to agree) whereever Surety of the Peace may be required, nothing ſeems more important to me, than that Surety of the Peace ſhould be required, where there is any thing of Sedition in the Caſe; and wherever there is a Seditious Act, I cannot tell how to make any other Conſtruction of it, but that it is an actual Breach of the Peace; that is my Opinion.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. I am of the ſame Opinion in this Point too, as I was in the other Point before: It was a Matter of great Conſequence, I thought, upon the former Point, but now it appears to me, to be of far greater Conſequence than it did at firſt; for here, all the Great, High, and Noble Peers of England are concerned in it, as to their Privilege. Our Predeceſſors in this Court heretofore would not determine the Privileges of the Peers, but left them to themſelves to make what Judgment they pleaſed of them. I think truly 'tis a Thing of that Weight, that it may be very fit for the Court to take Time to conſider of it, and I declare for my own Part, I will not take upon me to deliver any Opinion in a Matter of this Conſequence, before I have conſulted all the Books that can give me any Light in the Caſe.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother Powell, I am not determining, limiting, or cramping the Privilege of Peers, but I am only conſidering whether or no a Seditious Libel be a Breach of the Peace. 'Tis agreed to be on all Hands a Breach of the Peace. Is there any thing that will require Sureties of the Peace to be given upon the doing of it? For there Sir Robert Sawyer has laid the Foundation of his Diſtinction, and if that ſhall draw any Perſon under a Commitment, then, ſay I, in my Judgment, wherever there is a Seditious Libel, there is that which is an actual Breach of the Peace; for I am ſure there is that which is ſufficient to require Sureties of the Peace. I controvert not the Right of the Peers one Way or other, but only declare my Opinion, That this is a Fact that comes within the Rule laid down by them, that what will require Sureties of the Peace, is a Breach of the Peace.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. God forbid that in a Caſe of this Nature, any one ſhould take upon him here to ſay, that every Miſdemeanor were a Breach of the Peace, I ſay not ſo; but certainly there are ſome ſuch Miſdemeanors as are Breaches of the Peace; and if here be ſuch a Miſdemeanor before us, then it is acknowledged, that even in Parliament-time, a privileged Perſon might be committed for it: For in Treaſon, Felony, and Breach of the Peace, Privilege does not hold. I will not take upon me, as my Brother ſaid, to determine concerning the Privilege of the Peers, it is not of our Cognizance, nor have we any thing to do, either to enlarge or confine Privilege, nor do we determine whether this be ſuch a Libel as is charged in the Information, that will come in Queſtion another Time; but certainly as this Caſe is, the Information ought to be read, and my Lords ought to appear and plead to it.

L. C. J. Certainly we are all of us here as tender of the Privileges of the Peers as any in the World can be, and as tender as we would be, and ought to be in trying any Man's Right: It becomes us to do it with great Reſpect and Regard to my Lords the Biſhops; and therefore I would be as careful (if that were the Queſtion before me) to conſider very well before I give my Opinion, as ever I was in my Life. But when I ſee there can come no Miſchief at all to the Privileges of the Peers, by what is agreed on all Hands, I think I may very juſtly give my Opinion: For here is the Queſtion, Whether the Fact charged in the Warrant be ſuch a Miſdemeanor as is a Breach of the Peace? and the Words of the Warrant (which is now upon the Record) being ſuch as have been recited, I cannot but think it is ſuch a Miſdemeanor as would have required Sureties of the Peace; and if Sureties were not given, a Commitment might follow; and therefore I think the Information muſt be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray the Clerk may read it.

Clerk reads. Middleſex, ſs. James Rex.

IT having pleaſed Almighty God, not only to bring Us to the Imperial Crowns of theſe Kingdoms through the greateſt Difficulties, but to preſerve Us by a more than ordinary Providence, upon the Throne of Our Royal Anceſtors, there is nothing now that We ſo earneſtly deſire, as to eſtabliſh Our Government on ſuch a Foundation as may make Our Subjects happy, and unite them to Us, by Inclination as well as Duty, which We think can be done by no Means ſo effectually, as by granting to them the free Exerciſe of their Religion for the Time to come, and add that to the perfect Enjoyment of their Property, which has never been in any Caſe invaded by Us ſince Our coming to the Crown; which being the two Things Men value moſt, ſhall ever be preſerved in theſe Kingdoms during Our Reign over them, as the trueſt Methods of Our Peace, and Our Glory. We cannot but heartily wiſh, as it will eaſily be believed, that the People of Our Dominions were Members of the Catholick Church, yet We humbly thank Almighty God, it is, and hath long Time been Our conſtant Senſe and Opinion (which upon divers Occaſions We have declared) that Conſcience ought not to be conſtrained, nor People forced in Matters of meer Religion. It has ever been directly contrary to Our Inclination, as We think it is to the Intereſt of Government, which it deſtroys, by ſpoiling Trade, depopulating Countries, and diſcouraging Strangers; and finally, that it never obtained the End for which it was employed. And in this we are the more confirmed by the Reflections We have made upon the Conduct of the four laſt Reigns. For after all the frequent and preſſing Endeavours that were uſed in each of them, to reduce theſe Kingdoms to an exact Conformity in Religion, it is viſible, the Succeſs has not anſwered the Deſign; and that the Difficulty is invincible. We therefore, out of Our Princely Care and Affection unto all our loving Subjects, that they may live at Eaſe and Quiet, and for the Encreaſe of Trade, and Encouragement to Strangers, have thought fit, by Virtue of Our Royal Prerogative, to iſſue forth this Our Declaration of Indulgence, making no Doubt of the Concurrence of Our two Houſes of Parliament, when We ſhall think it convenient for them to meet. In the firſt Place We do declare, that We will protect and maintain Our Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Clergy, and all other Our Subjects of the Church of England, in the free Exerciſe of their Religion, as by Law eſtabliſhed, and in the quiet and full Enjoyment of all their Poſſeſſions, without any Moleſtation or Diſturbance whatſoever. We do likewiſe declare, that it is Our Royal Will and Pleaſure, that from henceforth the Execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non-conformity to the Religion eſtabliſhed, or for or by reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in any manner whatſoever, be immediately ſuſpended, and the further Execution of the ſaid Penal Laws, and every of them, is hereby ſuſpended. And to the end that by the Liberty hereby granted, the Peace and Security of Our Government, in the Practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby ſtreightly charge and command all Our loving Subjects, that as We do freely give them Leave to meet and ſerve God after their own Way and Manner, be it in private Houſes, or Places purpoſely hired or built for that Uſe, ſo that they take ſpecial Care that nothing be preach'd or taught amongſt them which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings and Aſſemblies be peaceably, openly, and publickly held, and all Perſons freely admitted to them; and that they do ſignify and make known to ſome one or more of the next Juſtices of the Peace, what Place or Places they ſet apart for thoſe Uſes. And that all Our Subjects may enjoy ſuch their Religious Aſſemblies with greater Aſſurance and Protection, We have thought it requiſite, and do hereby command, that no Diſturbance of any kind be made or given unto them, under Pain of Our Diſpleaſure, and to be further proceeded againſt with the uttermoſt Severity. And foraſmuch as We are deſirous to have the Benefit of the Service of all Our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inſeparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Perſon, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Diſcouragement or Diſability (who are otherwiſe well inclined and fit to ſerve Us) by reaſon of ſome Oaths or Teſts that have been uſually adminiſtred on ſuch Occaſions, We do hereby further declare, That it is Our Royal Will and Pleaſure, that the Oaths commonly called the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and alſo the ſeveral Teſts and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the twenty-fifth and thirtieth Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles the Second, ſhall not at any Time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or ſubſcribed by any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, who is, or ſhall be employed in any Office or Place of Truſt, either Civil or Military, under Us, or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleaſure and Intention, from Time to Time hereafter, to grant Our Royal Diſpenſations, under Our Great Seal, to all Our loving Subjects ſo to be employed, who ſhall not take the ſaid Oaths, or ſubſcribe or declare the ſaid Teſts or Declarations in the abovementioned Acts, and every of them. And to the end that all Our loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full Benefit and Advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and diſcharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures and Diſabilities by them, or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they ſhall or may at any Time hereafter be liable to, for or by reaſon of their Nonconformity, or the Exerciſe of their Religion, and from all Suits, Troubles bles or Diſturbances for the ſame, We ho hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformiſts, Recuſants, and other Our loving Subjects, for all Crimes and Things by them committed, or done contrary to the Penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profeſſion or Exerciſe thereof; hereby declaring that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity ſhall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purpoſes, as if every individual Perſon had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our Great Seal, which We do likewiſe declare ſhall from Time to Time be granted unto any Perſon or Perſons deſiring the ſame, willing and requiring Our Judges, Juſtices, and other Officers, to take Notice of and obey Our Royal Will and Pleaſure herein before declared. And although the Freedom and Aſſurance We have hereby given, in relation to Religion and Property, might be ſufficient to remove from the Minds of Our loving Subjects all Fears and Jealouſies in relation to either; yet We have thought fit further to declare, That we will maintain them in all their Properties and Poſſeſſions, as well of Church and Abby Lands, as in any other their Lands and Properties whatſoever.

Et idem Attornatus dicti Domini Regis nunc Generalis pro eodem Domino Rege ulterius dat Curiæ hic intelligi & informari, quod poſtea ſcilicet viceſimo ſeptimo die Aprilis Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc, &c. quarto, apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto, idem Dominus Rex nunc ex eadem Clementia & benigna intentione ſuis erga ſubditos ſuos Regni ſui Angliæ, per Regiam ſuam Prærogativam, aliam Regalem ſuam Declarationem Intitulatam, His Majeſty's gracious Declaration, gerentem datum eiſdem die & anno ultimo mentionatis, magno ſigillo ſuo Angliæ ſimiliter ſigillatam, publicavit; in quâ quidem Declaratione continetur.

with the utmoſt Severity. And foraſmuch as We are deſirous to have the Benefit of the Service of all our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inſeparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Perſon, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Diſcouragement or Diſability (who are otherwiſe well inclined and fit to ſerve Us) by reaſon of ſome Oaths or Teſts that have been uſually adminiſtred on ſuch Occaſions, We do hereby further declare, That it is Our Royal Will and Pleaſure, that the Oaths commonly called the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and alſo the ſeveral Teſts and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the twenty-fifth and thirtieth Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles the Second, ſhall not at any Time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or ſubſcribed by any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, who is or ſhall be employed in any Office or Place of Truſt, either Civil or Military, under Us, or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleaſure and Intention, from Time to Time hereafter, to grant Our Royal Diſpenſations under Our Great Seal, to all Our loving Subjects ſo to be employed, who ſhall not take the ſaid Oaths, or ſubſcribe or declare the ſaid Teſts or Declarations in the above-mentioned Acts, and every of them. And to the end that all our loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full Benefit and Advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and diſcharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures, and Diſabilities by them or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they ſhall or may at any Time hereafter be liable to, for or by reaſon of their Nonconformity, or the Exerciſe of their Religion; and from all Suits, Troubles or Diſturbances for the ſame, We do hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformiſts, Recuſants, and other Our loving Subjects for all Crimes and Things by them committed or done, contrary to the Penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profeſſion or Exerciſe thereof; hereby declaring, that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity ſhall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purpoſes, as if every individual Perſon had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our Great Seal, which We do likewiſe declare ſhall from Time to Time be granted unto any Perſon or Perſons deſiring the ſame; willing and requiring Our Judges, Juſtices, and other Officers, to take Notice of, and obey Our Royal Will and Pleaſure herein before declared. And although the Freedom and Aſſurance We have hereby given in relation to Religion and Property, might be ſufficient to remove from the Minds of our loving Subjects all Fears and Jealouſies in relation to either; yet We have thought fit further to declare, That We will maintain them in all their Properties and Poſſeſſions, as well of Church and Abby Lands, as in any other their Lands and Properties whatſoever.

Given at our Court at Whitehall the fourth Day of April, 1687, in the Third Year of Our Reign.

Ever ſince We granted this Indulgence, We have made it Our principal Care to ſee it preſerved without Diſtinction, as We are encouraged to do daily by Multitudes of Addreſſes, and many other Aſſurances We received from Our Subjects of all Perſwaſions, as Teſtimonies of their Satisfaction and Duty, the Effects of which We doubt not but the next Parliament will plainly ſhew; and that it will not be in vain that We have reſolved to uſe our uttermoſt Endeavours to eſtabliſh Liberty of Conſcience on ſuch juſt and equal Foundations as will render it unalterable, and ſecure to all People the free Exerciſe of their Religion for ever; by which future Ages may reap the Benefit of what is ſo undoubtedly for the general Good of the whole Kingdom. It is ſuch a Security We deſire, without the Burden and Conſtraint of Oaths and Teſts, which have been unhappily made by ſome Governments, but could never ſupport any. Nor ſhould Men be advanced by ſuch Means to Offices and Employments, which ought to be the Reward of Services, Fidelity and Merit. We muſt conclude, that not only good Chriſtians will join in this, but whoever is concerned for the Encreaſe of the Wealth and Power of the Nation. It would perhaps prejudice ſome of our Neighbours, who might loſe Part of thoſe vaſt Advantages they now enjoy, if Liberty of Conſcience were ſettled in theſe Kingdoms, which are above all others moſt capable of Improvements, and of commanding the Trade of the World. In purſuance of this Great Work, We have been forced to make many Changes both of Civil and Military Offices throughout Our Dominions, not thinking any ought to be employed in Our Service, who will not contribute towards the eſtabliſhing the Peace and Greatneſs of their Country, which We moſt earneſtly deſire, as unbiaſſed Men may ſee by the whole Conduct of our Government, and by the Condition of our Fleet, and of Our Armies, which, with good Management, ſhall be conſtantly the ſame, and greater, if the Safety or Honour of the Nation require it. We recommend theſe Conſiderations to all Our Subjects, and that they will reflect on their preſent Eaſe and Happineſs, how for above three Years, that it hath pleaſed God to permit Us to reign over theſe Kingdoms, We have not appeared to be that Prince Our Enemies would have made the World afraid of, Our chief Aim having been not to be the Oppreſſor, but the Father of Our People, of which We can give no better Evidence than by conjuring them to lay aſide all private Animoſities, as well as groundleſs Jealouſies, and to chooſe ſuch Members of Parliament as may do their Part to finiſh what We have begun, for the Advantage of the Monarchy over which Almighty God hath placed Us, being reſolved to call a Parliament, that ſhall meet in November next at fartheſt.

Quam quidem Regalem Declarationem dicti Domini Regis nunc ultimo mentionatam idem Dominus Rex nunc poſtea ſcilicet triceſimo die Aprilis Anno Regni ſui quarto ſupradicto, apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto, imprimi & per totam Angliam publicari cauſavit, & pro magis ſolemni demonſtratione, notificatione, & manifeſtatione gratiæ ſuæ Regiæ benignitatis & benevolentiæ ſuæ ad omnes ligeos ſuos in eadem Declaratione ultimò mentionata ſpecificatos, poſtea ſcilicet quarto die Maii Anno Regni ſui quarto, apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto idem Dominus Rex debito modo ordinavit prout ſequitur.

At the Court at Whitehall, the 4th of May, 1688. It is this Day ordered by his Majeſty in Council, That his Majeſty's late Gracious Declaration, bearing Date the 27th of April laſt, be read at the uſual Time of Divine Service, upon the the 20th and 27th of this Month, in all Churches and Chapels within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and ten Miles thereabout; and upon the 3d and 10th of June next, in all other Churches and Chapels throughout this Kingdom. And it is hereby further ordered, That the Right Reverend the Biſhops cauſe the ſaid Declaration to be ſent and diſtributed throughout their ſeveral and reſpective Dioceſes, to be read accordingly.

Et ulterius idem Attornatus dicti Domini Regis nunc Generalis pro eodem Domino Rege dat Curiæ hic intelligi & informari, quod poſt Confectionem prædicti ordinis ſcilicet, decimo octavo die Maii, Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc quarto ſupradicto, apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto Willielmus Archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſis de Lambeth in Comitatu Surriæ, Willielmus Epiſcopus Aſaphenſis de St. Aſaph in Comitatu Flintiæ, Franciſcus Epiſcopus Elienſis de Parochia Sancti Andreæ Holborn in Comitatu Middleſexiæ, Johannes Epiſcopus Ciceſtrenſis de Ciceſtria in Comitatu Suſſexiæ, Thomas Epiſcopus Bathonenſis & Wellenſis de Civitate Wells in Comitatu Somerſetiæ, Thomas Epiſcopus Petriburgenſis de Parochiâ ſancti Andreæ Holborn in Comitatu Middleſexiæ, & Jonathan Epiſcopus Briſtolenſis de Civitate Briſtol, inter ſe conſuluerunt & conſpiraverunt ad diminuendam Regiam Authoritatem, Regalem Prærogativam & Poteſtatem, & Regimen ejuſdem Domini Regis nunc in præmiſſis, ac ad eundem Ordinem infrigendum & eludendum; ac in proſecutione & executione conſpirationis prædictæ, ipſi iidem Willielmus Archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſis, Willielmus Epiſcopus Aſaphenſis, Franciſcus Epiſcopus Elienſis, Johannes Epiſcopus Ciceſtrenſis, Thomas Epiſcopus Bathonenſis & Wellenſis, Thomas Epiſcopus Petriburgenſis, & Jonathan Epiſcopus Briſtollenſis dicto decimo octavo die Maii Anno regni dicti Domini Regis nunc quarto ſupradicto, Vi & Armis, &c. apud Weſtmonaſterium prædictum in Comitatu Middleſexiæ prædicto, illicitè, malitioſè, ſeditioſè, & ſcandaloſè, quoddam falſum, fictum, pernitioſum, & ſeditioſum libellum in ſcriptis, de eodem Domino Rege & Regali Declaratione & Ordine prædictis (prætenſu Petitionis) fabricaverunt, compoſuerunt & ſcripſerunt, & fabricari componi & ſcribi cauſaverunt, & eundem falſum, fictum, malitioſum, pernitioſum, & ſeditioſum libellum per ipſos prædictum Willielmum Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem, Willielmum Epiſcopum Aſaphenſem, Franciſcum Epiſcopum Elienſem, Johannem Epiſcopum Ciceſtrenſem, Thomam Epiſcopum Bathonenſem & Wellenſem, Thomam Epiſcopum Petriburgenſem, & Jonathanum Epiſcopum Briſtollenſem manibus ſuis propriis reſpectivè ſubſcriptum die, & anno, & loco ultimo menconatis in præſentiâ dicti Domini Regis nunc Vi & Armis, &c. publicaverunt, & publicari cauſaverunt; in quo quidem falſo, ficto, malitioſo, pernitioſo & ſeditioſo libello continetur——

The humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Biſhops of that Province (now preſent with him) in Behalf of themſelves and others of their abſent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their reſpective Dioceſes.

Humbly ſheweth,

THAT the great Averſeneſs they find in themſelves to the diſtributing and publiſhing in all their Churches, your Majeſty's late Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, proceedeth neither from any want of Duty and Obedience to your Majeſty; our holy Mother, the Church of England, being both in her Principles, and in her conſtant Practice, unqueſtionably Loyal, and having, to her great Honour, been more than once publickly acknowledged to be ſo by your Gracious Majeſty; nor yet from any Want of due Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhall be thought fit, when that Matter ſhall be conſidered and ſettled in Parliament and Convocation. But among many other Conſiderations, from this eſpecially, becauſe that Declaration is founded upon ſuch a diſpenſing Power, as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672, and the Beginning of your Majeſty's Reign; and is a Matter of ſo great Moment and Conſequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience, ſo far make themſelves Parties to it, as the Diſtribution of it all over the Nation, and the ſolemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's Houſe, and in the Time of his Divine Service, muſt amount to, in common and reaſonable Conſtruction.

——In contemptum dicti Domini Regis nunc, & Legum hujus regni Angliæ, manifeſtum, in malum exemplum omnium aliorum in tali caſu delinquentium, ac contra Pacem dicti Domini Regis nunc Coronam & Dignitatem ſuas, &c. Unde idem Attornatus dicti Domini Regis nunc generalis pro eodem Domino Rege petit adviſamentum Curiæ hic in præmiſſis, & debitum legis proceſſum verſus præfatos Willielmum Archiepiſcopum Cantuarienſem, Willielmum Epiſcopum Aſaphenſem, Franciſum Epiſcopum Elienſem, Johannem Epiſcopum Ciceſtrenſem, Thomam Epiſcopum Bathonenſem & Wellenſem, Thomam Epiſcopum Petriburgenſem, & Jonathanum Epiſcopum Briſtollenſem fieri; ad reſpondendum dicto Domino Regi de & in præmiſſis, &c.

T. Powys.
W. Williams.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we humbly pray, that according to the Rules of the Court in ſuch Caſes, my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and my Lords the Biſhops, may plead to the Information.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords the Biſhops are here in Cuſtody in the Court, upon the higheſt Commitment that can be in this Kingdom, to wit, that of the King in Council; and we pray, that according to the Courſe of the Court, they may plead to the Information preſently.

L. C. J. What does his Grace and my Lords the Biſhops ſay to it?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Will your Lordſhip give us leave, who are of Counſel for his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, to ſpeak a Word in this Matter?

L. C. J. Ay, Brother, go on.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That which we have to deſire of your Lordſhip, and the Court, is this; we have now heard this Information read, and 'tis plain we could know nothing of this before, the Warrant of Commitment being only in general for a Libel; and this being a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence, peradventure, that ever was in Weſtminſter-Hall (that, I think, I may boldly ſay, it

it is a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence that ever was in this Court) and it being a Matter of this Nature, that theſe great and noble Perſons, my Lords the Biſhops, are here taxed with; that is, for making a ſeditious Libel, contained in ſuch a Petition (as though it was a Libel to petition the King) we do beg this of your Lordſhip, that (it being of this great Importance) to the End we may come prepared to ſay what we have againſt it, we may have an Imparlance till the next Term.
